PERIODICAL
ML5
.M85

*4041.230.67 7926

No. 995

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

JANUARY 1, 1926

FEB 26 1926

Feb 15, 1927

Spencer Pianos are famous the world over for glorious Tone, responsive Touch, distinctive Design, and thorough All-British Construction.

Write to-day for the beautifully-illustrated Spencer Art Catalogue—it will be sent Post Free on receipt of a post card.

MURDOCHS
The Great Piano House

461/463 OXFORD STREET
LONDON W 1

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.
Established 1864.

SCHIEDMAYER PIANOS.

Sole IMPORTERS of the

BEULHOFF PIANOS

also the horizontal Grand Pianos, manufactured by

BORD

PARIS.

6688

65, Wigmore Street, London. 12, Park Row, Leeds.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

The Great English Piano.

ALLISON
PIANOS LIMITED

LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.
Telephone: NORTH 1660.
— AND —
60, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1.
Telephone: LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

METZLER'S
OPERATIC TWO-PART SONGS
SIMPLY ARRANGED FOR
BOYS' OR GIRLS' VOICES.
(OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA).

1. THE SPINNING CHORUS - - - Wagner
("The Flying Dutchman.")
2. GIPSY AIR (Carmen) - - - - - - Bizet
3. MARCH and TOREADOR SONG (Carmen) - Bizet
4. THE BOYS' CHORUS (Carmen) - - - Bizet

Price, 6d. each net.

SPECIMEN COPIES FREE.

METZLER & CO. (1920), Ltd., 142, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.
(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

FEB
15
1927
B. P. L.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1926

VOLUME LXVII.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED,
160, WARDOUR STREET, W. 1
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

1926

MADE IN ENGLAND

INDEX FOR 1926.

MUSIC

SACRED

		No.			No.
O Trinity, most Blessed Light (Motet for Evening Use)	Healey Willan	995	Lift up your hearts (Hymn-Anthem) ...	H. A. Chambers	999
O Lord, Who didst in olden time (Anthem)	Eric H. Thiman	996	Into Thy gracious hands (Anthem) ...	Ernest Bullock	1000
Now on land and sea descending (Evening Anthem)	Ernest Halsey	998	Hail, Gladdening Light (Anthem) ...	T. A. Walmisley	1002
			A Lullaby Carol	Geoffrey Shaw	1006

SECULAR

		No.			No.
Spring of the Year, The (Four-part Song)	Ethel M. Boyce	997	The Virginian Voyage	Edgar L. Bainton	1004
Love wakes (Part-song)	C. H. H. Parry	1001	Like apple-blossom, white and red (Four-part Song)	C. H. Lloyd	1005
I will give my love an apple (Folk-song)	Arr., Michael Mullinar	1003

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS—MUSIC

SACRED

		No.			No.
Descant Hymn-Tune Book, The,' Two Examples from	Geoffrey Shaw	995	Hush! for amid our tears	H. A. Chambers	1005
Sweet is the work (Hymn-Anthem) ...	R. Walker Robson	996	There were shepherds (Anthem for Christmas)	H. W. Jones	1005
He wants not friends (Anthem)	Geoffrey Shaw	997	While shepherds watched their flocks (Carol)	C. Lee Williams	1006
Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost (Anthem)	Hugh Blair	998	O Lovely Voices of the Sky (Carol) ...	H. A. Chambers	1006
Immortal, Invisible (Anthem)	Eric H. Thiman	1001	The Christ-Child (Carol)	George Rathbone	1006
Every good gift (Harvest Anthem) ...	George Rathbone	1002

SECULAR

		No.			No.
The Drums of Freedom. For soprano (or tenor) solo and chorus	Herbert E. Crimp	995	How engaging, how endearing. Chorus from 'Semele'	Handel	1003
On May Morning (Part-song)	Ethel M. Boyce	999	Beware! beware! Smugglers' Chorus from 'Carmen'	Bizet (Arr. W. McNaught)	1003
How calmly the Evening (Trio)	Edward Elgar	1000	By Marykirk, a sweet bird sang (Four-part Song)	William Jackson (Masham)	1004
In these delightful, pleasant groves (Facsimile of inset in first issue of the Musical Times)	Purcell	1000

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

	No.		No.
Samuel Sebastian Wesley	998	William Thomas Best	1002

ILLUSTRATIONS, PORTRAITS, ETC.

	Page.		Page.
Allen, Sir Hugh: Heather Professor of Music	537	Liverpool Cathedral Organ	No. 1006
Barnett, J. Maughan	437	Liverpool Cathedral: Specification of the 'Willis' organ	1114
Bartók, Béla	221	Macpherson, Dr., at the St. Paul's Cathedral Organ ...	441
Burney, Charles: Facsimile of Letter to Samuel Wesley	515	Musical Times: Facsimile of No. 1	No. 1000
Edwards, Dr. H. J.	1019	Playford Catalogue, Facsimile Page from	637
Heather Festival: Folk-Dancing in New College Gardens	538	Royal Academy of Music: New Lecture Hall	1120
Heather Festival: Sword Dancing	539	Royal Academy of Music: New Theatre	1121
Koeller, Francis	1133	Wood, Charles	696

R. = Review. Ed. = Edited. Arr. = Arranged.

	Page
Abell, John: A Forgotten English Musician (Correspondence)	1021
Abendroth, Hermann. Concert at Queen's Hall	550
Abercynon, Music at	167
Aberdare, Music at	167
Aberdeen Competitive Musical Festival	654
Aberdeen, Music at... 266,	1034
Abertridwr, Music at	167
Aberystwyth, Music at ... 68, 167, 267, 361, 457, 745, 1035,	1129
Absolute Pitch (Correspondence) (see 78) 256, 351,	443
Achron, Joseph. Violin, 'Auf Flügen des Gesanges' (R.)	1097
Acomb, Music at	357
Acoustics of Church and Concert Hall. By E. G. Richardson	705
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' 22, 122, 217, 312, 415, 507, 600, 697, 789, 890, 985,	1081
Adlington, Fred. String solos, Four Norwegian Tunes (R.)	426
Adventures of an Andantino (Lemare)...	926
Advice on Pianoforte Playing. By I. Philipp ... ... (see 544)	404
Æsthetic Value of the English Madrigal, The (Musical Association Paper). By Charles van den Borren	360
Agnew, Roy. Songs, 'Dusk' and 'Infant Joy' (R.)...	1003
Albanesi, Carlo (Obituary)	1037
'Alceste,' Gluck's: A Neglected Opera. By L. N. C. Barnaby	1091
Alderson, A. de C. Part-songs, 'The Fairies' and 'Round Robin' (R.) ...	330
Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society	255
Alexandra Palace. Restoration of Organ at ... ... (see 446, 831)	40
Allison, Horton (Obituary)	1134
Alnwick, Music at	357
Alnwick Parish Church. Choir Festival	40
Alton, Music at	263
Alva, Music at	455
Amateur Orchestra of London	551
Amateurs' Exchange, The 58, 161, 260, 354, 446, 546, 645, 734, 838, 934, 1022,	1118
Amner, John. Motet, 'O come, Thou Spirit Divinest' (Ed., Noel Ponsonby) (R.)	720
An Arpeggio Point (Correspondence) 256, 442,	545
Anders, Erich. Songs, 'Drei Leider' (R.)	133
Anson, Hugo. 'Cello and Pianoforte, 'Rawhit' and 'Nga Patu-Paiarehe' (R.)	136
Answers to Correspondents 77, 174, 270, 367, 462, 560, 654, 749, 846, 943, 1038,	1135
Anthems, The, of Samuel Sebastian Wesley. By Edward C. Bairstow ...	308
Appointments, Choirmaster and Organist 41, 250, 343, 442, 543, 644, 731, 833, 928, 1021,	1116
Arbroath (Forfarshire) Competitive Musical Festival	553
Arbuthnot, Lady. In Mermoriam Agnes Zimmermann: Pianist and Composer	28
Archer, J. Stuart. Organ, Six Choral Preludes (R.) ... ... (see 445, 545)	333
——— Organ, Six Short and Easy Pieces (R.)	617
——— Pianoforte, 'Study in the Style of Scarlatti' (R.)	1097
——— Short and Easy Pianoforte Duets (R.)	135
Armstrong, George A. Pianoforte, 'Folk-Songs of the British Isles and Songs of England' (R.)...	424
Armstrong, Thomas. Manuscripts in a Museum	888
——— Wireless and the Concert-Goer	1078
Arran (Buteshire) Competitive Musical Festival	553
Arundel, Music at	63
Arundell, Dennis. Song, 'It may be Life' (R.)	909
Ashtead, Music at	554

Page

Ashton, Algernon. Pianoforte Sonata in A minor (R.) 331
——— Pianoforte Sonata in F (R.) ... 1096
Askwith, E. H. 'The Psalms, Books 4 and 5, rendered into English' (R.) ... 335
Associated Board, The: Annual General Meeting 736 ——— Award of Medals ... 163, 547
Austin, Ernest. Songs, 'The Dream-Maker' and 'Sea-Dogs' (R.) 523
——— Violin and Pianoforte, Lyric Sonata (R.)... 134
Ayres, Frederick. Trio for Violin, 'Cello, and Pianoforte (R.) 134
Ayrshire Competitive Musical Festival 452
Ayrton, Bertram, and Dale Smith. Song recital 350
Azulay, Gertrude, Ed. by. 'First Adult Album for Pianoforte' (R.) 524
——— 'Second Adult Album for Pianoforte' (R.) 909

'Bach & Co., Ltd.' (Correspondence) (see 442) 544
Bach at the Leys School 42
Bach Cantata Club (see 226, 420) 256, 541, 1123
Bach Choir Jubilee Festival 647
Bach Festival at Berlin 1036
Bach, Re-discovery of (Ad Libitum) ... 415
Bach Service at Zürich (Occasional Note) 1109
'Bach Song Book, The' (R.) 618
Bach's Cantata, 'Ready be, my soul, alway' (R.) 906
——— Chorale Prelude, 'O Lamm Gottes, unschuldig' (Arr. for Pianoforte by L. Borwick) (R.) 332
——— Five Duets for Violins (R.) ... 1097
——— Full Scores, Cantata Sinfonias (Ed., W. G. Whittaker) (R.) ... 622
——— Motet, 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure' (Ed., W. G. Whittaker) (R.) ... 423
——— Violin Concerto in G minor (Arr. for Violin and Pianoforte by J. Bernard Jackson) (R.) 136
Backer-Gröndahl, M. Pianoforte recital 739
Bacon, Katherine. Pianoforte recital... 254
Badger, W. G. Colour-Music: An Early Experiment ... (see 1117) 995
Baines, William (A Musical Impressionist). By Rutland Boughton) (see 543, 645, 734) 212
Bainton, Edgar L. Choral Work, 'A Hymn to God the Father' (R.) ... 906 ——— Choral Work, 'The Dancing Seal' (R.) 423
——— Part-song, 'The Spring Rose' (R.) 330
——— Pianoforte, 'White Hyacinth' (R.) 1097
Bairstow, Edward C. The Anthems of Samuel Sebastian Wesley 308
Balfe: A Correction (Correspondence) 644
Ball, G. Thalben. 'School Worship' (R.) 335
Ballymacarret Parish Church, Belfast. New organ... 441
Ballymena Competitive Musical Festival 552
Banbury Choral Union 152
Bancroft, H. H. Song, 'Phillis the Fair' (R.) 717
Bangor, Music at ... 68, 168, 361, 1035, 1129
Banks, Benjamin, 'Cello by (Correspondence)... 260
'Banks of Allan Water, The': Who composed it? (Correspondence) ... 352
Banstead, Music at 165
Bantock, Granville. Part-song, 'Lock the door, Lariston' (R.)... 619
——— Pianoforte, 'La Ballerina' (R.) 619
Barbour, Lyell. Pianoforte recital ... 650
Barclay's Bank Musical Society. Coming-of-Age Concert... 462
Barnaby, L. N. C. A neglected opera: Gluck's 'Alceste' 1091
Barnas, Issay. Violin, Gavotte and Musette (R.) 1097
Barnett, Alice. Song, 'Music, when soft voices die' (R.) 1003
Barnett, J. Maughan, A Talk with. Municipal Music in New Zealand (see 838) 437 ——— Organ recitals at Westminster Central Hall 541
——— Song, 'A Lullaby' (R.) ... 1002
Barnsley, Music at 357
Barnstaple, Music at 554
Barrow-in-Furness: Music at 651
Barry Dock, Music at 68
Bartlett, Ethel. Pianoforte recital ... 254
Bartók, Béla, A Visit to. By Frank Whitaker 220

Page

Bartovsky. Suite for Violin and Pianoforte (R.) 719
Basilides, Maria, at the B.B.C. Chamber Concert 1028
Bath, Music at ... 165, 263, 554, 1033
Bathgate, Music at 455
Battle, Music at 453
Bauer, Harold. Pianoforte recital ... 1124
Bauermeister, Mathilde (Obituary) ... 1038
Baynon, Arthur. Pianoforte 'Wayside Pictures' (R.) 424
B.B.C. Chamber Concerts 737
B.B.C. 'International' Chamber Concerts 1027, 1122
B.B.C. National Concerts, at the Royal Albert Hall 1025, 1122
Bechert, Paul. The Salzburg Festival 941
Bedford, Herbert. 'Robert Schumann: His Life and Work' (R.) 29
Bedford Competitive Musical Festival 356
Bedford, Music at 651
Bedford School, Music in... ... 163, 839
Beecham, Sir Thomas. Sunday afternoon concerts at Queen's Hall... 345, 1122
'Beethoven,' by Paul Bekker ... (see 442) 229
'Beethoven, Ludwig van: The Letters of.' Ed., A. Eaglefield-Hull (R.) ... 229
'Beethoven: The Man and the Artist, revealed in his own Words. Compiled and Annotated by Friedrich Kerst (R.) 427
Beethoven's Character, &c. (Correspondence)... ... ... (see 229, 544) 442
Beethoven's Sonatas (Ed. by Casella) (R.) 135
Bekker, Paul. 'Beethoven' (R.) (see 442) 229
Belfast, Music at 70, 168, 361, 457, 745, 844, 941, 1036, 1130
Bellerby, E. J. 'Golden Bells: Hymns for Young People' (R.) 335
Belleroche, Mrs. Albert de. Permanent British Opera in London 1094
Benfieldside, Music at 651
Benjamin, Arthur. Part-song, 'I see His Blood upon the Rose' (R.) ... 619 ——— Part-song, 'The Mystery' (R.) 331
Benjamin Banks, of Salisbury (Correspondence)... 351
Berg, Alban. Opera, 'Wozzeck' (Germany)... 362
Berkhamsted School, Music at 163
Besly, Maurice. Choral Songs, 'Tell me where is fancy bred?' and 'To Daffodils' (R.) 807
——— Part-song, 'Crossing the Bar' (R.) 331
——— Part-song, 'Sister, awake!' (R.) 807
——— Pianoforte, 'Studies in Tone-Colour' (R.) 332
——— Pianoforte, 'Waltz' and 'River Gardens' (R.) 135
——— Songs, 'The New Umbrella,' 'Summer Rain,' 'Sanctuary,' and 'How the holly got its thorns' (R.)... 806
Best, William Thomas 689
——— Centenary Service at St. Bees Priory Church 831
Bethesda U.M Church, Hanley. Re-opening of organ 342
Bexhill Choral Society 343
Bielefeld, Hermann. Songs, 'Kinderlieder fur Erwachsene' (R.) 1004
Biggs, Alan. Choral song, 'She is a winsome wee thing' (R.) 330
——— Part-song, 'What does little birdie say?' (R.) 330
Birmingham and District, Music in 63, 165, 263, 357, 453, 651, 744, 939, 1033, 1126
Birmingham Grand Opera Society ... 555
Bizet's 'Arlésienne' (Correspondence) (see 365) 445
Blackpool Festival, 1925, Criticism of Adjudications 61
——— 1926 1126
Blair, Hugh. Organ, 'Marche Funèbre et Hymne Angélique' (R.) 333
Blanchett, Alfred T. (Obituary) (see 832) 461
Blandford, W. F. H. Some Observations on 'Horn Chords: An Acoustical Problem' 128
Bliss, Arthur. Pianoforte, Two Interludes (R.) 333
——— Song, 'The Fallow Deer' (R.) 522
——— Songs, 'The Hare' and 'The Buckle' (R.) 132
——— Suite for Pianoforte (R.) ... 1096
Blitheman, William (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers). ... ...
Blsfield Quartet 346
Blow, John. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Ed. Heathcote D. Statham) (R.) 1006
Blow's Church Music and its Deformities. By Heathcote D. Statham 988, 1083

Page

Bodilly, Frederick J. Violin, 'Minuetto-Grazioso' (R.) 1006
Bognor Competitive Musical Festival ... 452
Bognor, Music at 358
Bolton Abbey. Re-opening of organ ... 927
Bolton, Hetty. Pianoforte recital ... 551
Bolton, Music at 264, 1127
Bombay Symphony and Chamber Orchestra (Occasional Note) 420
Bontoft, Frederick. Pianoforte, 'Lament' (R.) 620
Books received 31, 137, 233, 324, 429, 527, 615, 714, 816, 917, 1018, 1100
Border Counties Festival 744
Borland, John E. 'The Instruments of the Orchestra' (R.) 714
Borovsky, Alexandre. Pianoforte recitals 349, 451
Borren, Charles van den. Musical Association Paper: 'The Æsthetic Value of the English Madrigal' ... 360
——— Some Notes on 'My Ladye Nevells Booke' 1075
Bortkiewicz, Serge. Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte (R.) 1005
Borwick, Leonard: A Memory and Appreciation. By William Saunders 798
——— Memorial to (Correspondence) 443
——— Pianoforte Scholarship in Memory of (Occasional Note)... ... 825
——— Transcriptions of Bach's Organ Works for Pianoforte (R.) 617
Boston Choral Society 40
Boston Parish Church. Booklet on the Organ 40
Bottazzo, A. 'Proprium Missae' (R.) 1098
Boughton, Rutland. A Musical Impressionist (William Bains) (see 543, 645, 734), 212
——— Choral Work, 'Pioneers' (R.) 423
Bourne, Una. Pianoforte, 'Marche Grotesque' (R.) 333
——— Song, 'A Cloudless Night' (R.) 227
Bournemouth Festival 455
Bournemouth, Music at 63, 165, 264, 358, 454, 554, 1033, 1127
Bowen, York. Pianoforte, 'Nocturne' (R.) 1097
'Boy Bishop, The.' Opera by Sydney H. Nicholson. Performance by Westminter Abbey Choirboys 440
Boy Scouts' Musical Competition Festival at Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street 62
Boyce, Ethel. Pianoforte, 'Cinderella' (R.) 424
Bradford Festival of Chamber Music (see 701) 1032
Bradford, Music at 63, 165, 264, 358, 454, 651, 744, 1033, 1127
Brahms, My Recollections of. By Mrs. Carl Derenburg 598
Brailowsky, M. Pianoforte recital ... 1029
Breithaupt, Rudolf M. 'Natural Piano-Technic' (R.) 814
Brenet, Michel. 'Haydn' (R.) 911
Brent-Smith, Alexander. Charm of Limitations, The 503
——— On Tempering the Wind to the Shorn Lamb ... ... (see 256) 21
——— Part-song, 'In September' (R.) 907
——— Part-songs, 'Choral Dance,' and 'Fear no more the heart o' the sun' (R.) 423 ——— Popularity and the Classics (see 1022) 887
——— Scylla and Charybdis 401
——— Some Reflections on the Work of Scriabin ... ... (see 734, 833) 593, 692
——— Spectrum of Music, The 980
——— 'Studies and Caprices' (R.) ... 612
Brett, Sir Charles (Obituary) 845
Brewer, A. Herbert. Knighthood conferred upon (Occasional Note) ... 138 ——— Organ, 'Cloister-Garth' (R.)... 907
——— Pianoforte, 'A Midsummer Phantasy' (R.) 809
——— Pianoforte, 'The Coquette' (R.) 332
——— Six Hymn-Tunes with Faux-Bourdons (R.) 618
Brewerton, Erik. Reflections on Liszt 17
——— The Spirit of Singing: A Study in Ideals 977
Bridge, Frank. Pianoforte Sonata (R.) 331
——— Song, 'Dweller in my deathless dreams' (R.) 228
——— Song, 'Journey's End' (R.) ... 523
Bridgend, Music at 168
Brighton Competitive Musical Festival 743
Brighton, Music at 63, 264, 358, 651, 744, 1033, 1127
Briscoe, W. J. (Obituary) 943
Bristol, Music at 63, 165, 264, 358, 454, 651
Bristol Opera Season 1119

Page

British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals: Annual General Meeting ... ... (see 841) 1030
——— Summer Conference 741
British Women's Symphony Orchestra 345
Broderson, Viggo. Pianoforte, 'Konzert-Etuden' (R.) 619
——— Songs, 'Auf duftiger haide' and 'Weltenweiter Wandrer' (R.) ... 228
Bromley Choral Society 48
Bronkhurst, Henry. Pianoforte recital 348
Broughton, Marjorie, and Stanley C. West. 'Six Odd Songs' (R.) ... 132
Brown, Arthur Henry (Obituary) ... 269
Bryson, Ernest. Song, 'The Angler' (R.) 523
Budapest String Quartet 252
Bull, Arthur J. Church music, 'Missa Sancti Andreæ' (R.) 522
Bullock, Ernest. Anthem, 'Christ, the fair glory of the Holy Angels' (R.) 1098
——— Anthem, 'Give us the wings of faith' (R.) 228
Burney, Charles. By Anthony Clyne 315
——— in the light of his letters. By E. van der Straeten 513
Burnley, Music at 652
Burrows, B Pianoforte, 'Chimes' (R.) 809
——— Pianoforte, 'Studies in Style and Expression' (R.) 620
Burton, Music at 64, 358
Bury St. Edmunds. Choral Festival ... 831
Bury St. Edmunds Musical Society ... 342
Bute (Buteshire) Competitive Musical Festival 553
Butler, Leonard. Organ, 'Alla Minuetto' (R.) 334
Buxton Competitive Musical Festival ... 650
Buxton, Music at 454
Bygott, C. E., and Ralph Dunstan. 'Musical Appreciation through Song' (R.) 1095
Byrd, William (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
——— 'Ave Maria' and 'Beata es' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) 720
——— 'Confirma hoc Deus,' 'Civitas sancti tui,' and 'O quam suavis' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) 618
——— 'Hæc Dies' (Ed., E. H. Fellowes) (R.) 810
——— 'My Ladye Nevells Booke' (Ed., Hilda Andrews (R.)' (see 1075) 912
——— 'O Sacrum Convivium' and 'O virum mirabilem' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) 810

C natural and B sharp. By Harry Farjeon 596
——— (Correspondence) 837
Cadman, Charles Wakefield. Songs, 'Flowers of Forgetfulness' (R.) ... 228
Caerleon, Music at 361
Calgary, Conference of Delegates from the Competition Festivals of Western Canada 262
Calvocoressi, M.-D. (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
——— Moussorgsky as seen by one of his Friends... 214
——— Music in the Foreign Press (see 353) 34, 143, 224, 317, 421, 512, 797, 894, 995
Cambridge Competitive Musical Festival 452
Cambridge Summer Course in Music Teaching 839
Cambridge, Music at 64, 358, 744
Canadian Folk-Song. By Mrs. Frank Liebich 886
Canford School, Music in 163
Capell, Richard (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
——— 'Der Doppelgänger'; or, 'The Spectral Self' 694
——— Gustav Holst: Notes for a Biography (I.) 1073
Capleton, Arnold. Pianoforte, 'Meditation' No. 5 (R.) 809
——— Pianoforte, 'Three Meditations for Spiritualists' (R.) 620
Cardiff, Music at ... 68, 168, 361, 457, 1129
Carey, Clive. Choral song, 'Highland Lullaby' (R.) 807
——— Songs, 'April Children' and 'Since thou, O fondest' (R.) 523
Carlisle Competitive Musical Festival 356
Carmarthen, Music at 457, 1035
'Carmen' (Opera and the Choral Society) (R.) 792
'Carmen,' Bizet's, An unpublished page of. By Paul Landormy 803
Carr, Howard, Arr. by. Four Traditional Songs (R.) 227

Page

Carse, Adam. Anthem, 'Praise the Lord, O my soul' (R.) 618
——— Full Score, 'Waltz Variations' (R.) 426
——— Pianoforte, Three Preludes (R.) 332
——— 'The School Orchestra: Organization, Training, and Répertoire' (R.) 323
Carter, John Hilton (Obituary) 461
Casadesus, Robert. Pianoforte recital 1124
Casals Quartet 346
Case for Unison Singing in Churches, The. By C. Whitaker-Wilson (see 161) 38
Casella, Alfredo. Ravel's Harmony (see 260) 124
'Castle Society of Music' (Correspondence) 834, 933
Caterham School, Music in ... 547, 839
'Catholic Schools Hymn-Book, The: Accompaniment' (R.) 816
Catterall Quartet 1123
Centenary of Weber (Correspondence) (see 535) 645
Central London Music Study Circle ... 943
Chamber Music Club, The 1038
Chamber Music Players 346
Chamberlain, Ronald. Pianoforte recital 450
Chaminade, C. Pianoforte, 'Berceuse Arabe' (R.) 333
——— Pianoforte, Nocturne (R.) ... 620
——— Violin, 'Chanson Bretonne' (R.) 136
Chapman, E. T. Carol, 'Christ was born on Christmas Day' (R.) 1007 ——— Church music, 'Let all the world in every corner sing' (Ed., Martin Akerman) (R.) 720
Charm of Limitations, The. By Alexander Brent-Smith 503
Charterhouse School, Music in ... 547, 839
Chester, Music at 64, 165
Chester Musical Society 40
Chesterfield Competitive Musical Festival 263
Chesterfield, Music at 358
Chichester, Music at 165, 1127
Children's Concerts (Occasional Note) (see 217, 327, 352) 138
Children's Music, The. By J. H. Elliot 811
——— (Correspondence) 934
Ching, James. Pianoforte, 'Over the Hills' (R.) 909
Chisholm, Erik. Pianoforte, 'Cameos' (R.) 809
Choir-Training and the R.C.O. (Correspondence) ... ... (see 350) 445
Chopin. Valse in E minor (Arr. for Violin by Ysaye) (R.) 621
Choral Society Programmes ... 935, 1024
Choralism (Correspondence) (see 22, 219) 56
Christ's Hospital, Hertford, Music in 163, 839
Chuckerbutty, S. W. Oliphant. Commercial Orchestration 997
Church and Organ Music ... 38, 151, 245, 334, 437, 541 642, 729, 826, 922, 1018, 1112
'Church and School Hymnal, The' (Ed., C. Hylton Stewart) (R.) 926
Church Music Congress in Holland ... 439
Ciarni-Black, C. Song recital 253
'Cinema Organist, The.' Lecture by Quentin Maclean 642
——— (Correspondence) 732, 836, 931
City of London Choral Union (see 846) 255
City Temple Choral Society 342
Civil Service Choir 47
Claines Parish Church, Worcestershire, Gramophone recitals 1020
Clapton Wesleyan Church 343
Clare, Music at 358
Clark, F. Stephen. 'Orchestral Music' (R.) 428
Clark, H. Pianoforte, 'Five Lyrics' (R.) 621
Clark, Joyce McGown. Song, 'I sing of a maiden' (R.)... 806
Clarke, Graham. Pianoforte, 'Here, there, and everywhere' (R.) 621
——— Pianoforte, 'In Willow Wood' (R.) 135
Clarke, Rebecca. Violin and Pianoforte, 'Chinese Puzzle' and 'Midsummer Moon' (R.) 810
Classical Melodies in the Ball-room (Correspondence) ... ... (see 27) 160
Cleethorpes Competitive Musical Festival 743
Clementi, The Lost Symphonies of. By Herbert Westerby 412
Clementi's Connection with Lichfield (Correspondence) 260
Clementiana (Correspondence) (see 160) 57
Clements, Alfred J. Awarded Cobbett Medal for 1926 695

Page

Clifton College, Music at 547, 840
Clyne, Anthony. Dr. Burney 315
——— The New Organ-Pianoforte ... 520
Coates, John. 'Der Doppelgänger' Problem 890
——— Song recitals 56, 364, 451
Cobh (Queenstown), Music at 844
Colchester, Music at 64, 454
Coleraine Competitive Musical Festival 552
Coleridge-Taylor, S. Organ, Valse Suite, 'Three-Fours' (trans. by Oliver King and Reginald Goss-Custard) (R.) 334
Colne Orpheus Choir and Money Prizes (Correspondence) (see 740) 934
Colour in Music (Correspondence) (see 593) 734 Colour-Music: An Early Experiment. By W. G. Badger 995
——— (Correspondence) 1117
Columbia, New Gramophone (The Viva-Tonal) ... ... (see 1110) 919
Commercial Orchestration. By S. W. Oliphant Chuckerbutty 997
Community Singing, Daily Express Scheme (Ad Libitum) 987
Competition Festival Record 61, 164, 262, 356, 452, 551, 650, 740, 841, 938, 1030, 1126
Composer and Critic (Correspondence) (see 333, 545) 445
Concerning Boughton on Baines (Correspondence) ... ... (see 212, 645, 734) 543
Concerts for Children (Correspondence) (see 138, 217, 327) 352
'Concerts Spirituels' (Correspondence) (see 252, 352) 445
Consecutive Fifths. By Arthur T. Froggatt ... ... (see 732, 834) 610
Contemporary Music Centre 346
Conway, M. P. 'Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas' (R.) 320
Cook, Rene, Pianoforte recital ... 738
Coombs, E. A. Presentation 462
Cooper, Gerald. Concerts (see 350) 251, 347
Cooper, Robert. Motet, 'Gloria in excelsis Deo' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) 720
Corder, Frederick. 'François Liszt' (R.) 29
Corder, Paul. Pianoforte, 'Spanish Waters' (R.) 1097
Cork, Music at 70
Cortôt, M. Pianoforte recital 48
Cory, Dr. I. R.: Village Doctor and Choirmaster 440
Covent Garden Opera ... (see 536) 737
Coviello, Nicola (Obituary) 749
Coward, Dr. Henry. Freedom of the City of Sheffield (Occasional Note) 329
——— Knighthood conferred upon (Occasional Note) ... (see 845) 727
Cowell, Henry. Song, 'Manaunung's Birthing' (R.) 806
——— Song, 'Where she lies' (R.) ... 522
Craig, John Millar (Obituary) ...(see 461) 366
Cramp, Thomas (Obituary) 366
Cranleigh School, Music at 163
Croft, William. Church music, 'Hear my prayer, O Lord,' 'O Lord, rebuke me not,' and 'O Lord, Thou hast searched me out' (Ed., C. Hylton Stewart) (R.) 521
Cromer Parish Church. Organ-Violin-Vocal recital 832
Cross, John Albert (Obituary) 845
Crow, The late Dr. E. J., of Ripon (Correspondence) 645
Croydon Operatic Society (Occasional Note) 536
Croydon Philharmonic Society 48
Cruwys, Laurie. Song recital 253
Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society 48, 256
Cumberland, Gerald (Obituary) ... 749
Curzon, Clifford. Pianoforte recital ... 1124
Cwmparc (Rhondda), Music at 168
Czech Choir of Prague Teachers, Visit to London 1118

Dale, Benjamin. Part-songs, 'Rosa Mystica' and 'Cradle Song' (R.) ... 331
Dale, Esther. Song recital 350
Dalmaine, Cecil C. Violin, 'The Old Man's Hour' (R.) 1095
d'Alvarez, Marguerite. Song recital ... 1028
Daman, William (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
Dana, Mildred. Song recital 1028
Dance Music of To-day. By Jack Hylton ... ... (see 826) 792 Dance Musician, The (Occasional Note) (see 160) 27 d'Arco, Selma, and Maurice d'Oisly. Song recital 156

Page

Darke, Harold E. 'Ring out, ye crystal spheres' (R.) 1006
——— Communion Service in F (R.) 1098
Darlington, Music at 64
Darnton, P. C. Pianoforte Sonata (R.) 1096
Darwen, Music at 264
Dauntsey College, Music at 163
Daventry, Music at 454
Davies, E. T. Part-song, 'Y Gelynen' (R.) 330
Davies, Fanny. Pianoforte recitals 348, 738
Davies, Walford. Gresham Essay, III. The Perfect Fourth ... (see 352) 113
Davis, J. D. Pianoforte, Two Valse-Intermezzi (R.) 135
Davison, John A., and Francis J. Hill. Organ and 'Cello recitals 921 de Belleroche, Mrs. Albert. Permanent British Opera in London 1094 de Boer, Willem, Arr. for Violin and Pianoforte by. Variations, Moderato, and Intermezzo (R.) 229 de Croze, Austin, Collected by. 'The Beautiful Folk-Songs of France' (R.) 808 de Falla, Manuel. 'Seven Spanish Popular Songs' (Adapted for Violin by Paul Kochanski) (R.) 229 de Jersey, Everal. Pianoforte recital... 739 de Ternant, Andrew. Josef Rheinberger in Private Life 812
Déarmer, Percy. 'Subject Index of Hymns in the English Hymnal and Songs of Praise' (R.) 927
——— R. Vaughan Williams, and Martin Shaw. 'Songs of Praise' (R.) 335
Debussian Quotation, A (Correspondence) ... ... (see 38) 161
del Campo, Conrado. Chamber music, 'Caprichos Romanticos' (R.) 1005
Delasaire, William. Player-Piano Notes 35, 144, 235, 324, 429
Demuth, Norman F. Choral Song, 'Dream Pedlary' (R.) 907
——— Part-song, 'Wind in the Trees' (R.) 330
——— Pianoforte, 'A Graceful Waltz' (R.) 1004
——— Pianoforte, 'Rigaudon' and 'Rêverie' (R.) 621
Dennison, Herbert. Pianoforte, 'Day Dreams' (R.) 424
Dent, Edward J. (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
——— Musical Association Paper, 'English Opera' 447
——— New Light on the Scarlatti Family 982
——— 'Terpander: or, Music and the Future' (R.) 1098
'Der Doppelgänger'; or, 'The Spectral Self.' By Richard Capell 694
'Der Doppelgänger' Problem. By John Coates 890
Derby, Music at ... 166, 264, 358, 454, 1127
Derenburg, Mrs. Carl. My Recollections of Brahms 598
Derry Feis 453
Derry, Music at 362
d'Esterre, Neville. 'Music and its Creators' (R.) 429
Development of Folk-Song, The ... 555
Diller, Angela. Pianoforte, 'In Days of Old' (R.) 524
'Discus.' The Gramophone and the Choralist 140
Disingenuous Journalism (Correspondence) 1117
Diss, Music at 64
Dixon, J. H. Reginald. Organ, Introduction, Variations, and Fugue on 'Sedbergh' (R.) 333
Dohnányi, Ernst von. Violin Concerto (R.) 1097 d'Oisly, Maurice, and Selma d'Arco. Song recital 156
Doncaster, Music at 64, 454
Dorfmann, Ania. Pianoforte recital ... 739
Douglas, I.O.M., Competitive Musical Festival 552
Dounis, M. D. C. 'Violin-Playing on a Scientific Basis' (R.) 719
Dowland, John, A Note on. By Philip Heseltine ... ... (see 353) 209
Dowling, Dr. Thomas Barrow (Obituary) 943
'Downfall of Paris, The' (Ad Libitum) (see 511) 602, 699
Dowson, Henry Martin (Obituary) ... 1134
Draper, William H. 'Hymns of the Spirit' (R.)... 810
Driver, F. Percival. Pianoforte. 'An Old-Style Measure' (R.) 1005
——— Pianoforte, 'Five Sketches' (R.) 910
——— Pianoforte, Three Pieces (R.) 621

Page

Dry, Wakeling W. 'Chopin' (R.) ... 615
——— Opera Records.
I. London, Paris, and Dresden (see 259) 127
II. Berlin 745
Dublin. Father Mathew Feis 453
Dublin Feis Ceoil 552
Dublin, Music at 69, 168, 362, 457, 555, 745, 844, 941, 1036, 1130
Dugarde, Muriel. Song recital 1027
Dukas, Paul, at Queen's Hall 1122
Dumfries, Orchestral Music at 462
Dumfriesshire Competitive Musical Festival 651
Dundee Competitive Musical Festival 651, 938
Dundee, Music at 455
Dungannon Competitive Musical Festival 552
Dunhill, Thomas F. Full Score, 'White Peacocks' (R.) 425
——— Full Score, 'Masque Suite' (R.) 426
——— Part-songs, 'The Ash Grove' and 'The Minstrel Boy' (R.) 807
——— Pianoforte, 'Studies in Rhythmic Difficulties' (R.) 135
Dunstan, Ralph. 'A Second Book of Carols' (R.) 1095
——— and C. E. Bygott. 'Musical Appreciation through Song' (R.) ... 1095
Durand, Jacques. Song, 'Serenade Langoureuse' (R.) 133
Durham Cathedral and Special Choir ... 40
Dusckin, S. Pastourelle from Ravel's 'L'Enfant et les Sortilèges' (Arr. for Violin) (R.)... 137
Dyson, William Mann (Obituary) ... 1038
——— Presentation 249
——— Sixty years' service as lay-clerk in Worcester Cathedral 157

Ealing Philharmonic Society ... 48, 348
'Ear, Eye, and Hand in Music Study' (Musical Association Paper). By Ernest Fowles 355
East Devon Orchestra 174
Eastbourne, Music at 264, 454
Eastbourne Musical Festival 1119
Ebel, Arnold. Pianoforte, 'Impressionen' and 'Fantasia Espansiva' (R.) 135
Edinburgh Competitive Musical Festival 651
Edinburgh, Music at 67, 166, 266, 455, 652, 940, 1034, 1128
Edmonds, Paul. Music in Albania ... 407
Edmondston, Osborne. Pianoforte, 'From my Sketch-Book' (R.)... ... 809
Edroff, E. Pianoforte, 'What shall I play?' (R.)... 909
Edwards, H. J. Diamond Jubilee: Organist of Barnstaple Parish Church 1019
Eisenberg, Maurice. 'Cello recital ... 347
Elgar, Edward. Part-songs, 'How calmly the evening' and 'The Herald' (R.) 331
Elgin, Music at 266
Elizabethan Festival (London) 452
Ellingford, Harold James (Obituary) ... 749
Elliot, J. H. The Children's Music (see 138, 217, 327, 352, 934) 811
Ellis, Kenneth. Song recital 56
Emil-Behnke, Kate 'Singers' Difficulties: How to overcome them' (R.) 712
England, Leslie. Pianoforte recital ... 349
England, Paul. 'Fifty Favourite Operas' (R.) 428
English Abroad, The. By Jeffrey Pulver 902, 990
English Folk-Dance Society, Festival at London University 157 ——— Festival at Scala Theatre ... 648
'English Opera' (Musical Association Paper). By Edward J. Dent 447
Erhart Chamber Orchestra 1124
Eton College, Music at ... 163, 547, 840
Evans, George Spencer (Obituary) ... 461
Evans, Madeleine. Pianoforte, 'Music Land' (R.) 1005
——— Pianoforte, 'Once upon a Time' (R.)... 621
Evans, Rhys. Presentation 367
Examination Papers (Correspondence) 934
——— (Occasional Note) (see 984, 1013, 1116) 823
Exeter, Music at ... 64, 264, 358, 554, 1127
Exmouth, Music at... 1127
Eye Parish Church. Choir Festival ... 643

Fachiri, Adila. Violin recital 1123
'Faculty of Arts' Chamber Concerts 252, 347
Fairlie, Mabel Browning. Song, 'He shall sustain thee' (R.) 1004

Page

'Fairyland, On the way to.' Album of Pianoforte Pieces (R.) 909
Farjeon, Harry. C natural and B sharp (see 837) 596
——— Part-song, 'Lament' (R.) ... 618
——— Pianoforte, 'Contrasts' (R.) ... 1005
——— Pianoforte, Invention and Pavan (R.) 332
——— Pianoforte, Three Duets (R.) ... 808
——— Unison songs, 'Ewes,' 'Arundel,' and 'St. Leonard's Forest' (R.) 423
Farmer, Henry G. Musical Association Paper, 'The Influence of Music from Arabic Sources' 548 Farmer, John (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
Farnaby, Giles. (Correspondence) (see 602) 734
——— (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
Farrar, Ernest Bristow. Organ, 'A Wedding Piece' and 'Elegy' (R.) ... 908 Faversham, Music at 454, 554
Felixstowe, Music at 166
Ferndale, Music at 68, 168
Ferryside, Music at... 168
Festival of the English Folk-Dance Society, at London University ... 157
——— at Scala Theatre 648
Field, Harry. Pianoforte recital ... 254
Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannon Competitive Musical Festival 651
Finlay, Kenneth. Part-songs, 'Quick! we have but a second,' 'O, why left I my hame?' and 'Wha'll be King but Charlie' (R.) 907
Fino, Giocondo. Mass for Two Voices (R.) 1098
Finzi, Gerald. Song-Cycle, 'By Footpath and Stile' (R.) 523
Fisher, Esther. Pianoforte recital ... 649
Fletcher, Percy E. 'Four Tennyson Lyrics' (R.) 228
——— Part-song, 'Bees' (R.) 807
Fleury, Louis (Obituary) 749
Flood, W. H. Grattan. New Light on Late Tudor Composers.
XV.—John Farmer 219
XVI.—William Daman 406
XVII.—William Blitheman 511
XVIII.—Giles Farnaby (see 734) 602
XIX.—John Marbeck 704
XX.—Nathaniel Patrick 804
XXI.—Robert White 893
XXII.—William Byrd 994
——— 'The Old Folks at Home': Centenary of the Composer 648
Fogg, Eric. Part-song, 'Meg Merrilies' (R.) 907
——— Songs, 'To Morning' and 'Laughing Song' (R.) 523
Fontaine, Léon J. 'Violin Pieces,' Book 1 (R.) 136
Foochow, China. 'The Hymn of Praise' 927
Ford, Donald. Songs, 'The Dress-Maker' and 'A Hymn of Thanksgiving' (R.) 227
Formichi, Cesare. Song recital ... 349
Forth, T. Francis. Music in Stones: 15th-century Carvings in a Village Church 826
Foss, Hubert. Song, 'New Mistress, The' (R.) 228
——— Song, 'Nurse's Song, The' (R.) 522
——— Song, 'Riouperoux' (R.) ... 806
——— Song, 'Sergeant's Song, The' (R.) 718
Foster, Arnold. The Coventry Carol (Arr.) 1096
Foster, Megan. Song recital 156
Foulds, John. Pianoforte, 'Eddies' (R.) 135
——— Pianoforte, Incidental Music to 'Henry VIII.' (R.) 620
——— Song, 'Allah' (R.) 523
Foundling Hospital: Final Service before Removal from London ... 643 ——— Visit of the King and Queen ... 731
Fourths, Fifths, and Sixths (Correspondence) ... ... (see 610) 732, 834
Fourths, Ninths, &c. (Correspondence) 444
Fowler, H. W. 'Dictionary of Modern English Usage' (R.) 911
Fowles, Ernest. Musical Association Paper, 'Ear, Eye, and Hand in Music Study' 355
Fox-Strangways, A. H. (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
——— and Steuart Wilson. Schubert's Songs translated by (R.) ... 133
Francis, G. T. Song, 'In the Trades' (R.) 227
Frank, Paul von. 'Tonkünstler-Lexikon' (R.) 917

Page

Franks, Kynaston. Song recital ... 451
Frauenheim, Norman. Pianoforte recital 551
Free Scholarships (Correspondence) (see 139) 351
Freer, Dawson. 'Concise Technical Studies for Singers' (R.) 1100
Frere, Walter Howard. 'A Liturgical Psalter' (R.) 335
Frets on Viols (Correspondence) 733, 837
Friedlander. Arthur M. 'Facts and Theories relating to Hebrew Music' (R.) 31
Froggatt, Arthur T. Consecutive Fifths (see 732, 834) 610
——— Royal Academy of Arts ... 528
Frost, W. A. 'Early Recollections of St. Paul's Cathedral' (R.) 615
Fry, Howard. Song recital 1027
Frye, F. R. Presentation 731
Fuji-Wara, Yosié. Song recital ... 156

Gardiner, Rolf. The Tour of the Märkische Spielgemeinde through the South of England 999
Gardiner, William, of Leicester. By Orlando A. Mansfield 900
Garrard, Edna. Pianoforte recital ... 254
Gateshead Parish Church. Dedication of new organ 152
Gelli, Music at 168
'Genius' of William Baines, The (Correspondence) (see 212, 543, 645) 734
Gerhardt, Elena. Song recitals 253, 451
German, Edward. Part-song, 'It was a lover' (R.) 1096
——— Song, 'London Town' (R.) ... 717
German Organ Congress, A 925
Germany, Music in 71, 169, 362, 457, 652, 746, 1036, 1130
'Gesualdo, Carlo: Musician and Murderer.' By Philip Heseltine and Cecil Gray (R.) 814
——— Part-songs, 'Resta di Darmi Noia' and 'Moro lasso al mio duolo' (Ed., J. B. McEwen) (R.) 1096
Gibbs, Amstrong. Choral work, 'Songs of Enchantment' (R.) 423 ——— Part-song, 'The Silver Penny' (R.) 331
——— Pianoforte, 'In the High Alps' (R.) 134
——— Song, 'Crossings' (R.)... ... 805
Gieseking, Walter. Pianoforte recital 1124
Giggleswick School, Music at ... 547, 840
Gigout, Eugène (Obituary) 174
Gil-Marchex, Henri. Ravel's Pianoforte Technique 1087
Gilbert and Sullivan Opera at the Princes Theatre 1029
Giles Farnaby. (Correspondence) (see 602) 734
Giorni, Aurelio. Sonata for Violoncello and Pianoforte (R.) 134
Glasgow Competitive Musical Festival 553
Glasgow, Music at 66, 167, 266, 455, 652, 949, 1034
Glasgow Orpheus Choir at Queen's Hall 450
Glass, Dudley. Pianoforte, 'Pantomime' (R.)... 1005
Glazounov. Song, 'Romance de Nina' (R.) 719
Gloucester, Music at 454
Gluck's 'Alceste': A Neglected Opera. By L. N. C. Barnaby 1091
Gluck's 'Orpheus,' at Amsterdam (Holland) 1131
Godfery, M. van Someren. Songs, 'Men who danced their shoes into holes,' 'Cradle Song,' and 'Little Lady of my Dreams' (R.) 523
Godfrey, Lady (Obituary) 77
Golder's Green, London, Competitive Musical Festival 263
Goodey, Tom. Song recital 649
Goss, John. Song recitals ... 44, 649, 650
Grace, Harvey. Organ Music of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, The (see 445) 309 ——— Organ, Ten Bach Transcriptions (R.) 334
Grafton Philharmonic Society 41
Gramophone and the Choralist. By 'Discus' 140
Gramophone, New Columbia model (Viva-Tonal) ... ... (see 1110) 819
——— New H.M.V. model 33
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' (see 161) 31, 142, 233, 325, 431, 533, 629, 714, 816, 917, 1014, 1110
Graves, Charles L. 'Hubert Parry: His Life and Works' (R.) 524

Page

Gray, Alan. 'A Book of Descants' (R.) 810
——— Organ, Fantasia in A, Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, five Choral Preludes, and Introduction and Fugue in F minor (R.) 333
Gray, Cecil, and Philip Heseltine. 'Carlo Gesualdo: Musician and Murderer' (R.)... 814
Gray, Isabel. Pianoforte Recital ... 348
Greaves, Ralph. Pianoforte, Miniature Suite (R.) 621
——— Song, 'I will go look for Death' (R.) 522
——— Song, 'Yellow Wine' (R.) ... 806
Green, Maurice. Anthem, 'Lord, how long?' (Ed., John E. West) (R.) ... 810
——— Six Anthems (Ed., C. Hylton Stewart) (R.) 521
Greene, Plunket. Song recital 349
Greenhalgh, John H. (Obituary) ... 943
Greenock Competitive Musical Festival 357
Greenock, Music at 456, 1129
Greenwood, John. Record of long Choir Service 152
Gregorian Association. Fifty-sixth Festival 730
Gregynog (Montgomery), Music at ... 267
Gresham Essays. By Walford Davies. III. The Perfect Fourth (from Hucbald to Holst) ... ...(see 352) 113
Gretchaninov. Part-songs, 'Autumn' and 'Sun and Moon' (R.) 1096
Greville, Ursula. Song, 'The Cherry Tree' (R.) 523
Grew, Eva Mary. Ruskin's Progress in Music ... ... (see 544, 645) 408
Grieg, A Note on. By Eric H. Thiman 709
Grierson, Mary. Pianoforte recital ... 650
Griffiths, J. R. Retirement 342
Groningen, Steven van (Obituary) ... 461
Guernsey Eisteddfod 63
Guernsey. Guille-Allès Choral and Orchestral Association Festival ... 359
Guildford, Music at ... 64, 166, 1033
Guildhouse Musical Festival 357
Gullan, Marjorie. The Ring of Words 131
Guller, Youra. Pianoforte recital ... 739

Haddock, Edgar (Obituary) 845
Hadley, Patrick. Song, 'The Woodlanders' (R.) 718
Hadow, W. H. 'Beethoven's Op. 18 Quartets' (R.) 611
——— 'Comparison of Poetry and Music, A.' Henry Sidgwick Lecture, 1925 (R.) 611 ——— 'Studies in Modern Music' (Series 1 and 2) (R.) 611
Haigh, T. 'Pedal Playing: A Complete School of Pedal Technique for Organists' (R.) 908 ——— Pianoforte, 'Toy-Joys' (R.) 1005
Haigh, Walter (Obituary)... 845
Hales, Hubert. Pianoforte, 'Little Church on the Hill, The' (R.)... ... 524
——— Pianoforte, 'Pastorale' and 'Evening' (R.) 424
Halifax Competitive Musical Festival... 63
Halifax, Music at 64, 359, 1127
Hall, Jessie. Pianoforte recital ... 739
Hallé Orchestra, The ... (see 939) 708
Hallis, Adolphe. Pianoforte recital ... 649
Handel Festival, The ... (see 329) 635
——— (Correspondence) ... 446, 733
——— Past and Present 410
Handel's Overture in D minor (Arr. for Organ by H. F. Ellingford) (R.) ... 333
Handel's 'Semele' (Concert Version) (R.) 422
Handel's Use of Uncommon Instruments and Combinations. By E. van der Straeten 607
Hanley, Music at 264, 359
Hannington, Albert (Obituary) 366
Hardcastle, W. E. 'The Welwyn Psalter' (R.) 335
Harlech, Music at 745
Harlow Church Music Association. Annual Festival 643
Harold Brooke Choir (see 328, 1109) 47, 450
Harris, William H. Anthem, 'King of Glory, King of Peace' (R.) 522
——— Motet, 'Faire is the Heaven' (R.) 229
Harrison, Julius. Pedantry in Examinations ... ... (see 823, 934, 1013). 984
Harrogate, Music at ... 652, 744, 1033
Hart, Dunstan. Song recital 254
Hartlepool, Music at 554
Harwood, Basil. Organ, Three Preludes on Anglican Chants (R.) ... 333 ——— Organ, Voluntary in D flat (R.) 907
Haslemere Festival of Ancient Chamber Music 938

Page

Hastings Competitive Musical Festival 650
Hastings, Music at 264, 652
Hathaway, Joseph W. G. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (R.) 1006
Havant, Music at 554
Haydon, Thomas, Obituary date of (Correspondence) 57
Hayes, Gerald R. Old Ways for New in Violin Training 223
Hayman, John, and Nancy Holland. Song recital 1124
Hazel Grove (Cheshire), Music at ... 64
Hazlehurst, Cecil. Song, 'O leave your sheep' (R.) 1003
Heather Festival, The, at Oxford. By Frank Howes ... ... (see 420) 537
Hegner, Paula. Pianoforte recital ... 1124
Helensburgh, Music at ... 67, 456, 1035
Henschel, George. Church music, 'Tantum Ergo' (R.) 618
——— Part-songs, 'Salutation' and 'Easter Song' (R.) 807
——— Pianoforte, 'Les Poules' (R.) 332
Herbert, Ivy. Pianoforte, Polonaize in B flat (R.) 135
Herbert, Muriel. Song, 'Have you seen but a white lily grow?' (R.) ... 523
Herrmann, Carl. Viola, 'Zwei Stücke and 'Variationen über eine ernste Weise' (R.) 1006
Heseltine, Philip. A Note on John Dowland ... ... (see 353) 209
——— and Cecil Gray. 'Carlo Gesualdo: Musician and Murderer' (R.) 814
Heslop, William (Obituary) 845
Hesse, Adolf. Two Books of Pieces for Organ (R.) 908
Hexham Abbey. Festival Service ... 1020
Heyner, Herbert. Song recital... ... 550
Hill, Edward Burlingame. 'Modern French Music' (R.) ... (see 545) 321
Hill, J. Francis, and John A. Davison. Recitals for Organ and Violoncello ... 921
Hindemith, Paul. 'Cardillac,' at the Dresden State Opera (Germany) ... 1100
——— Concerto for Orchestra (Germany) 169
Hitchin, Music at 359
H.M.V., New Gramophone 33
Hoare, Margaret (Obituary) 461
Hofmann, Josef. Pianoforte recitals 739, 1028
Holland. Church Music Congress at Tilburg 439
Holland, Music in ... 73, 170, 268, 363, 458, 557, 747, 845, 942, 1037, 1131
Holland, Nancy, and John Hayman. Song recital 1124
Hollins, Alfred. Song, 'My Mary' (R.) 132
Hollis, Harry Warner (Obituary) ... 1038
Holloway, F. W., and Beatrice Snell. Two-Pianoforte recital 48
Holmes, Augustus, and Frederick J. Karn. Tutor for American Organ (R.) 908 Holst, Grace. Song recital 349
Holst, Gustav. Motet, 'Sing me the men' (R.) 331
——— Notes for a Biography (I.). By Richard Capell 1073
Homer, Sidney. Song, 'General William Booth enters into Heaven' (R.) 1003
Honegger, Arthur. Choral work, 'King David' (R.)... ... ... (see 459) 422
Hood, Colin. Pianoforte, 'Jungle Tunes' (R.) 424
——— Pianoforte, 'Robinson Crusoe' (R.) 909
Hope, Brian. Pianoforte, 'In the days of Queen Bess' (R.) 809
'Horn Chords: An Acoustical Problem,' Some Observations on. By W. F. H. Blandford 128
Horne, Elsie. Pianoforte, Three Sketches (R.) 621
Horner, Ralph Joseph (Obituary) ... 461
Horton, J. R. Suite for two 'Cellos (R.) 1097
Hove, Music at 744
How to Establish a Local Orchestra. By S. Midgley 899
Howell, Dorothy. Violin and Pianoforte, 'Moorings, The' (R.) 534
——— Violin and Pianoforte, 'Phantasy' (R.) 229
Howes, Frank. 'Borderland of Music and Psychology, The' (R.) 815
——— Heather Festival, The, at Oxford ... ... (see 420) 537
——— Music with Tears (see 789, 899, 933) 1076
Huddersfield (Mr. Sunderland) Competitive Musical Festival 263
Huddersfield, Music at ... 64, 264, 1127

Page

Hughes, Herbert, Ed. by. Song, 'The Palatine's Daughter' (R.) 227
Hull, A. Eaglefield, Ed. by. 'The Letters of Ludwig van Beethoven' (R.) ... 229
Hull Competitive Musical Festival ... 650
Hull, Music at ... 64, 264, 359, 454, 1127
Hull, Robert H. On Simplicity in Music 996
——— Pianoforte Concerto Problem, The 518
——— Scriabin: A Comment 993
Humby, Betty. Pianoforte recital ... 349
Humphries, Frederick. Violin and Pianoforte, Idyll (R.) 1097
Hungarian Quartet 346
Hurstpierpoint College, Music at ... 548
Hylton, Jack. Dance Music of To-day (see 826) 799
Hymn-Tune Black-List, A 151

Incorporated Staff-Sight-Singing College 839
Influence of Music from Arabic Sources, The (Musical Association Paper). By Henry G. Farmer 548
Inverness Competitive Musical Festival 553
Inverness Ladies' Choir, at Æolian Hall, London ... ... (see 941) 1030
Ipswich, Music at 64, 359
Ipswich. Suffolk Competitive Musical Festival 743
Ireland, John. Pianoforte, 'April' and 'Bergomask' (R.) 332
Ireland, Music in 69, 168, 361, 457, 555, 745, 844, 941, 1036, 1130
Irish Horse Guards' Drum, The (Correspondence) 645, 833
Isaacs, Harry. Chamber Concert ... 346
Isle of Wight Competitive Musical Festival 650
'Italy's Most Beautiful Folk-Songs' (Collected, Elaborated, and Arranged by Geni Sadero) (R.) 133

Jacob, Gordon. Folk-Dances arranged for Brass Band (R.) 622
——— Viola, Concerto in C minor (R.) 1006
James, Phillis. Song, 'My Garden' (R.) 227
Janáček, Leos. Chamber Music Concert 550
Jannaconi, Giuseppe. Motet, 'The Voice of Joy and Health' (Ed., Noel Ponsonby) (R.) 720
Jarnach, Philip. 'Morgenklangspiel.' First performance (Germany) ... 1130
Jarrow, Music at 64
Jefferson, W. A. Organ, 'Berceuse,' 'Serenade,' 'Fanfare-Fantasy,' and 'Grand Chœur Symphonique' (R.) ... 334
Jenkins, Cyril. Part-songs, 'The Glories of our Blood and State' and 'How sleep the brave?' (R.) 331
Jervis-Read, H. V. Pianoforte Sonata (R.) 331
Johannesburg. 'Music Fortnight' (Occasional Note) 634
——— Wireless Eisteddfod 263
John Dowland's 'Lachrimæ,' &c. (Correspondence)... ... ... (see 209) 353
John Street Wesleyan Church, Chester. Dedication of organ 832
Johnson, Bernard. Choral songs, 'The Little Old Man' and 'The Old Woman' (R.) 807
Joseph, Jane M. Pianoforte, Suite of Five Pieces (R.) 424
'Journalist in the Making, The' (R.) ... 232
Judd, Percy. Choral Song, 'An Old Woman of the Roads' (R.) 618 ——— Choral songs, 'When Mary through the garden went' and 'The Enchanted Princess' (R.) 330

Kahn, Percy. Songs, 'Mary of Argyle,' 'MacGregor's Gathering,' and 'Song Memories' (R.) 717 Kalisch, Alfred (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
——— Puccini's 'Turandot' 556
Karg-Elert, S. Organ, 'Sunset,' 'Starlight,' and 'Elegiac Poem' (R.) ... 617
Karn, Frederick J., and Augustus Holmes. Tutor for American Organ (R.) 908
Kelk, A. Hastings. 'The Singing of the Psalms and Canticles to Anglican Chants' (R.) 31
Kelso, Music at 456
Kendal, Music at 454
Kenfig Hill, Music at 267
Kerst, Friedrich, Compiled and Annotated by. 'Beethoven: The Man and the Artist revealed in his own Words'; and 'Mozart: The Man and the Artist revealed in his own Words' (R.) ... 427

Page

Ketèlbey, A. W. 'Inexpensive' and other Counterfeits (Correspondence) (see 1081) 1117
Kettering Competitive Musical Festival 357
'Key to Braille Music Notation, A' (Occasional Note) 138
Kidson Frank (Obituary)... 1134
Kilner, Helen. Song, 'My Mary, sweet and brown' (R.) 227
Kilwinning, Music at 1129
Kitson, C. H. 'Additional Exercises to Elementary Harmony' (R.) 1099
Klein, Ivy Frances Songs, 'A Pedlar,' 'The Shepherd Boy,' and 'I had a dove' (R.) 717
Klein, John W. Verdi and 'Falstaff'... 605
Knight, Millicent. Song recital... ... 350
Kodály, Zoltán. Hungarian Folk-Songs, Arranged by (R.) 719
——— Part-songs, Two Hungarian Folk-Songs (R.) 618
Kœchlin, Charles. Pianoforte Duet, 'Quatre Sonatines Françaises' (R.) ... 424
Koeller, Dr. Francis (Obituary) 943
——— An Appreciation... 1133
Kornauth, Egon. Miniature Score, String Quartet (R.) 622
Kreisler. Recital at Queen's Hall ... 1123
Kruse Quartet 1123
Kubelik. Recitals at the Albert Hall and Queen's Hall 346
Kutcher, Samuel. Violin recital ... 155
Kutcher Quartet 1123

Lamb, Jeanette. Pianoforte recital ... 348
Lambelet, Vivien. Song, 'King's Messenger' (R.) 1002
——— Song recital 1125
Lambert, Constant. Ballet, 'Romeo and Juliet' (Arr. for Pianoforte) (R.) ... 908 Lamond, Frederic. Pianoforte recital 48
Landore, Music at 68
Landormy, Paul. An Unpublished Page of Bizet's 'Carmen' 803
Lang, C. S. Carol, 'Tres Magi de Gentibus' (Ed., Martin Akerman) (R.) 720 ——— Part-song, 'Wake, little bees' (R.) 907
Larne Competitive Musical Festival ... 553
Lassimonne, Denise. Pianoforte recital 56
'Lead, kindly Light,' A Sequel to (see 1014) 922
League of Arts (Occasional Note) 536
Leamington Competitive Musical Festival 743
Leamington, Music at 265
Lebell, Ludwig. 'Studies and Exercises for the Violoncello' (R.)... ... 1006
Lee, E. Markham. Pianoforte, 'Man in the Moon, The,' and 'Ten Little Pieces' (R.) 809
——— Pianoforte, 'Three Fancies' (R.) 619
——— Pianoforte, 'Windy Hill, The' (R.) 424
——— Song, 'A Flemish Lullaby' (R.) 227
Leeds Festival Choir at Queen's Hall (Ad. Libitum) ... ... (see 56, 219) 22
——— (Correspondence) 158
Leeds, Music at 64, 166, 265, 359, 454, 554, 652, 1127
Legge, Robin (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
Lehmann, Lotte. Song recitals 649, 1125
Leicester, Music at... ... 64, 265, 554, 1127
Leith Hill Musical Festival 452
Léner Quartet 4, 6, 347, 1124
Lent and Passiontide Music in the Churches 439
Léon, Mischa (Obituary) 560
Leslie, William Henry Perry (Obituary) 654
Letters to the Editor 56, 158, 256, 350, 442, 543, 644, 732, 833, 931, 1021, 1116
Leveridge, Richard. Unison Song, 'This great worlde is a trouble' (R.) 618
Ley, Henry G. Choral Song, 'The Glow-worm' (R.) 330
——— Precentor and Organist at Eton College (Occasional Note) 26
Leys School, Bach at the (see 163, 548) 42
Lichfield Cathedral 1020
Liebich, Inga Lærum. Songs, 'Break, break,' 'Le Clavecin,' and 'Les Jardins de Atahualpa' (R.) 719
——— String solo, 'Romance' (R.) (see 545) 426
Liebich, Mrs. Frank. Canadian Folk-Song... 886 ——— Variations on Various Verbal Themes 120

Page

Lincoln Cathedral. Festival Service ... 245
Lincoln, Music at 64
'Lind, Jenny, The Life of.' By Mrs. Raymond Maud (R.) 1097
Lindo, Algernon H. (Obituary) 943
Liszt, Franz. 'The Gipsy in Music' (R.) 912
Liszt, Reflections on. By Erik Brewerton 17
Liverpool Cathedral Organ Dedication. By W. A. Roberts ... (see 927) 1018
——— Specification 1114
Liverpool Church Choral Society. Festival Services 40, 1113
Liverpool, Music at ... 64, 166, 265, 454, 1033, 1127
Llandinam, Music at 267
Llansamlet, Music at 361
Lloyd, Olive. Pianoforte, 'Coral Cave' (R.) 135
L.N.E.R. Musical Society. Carol Concert at Queen's Hall 77
Lodge, E. L. Songs, 'Mantle of Blue' and 'Mistletoe' (R.) 718
Loewe, Sophie (Obituary)... 270
London Academy of Music. Concert at Hampstead Conservatoire 366
'London as a Musical Centre' (Ad Libitum) ... ... (see 824) 697
London Chamber Orchestra 345
London Choral Society 46, 255, 549
London Church Choir Association. Annual Festival of Service 39
London Concerts ... 44, 155, 251, 344, 448, 549, 649, 737, 840, 937, 1025, 1122
London County Council Lectures and Classes for Teachers 43
London Labour Choral Union Competitive Musical Festival 63 ——— Concert at Queen's Hall ... 1125
London Musical Festival 452
——— Twenty-first Anniversary Celebration Dinner 551
London String Quartet. Visit to Berlin (Germany) 170
London Sunday School Choir. Annual Concert 256
London Symphony Orchestra 45, 155, 251, 1025, 1126
——— Elgar concert 550
Londonderry Feis 356
Longo, A. Pianoforte, Twenty Little Preludes (R.) 621
Loretto School, Music in 164
Lost Symphonies of Clementi, The. By Herbert Westerby ... (see 160) 412
Loughton Choral Society and Orchestra 57
'Love Adrift' at the Gaiety Theatre (see 1013) 1029
Lovette, Thomas S. (Obituary) 270
Lowestoft, Music at 265
Lucas, J. H. (Obituary) 749
Lungs and the Man: Animals and Natural Breathing. By Sterling Mackinlay 728
Luton, Music at 65
Lytham Competitive Musical Festival... 552
Lytham Parish Church Festival... ... 41
Lyttelton, The Hon. Mrs. Robert (Obituary) 366

McEwen, Robert Finnie (Obituary) ... 461
Mackenzie-Rogan, J. 'Fifty Years of Army Music' (R.) 614
Mackinlay, Sterling. Lungs and the Man: Animals and Natural Breathing 728
McLaren, Isobel. Song recital ... 350
McLeod, Robert, Arr. by. 'Songs of the North' (Vol. 3) (R.) 423
McNaught, W. Part-song, 'Wood Fairy' (R.) 1096
——— Three Choirs Festival, The (see 329, 720) 928
Macpherson, Charles. Organ recital at St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta ... 40
Maine, Basil. Personalities among Musical Critics:
I.—A. H. Fox-Strangways ... 119
II.—M.-D. Calvocoressi 216
III.—Edward J. Dent 307
IV.—Francis Toye 402
V.—Richard Capell 506
VI.—Robin Legge 597
VII.—Alfred Kalisch 694
VIII.—W. J. Turner 788
——— Zurich Festival ... (see 225) 705
Mainzer, Joseph 504
Mainzer's Musical Times (Correspondence)... 644
'Malady of Chopin, The' (Correspondence) 57
Mallinson, Albert. 'Sapphic Lyrics' and 'Songs of Lesbos' (R.) 1004
Mallinson, Margaret. Song recital ... 1027
Malvern College, Music at ... 164, 548

Page

Manchester, Music at 65, 265, 359, 652, 745, 844, 939, 1033, 1127
——— 'The Ring' at: A Novel Subdivision 60
Manchester University 736
Manhire, Wilson. Organ, 'In the Cloisters' (R.) 908
Mansfield, Music at 359, 454
Mansfield, Orlando A. William Gardiner, of Leicester 900
Manuscripts in a Museum. By Thomas Armstrong 888
Marbeck, John (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
Mareo, Eric. Pianoforte, 'Idle Moments' (R.) 1005
——— Pianoforte, 'Storyettes' (R.) 424
Margate, Music at 939
Märkische Spielgemeinde. Tour of the, through the South of England. By Rolf Gardiner ... ... (see 1032) 999
Marlborough and District, Music at 65, 454
Marlborough College, Music at... ... 548
Marshall, Louise. Song recital ... 451
Martin, Easthope. Pianoforte, 'Souvenirs' (R.) 620
——— 'Songs of the Hedgerow' (R.) 523
Mase, Owen. Song, 'Protestation' (R.) 805
——— Song, 'The Unchanging' (R.) 523
Matthay, Tobias. Pianoforte, Ballade in A minor (R.) 619
——— Pianoforte, 'First Solo Book' and 'Playthings for Players, Young and Old' (R.) 424
Maude, Mrs. Raymond. 'The Life of Jenny Lind' (R.)... 1099
Medtner, N. Pianoforte, 'Three Tales' (R.) 619
——— Sonate-Vocalise (R.) (see 634) 425
——— Songs, 'Elegie' and 'Das Nachtlied' (R.) 718
——— String solo, Second Canzona with Dance (R.) 426
——— Violin and Pianoforte, Two Canzonas (R.) 334
Melba, Dame Nellie, on the Taste of Provincial Audiences (Ad Libitum) 124
——— 'The Melba Method' (R.) ... 427
Melbourne Town Hall. New organ ... 730
Melton Mowbray, Music at 359
Memorial to Leonard Borwick (Correspondence) 443
Mengelberg, Karel. Pianoforte, 'Seven Pieces for Children' (R.) 909
Menges, Herbert. Song, 'Silence, beautiful voice' (R.) 1002
Menges, Isolde. at Concert of the London Symphony Orchestra ... 46
Merrick, Frank. Pianoforte recital ... 451
Merriman, Victor. Songs, 'Plymouth Harbour' and 'Molly, dear' (R.) ... 1003
Merritt, George (Obituary) 77
Mertens, John. 'The Frankland Violin Tutor' (R.) 621
Merthyr, Music at 68, 457
Metropolitan Academy of Music. Presentation of Awards by Madame Kirkby Lunn 58
Meyer, Marcelle. Pianoforte recital ... 349
Middleton, H. S. Church music, 'Missa Sancti Michaelis' (R.) ... 522
Midgley, S. How to Establish a Local Orchestra 899
Midland Bank Choral Society 348
Midland Competition Festival 551
Midland Musician, The. A New Musical Periodical (Occasional Note) 140
Milford, Robin. Opera, 'The Shoemaker' (R.) 1098
——— Part-songs. 'Parson Hogg' and 'Rutterkin' (R.) 618
——— Pianoforte, 'My Lady's Pleasure' (R.) 620
——— Song, 'On his Mistress' (R.) 718
Millom Competitive Musical Festival ... 63
Milne, A. Forbes. 'The Oxford Pianoforte Series' (Ed. by) (R.) 424
Milne, H. F. 'How to Build a Chamber Organ' (R.)... 322
'Miscellany of Artistic Songs' (R.) ... 1002
Misprints in Mr. J. Stuart Archer's Choral Preludes (Correspondence) (see 333, 445) 545
Missions v. Organs (Correspondence)... 544
Modern French Music (Correspondence) (see 321) 545
Moeran, E. J. Choral Song, 'Commendation of Music' (R.) 330
——— Songs, 'The Jolly Carter' and 'In an arbour green' (R.) 522
Moiseiwitsch, Benno. Pianoforte recital 1028
Monklands (Lanarkshire) Competitive Musical Festival 554
Monte Carlo, Music at 558

Page

Monteverdi's 'Orfeo' at Oxford (see 57) 61
Morayshire Competitive Musical Festival 554
Morecambe Competitive Musical Festival 650
Morris, R. O. 'Foundations of Practical Harmony and Counterpoint' (R.) ... 137
Morriston, Music at 168
Morvay, Susanne. Pianoforte recital... 255
Motherwell and Wishaw Competitive Musical Festival 554
Moulaert, Raymond. Organ, 'Trois Poèmes Biblique' (R.) 334
Mountain Ash Annual Eisteddfod ... 452
Mountain Ash, Music at 168, 1035
Moussorgsky as seen one by of his friends. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ... 214
Moy, Edgar. Pianoforte, 'Snapshots' (R.) 135
'Mozart: The Man and the Artist revealed in his own Words.' Compiled and Annotated by Friedrich Keist (R.) 427
——— String Quartet in D minor (R.) 621
Mozart's Divertimenti (Correspondence) (see 225) 353
'Mr. Pepys.' Ballad Opera at Everyman Theatre, Hampstead 253
Much Nicer! (Correspondence) 443
Muirella, Joan. Song recital 254
Mullinar, Michael. Pianoforte, 'Grimm's Fairy Tales' (R.)... 332
Municipal Music in New Zealand: A talk with Mr. J. Maughan Barnett ... 437
——— (Correspondence) 838
Murdoch, William. Pianoforte recital 48
——— Song, 'Dirge' (R.) 717
Music and Tears (Ad Libitum) (see 1076) 789, 890
——— (Correspondence) ... 933, 1117
Music in Albania. By Paul Edmonds 407
Music in Public Schools ... 163, 547, 839
Music in Stones: 15th-century Carvings in a Village Church. By T. Francis Forth 826
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi (see 353) 34, 143, 224, 317, 421, 512, 797, 894, 995, 1090
Music in the Provinces 63, 165, 263, 357, 453, 554, 651, 744, 844, 939, 1033, 1126
Music in Tolstoy's Life. By Count Sergius Tolstoy... (see 634) 516, 603, 699
Music Society's Concert 252
'Music Trades Diary, Year-Book, and Directory for 1926' (R.) 366
Music with Tears. By Frank Howes (see 789, 890, 933) 1076
Musical Association, The. Borren, Charles van den, 'Æsthetic Value of the English Madrigal, The' 360
——— Dent, Edward J. 'English Opera' 447
——— Farmer, Henry G. 'Influence of Music from Arabic Sources, The' 548
——— Fowles, Ernest, 'Ear, Eye, and Hand in Music Study' 355
——— 'Proceedings of the Fifty-first Session, 1924-25' (R.) 233
——— Trend, J. B., 'Spanish Madrigals' (R.) 70
Musical Examinations (Occasional Note) (see 934, 984, 1013, 1116) 823
Musical Impressionist, A. By Rutland Boughton ... ... (see 543, 645, 734) 212
Musical Journalism in 1836 (Ad Libitum) 507
Musical Notes from Abroad 71, 169, 268, 362, 457, 557, 652, 746, 845, 942, 1036, 1130
Musical Renascence (Correspondence) 259
Musician's Bookshelf ... 29, 137, 229, 320, 426, 611, 712, 814, 910, 1098
Musicians' Club. Annual Dinner ... 1135
Musicians' Company, Award of the Cobbett Medal 695
Musicians' Status, The (Correspondence) 259
'My Ladye Nevells Booke,' Some Notes on. By Charles van den Borren ... 1075
My Recollections of Brahms. By Mrs. Carl Derenburg 598

National Association of Competitive Choirs. Annual Conference (see 934) 740
National Institute for the Blind: Appeal for Voluntary Workers (Correspondence) ... (see 905) 933
National Opera Trust. Meeting at Central Hall, Westminster 43
National Sunday League Concerts 155, 345
National Union of Organists' Associations Congress. By W. A. Roberts 923
Nature of Harmony, The. By Matthew Shirlaw 785, 882
——— (Correspondence) (see December, 1925) 57
Neath, Music at 361

Page

Negro 'Spirituals' (Ad Libitum) ... 697
New College Chapel Oxford. Rebuilding of organ 730
New Light on Late Tudor Composers. By W. H. Grattan Flood:
XV.—John Farmer 219
XVI.—William Daman 406
XVII.—William Blitheman 511
XVIII.—Giles Farnaby (see 734) 602
XIX.—John Marbeck 704
XX.—Nathaniel Patrick 804
XXI.—Robert White 893
XXII.—William Byrd 994
New Light on the Scarlatti Family. By Edward J. Dent 982
New Organ-Pianoforte, The. By Anthony Clyne 520
New York, Music at 74, 171
Newbridge (Mon.), Music at 361
Newcastle Bach Choir 249, 549
Newcastle Cathedral. Seven-hundredth Anniversary of the Death of St. Francis of Assisi 1019
Newcastle-on-Tyne, Music at 65, 166, 265, 359, 454, 1128
Newcastle (Staffs), Music at 65
Newman, Robert (Obituary) 1134
Newmarch, Mrs. Rosa. Honorary Member of the Artists' Union at Prague 650
Newport (I.O.W.), Music at 454
Newport (Mon.), Music at 69, 267, 361, 457
Newport (Pem.), Music at 168
Newton, Ernest. Pianoforte, 'Peter and Wendy' (R.)... 1005
——— Pianoforte, 'Sight-Reading Tests' (R.)... 524
Newton, John. 'Don'ts for Choirmen' (R.) 233
——— Lecture, 'Modal Music' ... 731
Newtown, Music at... ... ... 69, 267, 1129
Nicholson, Sydney H. 'The Boy Bishop,' Opera for Boys 440
Niedzielski, M. Pianoforte recitals 451, 649
Nonconformist Choral Union 542
——— Change of Title 1113
North London Competitive Musical Festival 62
North of England Musical Tournament 650
Northampton, Music at 65
Northcote, Sydney. Choral song, 'My Pilgrimage' (R.) 907
———Part-songs Welsh Airs, Arr. by (R.) 807
Northover, George. Song recital ... 1028
Norwegian Composer, A (Correspondence)... ... ... (see 426) 545
Norwich Competitive Musical Festival 552
Norwich, Music at 65, 166, 249, 265, 359, 554, 1128
Note on Grieg, A. By Eric H. Thiman 709
Note on John Dowland, A. By Philip Heseltine ... ... (see 353) 207
Nottingham, Music at ... 65, 265, 359, 454
Novaes, Guiomar. Pianoforte recital... 48
Novello's Collections of School Songs (R.) 1004
Novello's 'Hymns and Tunes for Sunday School Anniversaries,' Set 7 (R.) 229
Novello's 'School Songs,' Book 276 (R.) 330

Obituary 77, 174, 269, 366, 461, 559, 654, 749, 845, 943, 1037, 1134
Obituary Date of Thomas Haydon (Correspondence) 57
Occasional Notes 25, 138, 225, 327, 420, 535, 633, 720, 823, 904, 1007, 1109
O'Dwyer, Robert. 'Musica Sacra: Benediction Services and Motets' (R.) 1007
Official Sub-Organists at Westminster Abbey (Correspondence) ... (see 271) 35
Olczewska, Maria, at the B.B.C. National Concert 1021
'Old Folks at Home, The: Centenary of the Composer. By W. H. Grattan Flood 648
Old Vic., Opera at ... 56, 156, 254, 350, 938
Old Ways for New in Violin Training. By Gerald R. Hayes 223
Oldroyd, George. Church music, 'Missa Ave Jesu' (R.) 522
——— Church music, 'Stabat Mater Dolorosa' (R.) 1006
'On the Way to Fairyland,' Album of Pianoforte Pieces (R.) 909
O'Neill, J. A. Pianoforte, 'Progressive Steps' (R.)... 524
Opera and the Choral Society (Concert version of 'Carmen') 792
Opera at the Old Vic. 56, 156, 254, 350, 938
Opera by Choirboys. Sydney H. Nicholson's 'The Boy Bishop' ... 440

Page

Opera Records. By Wakeling W. Dry.
I.—London, Paris, and Dresden ... 127
II.—Berlin 745
——— (Correspondence) 259
Orchestral Notation. By Tom S. Wotton 640, 710, 795
——— (Correspondence) ... 733, 837
Orelio, Josef (Obituary) 461
'Orfeo,' Monteverdi's, at Oxford ... 61
——— (Correspondence) 57
'Organ and Choir Book of varied Accompaniments and Decants for use with the English Hymnal' (Ed., J. Lionel Bennett) (R.) 1007
Organ Music of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, The. By Harvey Grace (see 445) 309
Organ-Pianoforte. The New. By Anthony Clyne 520
Organ recitals 41, 152, 250, 343, 442, 542, 643, 731, 832, 927, 1021, 1116
Organist, Curious letter of a visiting ... 926
Organists' Benevolent League: Annual Report 366
Oriana Choir... 47
Oriana Madrigal Society 450
Orloff, Nicolas. Pianoforte recitals 451, 739
Orr, C. W. Hugo Wolf 881
——— Song, 'When I was one and twenty' (R.) 133
Oundle, Music at 266
Oundle School, Music in... 164, 548, 840
Our First Number 502
Our Thousandth Number... 497
'Overdoing Things' (Ad Libitum) 600, 698
Oxford, Monteverdi's 'Orfeo' at (see 57) 61
Oxford, Music at 65, 266, 359, 652, 745, 1128
Oxford Orchestral Series. Bach Cantata Preludes (Ed., W. G. Whittaker) (R.) 425
Oxford University Dramatic Society ... 262
Oxshott, Music at 454

Padgate Wesleyan Church, Warrington. Dedication of organ 249
Paget, Richard. Song, 'The Toy Band' (R.) 132
Painswick, Music at 1128
Paisley, Music at 67, 456
Palestrina. 'Missa Iste Confessor' (Adapted by Herbert Ware) (R.) ... 1007
——— 'O Bone Jesu' (Ed., Ivor Atkins) (R.)... 1007
Palmer, Alan. Part-song, 'The hill pines were sighing' (R.) 907
Palmer, George Herbert (Obituary) ... 749
Paris, Music at 75, 268
Parker, D. C. 'Bizet' (R.) 613
Parker, Horatio William. Unveiling of Memorial Tablet 800
Parratt, Sir Walter (Correspondence) ... 259
Pasdeloup Orchestra. Concert at the Albert Hall 650
Pasini, P. C. 'Scendi dal Cielo!' (R.) 1098
Patrick, Nathaniel (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
Paul, Reginald. Pianoforte recital ... 1124
Pavia, I. L. Pianoforte, 'A Cécile des beaux yeux' (R.) 620
Paxton, Augustus Henry (Obituary) ... 943
Pearce, C. W. Organ, 'A Processional Paternoster' (R.) 908
Pedantry in Examinations. By Julius Harrison ... ... (see 823, 934, 1013) 984
——— (Correspondence) 1116
Peel, Graham. Songs, 'Little Brown Bees' and 'Hills in Heaven' (R.) ... 228
Pembrokeshire, Music in 69
Penarth, Music at 69
Penryn, Music at 359
People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Society 256, 348
People's Palace Competitive Musical Festival 357, 743
Perfect Fourth, The. Gresham Essay. By Walford Davies ... (see 352) 113
Pergolesi. 'Pulcinella' (Arr. for Pianoforte by Stravinsky) (R.) 134
Permanent British Opera in London. By Mrs. Albert de Belleroche... ... 1094 Personalities among Musical Critics. By Basil Maine.
I.—A. H. Fox-Strangways ... 119
II.—M.-D. Calvocoressi 216
III.—Edward Dent 307
IV.—Francis Toye 402
V.—Richard Capell 506
VI.—Robin Legge 597
VII.—Alfred Kalisch 694
VIII.—W. J. Turner 788
Perth Competitive Musical Festival ... 357
Perth, Music at 67
Peterborough Cathedral 643

Page

Peterkin, Norman. Pianoforte, 'Pagan Suite' (R.)... 134
——— Songs, 'Chestnut Blossom' and 'Three Songs for Voice and Viola' (R.) 522
——— Songs, 'Never more, Sailor' and 'The Fiddler' (R.) 132
——— Song, 'Rune of the Burden of the Tide' (R.)... 133
——— Songs, 'Song of the Water-Maiden' and 'Pierette in Memory' (R.) 228
Petersfield Competitive Musical Festival 552
Petri, Egon. Pianoforte recital ... 551
Philharmonic Choir ... 48, 270, 347, 549
——— Junior Choir and Orchestra ... 1025
Philipp, I. Advice on Pianoforte Playing ... ... (see 544) 404
Philips, Peter. Church music, 'Alma Redemptoris Mater' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) 720
Phillipowsky, M. Pianoforte recital ... 650
Phillips, Nicholas (Obituary) 366
Pianists' Hands (Correspondence) ... 353
Pianophone, A (Correspondence) (see 892) 1117
Pianoforte Concerto Problem, The. By Robert H. Hull 518
Pianoforte, In Defence of the (Correspondence)... ... ... (see 892) 1022
Pierpoint, Bantock. 'A Short Practical Text-Book on the Singing Voice' (R.) 1100
Pijper, Willem. Pianoforte, Sonatinas Nos. 2 and 3 (R.)... 809
Pioneer Music Group 137
Plater, Thomas Ernest (Obituary) ... 366
Player-Piano Notes 35, 144, 235, 324, 429, 527, 631, 716, 921, 1017, 1110
Playford: Some Hitherto Unnoticed Catalogues of Early Music. By William C. Smith 636 701
Playing Wrong Notes. By J. A. Westrup 403
Plymouth Competitive Musical Festival 452
Plymouth, Music at... ... ... 166, 359
Points from Lectures ...42, 153, 238, 318, 419, 519, 823, 895, 1001, 1085
Poldini, Eduard. Pianoforte, 'Episodes à la Cour' (R.) 332
——— Pianoforte, 'Petits Morceaux Pittoresques' (R.) 524
Pontardawe, Music at 267
Pontefract Competitive Musical Festival 453
Pontycymmer, Music at 268
Pontypridd, Music at 69, 168
Popularity and the Classics. By Alexander Brent-Smith 827
——— (Correspondence) 1022
Port Talbot, Music at 1129
Portadown Competitive Musical Festival 453
Portsmouth, Music at ... 65, 166, 266, 554
Position of Opera, The (Correspondence) 733 Poston, Elizabeth. Five Songs (R.) ... 227
——— Song, 'The Lake Isle of Innisfree' (R.) 523
Pouishnov, L. Pianoforte recital ... 551
Pritchard, T. C. L. Six Songs (R.) ... 227
'Pro Arte' String Quartet... 46
'Proceedings of the Musical Association,' 1924-25 (R.)... 233
'Programmes' to Chopin's Preludes (Ad Libitum) 417
Promenade Concerts (Queen's Hall) (see 720) 840, 937, 1026
Prout's 'Hedging' (Correspondence) ... 843
'Psalter Newly Pointed, The' (R.) ... 335
Puccini's 'Turandot' at Dresden (Germany) 746
——— at Milan. By Alfred Kalisch... 556
——— at the Staatsoper (Vienna) ... 1132
Pullein, John. Lecture-recital at Glasgow 249
Pullein, W. R. 'O Lord, support us all the day long' (R.) 229
Pulver, Jeffrey. 'Aids to Elementary Violin Playing' (R.) 713
——— 'Brahms' (R.) 613
——— English Abroad, The ... 902, 990
Purcell. 'King Arthur' (R.) 906
——— Commemoration at Westminster Abbey 731
——— 'Evening Hymn' (Arr., Harvey Grace) (R.) 228
——— 'Evening Hymn' (Arr., W. G. Whittaker) (R.) 228
——— Full Score, 'The Virtuous Wife' (Arr., Holst) (R.) 425
Purcell Opera Society 943
Purcell's 'Dido' in Germany 317
Purcell's 'Evening Hymn' from Playford's 'Harmonia Sacra' (Correspondence) 442
Pye, James Thomas (Obituary) 654

Page

Queen's Hall Orchestra 45
Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts (see 720) 840, 937, 1026
Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts 251, 344, 345, 450, 1025
Quetta, Church music at 643

Rabey, René. Violin, 'Poème Tzigane' and 'Sérénade Vénitienne' (R.) ... 136
Radio Singers' Words: Where are they? (Correspondence) 834
Railway Clearing House Musical Society 156
Randerson, H. E. Sextet for Unaccompanied Singing (R.) 1096
Raphael, Mark. Song recital 350
Rathbone, George. Part-song, 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps' (R.) ... 907
Ravanello, Oreste. Mass for Four Voices (R.) 1098
Ravel's Harmony. By Alfredo Casella 124
——— (Correspondence) 260
Ravel's Pianoforte Technique. By Henri Gil-Marchex 1087
Ravel's 'L'Enfant et les Sortilèges' (Paris) 268
Reading, Music at 266, 359, 554, 652
Redditch, Music at 745
Redhill, Music at 554
Reed, W. H. Suite of Four Pieces for Violin (R.) 229
Reflections on Liszt. By Erik Brewerton 17
Registration Gone Mad 248
Resolven, Music at 69, 268
Reynolds, Alfred. 'The Policeman's Serenade' (from 'Riverside Nights') (R.) 909
Reynolds, Jeffry. Pianoforte recital ... 738
Rheinberger, Josef, in Private Life. By Andrew de Ternant 812
——— Mass in E flat (Arr., Richard Strutt) (R.)... 1007
Rhodes, Harold. Choral song, 'To Violets' (R.) 618
——— Part-song, 'Come to me in the silence of the night' (R.) 619 ——— Part-song, 'Content' (R.) ... 618
Rhos (N. Wales), Music at 361
Rice, William Gorham. 'Carillon Music and Singing Towers of the Old World and the New' (R.) 429
Richardson, E. G. Acoustics of Church and Concert Hall 705
Richmond (Yorks), Music at 359
Richter, Willibald. Pianoforte recital... 739
Riesemann, Oskar von. 'Monographien zur Russischen Muzik: Modest Petrovitch Moussorgsky' (R.) ... 426
Rimsky-Korsakov. 'Kitesh' at Covent Garden 448
——— Song, 'Hymn to the Sun' (R.) 1003
Ring of Words, The. By Marjorie Gullan 131
Ripon Cathedral, Musical Services at 40, 643, 831
Riseley, George. Resignation from Bristol Choral Society (Occasional Note) 905
Roberton, Hugh. Part-songs, 'The Old Woman' and 'The Miller's Daughter' (R.) 619
Roberts, Clifford. Part-song, 'Folly's Song' (R.) 1096
Roberts, W. A. Liverpool Cathedral Organ Dedication ... (see 927) 1018 ——— National Union of Organists' Associations Congress 923
Rochdale, Music at 65
Rochester Cathedral. Choral Festival 832
Roehampton Parish Church. Reconstruction of organ 643
Rokseth, Yvonne, Trans. by. 'Deux Livres d'Orgues, parus chez Pierre Attaingant en 1531' (R.) 232
Rome, Music at ... ... (see 422) 459
Ronald, Landon. Song, 'Love in the Woods' (R.) 132
——— Song-Cycle, 'Songs of Remembrance' (R.) 718
Rootham, Cyril Bradley. Part-song, 'Eight Bells' (R.)... 807
——— Sonata in G minor (R.) ... 134
——— Theoretical Teaching: Some Suggestions for Reform 1080
Rosenbloom, Sydney. Pianoforte, 'Concert Studies' (R.) 620
Rosenthal, Archy. Pianoforte, 'Minuet-Idyl' (R.) 620
Rosenthal, Moriz. Pianoforte recitals 649, 1124
Ross, T. H. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (R.) 228
Rowland, Edith. 'First Tunes on the Pianoforte' (R.) 135

Page

Rowley, Alec. Organ, 'The Four Winds' (R.) 617
——— Part-songs, 'Down in yonder meadow' and 'A-maying, a-playing' (R.) 331
——— Part-songs, 'Dreamland calling' and 'The Songster' (R.) 423
——— Part-song, 'The Policeman' (R.) 1096
——— Pianoforte, 'The Phantom Ship' and 'Moonlight at sea' (R.) ... 620
——— Unison song, 'Country Song' (R.) 907
Royal Academy of Arts. By Arthur T. Froggatt 528
Royal Academy of Music ... 59, 162, 261, 355, 446, 546, 646, 735, 839, 935, 1023, 1121
——— Performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion 449
——— New Buildings 1120
——— Students in Opera 739
Royal Amateur Orchestra... ... 345, 551
Royal Choral Society 77, 255, 348, 551, 1125
Royal College of Music ... 59, 162, 261, 355, 546, 735, 1023, 1121
——— Students in Opera 740
Royal College of Organists (see 329, 445) 31, 151, 245, 334, 437, 541, 642, 729, 826, 922, 1018, 1112
——— and Choir-Training (Correspondence) ... ... (see 445) 350
——— and the Cinema (Correspondence) 351
——— Annual General Meeting ... 828
——— 'Cinema Organist,' The. Lecture by Quentin Maclean (see 732, 836, 931) 642
——— Diploma Distribution 245, 729, 829
Royal Philharmonic Society 45, 251, 344, 1122
Rôze, Marie (Obituary) 749
Rugby School, Music at 164
Ruggles, Carl. Full score, 'Angels' (R.) 426
Ruskin and Music (Correspondence) (see 408) 544, 645
Ruskin's Progress in Music. By Eva Mary Grew... 408
Russian Ballet at His Majesty's Theatre 738
Ruthin (N. Wales), Music at 268
Rutland, Harold. Pianoforte recitals 348, 1124
Ruyneman, Daniel. Songs, 'Quatre Poèmes' (R.) 133
Rynie, Ysabella. Song recital 1125

St. Alban's Bach Choir 152
St. Alban's, Music at 266, 1128
St. Andrew's, Norwich. Hymn Festival 542
St. Anne's, Soho. Musical Festival ... 1113
St. Anselm's, Davies Street. Patronal Festival 542
St. Austell, Music at 166, 266
St. Bees Priory Church. T. W. Best Centenary 831
St. Helen's, Music at 1034
St. James's Cathedral, Toronto. St. Cecila's Day Service 152
St. Laurence's, Reading. Choir Festival 832
St. Mark's, Vancouver. First performance of 'St. Matthew' Passion in Western Canada 441
St. Martin-in-the-Fields. 'Saturday Music' at 1020
——— The Märkische Spielgemeinde at 1039
St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich. Bach Festival 1020
St. Mary's, South Benfleet. Re-opening of the organ 152
St. Mary's, Wotton-under-Edge. Organ, Pianoforte, and Vocal recitals 342
St. Michael's Cornhill. Festival (see 1019) 1123
St. Neots, Music at 266
St. Nicholas, Coogee, Sydney. Cantata performances 41
St. Ninian's, Glasgow. Bach recital ... 1113
St. Paul's Cathedral. Festival of the Sons of the Clergy 542
——— Organ in 440
St. Paul's (Halifax) Choral Society ... 41
St. Paul's School, Music at 164
Saint-Foix, Georges de. 'Œuvres Inédites de Beethoven' (R.) 917
Salisbury Musical Society 342
Salzburg Festival, The. By Paul Bechert 941
Salzedo, Carlos. Sonata for Harp and Pianoforte (R.) 134
Samuel, Harold. Pianoforte recitals 1124
Samuel Wesley's Edition of the '48' (Correspondence) ... (see 311) 445
Sandbach Parish Church. Choral Festival 927
Sandown, Music at 454

Page

Sankey, P. E. Resignation 731
Saunders, William. Leonard Borwick: A Memory and Appreciation 798
Scanes, Sybil. Song recital 1125
Scarborough, Music at 1034
Scarlatti Family, New Light on the. By Edward J. Dent 982
Sceats, Godfrey. Five Carols (R.) ... 1098
Schloming, Harry, 'Practical Method for the Viola' (R.) 1097
Schmidt, Franz. 'Cello, 'Drei Kleine Fantasiestücke' (R.) 622
Schubert. Pianoforte duet, 'Divertissement à la Hongroise' and 'Fantasie' (Ed., A. Roloff) (R.) 422
Schubert, Kurt. Pianoforte, Passacaglia in A minor (R.) 135
Schubert's Songs, Translated by A. H. Fox-Strangways and Steuart Wilson (R.) 133
Schumann. Organ, Four Sketches for Pedal Pianoforte (Ed., W. A. Wightman (R.) 333
Schumann, Elisabeth. Song recitals 253, 550, 1125
Schwarz, Joseph, Song recital ... 451
Sciaretti, Mr. Pianoforte recital ... 254
Scotland, Music in 66, 166, 266, 455, 652, 940, 1034, 1128
Scott, Cyril. Two Albums for Pianoforte (R.) 809
Scriabin: A Comment. By Robert H. Hull 993
Scriabin, Some Reflections on the Work of. By Alexander Brent-Smith (see 734, 833) 593, 692
Scylla and Charybdis. By Alexander Brent-Smith 401
Seaford, Music at 359
Seder, Edwin Stanley. Wireless Organ recitals 40
'Selected Studies for the Pianoforte' (Paterson's Publications) (R.) 135
Senghenydd, Music at 168
Sequel to 'Lead, Kindly Light,' A (see 1014) 922
Seymour, Linda. Song recital 254
Sharman, Cecil. Song-cycle, 'Autumn Days' (R.) 1004
Sharpe, Herbert. Memorial Fund (Occasional Note) 140
Sharps and Flats 58, 162, 260, 354, 446, 555, 645, 935, 1023, 1118
Shaw, Geoffrey. 'Descant Hymn-Tune Book, The' (R.) 39
——— Part-song, 'In Derry Vale' (R.) 907
Shaw, Martin. Part-song, 'Crib, The' (R.) 331
——— Part-song, 'Easter Alleluia' (R.) 423
——— Part-song, 'May merry-time' (R.) 1096
——— Pianoforte, 'In and Out' (R.) 135
——— Song, 'Old Christmas' (R.) ... 132
Shaw Martin, Percy Dearmer, and R. Vaughan Williams. 'Songs of Praise' (R.) 335
Shebbear College, Music in 164
Sheet (Hants), Music at 554
Sheffield Cathedral. Bach Festival ... 545
Sheffield, Music at 66, 266, 360, 454, 1128
Shepherdson, John Frank (Obituary) ... 560
Shirlaw, Matthew, The Nature of Harmony ... ... (see 57) 785, 882
Silk, Dorothy. Song recital 156
Simplicity in Music. By Robert H. Hull 996
Sir Walford Davies and the Perfect Fourth (Correspondence) (see 113) 352
Sistermans, Anton (Obituary) 366
Sixty Years Ago 58, 162, 261, 546, 734, 838
Skewen, Music at 69
Skipton Parish Church. New organ ... 542
Slater, Gordon. Pianoforte, Bourrée in A (R.) 621
——— Pianoforte, 'Three Little Pieces' (R.) 424
Sligo Competitive Musical Festival ... 453
Slow Pianoforte Practice (Correspondence) ... ... (see 404) 544
Smeterlin, Jan. Pianoforte recital ... 551
Smith, Alexander Brent- (see Brent-Smith).
Smith, Bessie Montem (Obituary) ... 461
Smith, Dale, and Bertram Ayrton. Song recital 350
Smith, Ethelynde. Song recital... ... 649
Smith, William C. Playford: Some hitherto Unnoticed Catalogues of Early Music 636, 701
Smith, W. E. Part-song, 'Pibroch of Donald the Black' (R.) 331
Snell, Beatrice, and F. W. Holloway, Two-Pianoforte recital 48
Society of Women Musicians 60, 448, 736, 1118
Solomon, Mr. Pianoforte recital ... 739

Page

Some Impressions of Music in the Dominions. By E. T. Sweeting (see 734) 622
Some Notes on 'My Ladye Nevelles Booke.' By Charles van den Borren 1075
Some Observations on 'Horn Chords: An Acoustical Problem.' By W. F. H. Blandford 128
Some Reflections on the Work of Scriabin. By Alexander Brent-Smith (see 734, 833) 583, 692
Somervell, Arthur. Choral work, 'Christmas' (R.) 906
Song 'Plugs' and 'Boosts' (Correspondence) ... ... (see 536) 837
Sorabji, Kaikhosru. Organ Symphony (R.) 615
——— The Press and Prima-donnas, &c. (Correspondence) 1117
South London Philharmonic Society 48, 654
South Place Sunday Popular Concerts 1025
South Suburban Co-operative Society. Festival at Bromley 357
South West Choral Society 348
Southampton Competitive Musical Festival 357
Southampton, Music at 66, 554
Southend Competitive Musical Festival 63
Southend, Music at... ... ... 1034, 1120
Southport, Music at 66, 1034
Southwark Cathedral Musical Services (see 249, 342) 152, 831, 1113
Southwark Diocesan Plainsong Association 343
Sowerbutts, J. A. Anthems, 'Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord' and 'If we believe that Jesus died' (R.) 1098
Sowerby, Leo. Organ, 'Choral Prelude on a Calvinist Hymn-Tune' (R.) ... 333
'Spanish Madrigals' (Musical Association Paper). By J. B. Trend 70
Spectrum of Music, The. By Alexander Brent-Smith 980
Speer, W. H. Pianoforte, 'Caprice' (R.) 620
Spencer Dyke Quartet 252, 346
Speyer, Edward. Carl Maria von Weber: Notes on Some Episodes in his Career 801
Spirit of Singing, The: A Study in Ideals. By Erik Brewerton 977
Spurling, Clement M. Pianoforte, 'Ten Little Pieces without Titles' (R.) 909
Standard Pitch (Correspondence) (see 443, 644) 354, 1118
Stark, William. Composers' Dates in Analytical Programmes (Correspondence) 443
Statham, Heathcote D. Dr. Blow's Church Music and its Deformities 988, 1083 ——— Part-songs, 'Two Plantation Songs' (R.) 423
Steggall, Charles. Centenary (Occasional Note) 535
Stewart, C. Hylton. 'Missa Roffensis' (R.) 1007
Stewart, D. M. Songs, 'Seven Translations from the Classical Writers' (R.) 228
Stewart, D. W. Part-songs, 'Songs of Innocence' (R.) 907
Stewart, Sir Robert Prescott, 1825-1894. Centenary Lecture by Dr. C. H. Kitson 239
Stirling, Music at 456
Stirlingshire Competitive Musical Festival 651
Stock Exchange Choir 348
Stockport, Music at 166
Stockton, Music at 454
Stoke-on-Trent, Music at 166, 360
Stonhill, William (Obituary) 270
Straeten, E. van der (see van der Straeten).
Strauss, Johann. Centenary Celebrations (Germany) 72
Strauss, Richard. Festival (Germany) 363
Stravinsky Festival at Frankfort (Germany) 169
Strolling Players' Orchestra ... 345, 551
Students of the R.A.M. and R.C.M. in Opera 739
Subjective Criticism (Correspondence)... ... ... 160, 259
Suggia, Madame, at Queen's Hall ... 46
Sumsion, C. Corbett. Organ, Two Andantes and Four Preludes (R.) ... 334
Sunday Evening Concert Society ... 1016
Sutherland, George (Obituary) 560
Swaby, Robert. Mass in D (R.) ... 618
Swansea, Music at 69, 268, 361
Sweeting, E. T. Some Impressions of Music in the Dominions (see 734) 622
Swing, Herbert. Song recital 254
Swinstead, Felix. Pianoforte, Six Distinctive Studies (R.) 524

Page

Swinstead, Felix. Pianoforte, Two-Part Inventions (R.) 424
Symphonies of Muzio Clementi, The (Correspondence) (see 57, 260, 412) 160

Tartini. Chamber music, 'Zwei Quartette' (Ed., E. Pente) (R.) 1005
Taunton, Music at 454
Taylor, Colin. Pianoforte, 'Capriccietto' (R.) 621
——— Pianoforte, 'Powder and Patches' (R.) 691
——— Song, 'The Hill' (R.) 132
——— Song, 'O can ye sew cushions?' (R.) 1002
Tempering the Wind to the Shorn Lamb. By Alexander Brent-Smith 21
——— (Correspondence) 256
Terry, Charles Sanford. 'Bach: Cantata Texts, Sacred and Secular' (R.) 526
——— 'Bach: The Cantatas and Oratorios' (R.)... 428
Terry, Richard, Ed. by. Three Old English Pieces for Strings (R.) ... 425
Tew, Whitney. Song recital 1028
Theoretical Teaching: Some Suggestions for Reform. By Cyril Bradley Rootham 1080 Thiman, Eric H. Church music, 'Immortal, Invisible, God only wise' (R.) 522 ——— Church music, 'O Strength and Stay' (R.) 228
——— Note on Grieg, A 709
——— Part-song, 'Shepherds all and maidens fair' (R.) 807
——— Song, 'Silver Swan, The' (R.) 523
——— Songs, 'Jesus, the very thought of Thee' and 'The God of Love my Shepherd is' (R.) 717
Thomas, O. Organ, 'Bach Album' (R.) 334
Thomas, Olga. Pianoforte recital ... 348
Thomas, Vaughan. Part-song, 'How sleep the brave' (R.) 331
Thomas, Vincent. Songs, 'Cryes of Olde London' (R.) 133
Thompson, Arthur John (Obituary) ... 461
Thomson-de-Konshen, Sophie. Song recital 1028
Thorp, Nancy. Pianoforte recital ... 254
'Thoughts on Music': A Calendar selected and arranged by Hervey Elwes (R.) 30
Three Choirs Festival. By W. McNaught ... ... (see 329, 720) 928
Through the 'Immortal Nine' on the Gramophone. By D. Batigan Verne 896
Ticciati, Francesco. Pianoforte, Toccata in F sharp minor (R.)... ... 809
——— Song, 'The Moon' (R.) ... 806
Tirindelli, P. A. Songs, 'Tre Liriche' (R.) 719
Tolstoy, Count Sergius. Music in Tolstoy's Life... ... (see 634) 516, 603, 699
Tomblings, Philip. Anthem, 'Drop, drop, slow tears' (R.) 810
Ton Pentre, Music at 168
Tonbridge, Music at 555
'Tongueing' on Wind Instruments. By Maurice E. Whittaker 998
Tongwynlais, Music at 168
Tonking, Henry Charles (Obituary) ... 749
Tonypandy, Music at 457
Tonyrefail, Music at 168
Tootell, George. Pianoforte, 'Manx Scenes' (R.) 620
Toronto, Music at 75, 172, 364, 460, 558, 653, 1131
Torquay, Music at... ... 166, 266, 555
Tour of the Märkische Spielgemeinde through the South of England. By Rolf Gardiner 999
Toye, Francis (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
Trecynon, Music at 268
Tredegar, Music at... 457
Treharris, Music at 168
Trend, J. B. 'Music of Spanish History to 1600, The' (R.) 910 ——— Musical Association Paper, 'Spanish Madrigals' 70
Treorchy, Music at... 168
Trinity College of Music (see 846) 60, 163, 261, 447, 547, 647, 736, 935, 1023, 1122
Trowbridge Parish Church. Hymn Festival 152
Truro, Music at 360
Turnbull, Percy. Choral song, 'Piping down the valleys wild' (R.) 330
——— Pianoforte, Bourrée and Gigue (R.) 621
——— Pianoforte Suite (R.) 619
Turner, W. J. (see Personalities among Musical Critics).
———'Orpheus'; or, The Music of the Future' (R.) 614

Page

Twelve Introits or Short Anthems by Various Composers (R.) 810
'Twenty Short and Easy Pieces.' Album for the Organ (R.) 907
Tye, Christopher. Church music, 'Rubum quem viderat Moyses' (Ed., H. B. Collins) (R.) 720

Ulverstone, Music at 360
'Uniform Pitch' (Correspondence) (see 354) 443, 644
Union of Graduates in Music. Annual General Meeting 549
Unison Singing in Churches, The Case for. By C. Whitaker-Wilson (see 161) 38
University of Glasgow. Organ recitals 1113
University of Manchester... 736
Unpublished Page of Bizet's 'Carmen,' An. By Paul Landormy 803

Van Dieren, Bernard. Part-songs, 'Good-day, Sire Cristemas' and 'With Margerain Gentle' (R.) ... 518
——— Recital of Songs by John Goss 44
——— (Correspondence) 160
——— Song, 'Dream Pedlary' (R.) ... 807 van der Straeten, E. Charles Burney in the Light of his Letters 513
——— Handel's Use of Uncommon Instruments and Combinations ... 607
van Endert, Elisabeth. Song recital ... 649
Vanni-Marcoux, M. Song recital ... 649
Variations on Various Verbal Themes. By Mrs. Frank Liebich 120
Venetian Quartet 1124
Verdi and 'Falstaff.' By John W. Klein 605
Verne, D. Batigan. Through the 'Immortal Nine' on the Gramophone ... 896
Vibrato and other Vocal Matters (Correspondence) 158, 257
Vibrato, 'Covered Tone,' and other Vocal Matters (Correspondence) ... 834
Vienna, Music at (see 445) 76, 172, 269, 365, 460, 559, 653, 747, 1131
Vincent, Charles. Pianoforte, 'Three Short Greetings' (R.) 424
Violin-Training, Old Ways for New, in. By Gerald R. Hayes 223
Visit of a famous Czech Choir. The Prague Teachers 1118
Visit to Béla Bartók, A. By Frank Whitaker 220
'Vitaphone, The' (Occasional Note) ... 905
Vogt, Augustus Stephen (Obituary) ... 943
von Warlich, Reinhold. Song recitals 349, 1125

Wagenaar, Bernard. Songs, 'At Dusk,' 'May-night,' 'I stood in dreams' (R.) 1003
Wales, Music in 68, 167, 267, 361, 457, 745, 1035, 1129
Walker, D. C. 'Sight-reading and Ear-training Primer' (R.) 816
Walker, Ernest. Pianoforte, Prelude in E flat (R.) 135
——— Songs, 'Summer Rain' and 'Sleep Song' (R.) 806
Wallace, William. 'Richard Wagner as he lived' (R.) 29
Walmisley, Willoughby. Pianoforte recital 255
Walthew, Richard H. Pianoforte, 'Slender Themes' (R.)... 424
——— Violin and Pianoforte, Two Sonatinas (R.) 334
Wanted, A Pelham Humphrey Text (Correspondence)... 933
Warlock, Peter. Choral song, 'I have a garden' (R.) 330
——— Part-song, 'Call for the Robin Redbreast' (R.) 330
——— Part-songs, 'The Shrouding of the Duchess of Malfi' and 'The Spring of the Year' (R.) 331
——— Songs, 'The Toper's Song' and 'Pretty Ring Time' (R.)... ... 1002
——— Song, 'Yarmouth Fair' (Arr. by) (R.) 132
Warrack, Guy. Concert at Æolian Hall 1122
Waterford, Music at 457, 1036
Waters, C. F. Part-song, 'O! my luve's like a red, red rose' (R.) 907
Watson, Sydney. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E flat (R.) 228
Watt, Frederick (Obituary) 174
Weatherly, Fred E. 'Piano and Gown: Recollections' (R.) 428
Weber, Carl Maria von: Notes on Some Episodes in his Career. By Edward Speyer 801
Weber, Centenary (Occasional Note) ... 535
——— (Correspondence) 645
——— (Vienna) 654

Page

Weickmann, A. 'Cello, 'Wiegenlied' and 'Gebet' (R.) 1097
Weiner, Leo. Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte (R.) 1005
Wellingborough, Music at 266
Wellington College, Music in ... 164, 548, 840
Wells Cathedral. Choral Festival ... 832
Welsh Imperial Singers, at Æolian Hall 1029
Welsh National Eisteddfod (see 743) 841
Wesley, Samuel Sebastian (see 249) 305
——— Anthem, 'Let us now praise famous men' (Ed., John E. West) (R.) 810
——— Anthems of. By Edward C. Bairstow 308
——— Organ Music of. By Harvey Grace ... ... (see 445) 309
Wesley and Horn Editions of Bach (Correspondence) ... (see 445) 544
Wesley and Mendelssohn (Correspondence) ... ... (see 309) 445
Wesley at Hampton (Correspondence) 444
Wesley's Edition of the '48' (Correspondence)... ... ... (see 311) 445
Wessely, Hans (Obituary) 1038
West Hartlepool Town Hall. New organ 441
West Lothian Competitive Musical Festival 554
West Middlesex Musical Society ... 48
West Riding Cathedral Choirs' Association. Festival at Wakefield Cathedral 831
West, Stanley C., and Marjorie Broughton. 'Six Odd Songs' (R.) ... 132
West Wales Three Choirs Festival, Carmarthen ... (see 366, 846) 1035
Westerby, Herbert. 'Complete Organ Recitalist, The' 729
——— Lost Symphonies of Clementi, The ... ... (see 160) 412
Westminster Abbey Special Choir ... 47
Westminster Choral Society 48, 348, 1125
Westminster School, Music in 840
Weston-super-Mare, Music at ... 266, 360
Westrup, J. A. On Playing Wrong Notes 403
Wetton, H. Davan. Lecture on Handel 440
——— Retirement from Foundling Hospital 730
Whitaker, Frank. A Visit to Béla Bartók 220
Whitaker-Wilson, C. (see Wilson).
White, Felix. Choral songs, 'Glad Day' and 'Telegraph Wires' (R.) ... 807 ——— Choral songs, 'Rhyme of Time, A,' and 'Little Mister By-and-By' (R.) 330
——— Part-song, 'Elf Queen's Delight, The' (R.) 330
——— Part-song, 'Love of Comrades, The' (R.) 423
——— Pianoforte, 'Call of the East, The' (R.) 332
——— Song, 'Sea-Shell' (R.) 523
——— Violin and Pianoforte, 'La Bella Capricciosa' (R.) 229
White, A. E., on Boughton and Baines (Correspondence) ... (see 212, 543, 734) 645
White, Robert (see New Light on Late Tudor Composers).
Whitemore, Cuthbert. 'Common-sense in Pianoforte Playing' (R.) 911
Whitemore, Cuthbert and Freda. Pianoforte, 'Preliminary Selected Studies' (Ed. by) (R.) 910
Whittaker, Maurice E. 'Tongueing' on Wind Instruments 998
Whittaker, W. G. Psalm cxxxix. (R.) 906
——— 'Two Lyrics from the Chinese' (R.) 522
Wick Competitive Musical Festival ... 744
Wieniawski, Henry. Viola and Pianoforte, 'Rêverie' (R.) 1097
Wieniawsky, Adam. 'Polish National Songs' (Arr. by) (R.) 1004
Wietz, Guy. Organ recital at Schola Cantorum, Paris... 40
Willan, Healey. 'Hail Thee, Festival Day' (R.) 229
——— Song Album No. 2 (R.) 718
Williams, Albert Edward (Obituary) ... 270
Williams, C. F. Abdy. 'The Rhythm of Song' (R.) 322
Williams, D. C. (Obituary) 461
Williams, Gerrard. Carols, 'When Christ was born' and 'From far away' (R.) 1098 ——— Choral song, 'Elves' Tryst Night, The' (R.) 907
——— Part-songs, 'Come, shepherds, follow me' and 'Old Farmer Buck' (R.) 331
———Part-song, 'Farmer's Daughter, The' (Arr. by) (R.) 331
——— Part-song, 'Tragic Fragment' (R.) 807
——— Part-songs, 'Three Folk-Songs' (R.) 1096

Page

Williams, Gerrard. Pianoforte, 'Déjeuner Dansant' (R.) 134
——— Pianoforte, 'Little Suite' (R.) 524
——— Songs, 'The Lonely Tent,' 'The Philosopher,' and 'When Phillis plays' (R.) 522
Williams, Parrish. Song recital ... 56
Williams, Ralph Vaughan. Full score, 'The Lark Ascending' (R.) 426
——— Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (R.) 423
——— 'Sancta Civitas' (R.) 422
——— Songs, 'Four Poems by Fredegond Shove' (R.)... 133
——— Songs, 'Nocturne' and 'A Clear Midnight' (R.) 132
——— Three Shakespeare Songs (R.) 806
——— Vocal score, 'Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains' (R.) ... 622
Williams, Ralph Vaughan, Percy Dearmer, and Martin Shaw. 'Songs of Praise' (R.) 335
Williams, W. S. Gwynn. Songs, 'Penillion in English' (R.) 806
Wilson, C. Whitaker-. The Case for Unison Singing in the Churches (see 161) 38
Wilson, H. L., Compiled by. 'Music of the Gramophone, and some Masterpiece Recordings' (R.) 917
Wilson, Lillian. Song recital 1125
Wilson, Steuart, and A. H. Fox Strangways. Schubert's Songs translated by (R.) 133
Wimbledon Choral Society 256
Wimbledon Competitive Festival ... 357
Winchester and County Competitive Musical Festival 453
Winchester College, Music at 164
Winchester, Music at 66, 360
Winkler, Julius. 'Die Technik des Geigenspiels' (R.) 232 ——— Violin, Two Cadenzas (R.) ... 621
Wireless and the Concert-Goer. By Thomas Armstrong 1078
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel' (see 1117) 36, 150, 236, 632, 728, 822, 920, 1017
Wittenbecher, O. New Method for Violoncello (R.) 719
'Witty' or 'Intellectual'? (Correspondence)... ... ... (see 252, 445) 352
Wolf, Hugo. By C. W. Orr 881
Wolff, Louis (Obituary) 1037
Wolverhampton, Music at 454
Wolverton, Music at 555
Wood, Charles 696
——— (Obituary) ... (see 826) 749
——— Choral song, 'All the bells were ringing' (R.) 807
——— Part-song, 'The Blossom' (R.) 907
Wood, Olive J. Pianoforte, 'A Tiny Suite for Tiny People' (R.) 1005

Page

Woodbridge, Music at 266
Woodgate, Leslie. Part-songs, 'Amarillis,' 'I got a home in-a dat Rock,' and 'Slow, slow, fresh fount' (R.) 423
——— Song, 'Littleport' (R.)... ... 1003
Woolfe, Phyllis. Song recital 1125
Woolley, E. Francis R. Communion Service (R.) 229
Worcester, Music at 166, 454
Word for Scriabin, A. (Correspondence) 833
'World's Music, The' (Ad Libitum) ... 985
Wotton, Tom S. Orchestral Notation (see 733, 837) 640, 710, 795
Wrexham, Music at 69, 457
Wyndham, Henry Saxe. 'Sullivan' (R.) 712

Yarmouth, Music at 166
'Yet in my flesh' (Correspondence) 259, 353, 444
York Minster. Advent Musical Services 40
York, Music at ... 66, 166, 266, 360, 652
Yorkshire Choral Competitions... ... 650
'Young Music-Maker, The.' Album of Easy Pianoforte Pieces (R.) 909

Zahn, Johann. 'Streich Quartet' (Ed., H. Schindhelm) (R.) 1005
Zimmermann, Agnes, Pianist and Composer, 1847-1925. In Memoriam. By Lady Arbuthnot 28
Zurich Festival. By Basil Maine (see 225) 705

OBITUARY

(Abstract from General Index)

Albanesi, Carlo 1037
Allison, Horton 1134

Bauermeister, Mathilde 1038
Blanchett, Alfred T. ... (see 832) 461
Brett, Charles 845
Briscoe, W. J. 943
Brown, Arthur Henry 269

Carter, John Hilton 461
Coviello, Nicola 749
Craig, John Millar 366, 461
Cramp, Thomas 366
Cross, John Albert 845
Cumberland, Gerald 749

Dowling, Thomas Barrow 943
Dowson, Henry Martin 1134
Dyson, William Mann 1038

Page

Ellingford, Harold James 749
Evans, George Spencer 461

Fleury, Louis 749

Gigout, Eugène 174
Godfrey, Lady 77
Greenhalgh, John H. 943
Groningen, Steven van 461

Haddock, Edgar 845
Haigh, Walter 845
Hannington, Albert... 366
Heslop, William 845
Hoare, Margaret 461
Hollis, Harry Warner 1038
Horner, Ralph Joseph 461

Kidson, Frank 1134
King, Alfred 559
Koeller, Francis ... ... (see 1133) 943

Léon, Mischa 560
Leslie, William Henry Perry 654
Lindo, Algernon 943
Loewe, Sophie 270
Lovette, Thomas S. 270
Lucas, J. H. 749
Lyttelton, The Hon. Mrs Robert ... 366

McEwen, Robert Finnie 461
Merritt, George 77

Newman, Robert 1134

Orelio, Josef 461

Palmer, George Herbert 749
Paxton, Augustus Henry 943
Phillips, Nicholas 366
Plater, Thomas Ernest 366
Pye, James Thomas 654

Rôze, Marie 749

Shepherdson, John Frank 560
Sistermans, Anton 366
Smith, Bessie Montem 461
Stonhill, William 270
Sutherland, George... 560

Thompson, Arthur John 461
Tonking, Henry Charles 749

Vogt, Augustus Stephen 943

Watt, Frederick 174
Wessely, Hans 1038
Williams, Albert Edward 270
Williams, D. C. 461
Wolff, Louis 1037
Wood, Charles ... ... (see 696, 826) 749

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 995—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

JANUARY 1 1926

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - HANDEL

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, at 2.30 p.m.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. MORGAN KINGSTON.
MR. HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Conductor: DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.
THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.
At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

SPECIAL COURSES for the TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS and also for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS, the latter to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, have been arranged. A Junior Department is now open.

LENT TERM begins on Monday, January 11. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Thursday, January 7.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Saturday, January 30, at 3.

L.R.A.M. EASTER EXAMINATION. Last day for receiving entries, February 7.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS.DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)
VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS by the President, DR. H. W. RICHARDS, will take place on Saturday, January 23rd, at 2.30 o'clock.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays 10 to 1.

N.B.—The attention of Members and those interested is drawn to the fact that an Organ Recital, by Mr. G. D. Cunningham, and an informal Conversazione, will follow the Distribution on Saturday, January 23rd.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, MUS.B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President. H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 10th.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 3rd.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

ESTABLISHED 1882. INCORPORATED 1892.

PAST PRESIDENTS:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G., 1893-1900.
ARTHUR H. MANN, M.A., D. Mus., F.R.C.O., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, 1922-1923.
C. H. ALLEN GILL, F.R.A.M., 1923-1924.
SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., F.G.S.M., 1924-1925.

PRESIDENT:
PROFESSOR DONALD FRANCIS TOVEY,
Reid Professor of Music, Edinburgh University.

Founded for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of those who practise music as a profession.

The first broad divisions of the Musical Profession are those of "Performers" and of "Teachers," but these merge into each other at many points, for it is one of the most healthy characteristics of the Musical Profession that eminence as a teacher of music is often accompanied by a distinguished career as a composer or a performer.

The need for Unity is manifest, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians invites all qualified Professional Musicians to enrol themselves as members and assist in securing the same status and privileges as those enjoyed by other branches of the Teaching Profession.

For particulars of membership write to:—

HUGO CHADFIELD, General Secretary,
19, Berners Street, London, W.1.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.
President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2*s.* 6*d.* per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE REAL USE OF RELAXATION

as applied to pianoforte playing. Important discoveries giving more rapid and definite development of technique with DURABLE RESULTS and remarkable beauty and purity of TONE PRODUCTION. The stiffest hands quickly yield to this teaching.

D. Mus. Oxon., F.R.C.O., writes:

"I do think your 'School' is so excellent. The thoroughness and lucidity with which you treat every detail of pianoforte playing are amazing, and one can have no possible doubt that the principles you put forward are the correct and fundamental ones for which we have sought so painfully in years gone by."

ENTIRELY UNIQUE CORRESPONDENCE COURSE OF 12 PERSONAL and INDIVIDUAL LESSONS, designed for the PIANO ENTHUSIAST, and expounding fully and clearly the "MODERN TEACHING AND APPLICATION OF WEIGHT TOUCH," the only source of beautiful and finely graded tone.

No matter where you live, these lessons will help you tremendously. The course is remarkable for the amount of personal and individual attention given to each pupil. The lessons are supplemented by POSTAL CONSULTATIONS on all points which may arise during the course, bringing the pupil into direct touch with Mr. Gillett.

Full particulars will be sent to all bona fide inquirers. Write to-day, naming one or two pieces you play and your individual difficulties. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons with Mr. Gillett, by all means do so.

PERSONAL LESSONS DAY and EVENING.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

PIANOFORTE RECITAL-LECTURES

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

(Mus. Doc., Lond.).

Subjects of Recital-Lectures already given include:

1. "LISZT'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
2. "MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
3. "THE STORY OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
4. "ROMANTIC PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
5. "THE STORY OF THE PIANOFORTE SONATA."

For vacant dates, &c., apply,

46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.

(Registered No. 692810).

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2*s.* 6*d.*, POST FREE.

1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

Perfect Touch & Technique

without Laborious Practice

The fundamental principles of my System have stood the test of time. Proof of this lies in the enormous number of pupils who have passed through my hands to piano-mastery—who have found in the System the Royal Road to the whole of the practical side of Pianoforte Playing, without any keyboard drudgery. The results are frequently described by pupils as "miraculous," "magical," &c.

Pianists of every grade of proficiency can benefit from this simple, inexpensive, and unique Postal Course. Many eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used and highly recommended my System—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM.

19,000 Successful Pupils of all ages.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's

System of Pianoforte Playing.

Read my Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This explains fully how I teach my System by a Series of Postal Lessons, and gives particulars of the very reasonable fee for tuition. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and better results, based on my important discovery in physiology.

Apply for book to-day, but please do not omit to state whether average or advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Papers.
2. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Papers.
3. Short comprehensive Course for L.R.A.M. "Form and Teaching" Paper.
4. Touch and Technique (Matthay Method) for L.R.A.M. vivâ voce.
5. Fingering and Pedalling.
6. Rudiments, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, as separate subjects.
7. Courses on Mr. Stewart Macpherson's "Melody and Harmony."

Over 90% Postal Successes at Diploma Examinations.

MR. GILBERT THOMAS,

M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A. Mus. T.C.L.

Private Pupil of STEWART MACPHERSON, BACKHAUS, OSCAR BERINGER.

Formerly Student at Matthay Pianoforte School, London.

Terms, Appreciations, on application:

ASHCROFT, 42 BURTON ROAD, S.W.9.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7.

Treatise on "Hand Development, with Photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Full particulars from the Secretary—

MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

JUDGE BY RESULTS.

MATRIC. - - - - - 133

1ST MUS. B.

September, 1925. 50% of the ENTIRE PASS LIST.

FINAL MUS. B.

September, 1925. A Student PASSES at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O. - - 26

A. MUS. T.C.L.

Art of Teaching, 88%; Counterpoint, 93%.

A.T.C.L.

Art of Teaching, 86%.

A.R.C.M. (Musical Appreciation).

April, 1925. ENTRIES - 2 SUCCESSES - 2

L.R.A.M. (Singing).

A successful student was complimented by the Examiner.

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte).

September, 1925. A successful student writes:

"Every correction is WRITTEN OUT DISTINCTLY and clearly so that anyone can understand."

L. MUS. T.C.L.

July, 1925. TWO STUDENTS PASSED. Both were students of the M.C.C. One gained 95% for Orchestration.

FREE - GUIDE TO DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS IN MUSIC.

PLEASE STATE EXAM.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

CAN YOU PLAY FROM MEMORY?

The power to give pleasure in your playing is measured simply and solely by the extent of the interpretative imagination you are able to read into the music, and by the ability to transform this intangible mental conception—through the agency of your instrument—into terms of beautiful sound.

MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC BY THE Master : Method of Memory : Playing and you will begin to feel, for the first time in your life, that real freedom of interpretation, that intense joy in playing, which can only be inspired by playing from memory with complete confidence. Take the first step by sending for my free Book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing," which is sent free, and post free, and learn how YOU can play from memory with ease and certainty. It discusses fully the whole problem of reliable memory playing; gives full details of my short Memorising Courses for the PIANO, VIOLIN, 'CELLO, ORGAN; contains many signed and addressed testimonials, including one from Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., together with MY PERSONAL GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS.

Send a P.C. to-day, stating which instrument you play.

SEPARATE COURSES FOR PIANO. VIOLIN. 'CELLO. ORGAN.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
119, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

SPECIAL COURSES
THIS MONTH.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., Easter Examinations.
   Full preparation in all Paper Work, and Questions on Touch, Technique, &c.
2. A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O., July Examinations.
3. Durham "First" and "Final" Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

PERSONAL LESSONS ALSO IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

ALBERT GARCIA'S
VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.
PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"
revised from the original edition by
ALBERT GARCIA.
Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland St., W.1. Price 6s.

VOCAL QUARTET CONCERT PARTIES.
MR. EWART DARTREY Coaches in the art of Vocal Ensemble and Interpretation. Write, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."
SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS,
THREE GUINEAS.
Personal Lessons if desired.

PRESS EXTRACTS.
Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."
Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."
The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON: AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

THE ONLY MEMORY COURSE ENDORSED BY FAMOUS MUSICIANS

MISS IRENE SCHARRER, the famous Pianist, writes:

"Having carefully studied Miss Mackinnon's Musical Memory Course, I consider it to be a most valuable asset to musicians and students. Few people realise how great a need has been supplied by this work. Indeed we owe Miss Mackinnon a debt of gratitude for a work of this nature which must have entailed endless labour, and shows an understanding and appreciation of her subject beyond all praise."

Complete sympathy with the pianist's difficulties is the secret of Miss Lilias Mackinnon's remarkable success in teaching how to memorise. She is herself a well-known concert pianist and a trained and registered teacher. Individual attention is given to each student of the Course. No knowledge of harmony is necessary. Fifteen minutes' daily practice only is required. Further, each Course carries a guarantee that if immediate improvement is not gained after the first lesson, the fee will be refunded without question.

Send coupon below for free booklet with numerous testimonials and guarantee to-day.

COUPON.

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, EMPIRE HOUSE,
175, PICCADILLY, W.1.

Please send me free and post free your booklet on Memory Training.

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

.....

Address.....

.....

MACKINNON'S
MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE FOR PIANISTS,

EMPIRE HOUSE, 175, PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS
£3 : 3 : 0

GUARANTEE.

You risk nothing in taking this Course, for under this guarantee your money is returned if you fail to make immediate progress.

If within four weeks of the receipt of the first lesson and, before the receipt of the second, any student should find that no progress has been made as a result of taking the Course, Miss Mackinnon will unconditionally refund all fees received from such student.

MR. CHARLES TREE

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION."
5*s.* 2*d.*, post free.
"BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 3*s.* 7*d.* post free.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Mr. Clegg, Burnley, December 8, 1925—"Last year my pupils won 6 prizes at Blackpool, this year 8 prizes. I am producing 'Carmen' for six nights with entirely my pupils. They are, without exception of age or class, all trained from the method of your books—the easy, natural, and only sane method."
Charles Tree, Bolton Mansions Hotel, London, S.W.5.

PRACTICAL CLASSES FOR INFANT TEACHERS IN SPEECH TRAINING AND POETRY TEACHING will be given at 11, Tavistock Square, W.C.1.

BY MISS MARJORIE GULLAN,
On SATURDAY mornings, beginning JANUARY 16th.
Particulars on application to the
NEW EDUCATION FELLOWSHIP, 11, Tavistock Sq., W.C.1.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),

undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.
2, HILL SIDE, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMS.

A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.

(a) Outline of Course of Instruction; (b) List of Technical Studies and Pieces; (c) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars); (d) Advice and Hints (papers), £1 1*s.* A.Mus., A.R.C.M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

BEDFORDSHIRE EISTEDDFOD.

COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MARCH 1st to MARCH 12th, 1926.

COMPETITIONS IN VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS, DUETS, ETC.
CHOIRS AND ORCHESTRAS, ELOCUTION,
DRAMATIC SCENES AND COUNTRY DANCES.

Classes open to United Kingdom.
Closing date for Entries, January 30, 1926.
Official Syllabus containing full particulars, post free, 6d.

Director of Music—DR. H. A. HARDING.
Hon. Sec.—CAPT. D. V. GEDGE, M.B.E., 61a, High Street, Bedford

LONDON

Musical Competition Festival.

President: H. H. PRINCESS HELENA VICTORIA.
Chairman: ERNEST READ, Esq., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL FESTIVAL,
CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER,
MARCH 8th to 13th, and 15th to 20th.

Choral, Vocal, and Instrumental Classes open to all parts of the Country. All old and well-tried features retained. New Subjects include: Three 10-Guinea Exhibitions: Holders designated "The President's Exhibitioner." (These are in addition to Two 9-Guinea Exhibitions, presented by Trinity College of Music.) Women's Institute Choirs. Choral Class for Societies formed since September, 1924. Pianoforte Répertoire Class. Separate Gold Medals for all Voices; Self-Accompaniment Class; Gold Medal for Elocution; Home Music-Makers' Vocal or Instrumental Class; Conductors' Classes, &c.

ADJUDICATORS:
J. PERCY BAKER, H. L. BALFOUR, Mrs. ACTON-BOND, E. T. COOK, BENJAMIN J. DALE, HERBERT FRYER, JULIUS HARRISON, WELTON HICKIN, Dr. E. F. HORNER, JOSEPH IVIMEY, FREDERICK KEEL, Dr. STANLEY MARCHANT, FREDERICK RANALOW, ERNEST READ, Dr. WALKER ROBSON, E. STANLEY ROPER, ARTHUR R. SAUNDERS, KENNEDY SCOTT, Dr. SYDNEY SCOTT, GEOFFREY SHAW, Dr. FREDERICK SHINN, FELIX SWINSTEAD, Mrs. HELEN TRUST, MISS KATIE THOMAS, Dr. JOHN WARRINER, MISS MARY WILSON, and Mr. CHARLES WOODHOUSE.

Subject to future confirmation, Prizes distributed by H.H. Princess Helena Victoria, Lady Bowlby, Lady Muriel Paget, and Mrs. Ernest Read.

Syllabus from the Hon. Secretary,
Mr. T. Lester Jones, 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11.

BUXTON AND NORTH DERBYSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 12, 13, 14, 15, 1926.

EMINENT ADJUDICATORS.

SYLLABUS, now ready, 6*d.*, post free.

JOHN B. BRADE, Hon. Sec.,
63*a*, Spring Gardens, Buxton.

SCARBOROUGH Competitive Musical Festival.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE
SCARBOROUGH TOWNSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

MAY 13th, 14th, 15th, 1926.
GRAND HALL, THE SPA.

Solo, Duet, Quartet, Choral, Orchestral, School Choir, Etc., Competitions.

Syllabus may be obtained from
Mr. F. CROMACK, Secretary,
Scarborough Townsmen's Association,
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough.

BRIGHTON Competitive Musical Festival.

MONDAY to SATURDAY, MAY 10 to 15, 1926.
THE DOME AND ROYAL PAVILION.

115 CLASSES including:
CHORAL, CLASS, SOLO- AND PART-SINGING,
ELOCUTION, INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC,
FOLK-DANCING,
COMPOSITION, BAND CONTESTS.

Syllabus and full particulars from the Hon. Festival Secretaries, c/o LYON & HALL, 1, East Street, Brighton.

LEAMINGTON AND COUNTY OPEN COMPETITIVE
MUSICAL FESTIVAL

JUNE 12th, 17th, 18th, and 19th, 1926.

SYLLABUS NOW READY, from
THE SECRETARY,
TOWN HALL, LEAMINGTON.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.
ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.

Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.

Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.

Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

Correspondence Courses in
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1*s.* 6*d.* "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6*d.*
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSIC REQUIRES COVERS
TO KEEP IT NICE AND CLEAN.

Now is the time to prepare for the winter season.

Send P.O. for 1*s.* 3*d.* and obtain specimen covers for Sheet and Choir Music.

R. H. MUDDIMAN,
77, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM.
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel. Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING
(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Recitals, At Homes, &c.
Oratorio. BACH a speciality.
All Modern and Standard Works.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
WEST-END STUDIOS.
For Lessons or Vacant Dates, apply,
117, Hampstead Way, Golders Green, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

HORACE CURTIS
TENOR
ORATORIO, WORKS, REQUIEMS, ETC.
99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12. 'Phone: Streatham 5246.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5

MILLARD THOMPSON
ORATORIO. (L.T.C.L.). TENOR.
"Mr. Millard Thompson gave proof of high artistic merit . . . . all being sustained at a high level of vocalisation."—Middlesex Chronicle.
"Mr. Millard Thompson is a tenor of the robusto style, first and last, dramatic, vigorous, and incisive. He had immense reserves of ringing tone and mastery of expression."—Letchworth Citizen.
"St. Mildred's," 17, Forest View Rd., Highams Park, London, E.17.

JAMES CAPERN
BASS-BARITONE.
Cleeve, Parkside Drive, Watford. Telephone: Watford 531.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

JOHN HENDERSON
BARITONE. For Oratorio, Masonic (Lodges), Concerts, &c.
Press Notices, &c., "Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.
Telephone: Willesden, 70.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

EDWARD W. GROOCOCK
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., A.G.S.M.
Organist, Rugby Parish Church.

RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.

6, Regent Place, Rugby, Warwickshire.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

MISS MARY WILSON F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast), gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Authur of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-25 ...277 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-25 ... 75 ,, ,, ,,

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations.—Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple, London, E.C.).

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Organ Examinations.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Messrs. Reid Bros., 2s. 8d. post free.

298, Balham High Road, London, S.W.17.
Telephone: Battersea 916.

J. C. BRYDSON, MUS. B. (Dunelm.). Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Guarantee Courses (One fee, Tuition until successful). Kegworth, Derby.

THOMAS CARPENTER, L.R.A.M., L.T.C.L., Specialises in preparation for Associated Board (Pianoforte) Exams. (Primary to Final Grade.) Also short Postal Courses in Rudiments and Harmony. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O. Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

THEORETICAL SUBJECTS for all Pianoforte Exams. Students' private exercises corrected. Model answers. Ernest G. Duggan, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Regd. Teacher, 87, Broomfield Avenue, Palmers Green, N.13.

EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., CORRESPONDENCE COACH, R.C.O., R.A.M. Exams., &c. "Zelgart," Harborough Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus., B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus. Bac. pass. Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

PIANO.—Tobias Matthay's Method taught by Elizabeth Levy, L.R.A.M. Gold medallist. At pupils' houses or her Studio, 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto: F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.

Several recent successes in all these examinations.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

273 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
169 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the July, 1926, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition pupils are trained to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.

Special attention given to the Pianoforte Accompaniment Test, as most organ students fail to utilize the distinctive idioms of pianoforte writing, and make their work look like an organ accompaniment.

F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as Episode and Middle Entries, Stretto, and Song Writing, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon when so many candidates come to grief.

A complete analysis of the Brahms Sextet was sent to all pupils in June, and this anticipated the question on the Rondo set by the examiners, and supplied a detailed answer with musical illustrations.

Hints on how to study the score selected for the July examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.

All the new tests will be covered in these lessons, and complete musical illustrations will be sent to each candidate showing exactly what the examiners require.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

DR. A. A. MACKINTOSH, D. Mus. T.C.D., B. Mus. Oxon., F.R.C.O., Coaches for all Exams. Lists of recent successes. Nairn, Compton, Guildford.

MR. HERBERT H. NELSON undertakes revision of MSS., and gives lessons in Harmony and Composition. 9, Grange Road, Canonbury, N.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

J. W. WILSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., T.C.L. Exams, &c. Solutions and Model Essays. Moderate Terms. 47, Hinckley Road, Leicester.

WELL-KNOWN B.A. Coaches by Correspondence. Paper work for all Examinations up to Mus. Bac. Term of 10 lessons, £1 1s. "B.A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas: also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

ELOCUTION.—Taught by ROSA GLYN at pupils' houses. "R. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MR. TRAVERS ADAMS regrets that he is quite unable to answer immediately all communications he has received. Answers will be sent as speedily as possible. With sincere apologies for delay, and many thanks for certain kind letters. 16, Warwick Avenue, W.2.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

CHOIR BOYS WANTED.—St. Mark's, North Audley Street, W. Must be experienced. £10 to £25 per annum. Write, Maurice Vinden, The Fawns Manor, Bedfont, Middlesex.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY CHOIR.

Trial of boys' voices, age 9½ to 10½, Tuesday, January 19. Apply at once for admission forms and particulars to the Master of the Choristers, Abbey Choir School, Deans Yard, S.W.1. Fee for boarders, £50 a year. First-class preparatory school education.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There are VACANCIES in the Choir for ALTO, TENOR, and BASS Choral Scholars. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year, with considerable allowances in addition.

The Competition will be held on Tuesday, February 23.

Applications to be sent in not later than February 15.

Successful candidates must pass or secure exemption from the Previous Examination before coming into residence.

For further information apply to the Deans, King's College, Cambridge.

ALTO REQUIRED.—£20. St. Andrew's Church, Ashley Place, S.W.1. Good sight-reader essential. Apply by letter to Mr. A. M. Hawkins, 11, Claverdale Road, S.W.2.

TENOR REQUIRED for City Church. £15 per annum. Apply, "Organist," 367, Camden Road, N.7.

TENOR REQUIRED for Church Choir. Good music. Bach's "St. John Passion," &c. Excellent opportunity for gaining experience. Expenses paid. Write, "E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR, £20 per annum: Sunday mornings only. Must be really good sight-reader. Write Alan May, St. Mary Aldermary, Bow Lane, E.C.4.

HENRY M. BYRON, Managing Director, Concerts and Recitals. Established 1890. Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10.

HONORARY ORGANIST WANTED for West Hampstead Congregational Church, 527a, Finchley Road (near Platt's Lane). Three-manual grand Willis organ, hydraulic-blown. Applications to Organist, 112, Finchley Road, N.W.3.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Leighton Buzzard Wesleyan Church. Three-manual organ. Qualifications and salary required to Secretary, 22, Albany Road, Leighton Buzzard.

WANTED.—An ASSISTANT-ORGANIST for a Bournemouth Church. Exceptionally fine organ. Apply first by letter to Box 1, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,889th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on January 5th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on Thursday, January 14th, at 1.10 p.m.

LADY wishes to obtain POSITION as PIANIST to small orchestra. Evenings only. Miller, Burley House, Woodford Wells, Essex.

A Smart Young Lady VIOLINIST seeks ENGAGEMENT. Used to all classes of music in every branch of the profession. Address: "Beta," c/o Willmore's, Chiswell Street, E.C.1.

RESIDENT MUSIC STUDENTS received in country Rectory near Oxford. Organ, Choir-training, Paper Work. All Exams, &c. Rev. C. L. Bradley, M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. Wendlebury Rectory, Bicester, Oxon.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes: specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIPE ORGAN FOR SALE.—One manual (Swell) and Pedals (7 Stops). Inspection and offers invited. Secretary, Congregational Church, Littlehampton.

DAVIDSON 2-Manual 20-Stop Church ORGAN. Apply, C. Meadowcroft, Cobden House, Heywood.

FOR SALE.—Westminster Model ORGAN. Two Manuals, Pedals, 23 Stops, 5 Octaves, C scale. Grand Organ and Swell worked by knee-levers, as well as composition pedals. Pedals and Seat. As good as new. What offers? J. G. Mayne, "Bryncaerau," St. Augustine's Road, Penarth.

PIANO PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR SALE. £8 8s. W. A. Day, 14, Gloucester Road, Kingston Hill.

PNEUMATIC PEDAL ATTACHMENT Radiating and Concave, by Norman & Beard. For Grand Piano. Perfect, with or without Stool. 4, Sussex Avenue, Margate.

PIPE ORGANS RESTORED, Enlarged, Revoiced, Repaired and Tuned. Attractive Terms. HENRY MORGAN & SON, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1s. 4d. an hour, or 6s. a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. Single practices (pupils only), 9d. per hour. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Rd., S.W.6. Tel.: Putney 4208.

FOR SALE.—Broadwood GRAND PIANO, rosewood case, in good condition. May be seen on application to "K.," 89, West Street, Erith.

RAGGED MUSIC REPAIRED.—Songs, Piano, &c. 1s. 6d. doz. Choral, 1s. doz. Books, 6d. each; new covers, 6d. extra. Post free. A. Clare, 18, Willowbank Gardens, Belfast.

SINGING TEACHING.

FOR SALE.—One of the largest Connections in Colonies. Two Pianos, Furniture, &c. Ideal climate. Golf, Tennis, Surf Bathing all year round. Write for particulars, first instance,

MRS. VIVIAN BENNETTS,

79, Talgarth Road, Barons Court, London, W.14.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.

(a) Outline of Course of Instruction (lists of Technical Exercises, books of Studies, Pieces), 5s.

(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5s.

(c) Two Special Test-Papers (including correction), 5s. each.

"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. 1s. 9d. Illustrated Method! Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

TWELFTH THOUSAND.
BENEDICITE, OMNIA OPERA set to music by W. H. HOLLOWAY, L.Mus. T.C.L. Price Twopence.
"A varied and tuneful setting."—Manchester City News.
London. NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SAVE 60%. 30 Standard Orchestral Works. 11 extra parts. List with pleasure. F. Godin, 3, Ballingdon Road, S.W.11.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new Songs by HAROLD OAKLEY: "UP SAIL!" Compass, B♭ to E♭. "The Gondolier." Compass, C to C. "Love for ever lost." Compass, B to D (F optional). "Beauty's Daughter." Compass, B♭ to E♭. "The Erl King," Compass, C to E♭ (F optional). Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

LYRIC WRITERS and COMPOSERS.—SONGS, LYRICS, and MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS wanted for Publication. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

TEXT-BOOKS
BY
ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.
OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM
WITH ANALYSES FROM
WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.
Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."
DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:
"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.
THIRD EDITION.
Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."
—Musical Times.

ANTHEMS: The Desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.
I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... 3d.
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.
Three Preludes on Anglican Chants
FOR THE ORGAN
BY BASIL HARWOOD.
(Op. 42.)
PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN
BY
ROBERT BROWNING.
SET TO MUSIC FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS
BY
GEORGE RATHBONE.
Price Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Music and Books
at Great Reductions.
Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.
New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.
Music and Books Purchased.
FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,
121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

NOW READY. 7s. 6d. NET.
FOUNDATIONS OF PRACTICAL HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT.
By R. O. MORRIS,
OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
The Journal of Education: "There are features in Mr. Morris's text-book which we do not remember to have seen incorporated in any other book of a like nature. . . . To the earnest student, who wishes to get a real grip of his subject, we cordially recommend this book, for in Mr. Morris he will find a guide, philosopher, and friend—one whose knowledge is born to experience."
MACMILLAN & Co., LTD., LONDON, W.C.2.

A Perfect Supply of Wind for Organ Blowing.

BY APPOINTMENT.

A PERFECT supply of wind is assured by installing a "DISCUS" Organ Blower. Designed and constructed by engineers who have specialised in this class of work for over thirty years, its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed. Installations can be supplied to suit any type of organ, large or small, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. We shall be pleased to submit estimate on receipt of particulars.

An interesting booklet which has been written by experts is available, post free upon application.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER
REGD. TRADE MARK.

WATKINS & WATSON.

Telephone: NORTH 2039. WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

"DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWERS have been installed in Cathedrals, Churches, and public buildings, both at home and abroad. Some of these are:

Westminster Abbey
York Minster
Southwark Cathedral
Bath Abbey
Westminster Chapel
City Temple
St. Martin-in-the-Fields
Malvern College
Wellington College
Eton
Harrow
Royal Albert Hall
Queen's Hall
Royal Academy of Music.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE.
2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.
3. VALSE DE LA REINE.
4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22.)

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte ... ... complete	4	6
Violin and Pianoforte ... separately, each	2	3
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ...	9	0
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra	10	5
Ditto, for Full Orchestra	17	5

	s.	d.
Full Score (Full Orchestra)	11	6
Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and Strings, each Number	3	0
Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
Military Band Arrangement	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN, BORD,
SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 439.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE EDITION OF THE WORKS OF

BRITISH BLIND COMPOSERS.

SPECIAL

ORGAN RECITAL NUMBERS.

		s.	d.
MINUET ANTIQUE	H. F. Watling	2	0
MARCHE HÉROÏQUE in B flat	„ „	2	6
BOHEMESQUE in G...	...W. Wolstenholme	2	6
RONDINO in D flat	„ „	2	0
FANTASIA in E	T. G. Osborn	2	6
TOCCATA in D minor ...	„ „	2	6

Played by Mr. H. L. Balfour, Mr. R. Goss Custard, Mr. H. F. Ellingford, Dr. Alfred Hollins, Mr. Arthur Meale, Mr. Herbert Walton, and other eminent Recitalists.

Published for the National Institute for the Blind
(Registered under the Blind Persons Act, 1920)
BY RYALLS & JONES, LTD.,
107, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.

London Agents—
EVANS & CO. (Wells Castle), LTD.,
72, Wells Street, Oxford Street, W.1.

NEW SERIES of ORGAN WORKS

EDITED BY

MARTIN SHAW

		s.	d.
1. FANTASY IN D, No. 4 ...	Alan Gray	2	0
2. RHAPSODY ON AN OLD ENGLISH TUNE	Cyril B. Rootham	3	0
3. COMMUNION	C. H. Kitson	2	0
4. PRELUDE ON "IRISH" ...	C. H. Kitson	2	0
5. SERENADE PEU SERIEUSE	Harry Farjeon	2	0
6. BERCEUSE	Harry Farjeon	1	6
7. CAPRICCIETTO ...	E. Markham Lee	2	0
8. SCHERZO IN A ...	E. Markham Lee	2	0
9. FOUR VERSETS ON "SALVE, FESTA DIES"	Godfrey Sceats	2	0
10. CHORAL PRELUDES ...	Geoffrey Shaw	2	0
11. VARIATIONS ON AN OLD CAROL TUNE	Geoffrey Shaw	2	0

J. B. CRAMER & Co., LTD., LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord ! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M.	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4. ...	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7. ...	A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M. ...	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep ! how broad ! how high !
Hanover	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Alleluia ! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M. ...	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias) ...	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D. ...	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7. ...	Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M. ...	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M. ...	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6. ...	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M. ...	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M. ...	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M. ...	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M. ...	My God, and is Thy Table spread ?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M. ...	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version)	C.M. ...	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D. ...	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M. ...	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8. ...	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M. ...	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7. ...	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4. ...	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M. ...	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M. ...	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M. ...	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M. ...	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version) ...	C.M. ...	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version) ...	C.M. ...	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.
Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

January 11th.—Lent Term begins.

January 13th, at 3 p.m.—Inaugural Address, by GRANVILLE BANTOCK, Esq., M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Birmingham. Subject: "Reminiscences of Sibelius."

January 20th and 27th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concerts.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

A special Class for Scoring for brass and Military Bands, and the Theatre Orchestra, is conducted by Mr. HENRY GEEHL.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

have pleasure in announcing that they have just published

THE VOCAL SCORE OF

LIONEL AND CLARISSA

(CHARLES DIBDIN, arr. by ALFRED REYNOLDS),

as now being played with immense success at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith.

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE

COLLEGIATE PSALTER

CONTAINING THE

CANTICLES, PSALMS, AND PROPER PSALMS, WITH CHANTS

TOGETHER WITH

VERSICLES AND RESPONSES

AND

THE LITANY.

POINTED AND EDITED BY THE

REV. H. G. DANIELL-BAINBRIDGE, M.A.,
Late Precentor of Westminster Abbey,

AND

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A.,
Late Organist of Westminster Abbey.

Well Bound in Cloth, 6*s.* net.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE

ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, MUS. DOC.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

Demy 8vo size, 4*s.* net.
Imperial 32mo, 1*s.* 6*d.* net
The Canticles only, Demy 8vo, 6*d.* net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR
JANUARY 1 1926
(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 78.)

REFLECTIONS ON LISZT

BY ERIK BREWERTON

I.

The title of the standard German life of Liszt, in three volumes, 'Liszt the Artist and the Man,' expresses a fundamental difficulty in dealing with him. It is to the advantage of criticism that with the death of the musician, the artist comes into his own and the man sinks almost out of sight. In spite of a rather morbid curiosity for personal details, which from time to time manifests itself in the press, to the very large majority such men as Beethoven, Chopin, Mozart, and Wagner have become de-personalised, so closely and so constantly have they been identified with their works. With Liszt this process can hardly be said to have taken place. The artist and the man are curiously intermingled, so that the inequalities in the work of the artist persuade the critic to investigate the character of the man, whilst the splendour attached to Liszt's name and the multifarious activities of his life give a peculiar flavour of their own to the quality of his work. The result is that all those who sincerely wish to come to some decision about Liszt the artist, have an uncomfortable feeling that whatever they say will be biassed by their sympathy or by their aversion for that astonishing man whose portraits still seem instinct with life and animation.

This bias was specially noticeable in Liszt's lifetime, and, as he bitterly complained, the chief drawback in the way of a substantial recognition of his contribution to music lay precisely in his past celebrity as a pianist, which he was never allowed to forget. First impressions endure, and Liszt, in his early years, cultivated the cities of Europe too assiduously for him to be seriously regarded as anything else but the brilliant pianiste improvisateur, the lionised member of Parisian salons, and one, if we are to believe Heine, who on a tour with Rubini, the tenor, included bouquets and laurel wreaths in the list of their joint expenses. It is always difficult to be fair to versatility, and the public, somewhat deficient in imagination, is apt to dispose of those who solicit its patronage in a rough-and-ready fashion which, from the standpoint of adequacy, often leaves much to be desired. Popular opinion in its taste for simplification, in its desire to find one strong characteristic which will elucidate a man's whole life, may be on right lines. Versatility may be a mistake; it may seriously embarrass the will. But there are certain mistakes which are the privileges of superior minds, mistakes which inspire a touch of envy, arguing as they do a richly-stored and prodigal nature. The feeling against versatility may be connected with that long-lived political principle which exploits the individual for the sake of society. We judge the tree by the fruit it bears for our consumption; we value the past only for its contributions to the present. Too often a rudimentary reading of history prevents us from seeing valuable elements in the character of the man or of the age just because it is not in the direct line of our own development. Yet the character of each may have a colour or a consistency which will justify it to the discerning imagination when the ruthless tests of the modern world find little or nothing in it to remember. Our own feebleness is rebuked by all that is great enough to be itself, and when we admire novelties it is partly because those who create them suggest a lack of self-reliance which pays an indirect compliment to us. No doubt it flatters a man's vanity to be found interesting when his neighbour is ignored, but such publicity would mean nothing to a Shakespeare or a Beethoven. Men like these are imposed by a small minority on society which, as a whole, may be said never to rise above certain rough notions of them, notions which are sometimes wrong. The difficulties that people find in modern music are trifles compared with those privations and hardships which have to be supported before the pilgrim feels that he can call some composer truly a classic. It is a very big assumption of one's own importance to talk confidently of the first-rate. To acquire and retain a purity of taste demands a high degree of asceticism and a cruel restriction of the sympathies. Those cannot be blamed who are modest enough to enjoy the foothills of music and do not care to make frequent excursions into the peak-district. Besides, we love the knowledge that comes from experience; the pure milk of the word is not a heady enough draught. With all our admiration for the classics, with our inner conviction that we shall come back to them in the end, like prodigal sons, with Aristotle and St. Thomas Aquinas pointing out the way, we still feel that we must first carouse in the land of Romance before we can rest our weary limbs on the calm heights of Olympus. The reaction against romanticism has gone too far. Certain French writers, not content to indicate its follies and extravagances, have almost denuded Europe of all intellectual and artistic attraction from Rousseau to Wagner. In literature they wish to return to the 17th century, and in music they fall back on the Couperins, on Grétry, and on Rameau. Such austerity provokes a certain obstinacy, and if it continues many of us will soon be buying complete editions of Byron, de Musset, and Victor Hugo, and be demanding a revival of the operas of Weber and of the Symphonies of Raff.

The versatility of Liszt and his remarkable sensitiveness to the movements of the century which his long life almost spanned, make it extremely difficult for any single person to arrive at a just and comprehensive opinion of him. Musicianship is not enough to judge a man who quite seriously exposed himself to all the influences that surrounded him, and aspired to make his music a complete summary of them. For Liszt brought a new spirit into music, whereby it ceases to be what it was to Haydn and Mozart and their predecessors—a gift quite consistent with ignorance and a narrowness of outlook. Liszt, seeking his gospel in Beethoven, attempted to make music a power commensurate with life, finding its inspiration in the sights and sounds of nature, in the messages of books and the intimations of the other arts. Just as by Goethe was revealed that ideal of general culture of which we find little or no trace between the Renaissance and the French Revolution, an ideal with which Matthew Arnold attempted in his genial way to indoctrinate this country, so Liszt made it his ambition that henceforth the musician would be regarded as nobly essential to civilisation, precisely because he made all that was best in civilisation an essential part of his nature. Liszt from an early age had the taste for precept as well as the power of example. Like Goethe, he planted his feet well in the furrows of this life, and was not content to let his dream plead for him in its ivoried isolation. In the eyes of the young romanticist who, in 1835, wrote his essay 'on the situation of artists and their condition in society,' music was no longer something sufficient to itself. It must take up arms like literature in the conflict of ideas; it must have its manifesto, its charter of Rights. That Liszt threw down this challenge at a time when society found it rather absurd that a young pianist should attempt to discuss anything outside the scope of that amiable diversion which it supposed it was the aim of crotchets and semiquavers to provide, says much for the courage and range of his ideas. Since Liszt, musicians no longer have the rather simple and unimpressive views of a Haydn or of a Schubert. They are not even satisfied with such hazy notions as Beethoven acquired from Plutarch. They steep themselves in Nietzsche like Strauss, or in theosophy like Scriabin, and to understand their compositions demands a knowledge and a sympathy that cannot be imbibed in the academies of music.

This tendency, the necessity for which many who react against modern music are inclined to question, has a strong bearing on the whole aim of musical composition. It implies that the musical sense is not independent and complete in itself. Music is not, as Walter Pater maintained it was, in a well-known passage in one of his essays, 'the type and measure of all the arts,' because, as he said, it presents an identification of matter and form, of subject and expression which the other arts, notably that of lyrical poetry, constantly aspire to but never quite attain. For to make music part of a loose federation, to submit it to the sights and sounds of nature, to put it in touch with the beauties of poetry or of painting and expect it to translate them, is to deny that each art has its own sovereign power, its own special responsibilities to its material, its own untranslatable element of sensuous beauty, and is to affirm that poetry, music, painting, and the other arts are 'but translations into other languages of one and the same fixed quantity of imaginative thought.'

This theory of the inter-relation of the arts, which Liszt openly professed and practised, forms the logical basis of all programme music, and is only possible to an advanced and complex civilisation rich in the appeal which the symbolical exercises on sensitive and highly-evolved minds. Programme music is represented by all those who can neither compose nor listen to music without associating it with other thoughts and emotions. This association is of an imaginative kind, and has no necessary connection with that crude realism which the French and the Italians often find to their liking. The distinction would lack validity to those purists who anathematize the whole theory. But granted its legitimacy, it is idle for us to expect from such music the same level of achievement, the clearness, conciseness, and cohesion that 'absolute' music provides. It bears in this sense the same relationship to classical music that Shakespeare's romantic drama bears to the classical drama of the Greeks, being richer in characterisation and contrasting elements, but less sustained in tone and grandeur of purpose. The classical critic will always find rubbish in Shakespeare's best plays and, similarly, romantic music on a big scale is always 'patchy.' Programme music, as Liszt expounded it, is implicit in the romantic movement from its start. He was probably right in finding his authority in some of the later works of Beethoven which he would have called programme music with the programme undivulged. Schumann infuses his dreams, his conceits, his feelings of love into his early pianoforte compositions. Change the spirit of the individual and we have the less provincial Chopin glorifying his country in his Polonaises. Change it again, and we have Berlioz with a keener eye for the concrete, or Liszt fresh from the excitement of reading Dante, Petrarch Byron, and Lamartine.

Whether the composer concentrate more on the nature of his own moods or on the outside influences that determine them, is merely a matter of temperament; there is no real difference in principle. In each case he starts from his own particular feelings, and the only difference that arises is that of treatment and presentation. When Schumann, Debussy, and Moussorgsky give us their impressions of childhood, it is less from the standpoint of music proper than from sympathy with the temperament working through it that we prefer one to the other. There is nothing further from the doctrine of 'art for art's sake' than romantic music of which programme music is a natural extension.

II.

It is perhaps fortunate that theories are not very powerful in musical matters. The public takes its good where it can find it. It can enjoy Wagner without first masticating his theory of opera. Judging each composition separately on its individual merits, and not on the theory it may illustrate, it is thus saved from the dire alternative of accepting all programme music en bloc or of refusing to be pleased by many captivating and delightful works. Leaving the abstract question of programme music to those whose appetites are whetted by a rather dry bone, we shall probably find more substantial fare in a rough inspection of Liszt's own practice. From such an examination, it does appear that Pater is justified in his charge that those who, like Liszt, believe that one art can be adequately expressed in terms of another are handicapped through a bluntness of sensibility, whereby they ignore the important fact that the sound of music, the colour of painting, the rhythm of poetry, each contribute something to the art in question which inheres in it so closely as to be a vital and inseparable part of its nature. All good style, such a critic would maintain, is based on a keen and delicate sensibility to the medium through which the artist works. Only through this instinct can the strokes be sure, and the vague and the experimental be avoided.

The numerous arrangements Liszt made, his alternative versions, his transcriptions not only of the compositions of others but of his own, must throw some suspicion on the soundness of his theory and on the excellence of the greater works which represent it. Let the artist experiment if he will, but is it entirely unreasonable in the interests of style to expect something occasionally in the nature of achievement? How seldom does Liszt suggest that the ambition to frame his message once and for all in unmistakable lineaments permeated his being! It is only sincerity, enthusiasm, and fastidious care in the romantic composer which can compensate for the lack of that unity, that proportion, and that universality which the classical composer provides. The bulk of Liszt's music may be described as exclusively experimental. The pianistic and orchestral effects, the improvisatory nature of his writing, the inherent poetical intentions all point to this dominant characteristic. Liszt 'tries things on'; he is a gambler who plays always boldly and often with success.

It is not surprising, therefore, that his melody is weak whilst his themes or 'motifs' are remarkably interesting. Every man draws benefits from his defects, and Liszt's comparative impotence in melody is compensated by a happy knack of condensing or of sublimating his idea in a short and pregnant theme and by the skill with which he decorates and transforms it. The bold chords in the 'Chapel of William Tell,' the superbly defiant introduction to the Fantasia quasi Sonata, 'After reading Dante,' show the true orator's gift of summing up the situation in a graphic and memorable phrase. Nietzsche has called Wagner a miniaturist, and certainly in this gift for 'motifs' which he turned to symbolical uses Liszt strongly resembles Wagner. Though the systematic practice of 'theme transformation' only occurs with the period of his orchestral works, the idea may be discerned in his earlier pianoforte music, which he wrote before he knew Wagner and became one of his greatest admirers. In the way they cultivated this seminal music, the two part company, for what Wagner treated symphonically, Liszt could only elaborate rhapsodically. There are continual gaps in Liszt's workmanship which variations, repetition, and cadenzas do their best to conceal. Thus his lack of melody, which the early Russians, who suffered from the same weakness in construction abundantly possessed, becomes deplorably conspicuous, and the musician is assailed with a sense of tedium as he makes his way through the larger works.

It would be unfortunate if Liszt, when he abandoned Paris for Weimar, in 1847, imitated the action of the dog in the fable which dropped its bone in snatching at a shadow. Saint-Saëns hazards the view that Liszt contemplated a musical empire in which he should represent the glory of instrumental, and Wagner that of operatic music. Anyone who examines the B minor Sonata, the last work of importance Liszt wrote for the pianoforte, must notice a distinct change of style. It was written in 1853, when the composer was well launched on his series of orchestral poems and his 'Dante' and 'Faust' Symphonies. Except for this solitary work he abandoned, from 1847 onwards, all serious composition for the pianoforte. The Sonata, dedicated to Schumann, and admired somewhat dutifully by Wagner, no doubt reveals maturer and more earnest thought, but whilst sensationalism has diminished, it must be confessed geniality has diminished with it. In spite of its length, its touches of mystery, and the fugal treatment of one of the themes—a feature Liszt probably borrowed from Beethoven—the Sonata is not a happy nor a convincing work. Compared with the Dante Fantasia, written fourteen years earlier, it is less lyrical and spontaneous. The themes, transformed with abundant ingenuity, are neither beautiful nor even arresting in themselves. One cannot but feel that Liszt, in exchanging his earlier French Romanticism for the heavier German brand, in preferring the prophet's mantle to the poet's laurel, has been affected, to doubtful advantage, with a laborious idea of culture which he has acquired from the study of Goethe, the correspondence of Wagner, and the companionship of his encyclopædic friend, the Countess of Wittgenstein. Why Liszt from entering on his duties at Weimar abandoned pianoforte composition, when a few years before he had proclaimed in one of his published letters his entire devotion to the instrument, is a pretty subject for speculation. But then we know that Goethe was not musical; he only interested himself in it with professorial pedantry. Wagner played the pianoforte atrociously; and, as for the Countess, she regarded Liszt as an apostle, not as a pianist. With the Rome period, which embraces Liszt's last twenty years, we have the embarrassing spectacle of a life divided (like Gaul!) into three parts, each of which has no comprehensible connection with any of the others.

The passing of Liszt's first period would not be regrettable if it merely signified the passing of operatic paraphrases, of the 'Liebesträume,' and of Fantasias on 'God save the King' and the 'Marseillaise.' Those who are satisfied to confine themselves to this side of his work fail to appreciate those occasions when the eye was less blood-shot, the pose less dramatic, when the molto appassionato, the rinforzando, the molto espressivo and agitato were less copious, those occasions when the first two books of the 'Années de Pélerinage' were written, the concert Studies, 'Waldesrauschen' and 'Gnomenreigen,' and such songs as 'The King of Thule.'

Further, if Liszt's temperament led him into a facile and sometimes offensive emotionalism —how fond he is in his melody of hugging the sentimental third of the scale!—a vice which many people have greedily welcomed, the same people in the excess of their devotion have distorted with an undue emphasis the style of playing which his pianoforte pieces demand. Liszt's writing is seldom of that forceful nature which invites a heavy fortissimo. It is not thick like Brahms's, not close and nerve-shattering like Rachmaninov's or Medtner's. It is doubtful whether Chopin in his greater works does not require more power and effort. It would be easy to show from many of his pieces, including the 'Hungarian Rhapsodies' themselves, that a brilliant iridescent effect is more often desiderated than a massive fortissimo. Liszt should be played, as a rule, inconsequentially and with a certain flair. To play him as he is often played, with a work-a-day expression, with hands vigorously 'pitching' into the instrument, is ruinous. His difficult pieces are not meant to sound very difficult. They are meant to dazzle, certainly; but that is not the same thing. A mountain looks difficult, a fountain dazzles. There is no artistic gain in the idea of difficulty, in shaking the perspiration from the hair and making explosive grunts towards the end of the second Rhapsody. Dazzling effects, on the other hand, have a certain rank, a place in the purlieus. This thrill is latent in much of Liszt's pianoforte music, though it is surprisingly seldom realised, so that an unhappy and maimed result is brought about, as if a peacock should flaunt its beauty in the rain.

If the study of Liszt's original compositions brings into prominence defects which seem implicit in the theory of music he propounded—an experimentalism, a paucity of melody, an undue reliance on ornamentation, and an excessive sacrifice of the beautiful to the dramatic—in his arrangements and transcriptions for the pianoforte, which are only another branch of the same theory, he originated a new type of art of considerable importance. In his early years he arranged for the pianoforte Beethoven's Symphonies and notably, considering the difficulties of the task, Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique.' He informs us, in writing of these occupations, that he aimed at making such arrangements not mere specimens of useful hack-work, but sympathetic and faithful reproductions, where only the mass of sound and the variety of timbre which the orchestra possesses would be lacking. In the more familiar transcriptions of songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Mendelssohn, Liszt went even farther, and aspired not merely to popularise some attractive melodies, but to create pianoforte pieces in which the full significance of the songs is brought out and even heightened through the many resources of the instrument. Thus to transmogrify on the pianoforte songs by Schubert and Schumann is an audacious undertaking, but there are one or two cases where the composer may be said to have succeeded, to have worked up again the substance of the song with the energy of a divining enthusiasm, so that, as a piece, 'Frühlingsnacht' becomes more intense and throbbing than is Schumann's original song, whilst Schubert's setting of Shakespeare's Serenade is invested with a romantic feeling full of charm.

If we add the Studies after the Caprices of Paganini, the transcriptions from Bach's organ works, the 'Soirées de Vienne' after Schubert, we have the nucleus of a mass of pianoforte arrangements by Tausig, Busoni, Godowsky, Reger, and others which have conferred new prestige on the instrument. This hybrid music will always arouse the resentment of the purist, and it must be admitted that much of it is admired more as a tour de force than as anything else. Reger's arrangements of Chopin are too brutal for a refined taste, and Godowsky's ingenuity—has he not written nine different metamorphosen of the 'Black Key' Study?—bewilders the fingers and almost stupefies the mind. There are distinct signs that pianists are stung by a desire to exhaust all the possible effects of which their instrument is capable, and that they have forgotten everything else in this affliction. The tremendous impetus that Liszt gave to pianoforte playing cannot be properly appraised by merely indicating the great abilities of the numerous pianists who found their inspiration at Weimar or Buda-Pesth and handed it on with their own glosses. If the claim to use the pianoforte for purposes of astonishment becomes general, Liszt might be the first to deplore the fact, but his example would be largely responsible for it. What we may allow or even encourage in a few extraordinary personalities may be deplorable when imitated by others quite differently endowed. Every teacher knows this, and has puzzled his casuistical wits over it. For the achievement is often missed, but the example always remains, and therefore, to rely on personality in teaching may prove a mischievous method. Far too many hot-headed amateurs and students think of pianoforte music in terms of Liszt's second Rhapsody or of Tausig's arrangement of Bach's D minor Organ Toccata. They tend to regard such music as characteristic of the pianoforte, not as something off the main line and exceptional.

Finally, the subject of these arrangements and transcriptions suggests the grand defect of Liszt's character, a lack of personality in the high sense of the word. A strong character will not overflow with sympathy, for such effusion betrays a lack of original pith and force. In that Liszt was prodigal of sympathy to others, we can deduce that he needed it badly himself. He seems to have caught with fatal facility the tone of the different societies he frequented. His early compositions reflect French romanticism on its literary side; his concert paraphrases the atmosphere of the Italian opera-house, which, curiously enough, in his writings Liszt despised; in his songs we find not very successful attempts to capture the spirit of the German 'Lied,' whilst in his last phase, he seems to have dreamed of becoming a re-incarnated Palestrina. This emulation of the chameleon makes him extremely fascinating but equally elusive. We cannot help suspecting a lack of balance, a character mal assis, as Heine described it. Liszt had the dubious merit of seeing good in evil; it seemed to give him great pleasure to exercise a redeeming love and trick out a rather ragged tune in sumptuous robes. The first tune in his Fantasia on 'Rigoletto,' for example, assumes at its first appearance a profound and tearful manner, makes grave and moving gestures, and quite captivates the pianist who can enter into the spirit of the game. This extraordinary susceptibility, the master motive of Liszt's life, this eager responsiveness to literature and to other arts besides music, will prejudice in his favour all those who love a versatile and spendthrift nature, but none the less it savours of a dissipation of energy which a man who is convinced of a definite vocation cannot afford freely to indulge. Musical opinion, while it has grossly under-estimated Liszt's capacity, has not been unjust in its stubborn refusal to consecrate his name. He has not convinced it, not even that part of it half ready to be convinced.

The closing words of Matthew Arnold's essay on Heine come pat to the mind, and although we gladly credit the musician with an entire freedom from that pettiness and malice which distinguished the man-of-letters, they are pertinent enough to be inserted here:

> He had all the culture of Germany. In his head fermented all the ideas of modern Europe. And what have we got from Heine? A half result for want of moral balance and of nobleness of soul and character. That is what I say. There is so much power, so many seem able to run well, so many give promise of running well, so few reach the goal, so few are chosen. Many are called, few chosen.

ON TEMPERING THE WIND TO THE SHORN LAMB

By Alexander Brent-Smith

Most people believe that the saying 'God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb' is a Biblical truth. They do greatly err. It is not from Holy Writ, the author being that unholy (natheless Reverend) writer, Laurence Sterne. Neither is it true, because lambs are rarely shorn, and are not therefore the particular object of providential treatment. But though it is neither Biblical nor true, it suggests the kindly counsel that we must deal gently and sympathetically with the young.

In the world of music there are, for every grown-up person, a hundred who are young and a thousand who are very, very young. In actual years, these youngsters range from seven to seventy. With those tender souls then we must deal kindly and sympathetically.

The first thing to remember in dealing with the young of all ages, if we wish to be kind and sympathetic, is that the food which is good for grown-ups may be unpleasant and even injurious to children. Now the grown-ups in music find, quite naturally, that the diet of Bach is very wholesome, and because they find it wholesome they think that the young should find it wholesome too. Reasoning on this wise, they produce volumes of Bach-for-Beginners, full of the worst and dullest specimens of Bach's compositions that a cruel and conscientious collector could possibly get together. No doubt these little pieces, when played by a finished pianist, are quite attractive, but the beginner never makes them sound even remotely like music, and the result is that he gets a false and harmful idea of the great Johann Sebastian. Most reasonable and lively children loathe these little pieces, and turn with delight to Schumann's 'Album for the Young,' which contains many pieces which can be made to sound like music even by the beginner.

This same system, the system of feeding the young on beef instead of upon milk, obtains among the musically young in the world at large. It is known as educating the masses. I have known flocks of villagers, with no education musically, inveigled into a sacred concert of which the principal fare was Palestrina, the rest of the programme being devoted to Byrd and Tallis. As I watched this assembly of innocents gazing with astonishment at the efforts of the singers to keep their parts, I could not help wondering what they made of it all, and what they really said at home when out of earshot of the performers and the concert-promoters.

No one doubts the greatness of Byrd, Tallis, and Palestrina, but are they really the most suitable food for infants? Is there any disgrace in performing simple quartets like Mendelssohn's 'O come, every one that thirsteth' or Farrant's 'Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake'? Is there no virtue in anyone except Byrd? Are the simple melodies of Handel, Schubert, and Beethoven so shameful that they should be kept a secret from the ears of innocent childhood? Doubtless the music of Palestrina and Tallis is most purifying to the soul, but have not Beethoven and Handel any virtues whatsoever? The waters of Abana and Pharpar may not indeed be as healing as the waters of Jordan, but have they not the power at least to quench the traveller's thirst?

If we think back into the days of our childhood, shall we not find that we loved many things which we now have put away as being childish things?

I am told that a distinguished man, as a child, loved the 'March of the Troubadours' above all the treasures of music, and he has lived to become a Professor of Music. But the educationists pay no heed to the feelings and limitations of their audiences. They give them a fine sample of Bach, and if that is not appreciated, they dose them with Palestrina, very much after the manner of two British workmen attempting to explain the way to a Frenchman: 'Do he understand what you says?' asks No. 1. 'No,' replies No. 2. 'Well,' says No. 1, 'heave half a brick at him.'

Every one admits that the education of the masses is an admirable thing, but is this education conducted upon the right lines? What are the masses being educated for? For the appreciation of Handel? Certainly not. For the appreciation of Beethoven? I don't think so. For the appreciation of Mendelssohn? The idea is ridiculous. Then what are they being educated for? For the appreciation of a certain type of music which the educator has only learnt to appreciate after years and years of study. It is as obviously foolish as attempting to teach English by reading 'The Amazing Marriage' to an audience which has never advanced beyond the stage of pot-hooks and hangers.

In attempting to educate, we must put ourselves into sympathy with the pupil, and we must remember that all men are not made alike, and that some men are physically and mentally incapable of appreciating anything but the most obvious rhythms and melodies, though the tastes, even of such unmusical people, may be improved to a certain extent. Also we must remember that really appreciative listeners do not always wish to soar into those regions where it is an effort even to exist; they are human, and like to move about in safe and pleasant ways. Thus it is probable that an audience of cultivated musicians who do really love Brahms's E minor Symphony would not applaud it so enthusiastically as they would Mr. Plunket Greene singing 'Trottin' to the fair.' Not to appreciate the former is a misfortune, not to appreciate the latter is probably conceit.

Is it not better that a man who has never heard anything but the poorest and most vulgar of songs should experience the wholesome delight of hearing one of Schubert or Stanford? That a man who has never thought of dance-music except in terms of American Jazz, should hear the exquisitely varied rhythms and harmonies to be found in the dances of Schubert and of Brahms? That a man who has developed a taste for Irish whiskey should have an opportunity of developing a taste for Handel's Largo? It is doubtless a misfortune for the unmusical (among whom we should have to number Lord Tennyson and Dr. Samuel Johnson) that they cannot appreciate the higher flights of music, but if they can appreciate the simple works of really great men, let them be given the simple works, and let the Scribes and Pharisees remember that to be appreciated by the populace reflects no discredit upon a composer.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

My criticism of the Leeds Festival Choir's performance at Queen's Hall has been taken in very bad part. An interview with Mr. C. F. Haigh, the Choir Secretary, appeared in the Yorkshire Post, headed 'A Vigorous Leeds Retort,' and a letter from the same gentleman will be found in the correspondence pages of this journal. I have read both fulminations carefully, and have also gone over my December article; as a result I see no cause to take back a word. For Mr. Haigh's 'vigorous retort' and somewhat abusive letter contain no real answer to my criticism. On the contrary, the excuses he puts forward imply agreement with it. One of these excuses—lack of proper rehearsal at Queen's Hall—I mentioned myself as a reason for the choir's failure to reproduce its Leeds form. I spoke also of the fatigue due to the early morning start, the journey, and the strenuous time the choir spent in London prior to the concert. But Mr. Haigh will not admit that the choir was affected by these things:

> The journey [he says, in the Yorkshire Post interview] had nothing to do with it. . . . As to the choir being tired, I have never heard more brilliant singing than in the Ninth Symphony.

Nor have I, and in my article I said so, in almost those very words. But everybody who has had much to do with any kind of musical performance knows that a chorus or orchestra is more likely to show its fatigue in music of a delicate, subtle character than in loud, brilliant work, where the difficulties are mainly physical and of the type that can be overcome under the stimulus of excitement. In music so intimate, and so poetic (in a curiously remote way), as that of the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn,' and in the delicate tip-toe passages of the Scherzo of Holst's Symphony, the difficulties are not physical but psychical. The call is not for brilliance, power, or physical endurance, but for alertness, control, and imagination—sensitive qualities that at once lose their fine edge under fatigue. Mr. Haigh is not wise in contending that the singers were none the worse for their long day and railway journey. The obvious answer is that no soloist would expect to be in good form at an evening concert after a strenuous day that began long before sunrise. (As I pointed out last month, one of the contingents of the choir left home between four and five a.m. Even when due allowance is made for the stimulus that the members of a big choir feel when warmed up and at work, it is only reasonable to suppose that, individually, they were a good bit below their best. Art is so much a matter of nerves and temperament that Mr. Haigh pays his choir a very poor compliment when he claims that its singing was not adversely affected by conditions that would take the bloom off any soloist who was more than a mere well-made machine. If a singer tells me that he can rise at four, travel in a crowded carriage from Yorkshire to London, spend the afternoon making gramophone records, and still be at his best in difficult work in the evening, I should be ready to admit that he had lungs of leather, a forehead of brass, and the constitution of an ox. But I should have doubts about his equipment on the artistic and temperamental side. However, I doubt very much if any of the members will agree with Mr. Haigh that they were all as fresh as paint. So I hope they will not accuse me of describing them as leather-lunged and brazen-browed.

Mr. Haigh's letter gives me little to answer, because (as I said above) it tacitly admits that my criticism of the Queen's Hall performance had foundation. But when he points out that it is 'foolish' to compare the Queen's Hall performance with that at Leeds, he forgets that I began my article by saying that I could make no such comparisons, as I had not been present at the Leeds Festival. I concerned myself only with the London performance, and I found fault with the singing on certain grounds which were explicitly set forth. By making excuses for the choir—lack of rehearsals at Queen's Hall, different constitution of the orchestra, reduction of the choir to a mere two hundred and fifty (!), &c—Mr. Haigh tacitly agrees with those who hold that the performance was not so good as that at Leeds. But a critic's concern is with the actual performance, not with all sorts of extenuating circumstances, though as a rule his sense of fairness will lead him to mention any vital ones that are known to him.

> If London is prepared to pay the cost of a visit of the full Festival Chorus, including that of travelling up the day before, and to provide the singers with an orchestra familiar with the works they are asked to sing, and, further, giving them an opportunity of rehearsing in the hall where they are to sing with the orchestra, I feel satisfied that the Leeds Festival Chorus will sustain the reputation which it at present has, and which 'Feste' and other Southern writers endeavour to whittle away.

The first part of this paragraph is practically a repetition of what I put forward in my article as a possible explanation of the shortcomings of the performance. But when Mr. Haigh accuses Southern writers of endeavouring to whittle away the reputation of Northern choirs he is (to put it frankly) talking sheer nonsense. One of the most damaging criticisms came from Mr. Ernest Newman, who certainly cannot be accused of bias in favour of Southern choralism. No; the boot is on the other leg. For many years past the best efforts of London choirs have been belittled by Southern critics who have made a fetish of Yorkshire choralism. No matter how well Southerners have sung, they were usually reminded that they had not the vigour of Yorkshire singers, and that, on the whole, though they might pass for London, they were a poor lot. We have never denied the vigour and enthusiasm, and, within certain obvious limits, the technical skill of Yorkshire choirs. But vigour and enthusiasm are only a part of a choir's equipment. Mr. Haigh says my criticism is prejudiced. It would be more to the point if he would bring forward some evidence in answer to it.

I quoted some views from critics of repute as to the choir's hard tone, lack of subtlety, and apparent inability to sing pianissimo, or even piano. Now it is significant that in all the reports I have seen of the Leeds Festival and of the Queen's Hall performance, I do not recall that a single writer praised the choir for beauty of tone, delicacy of nuance, or subtlety of expression. These, after all, are among the supreme tests of a choir, and when we find some critics complaining of the absence of such qualities, and the remainder significantly silent concerning them, we may reasonably assume that the choir concerned is lacking in those directions. Mr. Haigh no doubt has a stack of press cuttings at his elbow. If he will quote any evidence to the contrary from reputable critics, I will gladly give them publicity.

In the Yorkshire Post interview Mr. Haigh says:

> When we got to Queen's Hall at 1.30 to rehearse, we found the organ locked up, and nothing on the orchestra except a piano badly out of tune. Also the hall had been let to another body for a rehearsal that afternoon, so all that happened was that the chorus learned where their places were, and sang 'Jerusalem' and 'God save the King' to the accompaniment of the piano.

We shall all sympathise with the singers here, but one naturally points out that when a choir arranges to come to London to sing a difficult new work it should (if only for the sake of its reputation) stipulate for adequate rehearsal facilities. Moreover, the gramophone recording was not the result of a sudden whim. A choir doesn't stroll around, hit on a gramophone factory, and (adapting Mr. Wemmick's remark on a happy occasion), say 'Hullo! here's a gramophone factory! Let's go in and be recorded!'

The question naturally arises: Was the gramophone recording the cause of the sudden alteration of the rehearsal hour from the afternoon (at the R.A.M.) to the morning? This change could not have been made without Mr. Haigh's knowledge, and nobody knew better than he that the choir could rehearse only in the afternoon. His complaint on this score seems disingenuous.

Among the correspondence this matter has brought me is a long letter which I feel I must quote. It is private, but the writer says 'if any part of it is useful for shielding your "bloody head" you are welcome to use it.' As he does not wish to become embroiled, I respect his desire for anonymity, but I add that his views have weight as coming from one of the finest choral trainers in the country (he does not live in the the south, but on the other side of the Trent), and a distinguished musician as well. He did not hear the London performance, but he was at Leeds, whither he went 'humble-minded, with recollections of the glorious work before the war.' He says he got very few moments of real pleasure from the singing (I condense, but give as nearly as possible his exact words). Most of the climaxes in the B minor Mass were splendid, but as a whole that work was done indifferently. There was never a pianissimo, the soft singing was heavy, and there were some bad inaccuracies. In the Dvorák 'Stabat Mater' the standard was that of any ordinary country choral society. The Bax motets were 'really quite funny.' This matter is too important for mincing words, so I add that the writer blames Coates for this, on the ground that he did not understand the works and that he is not a choral conductor—with which latter point I agree. But all the fault was not with the conductor, and my correspondent truly says that for a Festival choir to be a minor third flat, as the Leeds choir was at one point, is decidedly unexpected. The Bax performances are summed up as 'a travesty.' The singing of the choir in the Holst Scherzo was > . . . a surprising feat. They romped through with great skill, ran away with their conductor, and sang it more quickly than one would have thought possible.

Apart from this, the singing of the Symphony showed the faults I myself ventured to point out:

> Page after page of pp was sung with a 'hefty Yorkshire forte' . . . no understanding of the words or appreciation of the beauty of the lines they were supposed to interpret . . . they could not have sung some of the strange concoctions of Handel's librettists with less feeling for English . . . the tenors nearly always jarred, the altos were sepulchral, the sopranos very often metallic . . . And yet the critics raved! —— said in the —— (before the event!) that this choir sang the B minor Mass better than any other choir in the world. They all assumed that because it was Yorkshire the singing was bound to be good. I thought: If all the fine points in choralism for which men like —— and —— are working are to be disregarded by newspaper critics who take famous choirs at their face-value and allow their judgment to be swayed by climaxes, all we have to do in order to attain eminence is to give our choirs their head and let them rip.

At the risk of falling out with some of my fellow-scribes I am bound to say that there is a good deal of ground for the writer's concluding sentences. Without a doubt critics as a body are less stringent than they should be in regard to the fundamentals of choralism. They readily—and rightly—haul choirs over the coals for bad rhythm, loss of pitch, and poor diction; not often enough do we find reference to such vital points as blend, nuance, and variety of tone-colour and power. At the close of the Queen's Hall performance that has led to so much pother I discussed some of the points of the singing with a London daily newspaper critic for whose opinions in general I have great respect. His only response was, 'Oh! my dear fellow, you are too exacting.' But the finest compliment we can pay a choir of world-wide reputation is to be exacting, and I maintain that until critics demand, on the interpretative side, as much from our premier choirs and choral conductors as they do from our best soloists, orchestras, and orchestral conductors, the standard of choralism will not get back to pre-war level, and the public will remain in its present complacent frame of mind—easily satisfied by any choir that has a big name and can produce a shattering fortissimo whenever it is called for (and often when it isn't).

Mention may be made of a striking example of this critical leniency. When the much-boomed Vatican Choir came to London, nobody denied that the absence of blend in the loud passages was appalling, owing to the forced tone of the boys and the shouting of the tenors. Yet only about three critics fell foul of the visitors on that score. (One of them, I remember, was Mr. Scholes, a Yorkshireman and a keen judge of choral singing). The rest implied that we must not expect Italian ideals of choral singing to be the same as ours. Nevertheless there are only two ways of producing the voice, one right, the other wrong. The critics, as one man, would have damned an Italian prima donna who discharged such top notes as these young Tuscans inflicted on us. Yet a soprano is a soprano all the world over, and although the sopranos in Central Africa may be allowed to scream (just as they may do other savage things, such as eating their political opponents), there is among civilised races pretty general agreement as to what constitutes rightly produced and musical tone. This standard applies even more to ensemble than to solo singing. Without it, a proper blend of tone—even exact intonation—is impossible, just as in an orchestra the whole beauty of the mass can be upset by a few over-blown or otherwise badly-handled instruments. To hear the rapturous expressions of the public over these Vatican yowlers and shouters one would imagine that ensemble was merely a matter of moving together and getting loud and soft at exactly the same time. If there were no more in it than that, choralism, chamber music, and orchestral playing would be as easy as shelling peas, instead of being among the most exacting (and most enjoyable) of tasks. There are scores of skilled choral trainers with high ideals scattered about the country, some of them in centres that (musically) are off the map. They look to the crack choirs and the critics for help in realising their ideals. Hence my outburst, which (incredible as it may appear to Mr. Haigh) is not based on anti-Yorkshire feeling. I commend to his consideration a temperate and sensible paragraph by 'H. T.' in the Yorkshire Post. The writer says that the Musical Times criticism of the London performance of Holst's 'Choral' Symphony 'is severe, but it will do the singers no harm if they will only take it to heart, instead of merely resenting it.'

A correspondent warns me that if I continue on my present course I shall need police protection when next I visit Yorkshire. Already, he says, I am losing all my friends in that part of the country. Not all, surely! I can think of a few who still retain their share of Yorkshire sportsmanship and liking for blunt, plain speech. To this remnant I say, in conclusion: (1) That I have heard most, if not all, of Yorkshire's crack choirs during the past twenty years, and, judging from the present Leeds body, I am convinced that there is a considerable drop from the pre-war standard; (2) Since the war I have heard at various competition gatherings about a hundred Yorkshire choirs of various types (male, female, mixed, and school, from small and largish centres, village, and town), and many hundreds of choirs of similar calibre in all parts of the country on both sides of the Tweed. As a result of this wide sampling I am left with a very clear impression that in every respect save mere numbers and weight Yorkshire, so far from being in front, is behind the best local choral centres elsewhere. With its unequalled resources and enthusiasm it ought easily to lead the country, and it will no doubt do so when the collective Yorkshire head returns to its normal size, and Yorkshire ideals in choral tone are concerned less with quantity than with quality, colour, and variety.

Occasional Notes

In the Canadian Forum appears an article by Fred Jacob, headed, 'Earthly Choirs,' in which the writer is at pains to belittle choral singing. He scoffs at the idea of Toronto folk thinking that 'the existence in their city of a large and successful choral society gives them an enviable eminence in the musical firmament.' He says they would be chastened if they went to cities where 'higher forms of music' are cultivated. 'They would find themselves in much the same position as the grower of prize cabbages who had wandered by mistake into a gathering of specialists in orchid and rose culture.' He adds that the attitude of these favoured cities towards choral singing is 'kind but condescending.'

This attitude, however, is no indictment of choral singing; it merely points to a deficiency on the part of the condescenders. The choral repertory includes a good proportion of the finest work of Bach, Handel, Brahms, Parry, Stanford, Elgar, and the great polyphonic schools, sacred and madrigalian, of England, Spain, Italy, France, and the Netherlands, and folk who are ignorant of it, or deaf to its beauty, have no cause for pride. Mr. Jacob's view that this field of music is no more than a cabbage patch merely shows his limitations. However, he kindly admits that choirs have a place, though he goes on to say that their place is in churches rather than in concert-halls. He overlooks the fact that such works as the B minor Mass, the 'Missa Solemnis,' the Elgar oratorios, and, indeed, most large-scale works, call for choral and orchestral resources, facilities for rehearsal, and convenient seating arrangements, that are rarely found even in the largest churches, and never in small ones. Moreover, the heavy cost of soloists and orchestra has to be met, and for this a collection in a church is usually a poor substitute for the box-office. These are the conditions in Great Britain, and we presume they are not very different across the Atlantic.

Mr. Jacob of course makes much of the usual threadbare objection to oratorio in the concert-room:

> Oratorios are the most incongruous of art-forms, if they can be called an art-form. In the concert-hall the tradition of their performance is unspeakably awkward and ugly. They are presented with a background of men in conventional evening dress and women in ghastly white that accentuates any natural homeliness they may possess and disguises the possibility of beauty.

But what's the matter with these costumes? If orchestral players may do their job in 'conventional evening dress,' why mayn't choralists? As to the women in 'ghastly white,' if that colour 'accentuates the wearer's natural homeliness' and makes it impossible for a woman to look beautiful, why do brides allow themselves to be decked in white? There are not many more pleasing indoor spectacles than the white-clad ranks of a choral society. Presumably Mr. Jacob would have them all turn up in any colour they like, the result being a blinding patchwork of clashing hues.

However, the soloists are his chief aversion:

> In the foreground the soloists are grouped. Before you stands St. Paul or Elijah, clad in modern 'soup-and-fish,' while angels and virgins wear dazzling creations—a jarring spot of flame in the conventional colour scheme.

But for the life of us we cannot see anything more incongruous in a singer in evening dress impersonating the Prophet, than in another similarly clad representing the young lover in a song-cycle. In fact, as the great majority of songs call for characterisation, Mr. Jacob's objection might quite well be applied to solo singers as a body. Of course, the costume doesn't matter a rap to a hearer with imagination. Even on the stage it matters little, as was shown in the recent revival of 'Hamlet' in modern dress. People who went prepared to scoff found themselves (the first shock over) held by the poetry and drama as they had never been held in a 'realistic' production. The conventionalist is not the Elijah in evening dress, but the prosaic Jacob in front, who, unable to imagine a Prophet, must needs be helped by the figure of a man in flowing garb, with beard. Mr. Jacob clearly attends the wrong place of entertainment. He is cut out for the cinema, where everything shall be made clear to him by means of 'close-ups,' and elucidatory texts in doubtful English. After a longish course of the 'movies,' he will be ripe for the opera, where his imagination will be called on for a little gentle exercise at times. In due season he may come back to the concert-hall and hear a 'soup-and-fish' clad man singing (say) the 'Erl-King.' If he can sit through it without protesting that the singer is representing all the characters (though not rightly clad for one of them) and that there is no horse, he may consider himself well on the way to making good his natural deficiencies.

Mr. Jacob admits that choirs may be of service in small centres, to which sphere, apparently, he would confine them:

> In the nature of things, secular choral societies belong to small cities and towns. In communities where musicians who rank above the mediocre are scarce, and where there is not sufficient money to bring in high-priced artists, they can, at least, organize acceptable choirs. A capable leader will weld indifferent material into a fairly acceptable whole, and it proves an effective centre for musical culture in the town. To choral singing must be given the credit of having done more than anything else to bring the mass of Canadians into touch with the better forms of music. I suppose that choirs and community singing may be ranked as the strongest forces in the fight against the execrable influence of American jazz. For what it has done to further the cause of art, let all praise be accorded to choral music.

It seems to us that a form of musical activity that, on Mr. Jacob's admission, has done so much for music in Canada deserves something better than the curmudgeonly attitude he shows elsewhere in his article. Even after having said the above, he adds (lest the choral reader should be unduly puffed up) :

> But don't let us run away with the notion that a choir can ever be the last word in achievement of any so-called musical centre.

Not many choralists make that mistake, we think. Their periodical concerts almost invariably bring them into touch with music that would otherwise be outside their experience. At many such concerts there are first-rate instrumental solos, often chamber music items, and in cases where the orchestra and chorus join forces in a big work, an orchestral item is often included as well. Even if the member of a choir went through life on a diet of fine choral music only, he would be spiritually and artistically not ill-nourished. He might go further, and fare much worse. And Mr. Jacob's warning applies equally to other musicians. Don't we know the fiddler who never sees farther than the bridge of his instrument (which is not much beyond the bridge of his nose) ; the pianist with nothing more than a narrow range of solos and teaching pieces ; the organist whose horizon is bounded by the curtains of his organ-loft ; and the concert- and opera-goer with an ear (or eye) for no performer other than a 'star'?

Mr. Jacob has other grievances against the choir. He has discovered that 'it lacks the variety of voices to be found in the orchestra.' Terrible ! But a string quartet shows the same lamentable deficiency, yet nobody complains—indeed, some of us are held by the string quartet for that very reason, long after the richness of the orchestra has begun to cloy. More :

> A choir is not as perfect a medium as an orchestra for expressing the personality of a conductor.

Worse and worse ! Still, a choir does something not unimportant if it expresses the personality of the composer.

> I do not know whether a musician of genius could become a prima donna conductor in choral music, like so many of his orchestral brothers. Perhaps he could if he thought it worth while.

But we hope he won't. And if every prima donna orchestral conductor disappeared, or became a reformed character, there would be few tears shed by musicians. Only here and there a 'star' worshipper (among them, no doubt, Mr. Jacob) would make his moan.

Mr. Jacob ends by making some captious references to the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir. Here is his crowning complaint :

> There is another test, and it is one that the Mendelssohn Choir has not met successfully. To me it seems the most vital test of all. All forms of interpretative artistic activity ought to lead to creative activity. If a musical centre turns out a number of notable pianists, it should sooner or later produce a few composers, inspired by the other activity. But the career of the Mendelssohn Choir has been lamentably sterile. In more than a generation it has given no impetus to creative activity in our midst. Perhaps the existence of the choir moved Dr. A. S. Vogt to write his charming 'Indian Lullaby,' but other composers of whose works the chorus has given the initial performance found their incentive elsewhere—I mean composers like Dr. Healey Willan and Dr. Ernest MacMillan. The great failure of the Mendelssohn Choir has been as an inspiration to creative work. It has not stirred the vital spark in a native composer.

This is surely charging a choir with undue responsibility ! A choir's job is to sing. It has no concern with creative activity beyond encouraging it by performance. Moreover, musical history does not support Mr. Jacob's theory. Were Bach's immense choral works the result of stimulus by a big, or even efficient, choir? We know that the reverse was the case. He had a mere handful of singers, and those not of the best. How much had Beethoven to do with choralism immediately before writing the 'Missa Solemnis' or the Ninth Symphony? How much choral activity, apart from that in a few churches, was there in England when Handel wrote his string of oratorios? If Mr. Jacob is logical he will proceed to attack the New York Metropolitan Opera House because, after all the years it has been at work, and in spite of the vast sums of money it has spent, it has produced no American opera composer. Similarly, what has Chicago got to show in the way of orchestral composition as an outcome of the work done by Stock and his predecessors? No ; Mr. Jacob must try again. If he can find no more solid objections to choralism than those in the Forum article, Canadian choirs can go ahead. They need not worry about a stray Jeremiah—especially if his name happens to be Jacob.

The appointment of Dr. Henry G. Ley to be Precentor and Organist of Eton is a matter for general congratulation. Of Dr. Ley's playing and other musical qualifications for the post it is superfluous to speak. Hardly less important, however, is his fitness on the ground of personality. His happy, genial disposition may be depended on to make a ready appeal to the youth of Eton. He begins his duties shortly after Easter. His predecessor, Mr. Basil Johnson, retires after holding the post since 1914. That Mr. Johnson has done notable work in laying the foundations of sound musical taste among his charges is shown in the syllabus of the House Competitions that took place on December 14. The eighty pieces chosen by the representatives of the nineteen competing houses are all good, the composers most drawn upon being Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, and Chopin. The bulk of the events were pianoforte solos, of course, but there were also a fair number of violinists, one flautist, three organists, one 'cellist, one clarinettist, one violist, and some ensemble duos and trios. We like the enterprise of College B, whose entrants chose the Allegretto of Beethoven's seventh Symphony, arranged for two pianofortes (eight hands), a duet for viola and 'cello (Andante by Kreuz and a Bach Gavotte), and a pianoforte solo (Chopin's Fantasia in F minor), the two 'reserves' choosing pianoforte solos—Rachmaninov's 'Melody' in E and Schumann's 'Warum.' (The 'reserves' are called on in the event of a tie between two houses, or the unavoidable absence of entrants proper.) The whole syllabus shows a standard of taste and accomplishment undreamt of not many years ago. There are few more hopeful features in the musical life of the country to-day than the rôle now played in public schools by music of the best type.

On the vocal side the 'broken voice' is of course an obstacle, but good work is done. We have read with interest and enjoyment the Eton College Chronicle account of the singing competitions held in November. The classes were for bass soloists and quartets, and, as in the instrumental contests, only the best was good enough :

> The choice of songs this year was especially interesting. Brahms was popular; the French carol was unusual; and there were two 'basso profundo' songs from 'The Magic Flute,' which showed that there were still some deep and powerful voices in the school.

We like the little touches of the embryo critic in the report. Thus, the singer of the French carol produced 'a firm, soft tone, making every word clear.' The third place in the solo class was shared by two aspirants 'who both sang as if they were well acquainted with the rules of the game, though their voices lacked volume of sound.' In the quartet class,' some had not completely mastered the art of singing in tune.' One of the winning party apparently has an accommodating voice, for we read that 'the treble was extremely good, although officially a tenor according to the Musical Society register.' In regard to another quartet, we are told, 'the audience noticed that it possessed an extremely good treble.' The audience had its views on interpretation, too, for the chronicler says that the judge 'did not tell us which of the two renderings of "Phyllis" he preferred—a question which was much discussed in the audience.' Capital! It makes us wish we could hear the rival Phyllises, and take a show of hands on them.

In the Sackbut for December appears the first instalment of a remarkably thorough and instructive piece of work—'A General Index of Modern Musical Literature in the English Language, including periodicals, for the years 1915-1925,' by Eric Blom. It will be completed in about eight issues of the Sackbut, and in book form should prove to be of very great value to writers, lecturers, teachers, and keen musicians generally.

We have received for notice the first number of a new monthly—the Dance Musician. It may count on the best wishes of musicians so long as it sticks to No. 3 of the aims set forth by the Editor :

> To help in the movement to raise the artistic standard of modern dance music, and to improve the social and professional standing of the players.

We know nothing about the second of these points, but, like most of our readers, we are painfully aware of the need for an improvement in modern dance music. We suggest, however, that the way of improvement should be along the lines of original composition, not, as is too often the case, by a system of petty larceny. We raise this question because of an article in the Dance Musician headed 'Squashed! Not quite : Classical Melodies in the Ball-room.' The writer, who signs himself 'B.' sets out to defend the stealing of other men's brains—though naturally he doesn't give it so crude a description. He describes it as 'The use of classical melodies in modern dance music,' a euphemism which reminds us of Ancient Pistol. Did the rascal steal? No! 'A fico for the phrase! Convey the wise it call.' The Dance Musician writer brings forward some elaborate excuses for 'conveying' other composers' work, but all are alike feeble. His first plea is that 'the great composers themselves had no highfalutin' notions as to the sacred nature of their works. They were, the majority of them, kindly, broad-minded folk'—the logical conclusion being that the laws of property are suspended in proportion to the kind-heartedness of the victim. The real reason, of course, is that the composers have been dead so long that copyright does not exist. Let 'B.' try his hand at 'conveying' tunes from contemporary composers, however 'kindly and broad-minded' they may be! Nobody objects to quotation, or even to arrangements of classical excerpts, provided they are issued honestly as such. But what would be said of a writer of fiction who lifted stories word for word from (say) Sterne, Scott, or Dickens, incorporated them in his own work, and published the result with his name on the title-page as author? No words would be minced in such a case, and we do not propose to mince them in discussing the musical parallel.

'B.'s' second reason is even more naive :

> Secondly, I see no earthly reason why intelligent and refined people who extract pure delight from beautiful melody, should be expected to dance to commonplace drivel.

Nor do we. But the remedy is obvious. The business of dance-music composers is to compose dance music. If they can achieve nothing better than what one of themselves describes as 'commonplace drivel' they should take up some other form of industry. Then follows this humbug :

> A beautiful melody makes anyone who hears it cleaner and better in soul, and no matter how, when, or where it is played, it cannot fail to do good, and what is more, its surroundings cannot degrade it.

However, some of these 'composers' admit that there are limits :

> It is very wrong, and shows lack of taste, to use certain melodies of a sacred nature, also to take a piece at random out of a great art work is an abominable thing. But what may be termed the classics of the romantic school, more especially those simple in form and construction, such as the smaller works of Chopin, Liszt, Schubert, or Schumann, can be used without mutilation or loss of beauty.

And he mentions as an example his own 'Love's Dream' :

> In this I have simply used the world-famous 'Liebestraume' of Liszt and the C minor Prelude of Chopin, retaining all the original harmonies. . . . Again, in 'Elegy' Valse I have been able to reproduce in its entirety a world-famous classic, and I am unashamed, for I feel that the haunting beauty of the thing will do good wherever it is heard.

This is all very well, but whose name appears on the title-page—that of Liszt, Chopin, and the composer of the 'world-famous classic,' or that of this dance-music 'composer'? The repetition of the idea of the stolen music 'doing good wherever it is heard' is nauseating. The melodies used in this way are always of the most hackneyed type, and may be heard at almost any hour of the day or night in the concert-room, the cinema, the restaurant, on the domestic pianoforte, and viâ gramophone and wireless. If 'B.' and his like want to justify their easy-going methods of boiling the pot, let them do some research work and make use of fine tunes that may have been overlooked by others. To appropriate groups of familiar pianoforte classics, tack them together, and sell the result as one's own work, is a kind of activity that cannot be defended. However, let us be thankful that 'B.' has 'retained all the original harmonies.' If his skill in harmony is no greater than that of most of his colleagues, he has the best of reasons for leaving well alone.

We gather from one of the advertisement pages that 'B.' is Mr. Emile J. Bennet, F.R.S.A., gold medallist, &c., who announces himself, without a qualm, as 'composer' of the 'Love's Dream' mentioned above. He is also responsible for 'the famous Moody Valses.' What is a 'Moody Valse'? The answer is given in an article called 'Progress':

> The introduction of emotional music in the ball-room, notably a number of 'Moody Valses,' mostly of a sombre character, marks a further development in the right direction. These valses take the dancers through a series of emotional states, thus enhancing the enjoyment of the brighter fox-trots and one-steps. Though called 'Moody,' the new valses cannot be said to produce depression, but they certainly do bring about a pleasant state of melancholy, much appreciated by the intelligent dancers of to-day. So far the melodies used in the valses have been drawn from the great classics, and the original harmonies retained. As music, therefore, these numbers must rank higher than much of the present-day ball-room music.

The vision of the intelligent dancers of to-day footing it in a pleasant state of melancholy is amusing. As the melodies are drawn from the great classics, and so are guaranteed to make them cleaner and better in soul, besides taking them through a series of emotional states, it is evident that if we want good value for our shilling we must frequent the local Palais de Danse.

In wishing our new contemporary all success we refrain from suggesting that its influence should be used against the kind of thing discussed above, for we observe that the composer, or, rather, the compiler of 'Love's Dream,' &c., and other moody concoctions, happens to be the Editor.

IN MEMORIAM AGNES ZIMMERMANN: PIANIST AND COMPOSER, 1847-1925

By Lady Arbuthnot

To the majority of musicians and music-lovers of the present day the mention of Agnes Zimmermann would chiefly recall her well-known editions of the works of Mozart and Schumann and the Sonatas of Beethoven—classics to which she brought stores of accumulated knowledge and the most painstaking accuracy. In the musical world of the 'seventies, 'eighties, and 'nineties, Agnes Zimmermann occupied a central place among artists. She was a familiar figure at the Saturday and Monday 'Pops' in St. James's Hall, both as soloist and in collaboration with those masters among instrumentalists, Joachim, Madame Norman-Néruda (Lady Hallé), Ludwig Straus, Piatti, and others. In all the 'musical matinées' and fashionable concerts of those days Agnes Zimmermann took part. She also visited Leipsic, Hamburg, Berlin, Brussels, and Frankfort, often in conjunction with Dr. Joachim. At the Hallé concerts at Manchester, Agnes Zimmermann was a frequent and welcome visitor, and also at the great English provincial towns, at Edinburgh and Glasgow, at Hereford and Norwich Festivals, and on tour with the Shinner Quartet and other combinations. Lectures by Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland, at Leighton House, and Mr. Charles Williams elsewhere, were illustrated by her scholarly interpretations of selected themes. At a dinner given during the Jubilee rejoicings, in 1897, by a hundred representative women to a hundred well-known men, Agnes Zimmermann represented music. In 1894, she was one of the performers at an evening party in the Grafton Galleries, given in honour of G. F. Watts and Joachim, and in 1904 she was on the committee for the reception given to Joachim to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of his début in England. Though Miss Zimmermann's public career was a good deal interrupted for eighteen years by her devoted attention to Louisa Lady Goldsmid, whose home she shared after the death of Sir Francis Goldsmid, she never lost interest in her art, and continued to give her annual recitals for several years in succesion, with Herr von Zur-Mühlen. After the death of Lady Goldsmid, Miss Zimmermann lived first in Green Street, and afterwards in Devonshire Street, where she gathered round her old and new musical friends, her 'Wednesdays' and annual musical parties keeping her in touch with younger artists, whom she helped to bring to notice. One of her greatest pleasures was to play for the students in the Working Women's College in Fitzroy Square, where she rejoiced in giving of her best to a singularly receptive audience. After such a concert in 1911, one of the audience wrote:

> The supreme treat of the evening was of course the playing of Miss Zimmermann, whose greatly-honoured name means so much in the memories of concert-goers who were young with her in the 'eighties. We well remember sitting expectantly for an hour on the stairs of the old orchestral entrance to St. James's Hall, even before that decade, and one special occasion, when Miss Zimmermann presented her own scholarly third Sonata for pianoforte and violin, in the first performance of which the composer had the assistance of Madame Norman-Néruda, is marked with a white stone in our student life.

For many years before her death Agnes Zimmermann's sight was failing, and latterly she had depended on her marvellous memory for her répertoire. By the help of special glasses she could look up passages, and even occasionally 'spell out' new works, but she was unable to join in any concerted music, in which at one time she had so much excelled. She was a constant attendant at the Royal Philharmonic Society concerts, being a Member of that Society; also, as a Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music, she took a great interest in the Academy's concerts and other performances. During the centenary celebration of the R.A.M., in 1922, she was present at the crowded reception at Queen's Hall, and at many of the concerts given during the week. One of her compositions was played at a performance of works by former students. Among her special treasures was a fan, decorated on either side by painters or musicians, and bearing the signatures of Brahms, Rubinstein, Clara Schumann, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, Joachim, Piatti, and others; also an album with sketches, letters, and inscriptions by famous men and women—a 'nonsense flower,' Personia Lacrymosa, by Edward Lear; the whole of 'Abt Vögler,' transcribed by Robert Browning; a drawing of Rubinstein, by Alma Tadema, on a programme; autographs of Lord Herschel, Max Müller, Madame Schumann, G. F. Watts, Stephen Heller, Moscheles (Leipsic, 1865); verses written on the music-room at Rendcomb by Sir Thomas Erskine May; J. Joachim 'In remembrance of our beautiful evening at dear Macfarren's,' 1868, and again in 1881; a sketch by Leighton and another by Miss Mary Anne North; Stockhausen, Jadassohn, Anton Rubinstein, 1886, Hans von Bülow, Sgambati and Sarasate, 1879, at Frankfort. The fan and album are bequeathed by Miss Zimmermnan to the Royal Society of Musicians, of which she was a member; her library of music and MS. compositions to the Royal Academy of Music.

Miss Zimmermann had a genius for friendship, but with strongly marked likes and dislikes. Her memory was never-failing, and her talk was animated and pointed with apposite stories and reminiscences. Her charities were innumerable, and though she lived and died a devout Roman Catholic she never allowed religious differences to interfere with her sympathies, and numbered among her circle of friends members of the Anglican and Jewish Churches. She will be greatly missed by those intimate friends who survive her. In 1924, at her annual musical afternoon, she played with wonderful insight and tenderness of feeling, and it was remarked to the present writer by Dame Millicent Fawcett and Miss Garrett that they had never heard her play more beautifully or with more depth of feeling. Many friends were present at the Requiem Mass at St. James's, Spanish Place, on November 18, the Philharmonic Society being represented by Mr. J. Mewburn Levien.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Robert Schumann, his Life and Work.' By Herbert Bedford.

'François Liszt.' By Frederick Corder.

'Richard Wagner as he lived.' By William Wallace.

[Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.* each.]

These books are the first three of a series entitled 'Masters of Music.' They make an admirable opening batch, but one ventures to hope that in their successors more space will be given to the musical side of the subject. The need to-day seems to be for condensed biography (with ample bibliography and other references for readers who wish to follow up any particular side of the composer's life) and a general survey of the composer's work, with, in the case of the older classics, an attempt to re-assess their music from the standpoint of to-day.

The three authors work on somewhat different lines. Mr. Bedford gives us a plain tale, with plenty of short quotations from Schumann's letters. His book has the advantage of being able to draw on the recently issued work of Niecks. In his opening chapter he gives a sketch of the Romantic movement that seems to contain an unnecessarily large proportion of geography and political history. There is also an ingeniously constructed Chronological Table showing the overlapping of the lives of musicians, poets, and painters, from 1684 to 1856, the date of Schumann's death. For 'poets' we should read 'writers,' for Mr. Bedford has wisely not overlooked some men who influenced contemporary thought, through their prose rather than their poetry—e.g., Samuel Johnson, Voltaire, and Rousseau. Indeed, room should have been found for a few purely prose writers and novelists. It seems to be agreed, for example, that hardly any English writer has exerted more influence on novelists (and therefore on readers, including musicians), both English and Continental, than Sterne; and his influence is still far from exhausted. In fact, there is room for a monograph on the part literature has played in regard to the work of the great composers—not in connection with such obvious and often superficial details as programme bases, but in the matters of general mood and style.

Mr. Bedford is a great hand at tables. He gives a very valuable one, wherein the chief works of Schumann are presented in chronological order opposite important contemporary musical works by other composers. This is highly suggestive. For example, the fact that the 'Papillons' appeared in the same year as the first book of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without Words,' sets the reader speculating as to why one of the two works is to-day so much more alive than the other. When we have got the answer we shall have done a useful bit of criticism in the matter of style.

Mr. Bedford is a little too prone to apologise for writing the unpleasant truth, e.g.:

> It is annoying to have to face so frequently this disappointing side of Schumann's character [his begging and borrowing].

But biographical haloes are no longer the wear. We want to know our composers, partly for the human interest, and even more for the full understanding of their music. Their faults, no less than their virtues, influenced their work, and, oddly, sometimes the excellence in the music has its source in the weakness of the composer, and vice versâ. So let us have real portraits, 'warts and all'

One need go no farther than Mr. Corder's prefatory notes in order to see that his pen has lost little, if any, of its old pungency and life. He is well qualified to write of Liszt, having (as most of us must have) a warm admiration for that brilliant and generous soul. He has the advantage, too, of personal acquaintance with many musicians, here and on the Continent, who heard Liszt play at various periods of his career. We thus get as near as possible to first-hand knowledge on some points. For example, at least one life of Liszt says that the pianist was wont to disfigure Beethoven's Sonatas by adding decorations. Mr. Corder is able to show, from the evidence of Liszt's hearers and pupils, that > . . . Beethoven was the one composer towards whom any irreverent alteration was to him unthinkable. It was the same in his teaching; on no account would he permit the slightest deviation from the text, or freedom in the reading.

Mr. Corder interpolates some very interesting views of his own on various subjects—e.g., extemporisation, a gift which, delightful as it is, he regards as overrated. A good many musicians will agree with him when he says:

> Far more really wonderful, because making more complex demands on the brain, is the power attained by a few musicians—Liszt among them—of reading at sight a difficult orchestral score, and translating it at the same time into pianoforte form, so that it will fit the hands. Marvellous examples of this feat have been witnessed by the present writer, and it would appear to be the very highest effort the human mind can attain to—even higher than those powers of instantaneous calculation exhibited by Bidder and others.

He gives examples of Liszt's marvellous skill and readiness, the most wonderful being, perhaps, a feat achieved when he was only eleven years old. On the authority of Ries, we are told that when the youthful Liszt was presented to Beethoven, the latter, in no good temper, asked what he could play. 'Can you play this, for instance?'—and Beethoven gave out the subject of the five-voiced C sharp minor Fugue in the 'Forty-eight.' The boy was nettled. Yes; he could play it. In what key would Beethoven like it? Whereat the great man, beginning to sit up and take notice, suggested D minor. The first page correctly transposed, Beethoven said, 'Now in E minor,' and the boy promptly modulated to the new key, and went on with the Fugue, unperturbed.

Mr. Corder says that, though the feat seems incredible, he has known two or three students who could manage it. 'But [he adds, drily] not at the age of eleven.'

Liszt presents special difficulties to those who would compile a complete list of his works. Opus numbers were carelessly applied—there are two Opp. 1 and 2, and no Op. 10, and the numbering was dropped at 13; many works were re-written, and the revised version issued from a different publisher, and so forth. Mr. Corder makes a gallant attempt, but even he has come to grief in regard to the organ works and transcriptions—a more important side of Liszt's output than is generally known. The Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H is omitted from the organ works, but among the transcriptions for organ is 'Bach Fugue on B A C H.' I have recently had occasion to turn up all Liszt's work in this connection, but found no such transcription. Omitted also are the picturesque 'Evocation in the Sistine Chapel' and the 'Weinen, Klagen' Variations. The latter seems to have been published also as a pianoforte solo, but it does not appear in the list. The worst mistake, however, is the description of the magnificent 'Fantasia and Fugue on "Ad nos,"' as an operatic transcription from Meyerbeer, whereas it is an original organ work on the Chorale from 'The Prophet,' and one of the greatest things in the organ repertory. Further, the list of transcriptions should have included several choruses from Bach's cantatas.

Mr. Wallace's title-page, 'Richard Wagner as he lived,' warns us there will be no whitewashing. 'Warts and all' is emphatically his motto, and if at times the warts seem to occupy him overmuch, he balances accounts by occasionally leaving the man and raising a pæan to the composer—even going to the length of calling him 'the greatest composer that the world has seen.' Here is a challenge that tempts a reviewer to turn aside and argue. (Another day, perhaps!) One point that emerges very clearly is that Wagner himself was largely responsible for most of the difficulties that beset him and his work. Mr. Newman's recent pronouncements in this connection are underlined by Mr. Wallace and backed up by instances. Wagner, like Berlioz, and to some extent Beethoven, was his own worst enemy. No composer blundered so persistently and inexcusably. His political meddlings alone would make a chapter, and, in fact, Mr. Wallace has such a chapter, 'The Revolutionary,' in which he gives a diverting picture of Wagner on the Kreuze Tower during the street fighting at Dresden.

Enthusiast as he is for Wagner's music, Mr. Wallace, like those of us who are less under the spell, finds him long-winded. Hear him on 'The Ring':

> The ultimate issue of 'The Ring' resolves itself into music and nothing else. Few are to be found among musicians who can tell what it is all about. Its music is too firmly established in the mind to be thrust aside now and then by pseudo-philosophy. Of Wagner we shall ever ask for music: what he talked about is mere wind.

Purists who demand that gigantic soporific without 'cuts' will part company with Mr. Wallace when he says:

> Of the music of 'The Ring' it is likely that the lenient critic would feel inclined to eliminate many an extraneous bar, and as these bars, to put the matter plainly, are associated with superfluous talk, it is clear that their omission would help on the business of the drama and the music most gratefully. It was not necessary that every character in 'The Ring' should be card-indexed and orchestrally-indexed, with stale recapitulations as the drama moved onwards, repeating much that the audience had already known and grasped. Wagner thought so much of himself as a poet—an assumption in later days derided by men of his own nationality—that he plumed himself on his everlasting readings of his own so-called poems. Some to-day rate these 'poems' no higher than doggerel built up of synonyms picked out of the German equivalent of Roget's 'Thesaurus.'

And the heretics among us who predict that Wagner's future lies on the concert-platform rather than on the stage find some backing here:

> Narrative and dialectics which occupy so much space cannot rightly be called 'action,' and the serious student of 'The Ring' confides the text to the study: the music to the concert-room. In the theatre the partnership is utter weariness.

These extracts show something of the liveliness of this book. Mr. Wallace's various and extraordinarily well-stocked mind has full fling, and the result reads more like a novel than a critical biography. Indeed, there is perhaps an over-anxiety to be interesting, at all costs. We seem to hear Mr. Wallace paraphrase a familiar slogan: 'Brighter Biography,' he murmurs, and touches off another verbal squib. Some of these we could spare—e.g., 'The differences [between Wagner and Minna] were "composed"; indeed, they were all that Wagner did compose at this time'; and there is a touch of effort in such recondite chapter-headings as 'The Ring and its Book,' 'Words without Song,' &c. But these are small complaints to make against a vivid piece of work that holds the reader in a way suggestive of fiction rather than of fact. A word of praise is due to the print, binding, and generally attractive form of the volumes.

H. G.

'Thoughts on Music': A Calendar Selected and Arranged by Hervey Elwes.

[Office of the Gramophone, Frith Street, W.]

A happy idea, well carried out. Mr. Elwes has selected daily quotations on music, mainly from recent books and current periodicals. The number and range of authors is remarkable, including not only practically all the best-known of contemporary musical critics, but also such writers as E. V. Lucas, Arnold Bennett, A. B. Walkley, &c. Some of the extracts are fairly lengthy, many filling a half-page. Occasionally a sequential order is observed for a page or so, with illuminating effect. Some birth and death anniversaries are noted—a feature that might well be developed. It ought not to be difficult to provide a personal reference for every day in the year, thus adding to the intimate appeal of the volume. We wish this delightful gift book had arrived in time for review in the December issue, before readers had chosen their Christmas presents. If it becomes a hardy annual (as we hope will be the case), it should appear a few weeks earlier. As the first book issued by the Gramophone, its tasteful appearance augurs well for its successors.

'Facts and Theories relating to Hebrew Music.' By Arthur M. Friedlander.

[Harold Reeves, 3*s*.]

It is natural that the great interest now shown in mediæval music (especially of the Church type) should extend to early Hebrew music. At a good moment, therefore, comes Mr. Friedlander's pamphlet—a reprint of a paper read at one of the meetings of the Royal Asiatic Society. A lecture on a subject of such magnitude must inevitably be of a highly-condensed nature, and, to be quite satisfactory, the printed form calls for some expansion. A good deal of matter can be assimilated in a short time when delivered orally, because the speaker invariably clarifies it with illuminating asides; moreover, in a musical subject, the illustrations are a help. If a new edition is called for, Mr. Friedlander would do well to amplify some of his arguments. Even in the limited space at his command, however, he makes out a strong case for his theory that certain early specimens of plainsong are derivatives of Synagogue music. Of the examples he gives, the quotations from the Cantillation of Zachariah II., 10, and the Ambrosian melody of the Te Deum are certainly very striking. The likeness appears to be too great for mere chance. His claim in regard to the Lamentation is less convincing, the similarity between the Cantillation and the Plainsong themes being mainly concerned with melodic features that, like certain folk-songs and tales, are now known to have been common to widely different races. Among other interesting illustrations is a reproduction of a photograph of a fragment of Hebrew music MS. discovered a few years ago near Cairo. This is believed to be the only example of Hebrew music containing neums. We hope Mr. Friedlander, who has long been recognised as an authority on the subject, will go ahead and develop the theories set forth in this valuable paper.

A useful addition to the series of twopenny pamphlets issued by the Church-Music Society is one by the Rev. A. Hastings Kelk on 'The Singing of the Psalms and Canticles to Anglican Chants.' It contains sixteen pages of good, practical advice. Only on two points do we feel disposed to part company with the author. Discussing the advisability of unison singing in villages and other centres where complete and balanced harmony is impossible, Mr. Kelk says that if the average choirman's prejudice against unison singing cannot be overcome by reasoning,

> . . . it is better to give way to it, as it is not worth while to offend an old and regular member of the choir. The offended member may even go so far as to leave the choir and give up coming to church, and, especially in the country where there is only one church within reach, we cannot afford to risk this for the sake of a change, however desirable in the abstract.

This is dangerous reasoning, and may easily lead to the intolerable position of 'an old and regular member of the choir' dominating the musical policy of the church. The other point that we regard as unsound is Mr. Kelk's suggestion that > . . . it is usually advisable to observe the continuity of the service by singing the Canticles to chants in the same keys as those used for the Psalms, or in keys closely related to them.

Ears to-day are accustomed to unprepared key-changes and contrasts, and it seems a pity not to take advantage of the fact in choosing chants, seeing that the Canticles and Psalms combined make up the bulk of the musical side of a simple parish church service. For example, a chant in E, sandwiched between two in C, provides a refreshing change, and there is nothing new in the idea, for Beethoven used this succession of keys frequently, not only for consecutive movements but also for subjects in the same movement. It is by attention to such details that dullness and monotony are avoided. We are glad to see Mr. Kelk protesting against > . . . the evil tradition of using doleful minor chants for the Nunc Dimittis, thus turning into a dirge this exquisite Hymn of Thanksgiving. It needs a single chant expressing a chastened joyfulness. It should begin softly, but should gradually swell to a joyful forte, culminating in a triumphant Gloria.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Music and its Creators.' By Neville d'Esterre. Pp. 216. George Allen & Unwin, 6*s*.

'Listening-in to Music.' By E. G. Porter. Pp. 128. Noel Douglas, cloth, 3*s*. 6*d*.; paper, 2*s*.

'Music as a Profession.' By Basil Hogarth. Pp. 49. Bosworth, 1*s*. 3*d*.

'The Welwyn Psalter.' Pointed for chanting to Anglican Chants in free rhythm, and edited by the Rev. W. E. Hardcastle. Curwen, 2*s*. 6*d*.

'Dont's for Choirmen.' By John Newton. Pp. 34. Cambridge: W. Heffer, 6*d*.

'The Psalter,' newly pointed. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 3*s*. 6*d*.; small size, 1*s*. 8*d*.

'The Rhythm of Song.' By C. F. Abdy Williams. Pp. 151. Methuen, 7*s*. 6*d*.

'Voice Training in Speech and Song.' By H. H. Hulbert. Pp. 99. University Tutorial Press, W. B. Clive, 2*s*. 3*d*.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

Several good recordings of the 'Siegfried Idyll' already exist—one by the Columbia Company. There is little point in adding to the number unless the latest is also indisputably the best. Perhaps I expected too much from the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Bruno Walter. At all events, the performance strikes me as being dull. It seems to be on the slow side, and certainly misses a good deal of the magic of the piece (two 12-in.).

From a recording point of view far better results are achieved in the 12-in. of Elgar's 'Empire March' and Moszkowski's 'Krakowiak,' played by the Wireless

Symphony Orchestra, under Percy Pitt. The Elgar comes off particularly well. Though not representing the composer at the top of his form, it is a spirited bit of work, and contains material and effects that could have come from no other hand. (By the way, the 'Krakowiak' is described in the Columbia list as a 'Russian Dance,' which is another injustice to Poland.)

The best orchestral record in the parcel, however, is the 12-in. of Frank Bridge's Poem No. 2, 'Richard Jefferies,' and a Christmas Dance, 'Sir Roger de Coverley,' played by the Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, conducted by the composer. Here are two thoroughly enjoyable pieces, full of life and colour, and admirably played and recorded. Sir Roger, in this up-to-date garb, ought to be welcome at many a musical evening during the current festivities.

It is a pleasure to hear again the London String Quartet. These players are far too little in the limelight so far as their own country is concerned. The other famous Quartets, that are so highly and justly acclaimed, have given us few records as good as the 12-in. of the L.S.Q.'s playing of Schubert's 'Satz' in C minor. It is one of the composer's most engaging works, played with fascinating delicacy, and recorded unusually well.

Albert Sammons is another example of a prophet who is less honoured in his own country than he deserves. Admirable is the reproduction of his performance of the Max Bruch Concerto, with Sir Hamilton Harty conducting. There is a tendency to belittle Bruch to-day, but some of his writing, especially for violin, is so effective that fiddlers may be counted on to keep his memory green. The G minor Concerto, in matter and manner, is exactly suited to so lyrical an artist as Sammons, and better violin playing and recording than we have here are not likely to be often heard (three 12-in.).

W. H. Squire is recorded in two attractive, well-contrasted solos—Elgar's 'Canto popolare' and Harty's 'Der Schmetterling.' He is better suited in the former, some of the rapid staccato work of the Harty piece being not quite clear. I note with due awe that Mr. Squire now joins our musical royalty as 'Britain's King of 'Cellists.' Isn't this kind of thing badly overdone? The old saw about good wine applies also to good artists.

Excellent vocal records are of Miriam Licette in the 'Willow Song' and 'Ave Maria,' from Verdi's 'Otello,' and Harold Williams in 'Gazing around,' from 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Confutatis maledictis,' from Verdi's 'Requiem' (both 12-in.). The latter is especially to be praised for his sustained and expressive style, with a musical quality all too rare in operatic records. In both these records, however, the orchestral part is not uniformly good; there are vague moments.

H.M.V.

Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony has been little heard in the concert-room of late, and it has never had the vogue of his other Symphonies. It shows him at his worst and best. Thematically there is much that is obvious and cheap, but its effectiveness more than makes amends. Not many composers could make such brilliant decorative use of scale-passages as Tchaikovsky does, and this is not the only direction in which he manages to blind us to the poor quality of some of his themes. The five records of No. 4, played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, under Sir Landon Ronald, are unequal, but the brilliantly successful moments easily outweigh the failures. Curiously, the weak parts are generally in the string department—the one in which we have been accustomed to find the gramophone at its best. The new process is evidently in a transition stage. It gives us splendid brass, drums, and wood-wind, but the massed strings too often don't sound like strings. (Though if you ask what they do sound like, you have me beaten!) The numerous bits of wood-wind arabesque are extraordinarily good, though the piccolo in the Scherzo is so over-prominent as to be amusing. The climaxes are more like the real thing than in any orchestral record I have heard so far, and although there is a touch of blatancy at some of them, the fault is easily forgiven. As I have said before in these columns, the question of power is more important than is sometimes realised. Without a genuine fortissimo there is a loss of power-variety that is fatal in a long work. The vivid contrasts in these records suggest that we are well on the way to symphonic recording which will make former efforts so tame and dull in comparison that we shall wonder how we took any pleasure in them. Note, for example, in one or two of the climaxes in these records, how the motto theme, played by the brass, cuts through a welter of sound in a way that really suggests the concert-hall. The pizzicato of the massed strings in the Scherzo is only moderately successful. It might well be more definite, and the actual tone is not stringy enough. Bearing in mind how very effective the pizzicato of a single stringed instrument has always been on the gramophone, this is surprising. Here is one more problem for the research department! The Scherzo is very enjoyable, nevertheless, mainly because of the wonderful clarity and colour of the wood-wind in the middle section. The Finale is first-rate throughout, and a very exciting bit of work.

The two 12-in. of Schumann's E flat Quintet, played by Gabrilowitsch and the Flonzaley Quartet, may be praised without reserve. The pianoforte tone is practically without a twang, and the balance almost uniformly good. Is Schumann under a cloud at present? If so, a few hearings of such buoyant imaginative works as this should dispel it (two 12-in.).

Seeing how good the pianoforte tone is in the Schumann work, one is surprised to find it so steely in the loud passages in the Pachmann record. The old man is at his best in Chopin's Etude in F and the D flat Nocturne. In the C sharp minor Waltz his tempo is so erratic as to destroy rhythm, grace, and feeling. I hope young players who hear the record will not as a result dash at Chopin in this way. If they do, they must be prepared to have their knuckles rapped. They will in due season learn that bad playing of this particular type can be condoned only when the composer is an 'international celebrity.' (And not even then, by a few of us!)

The pick of vocal records are those of Luella Melius and Chaliapin. The former sings with beautiful clearness and expression 'Ah! lo so' and the 'Queen of the Night' aria (10-in.). Chaliapin is his inimitable self in a couple of extracts from 'Prince Igor' (12-in.).

The success of the choral work in the 'Parsifal' records led to high hopes in this hitherto unsatisfactory department. It is disappointing, therefore, to have to say that the records of the B.N.O.C. Choir in Bach's 'Blessing, Glory, and Wisdom,' conducted by Albert Coates, show a relapse. The texture is far from clear, and the intonation is not above reproach. We want some Bach choral work on the gramophone, so it is a pity a better choice was not made for a start. This particular chorus is generally held to be not by Bach, but by another composer of the same name. This wouldn't matter if it were first-rate music, which it is not. As to the performance, the florid singing is less good than one expects from such a body. That choral writing of the kind can be well recorded was shown in the admirable set of 'Messiah' choruses issued a year or two ago by H.M.V. There is a big public anxious for good choral records, so this apparent backsliding calls for attention.

Nor can much be said in favour of the three 10-in. of some Christmas hymns and carols sung by the St. Swithin's Choir, conducted by Laurence Collingwood. Why are the singers accompanied—apparently by a large harmonium? Such things are better treated a cappella. The effect is specially bad in 'Hail! smiling morn'—a glee hitherto associated rather with spring than with Christmas.

Far better, as might be expected, is the record of the English Singers in Morley's 'Now is the Month of Maying' and Vaughan Williams's arrangement of 'The Farmer's Son' (10-in.). But I have heard better work by these singers. There is a lack of clearness at times, apparently owing to over-resonance. Perhaps the new recording is to blame. Be that as it may, this record fails to reach the very high standard achieved in those of the English Singers' performances of Byrd last year—especially that tour de force 'Exsurge Domine,' which remains an abiding joy.

VOCALION

Rather a small consignment comes this month, and there is not much that stands out. Many will be glad to hear the 'Old King Cole' Ballet Suite of Vaughan Williams, played by the Æolian Orchestra, conducted by the composer. It is less riotous than the subject leads one to expect, and (at the risk of being regarded as a Philistine) I must confess that I grow aweary of the composer's consecutive common chords, fifths, and modality. There are some poetic touches—notably the little snatches for violin solo. As a whole, the recording bears out what was said above as to power-contrasts. There is really little difference between the power of the full orchestra in its loudest moments and that of the violin solo—in fact the latter, though quiet, has greater intensity, as is often the case in gramophone reproductions of solo instruments. Still, this Suite is good stuff, and one feels that some weaknesses that come out in its performance as abstract music are due to its excellence for ballet purposes. Here is a chance for Diaghilev to mount an English ballet. (It would be a safer card than some of the modern French examples that have let him down at the box-office.) If not Diaghilev, the Folk-Dance Society should venture, and so take a step towards realising one of Cecil Sharp's dreams—an English ballet. 'Old King Cole' has apparently had no performance other than that given at Oxford a few years ago.

The only other instrumental record received is that of Jelly d'Aranyi in a couple of old pieces—a Largo and Allegro Giocoso by Galuppi, and a Passepied by Destouches, capitally played and recorded (12-in.).

The pick of the vocal records are those of John Coates and Roy Henderson. The former sings a couple of seasonable songs—'Voici, Noël' (in French) and Thomson's 'The Knight of Bethlehem.' Mr. Henderson is heard in three Scots songs, 'The land of the leal,' 'The deil's awa',' and 'Willie brewed a peck o' maut.' The last is easily the best. 'The deil's awa'' suffers from Mr. Henderson's tendency to hang on to the last syllable of most of the lines, so we don't get the dance which is the rhythmic background of the song. These songs are delivered in a rich and racy Scots that (properly) makes no concessions to the ear of the mere Southron.

Nancy Royle and Michael Head are recorded in the 'Cries of London' that they have broadcast on several occasions. Clearly there is a public for a revival on these lines, but a good many of us, I fancy, will feel irritated at the over-sophistication of such naive material. There is something ludicrous in hearing (say) 'New Mackerel' hawked in cultivated, expressive tones. And why is the familiar 'Lavender Song' made to do duty for 'Primroses'? The singing, orchestral arrangement, and accompaniment are good (two 10-in.).

THE NEW H.M.V. INSTRUMENT

An enjoyable hour or so testing the new machine leaves me on the side of the enthusiasts. My method was pretty thorough. The new machine and the old (similar H.M.V. models) were placed side by side in such a way that they started fair in the matter of aids to resonance, and a large number of records of various types, from fox-trots to string quartets, were played. Sometimes special passages were re-played, sometimes there was repetition of a single note (for example, the long, loud unison at the end of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony). Those who expect the new instrument to change a bad record into a good one will probably want their money back. Once a bad record, always a bad record. But it makes the most of any virtues a record may be blessed with, and a really good one becomes better than ever. For example, the Columbia of Quilter's 'Children's Overture' is one of the pick of the Company's productions. I liked it on the old machine; on the new it aroused fresh enthusiasm. The most convincing test, however, was the Scherzo of the fifth Symphony in various recordings. Here the gain in clearness was remarkable, especially in the fugato entries of the bass strings, and in the bridge-passage to the Finale. In the latter passage the ominous effect of the music was really brought out, because the drum part and the long-held low string notes were distinct. The following crescendo showed a gain, too. Pianoforte tone gained greatly, and it became evident that the new H.M.V. process of recording ought to be heard on the new instrument. There is still some keen-edged tone at times, but not more than we often get first-hand in the concert-room from some pianists of the smiting order. In chamber music there is an all-round improvement, because of the increased clearness and sonority. Against this is to be set an occasional lack of brightness, due to the string tone being slightly thickened. (This defect is, however, not always present.) Some bright vocal records are apt to suffer a trifle in the same way. But in this kind of matter we must not expect progress to be all along the line. We must be prepared to pay for a big advance at one point by a slight reverse at another. What matters is not the detail, but the sum, and there can be no question that this machine has brought us a big step nearer the perfect gramophone.

I have at times had inquiries as to circulating libraries of records. Hitherto I have had to say that such institutions were unknown to me, but a prospectus of the S.E. London Recorded Music Society, just received, enables me to give particulars that should be useful to readers in that part. Members pay a subscription of 7*s.* 6*d.* for the first year, and 5*s.* subsequently, and among the privileges they enjoy is that of being able to borrow from the Society's Library albums of records at a fee of 2*s.* 6*d.* per album. Facilities are also provided for exchange of records among the members. The list of monthly fixtures is very attractive. The Secretary's address is 34, Chalsey Road, Brockley, S.E.4. There may, of course, be other Societies with lending libraries. If so I shall be glad to make them known to Musical Times readers, provided they are not too numerous for space.

Music in the Foreign Press

A MOVE FOR 'LIVE MUSIC'

Under the title 'La Musique Vivante,' the Paris Guide du Concert has organized a series of concert-lectures on an entirely novel plan. Composers will explain their aims and analyse their works; and criticisms of works played the previous week will be analysed and compared by Léon Vallas (the editor of the Nouvelle Revue Musicale). Other lectures will cover history and technique, and there will be plenty of illustrations. The Guide du Concert (October 30) contains an account of the first of these meetings:

> Léon Vallas explained that the object was to attempt a fusion of genres as various as the concert, the university lecture, the conversazione, and the debate. Music by Couperin was performed; ten minutes were devoted to a chat on early Greek music. A debate followed Vallas's comparative examination of recent critical utterances. Albert Roussel took part in a performance of his four songs with pianoforte and flute accompaniment; and Jean Cras spoke of his new work, 'Fontaines,' of which he played excerpts.

This excellent initiative cannot be too warmly commended. It is to be desired that something of the kind be attempted here, and that British composers bear in mind Vallas's declaration that 'foreign composers will be very welcome.'

MOZART'S VIOLIN CONCERTO IN E FLAT MAJOR

Whether the E flat violin Concerto, published under Mozart's name, was really by him had already been discussed by G. de Saint-Foix, who considered that the internal evidence to that effect was conclusive. The same author (in the November Revue de Musicologie) now adduces a published letter from F. E. Ernst, dated January, 1800, which states that the Concerto in question had been written by Mozart in 1785, and shown by him to the violinist J. F. Eck in 1786.

MELODY IN CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

In the October Muzyka (Warsaw), Wanda Landowska asks why contemporary music is not melodic, and gives as the only true reply, 'Because music is never melodic so long as it is contemporary.'

OLD SPANISH COMPOSERS AND THE HARPSICHORD

In the Courrier Musical (November-December), Joaquin Nin considers old Spanish keyboard music, beginning with the works written by Cabezon (1510-66) for clavichord, and for spinet by Romaña (c. 1640), and points out that Spanish composers preferred the clavichord to the harpsichord. This is due, he says, to the fact that from the point of view of expression, the clavichord compared far better than the harpsichord with the vihuela and guitar.

ITALIAN FOLK-SONGS

In Musica d'Oggi (August-September), Alfredo Bonaccorsi devotes an article to the folk-songs of the Lucca district. Some of the illustrations he gives are remarkably attractive, and lead one to wish that more was known of genuine Italian folk-tunes.

BIZET AND SPANISH MUSIC

In Le Ménestrel (September 25-October 16), Julien Tiersot relates how Bizet, when engaged in composing 'Carmen,' studied Spanish folk-songs at the Library of the Paris Conservatoire:

> Bizet had never been to Spain, and it seems likely that the only book of Spanish music which he was able to consult at the Library of the Conservatoire was the 'Echos d'Espagne,' published in 1872, at Paris. This contained chiefly Seguidillas, Boleros, Jotas, and other dance-tunes in triple-time. Many aspects of Spanish folk-music were altogether unknown to Bizet, and yet he succeeded in re-creating, by sheer intuition, the very atmosphere and colour of Spain. It is interesting to compare certain things in 'Carmen' with others in early works by Manuel Garcia—especially in 'El Poeta Calculista,' a tonadilla composed in 1804.

THE PRICE OF OLD STRINGED INSTRUMENTS IN 1875

The Revue Pleyel (September) gives the prices realised by old instruments at the sale of the Mullay collection in 1875, at Paris:

> A Stradivarius viola (1727) sold for 7,000 francs (£280); a Stradivarius violin (1714) sold for 7,900 francs (£316), and another (1717) for 2,220 francs (£88 16*s.*); a double-bass by Montagnane for 2,050 francs (£82); a Bergonzi violin bearing Stradivarius's name for 1,500 francs (£60); a Stainer violin (1609) for 610 francs (£24 8*s.*), &c.

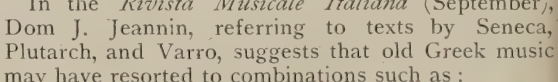
JEAN BRUDIEU'S MADRIGALS

In the Revue Musicale (October), Charles van den Borren writes on the works by Jean Brudieu (1591), recently discovered by Félipe Pedrell and the Rev. P. H. Anglés, who published them at Barcelona in 1921:

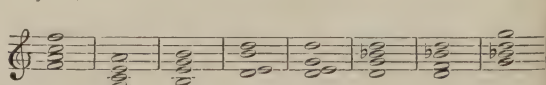
> Brudieu was born in France; in 1539 he became choirmaster of the Cathedral of La Seu d'Urgell. In 1546 he was ordained priest. In 1585 his book of Madrigals appeared at Barcelona. The only known whole copy is in the Escurial Library. He also wrote a 'Requiem,' which is preserved in the Cathedral of La Seu d'Urgell. His technique is remarkably good and versatile; his music is straightforward, imaginative, and expressive. He can hardly be described as a great master, but there can be no questioning his genius.

POLYPHONY IN OLDEN TIMES

In the Rivista Musicale Italiana (September), Dom J. Jeannin, referring to texts by Seneca, Plutarch, and Varro, suggests that old Greek music may have resorted to combinations such as:



and even perhaps



VERDI'S LETTERS TO ESCUDIER

In the Bulletin de la Société Union Musicologique (October), J. G. Prod'homme publishes part of the two hundred letters from Verdi to his French publisher, Escudier, now preserved in the Library of the Paris Opéra.

THE BOWING OF BACH'S VIOLIN MUSIC

In the August Monde Musical, E. Borrel writes :

There is no justification for the anarchical diversity of bowing indications which is to be noticed in various editions of Bach's violin music. We should remember that his technique was very much under the influence of the French school of playing, and that the shape of the bow in the 18th century did not make for so frequent a use of legato as the modern bow does. Moreover, the manuscripts—be they autographs or copies—show that Bach uniformly prescribed certain strokes of the bow for certain melodic units.

AN EVERLASTING PROBLEM

In the same issue, J. de Bosredon writes :

When we consider the variations of pitch during the last three hundred years, we find ourselves unable to account for the widespread, and indeed almost universally accepted, notion that each key has its own colour and character. If Palestrina reappeared among us, he would be surprised to hear us singing in B major a work which he wrote in A flat major. Bach would hear his D major Suite played in E major, and even Mozart would hear his works played a semitone higher than he intended. For indeed, between 1699 and 1858, the pitch of the A of the tuning-fork has varied between 810 and 898 vibrations. Is not our tendency to ascribe a determined character to each key due, at least in part, to mere habit and association?

CONDUCTING BY HEART

In Pult und Taktstock (August), Ernst Kunwald writes :

There is a great variety of opinion as to the advantages of conducting by heart. In my opinion, it is highly desirable to do so. A conductor, when he rehearses, has three resources at his disposal : his gestures, his words, and his eyes. The more he has to keep his eyes upon the score, the less use he can make of them to control and assist his instrumentalists. And at the time of performance, the loss of even a tenth of a second may have detrimental consequences.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Player-Piano Notes

By WILLIAM DELASAIRE

ÆOLIAN

Another fine work of Schumann's is to hand this month—Part 1 of the 'Etudes Symphoniques,' recorded for the 'Duo-Art' piano by Percy Grainger (6859). I like it immensely ; the beautiful theme is most ingeniously treated, Nos. 2, 3, and 5 of the Variations being especially appealing. The playing makes it additionally valuable, and I look forward with interest to the publication of the second roll.

In the parcel I was delighted to see one of the Brahms 'Intermezzi' I most favour—that in C major, from Op. 119—played by Myra Hess. Certainly it is a precious little gem, giving one a special thrill of pleasure at the arpeggiated wafts of tone towards the end.

'The Wind,' by Alkan (6446), shows us that Harold Bauer can play chromatic scales very skilfully, but personally I am inclined to think the playing of this piece a waste of time. As a tour de force it is interesting ; as music it is of little worth.

Quite the best piece of salon music is Gerald Phillips's 'En Valsant,' 'Lisztified' and played by A. Morris-Gilbert (0230). I know from experience how much the original version is liked, and this concert paraphrase is a brilliant piece of work both in conception and execution. The writing is very thick for the most part, but the playing is clean and clear.

I am afraid the opening notes of Rudolphe Berger's 'Amoureuse' (6699) rather give the show away—it is a terribly conventional waltz tune, though Miss Geneviève Pitot does her very excellent best to disguise this. Still, to those who have not yet exhausted the pleasure of this style of music it will doubtless make an appeal, for the first half-dozen times, at any rate.

I don't like Moszkowski's 'Liebeswalzer,' Op. 57, No. 5 (6691), nor, with the best intentions of encouraging prodigies, do I like Shura Cherkassky's playing of it. By way of exhibiting my unprejudiced mind, I must add that before I learnt that he was but thirteen years old, I thought the rubato 'sticky' and more suggestive of bent string than flexible steel. However, it is a very clever performance, and in some ways a good one ; and if my adverse criticism prompts readers to buy the roll and disagree with me, I shall be content.

Charles Huerter's 'Mélodie,' in E flat (6491), is well-named. Reminiscent rather of Elgar's 'Salut d'amour,' it has a pleasantly flowing if sugary theme, and is played with the utmost refinement and grace by Robert Armbruster. A piece for the 'mezzo-brow' rather than the fastidious, but of its kind an excellent example.

Beethoven's 'German Dance' No. 3, played by John Powell (6680), is a jolly little 'German band' sort of piece, living rather generously on its composer's reputation.

The hand-played rolls were noted in recent issues when published as 'Duo-Art' rolls. Three acquire additional interest in that they are played by Miss Geneviève Pitot. The fourth, Liszt's fourteenth 'Hungarian Rhapsody,' played by Friedman, will be eagerly welcomed.

The most important straight-cut roll is Dohnányi's 'Rhapsodie,' Op. 11, No. 3 (T24661). While, perhaps, not so original as the second number of the same Opus, it has a fine virtuosic style—dramatic and melodious, and very thickly written. It might have been autographed by Liszt : perhaps this is the best comment I can make. All good player-pianists should get it, as it lends itself to the instrument admirably, and is most interesting and exciting to play.

Not inappropriately, we have more music of the wind in Emil Sauer's 'Murmure du Vent' (T24662), though it is of spring zephyrs that we are reminded here. A delicate, tuneful morceau, it is a good study in graduated pianissimos, and is as pleasing to hear as to play.

The kindest thing to do with the 'Grasshoppers' Dance' (T24660) is to say nothing about it. But carelessly played it reveals our instrument in all its diabolical capacity to thump unrelentingly, so I must beg those who buy it to use all available damping devices, both mechanical and pneumatic, and to close all doors.

Among the song rolls, Easthope Martin's 'The Holy Child' (26573) would make an excellent children's song for Christmas. It has a pleasant quasi-modal flavour, and is admirably wedded to the words (by Martin Luther). Those schools which are fortunate enough to have a player-piano should get this roll, and teach all the children to sing it. The ensemble should be very moving.

The English words to the 'Song of the Volga Boatmen' (26575) rather spoil this number, I think. They seem curiously weak and inappropriate.

ANGELUS

The Three Dances from 'O Mitake San,' by Friml (93482/4), are delicate little pieces of salon music, pleasantly picturesque. Conveying no profound ideas, of course, they depend very largely upon refined playing. This should not be difficult, but good phrasing is essential.

The remaining rolls—the Dohnányi 'Rhapsodie' (93478), Sauer's 'Murmure du Vent' (93488), and the song rolls are referred to above.

ANIMATIC (Hupfeld)

A very interesting roll is to hand in E. W. Korngold's playing of the Prelude and a Duet from his opera, 'Violanta' (58746). On the pianoforte, at any rate, it has a Teutonic turgidity rather reminiscent of Reger. Many of the themes are distinctive, and the harmonic style, without being specially daring, is very effective. It is undoubtedly a roll which deserves attention, being one of the few of this composer's works which are issued in roll form.

Some really good Liszt is available in the 'Benediction of God in Solitude,' complete in two rolls (56842 A & B). It is recorded with admirable insight by Lucien Wurmser, and contrasts interestingly with Sapellnikov's playing of the first part in roll No. 51883. No tinsel is here—all is genuinely felt emotion, expressed with wonderful beauty and power. These are rolls to buy and keep.

No. 7 of the 'Danzas Espanolas' (Granados) is given an authoritative and beautiful performance by the composer. It is a most enchanting piece, the all-essential rhythm of which is admirably brought out by the accent perforations that are such a notable feature of these rolls.

Grieg's 'Schmetterling,' Op. 43, No. 1 (55290), is quite the best 'butterfly' piece in music, I think. Its simple delicacy is remarkably suggestive of wayward flight and poise. The playing, by Tosta de Benici, is a happy example of rightly-applied rubato, and it is certainly one of the most charming rolls I have encountered lately.

The remaining rolls are of salon music, which I should place in order of merit as follows: 'En Automne,' by Moszkowski (58145), well-known to wireless listeners at the hands of Mr. Maurice Cole; 'Souvenirs Lointains,' by Chaminade (51792), not very distinguished; and, a very poor third, Waldteufel's 'Espana' Waltz (51296).

Books on the player-piano are not so common that they may be passed by with a mere acknowledgment, and one now to hand is especially valuable in that it deals with the æsthetic rather than the mechanical side of the instrument. As the title suggests, Sydney Grew's 'First Book of the Player-Pianist' (Musical Opinion, 5*s*.), is really a tutor for the instrument, and is concerned principally with reminding the beginner of what he is very apt to forget—that rhythm is of the essence of music, and that all music falls into beats which are accented or unaccented. The amateur is so delightfully bewildered at the way his instrument pours forth torrents of notes, that he becomes engrossed in the melody and harmony, and forgets the existence of the other member of the trinity—unless, perchance, he is playing the 'Parade of the Tin Soldiers,' in which case he can hardly fail to accord it some recognition! The lessons are taught in the best possible way—by detailed analysis of progressively arranged lists of rolls. The reader may think that the author stresses unduly the necessity for counting, and observation of beats and phrases, but if he grasps the essentials of the matter he will be ever grateful to Mr. Grew. There are chapters on the instrument itself and its controls, and a valuable one on playing at sight. The book does not pretend to be comprehensive, but deals with the rudiments of music as applied to the player-piano; and without knowledge of this no really artistic performance is possible.

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

It is to be hoped that the B.B.C. will not attach too much importance to the crowd of grumblers who have been lifting up their voices in the Daily Mail. Many of the letters reveal a type of mentality that can be catered for only by the poorest class of cinema and variety show, or, in the way of literature, by members of the Komik Kuts family, with (for serious reading) the more lurid and salacious police reports in certain Sunday papers.

The outlook of the malcontents is best summed up by one of the writers, who, protesting against lectures, 'talks,' and 'highbrow' music, added, 'I finished my education when I left school'—a fact so patent that he needn't have troubled to mention it. The job of so big and national a concern as the B.B.C. is not to cater for the minority of this type. For despite their noise, they are happily in a minority. Of the vast number of satisfied listeners, few troubled to write to the Daily Mail. It is a pity a daily paper should lend itself to the creating of a wrong impression by opening its columns to correspondents of the kind quoted above.

The best of answers to the agitation appeared in the Observer of December 13, in an interview with a B.B.C. official. The complaints as to the programmes containing too much classical music were easily disposed of. The 14,000 hours of broadcasting during the three months ending December 5, were shared as follows:

	Per cent.
Popular music:
Orchestral	27
Opera, &c.	16
Classical music	9
Dance music	26
Talks	16.25
News	5
Religion	0.75

If complaint from any quarter is justified, it is from that section of the public that wants good music. It may be objected that the term 'classical' is misleading, as it appears to be applied only to the older group of composers. The answer is that an enormous amount of the lowest of lowbrow was included in that section as well—so much so, that on balance those of us who want first-rate music still had rather the worst of the bargain. But we are more tolerant than the jazzites and balladites, and when evening after evening we see nothing for us in the programme, we content ourselves with the time signal and weather report. That is where we differ from our opponents. We don't grudge them a few evenings a week; whereas they rage furiously together in the Daily Mail if we are given an occasional symphony concert, or a programme of old music.

On the whole, the musical policy of the B.B.C. has been thoroughly justified by results, as is shown by the following analyses of letters received at the Company's offices:

> Some 8,000 letters a week pour in to the B.B.C. They are carefully classified, and daily and weekly reports compiled from them to show the tendencies of the public taste. In addition, there are responsible critics in every centre. For the past six months really adverse criticisms have amounted to under 5 per cent. For the week ended December 4, 7,600 letters were received by London and the other stations, of which 302 were adversely critical, as under:
>
> 125 condemned dance music.
> 65 were general growls.
> 52 were against alternative programmes.
> 39 condemned talks.
> 20 objected to individual artists.
> 1 objected to religion.

Here is a striking proof of the public change of attitude towards good music:

> Eighteen months ago classical music was definitely unpopular. To-day there are more enemies of dance music in our correspondence than of classical. About religion, strangely enough, there is less complaint than about anything.

Part of this satisfactory state of things is due to the educational effect of the programmes; many thousands of people to-day know and appreciate the best because it has come their way for the first time in an inexpensive and convenient form. But no doubt something is due also to the fact that musicians as a body are now making use of wireless. The B.B.C. has thus tapped a section of the public that at first held aloof, and it has done so in good time, instead of making the mistake of the gramophone manufacturers, who year after year acted on the assumption that the definitely musical public was so small as to be negligible. They know now that it is large and rapidly growing; above all, it is influential, because so many of its members are teachers, conductors, members of competition festival committees, &c. On the whole, then, despite the mistakes inevitable in the early stages of so vast a concern, the B.B.C. has met the musical situation remarkably well. Personally, so far from threatening to drop my half-guinea license because the programmes are often not to my taste, I regard the sum as ludicrously small. The amount of entertainment provided by my set would be cheap at ten times the cost.

Nevertheless I am going to have a little grumble or two. There was ground for some of the Daily Mail complaints as to the length of the preliminary talk before the musical items. On one occasion the interlarded lecturettes took up at least as much time as the music—and were not even good lecturing. Since the agitation, however, the officials (evidently peeved) seem to have gone to the other extreme. On Beethoven's birthday, for example, the performance of the fifth Symphony was prefaced by the remark that the work was in four distinct sections, the first of which was quick and lively; and the Andante was ushered in with the remark that 'the second movement is rather slow.' There ought to be a happy mean between such trite brevities and the lecturette, and it would be worth while trying to hit on it. I join the complainants, too, in disliking the back-patting indulged in by the announcers. Presumably a broadcast performance is a professional engagement. If so, there is no need to supplement the fee with votes of thanks. And we could well spare the hand-clapping in the studio. Something may be said for the spontaneous burst of applause of a great crowd, but a spattering of hand-claps from a little group is merely irritating. One feels, too, that it is purely formal, like the 'bravos' that are held to be due to a soloist, whether he has performed well or ill. Slips in musical announcements are over-frequent. The funniest was on the occasion of the Westminster Abbey Special Choir's recent performance, when it was announced that the choir would sing 'unaccompanied anthems and motays.' It must have taken many listeners a few moments to realise that the last word was merely a super-refined form of motets! Yet another grumble! (At this rate I shall soon qualify for the correspondence column of the Daily Mail!) This one is uttered at the request of several readers. They point out that when, owing to a miscalculation, the time-table has to be suddenly readjusted, and something has to be 'cut' or omitted, it is always the good music that suffers. For example, a fine bit of organ transmission (so rare a thing that it ought to be made the most of) was cut short because some party of entertainers was ready to begin. And I well remember a piece of chamber music coming to an abrupt end (on a discord, too), in order to make way for the 'Savoury Orphans' or some such standing dish. These things ought not to happen. Either the timing should be done more carefully, or the claims of a work of art given due consideration.

The folk-song evening was very enjoyable, and one of its best features was the announcing of Mr. Plunket Greene. It was an object lesson in the attractive possibilities of announcing, and even when allowance is made for the fact that he was very much on his own pitch, so to speak, and dealing with matters infinitely more congenial than the advent of that inevitable deep depression off the coast of Iceland (ugh!) or the ups and downs of the mark, franc, and peso, his brisk, racy, manner, and clear speech made us feel dissatisfied with much of the regular announcing. Much of it is too 'refaned,' and there seems to be a kind of feeling that a good healthy vowel sound is vulgah and to be avoided. Londonahs don't object to this apparently, but those of us who have to pay frequent visits to the more remote provinces will agree, I think, that no less invigorating than the change of scene and air is the speech of the natives. I wish the London Station would import a new Uncle from Yorkshire, Lancashire, or Wessex—an educated Uncle who still retained the best characteristics of his native county. Perhaps a Scotsman would be even better, though, owing to the marked reluctance of that race to leave its native heath for England, he might be hard to come by.

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of diplomas to successful candidates at the Fellowship and Associateship Examinations on Saturday, January 23, at 2.30 p.m. The President, Dr. H. W. Richards, will deliver an address on 'The Study of Musical History,' after which Mr. G. D. Cunningham, organist of the Town Hall, Birmingham, will play upon the College organ the following pieces selected from the July Examination, 1926:

FELLOWSHIP

1. Prelude only, from Prelude and Fugue in E flat ('St. Ann') ... ... J. S. Bach
2. Choral Prelude on 'Newtoun' (Sixteen Preludes, vol. 1, Stainer & Bell) Charles Wood
3. Fantasia in F minor (Best's Arrangements, No. 76, Novello) ... ... Mozart

ASSOCIATESHIP

1. Choral Prelude, 'St. Peter,' from Three Choral Preludes, Op. 20, No. 1... ... ... H. E. Darke
2. Prelude only, from Prelude and Fugue in D minor... ... ... Mendelssohn

There will be an informal conversazione immediately following the organ recital, to which members and friends are invited.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

THE CASE FOR UNISON SINGING IN CHURCHES

BY C. WHITAKER-WILSON

In ancient Greece there was a saying—quite ancient then—that everything that is ancient is to be respected. That is the first point in the case for unison-singing—its honoured antiquity. It is also an ancient theory that evolution—particularly evolution of art—develops in circles. Therefore it is not unreasonable to expect that if one be travelling in a circle the time must assuredly come when one will arrive at the starting-point once again. That has already occurred in Music itself—that is to say, in the art as a whole. Claude Debussy was the point of contact with the original melodic starting-place. In the far-off days when men used whole-tones rather than half-tones, harmony as we understand it was unheard of: it was a matter for future research. When that research was undertaken, those who dared to give the ball of evolution a push forward were howled down for their pains. Aristoxenus was probably regarded as a futurist for opposing the theories of Pythagoras; Hucbald no less so for introducing harmony into singing; while it is certain that Gluck suffered agonies by reason of the harsh criticism of his efforts to make opera sensible, and that Chopin had to run the gauntlet of the stodgy German critics of his day. 'We implore Herr Chopin to return to sanity' wrote one of them. And yet the ball of evolution continued to roll on—until Debussy came on the scene. Then it stopped: he completed the circle. He once said:

> The harmonies—beyond the dissonances of the dominant, and such others as are to be found in every text-book—which I have added, are (in my judgment) enough and sufficient for the needs of music. There are others who have gone further: there are others, still again, who will go much further. But I am satisfied that those sound-combinations (which I have worked out mathematically) are complete in themselves, and that furthur dissonances are both artistically and psychologically unsound.

In my view that statement is the very soundest sense. Debussy took the scale, practically as it was evolved in the early days, and to it he added a certain series of dissonant sounds—as he says, 'enough and sufficient for the needs of music.' The extremists (of whom he is decidedly not one) have gone too far: they have created an overlapping in the circle, which throws their utterances outside the proper function of music altogether. And what is true of the evolution of the whole is true of the part: Church music has also gone through a fairly complete series of stages of development. The early plainsong gave way to more tonal treatment; the great age of contrapuntal device came and (unhappily) went; the mid-Victorian style of harmonies came, and has now outstayed its welcome. There is nothing else to do but return. Excessive futurism has been tried, and has been cast forth as being outside the province of the Church. We are round at the starting-point of the great unison melodies, and with all the advantages which our evolutionary experience has gained for us. But even if this were not true, the system which we employ in our churches—however popular it may have become—is utterly wrong in almost every possible way. No musical interpretation can ever hope to merit the term artistic which is founded upon such a basis as that which has now existed for more than a century in the majority of our places of worship. In some of our larger churches it is quite a common thing to have two thousand souls assembled for the common purpose of offering worship in a musical form. The division of vocal tone, more often than not, works out something like the following:—In the Chancel, twenty persons, often less (but estimating it at twenty, subdivison frequently reveals that fourteen children represent the melody, and two each of alto, tenor, and bass complete the four parts); in the Nave, 1,880 people, of whom perhaps fully fourteen hundred are women (subdivision again will probably reveal 1,350 capable of singing at the same pitch as the boys, twenty who are possibly sufficiently skilled to render a moderately-accurate alto part, and something like thirty who are given to broadcasting that vocal atrocity commonly referred to as 'seconds,' which usually consists of singing a third lower than the pitch of the melody, irrespective of what the real harmonies may be); the other 480—men—will possibly subdivide into something like forty or fifty who are capable of singing, or of attempting to sing either tenor or bass; and for the rest—they content themselves with the melody, either one or two octaves lower, according to habit. Choirs have been formed, time and again, of greater personnel than two thousand; but we can scarcely imagine one being balanced in the way described above. Moreover, the very fact that the melody-singing prevails over the harmony-singing in all our churches calls for the suppression of the minority in favour of the majority. It is unison—by which loose usage of the term I really mean octaves—that we want! And what is more ecclesiastical—and certainly more delightful—than for the women to sing with the boys, and the men with the lay-clerks, in antiphonal unison? Psalms, hymns, introits, graduals—no matter which—the effect is to the greater dignity of the service.

In a great many churches—perchance the majority—it means an upheaval. But that should prove to be no deterrent. It does mean that many of the present-day popular hymns—or perhaps I should say the hymns of the Victorian period still sung at the present time—ought to go. There can be no manner of artistic sense in singing 'Abide with me' as a unison-melody: it was conceived as a four-part harmonic tune. There is nothing against singing it in unison from the standpoint of possibility: it can be done, of course, but it seems that the remedy would be worse than the evil. Unison-melodies have a distinct atmosphere of their own; they are conceived with a different idea in view. Barnby's tune to 'For all the saints' is plainly a tune for harmony-singing. It is the kind of melody which admits of only one definite harmonization. But if the hymn be sung to Vaughan Williams it is a different thing altogether: the tune was conceived for melodic performance, and, what is more, is singularly ineffective when sung according to the harmonies he gives for three of the verses.

Other tunes stand out even more in their unisonant conception. 'Let all mortal flesh keep silence' (318 E. H.) could never be harmonized—for voices. It is a melody which floats over a few sustained chords, and yet it has a magnificent effect when sung at the proper pace—which is not that which the Hymnal directs. Of plainsong melodies I do not speak: I am so much in favour of the best of them that I leave them out of the argument altogether.

But I point to their inestimable value, even as I also have tried to point to the fact that whereas in harmony lies the weakness of unequal division, in Unison lies the Strength.

A NEW BOOK OF DESCANTS

There can be little doubt that the revival within recent years of the ancient devices of descant and faux-bourdon has already done much to quicken the interest of both choirs and congregations in the singing of hymns. Descant—which is merely a counter-theme sung against the melody of a hymn or song—is, of course, a much simpler proposition than faux-bourdon, which is a harmonized setting (usually in four parts, and preferably sung unaccompanied) with the melody in the tenor. Whereas the latter requires a well-balanced choir, the use of descant is obviously possible in any place where a few treble voices can be trained to sustain an independent melody against the singing of the tune by the congregation. Hence the growing popularity of this simple, yet highly effective, embellishment. Descant has another advantage over faux-bourdon, in that it allows of greater freedom, both in the added treble counter-theme and in the organ part. In fact, as the writer of the interesting Preface to 'The Descant Hymn-Tune Book' remarks:

> . . . there appears to be no device in choral music that yields so striking a result in return for so little trouble.

The use of descant need not, of course, be confined to Church music. In many schools the device is now being applied to national and folk-songs.

Choirmasters may be strongly recommended to examine Geoffrey Shaw's 'Descant Hymn-Tune Book' (Novello). Mr. Shaw has here collected and arranged for descant singing more than thirty well-known hymn-tunes. In the list of contents one or two alternative hymns are suggested for use with certain tunes. Others may easily be added to these alternatives, especially in the case of common metre and long metre tunes.

Well-chosen harmonies and skilful workmanship combine to make this a most attractive and musicianly collection. Even a cursory examination makes it clear that these descants are designed in no haphazard way. In some a fragment of the hymn-tune is effectively utilised—as, for example, the dotted crotchet opening of 'Bishopthorpe' and the rising four-note figure in the first line of 'Hyfrydol.' In others the descant enters after the other voices with a point of imitation, as in the second half of 'Ein' feste Burg'; the opening section of this tune, by the way, is very skilfully devised. In 'Hanover' the opening five notes appear (in the dominant) in the descant in the following phrase. Canonic treatment is effectively employed, a fine example being the opening line of 'Nun danket'; another, at two beats' distance, occurs in Tallis's Canon. In the setting of 'Nun danket,' and the equally ingenious arrangement of 'Lasst uns erfreuen' ('Ye watchers'), the treatment is fairly elaborate.

In the Preface it is suggested that > . . . occasionally, when a big body of tone (the men of the choir and congregation) is available for the hymn melody, and the trebles are first-rate, a descant verse should be sung unaccompanied. In a resonant building the effect of the tune and counter-theme without organ is very fine; moreover, the method adds one more to our stock of varied treatments of hymns—the chief raison d'être of descant and faux-bourdon.

An opportunity is given for testing this effect in the arrangement of the Easter hymn, 'Victory,' adapted from Palestrina, the organ being silent except for three bars of the second line and for the final 'Alleluia.'

When the settings are sung in schools and training colleges (a use for which they are well adapted), it is pointed out that the voices may be divided into 'descant' (high) and 'melody' (medium and low) sections. The accompaniments, though written for organ, are so designed as to be easily adapted to the pianoforte.

Obviously tact is needed, both in introducing a new feature such as this and also in the method of applying it. Helpful advice on these points will be found in the Preface. Apart from its main purpose organists should find this book extremely useful in providing varied organ accompaniments on the many occasions when only unison singing is available.

G. G.

LONDON CHURCH CHOIR ASSOCIATION

The fifty-second annual Festival Service was held at St. Paul's Cathedral on November 19. Owing to the restoration work now going on, the accommodation for choirs and congregation was limited. The strike of organ builders having affected the progress of the organ rebuilding, the instrument was reinforced by a small orchestra. The Canticles were sung to Stanford in C, and the anthems were Lee Williams's 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' and Stanley Marchant's 'Ye holy angels bright.' Despite the drawbacks referred to, the service was admirably sung. Dr. Marchant conducted (in the absence abroad of Dr. Macpherson), and Mr. Douglas Hopkins, organist of Christ Church, Greyfriars, and an old St. Paul's boy, was at the organ.

LIVERPOOL CHURCH CHORAL SOCIETY

The second festival service and seventeenth Festival of the Liverpool Church Choral Association took place in Liverpool Cathedral in November, when a choir of three-hundred-and-fifty voices, representing twenty-one church choirs (including that of the Cathedral) were conducted by Mr. Branscombe in an admirable selection of Church music, which comprised Thomas Tomkins's 'O pray for the peace of Jerusalem,' Purcell's 'O give thanks,' Harwood's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A flat, and Ireland's Te Deum in F. Probably the four pages of the Tomkins Anthem gave the choirs the most trouble in preparation, but well repaid it, for, once learned, the music is a delight. Sixty boys were specially trained for the second-treble part. Equal interest and pleasure were found in the Purcell music, in which the Cathedral choir took the verse. The singing of the combined choirs was balanced and responsive, and the Association may well be encouraged to take fresh heart to persevere in carrying on its good and useful work. Special mention is due of the masterly organ-playing of Mr. H. Goss Custard in the accompaniments.

We have received an interesting booklet on Boston parish church organ, by Dr. Gordon A. Slater, the organist. (No publisher's name is given, but presumably Dr. Slater will supply copies—1*s.*, proceeds to the organ fund.) The present organ is a three-manual of forty-one speaking stops, and in its original form was built by Christian Smith, one of Father Smith's nephews. Its earliest predecessor, however, dated back to the early part of the 16th century, and records show that in 1589 the 'Great Organs' were sold for the benefit of the church. Even before that time Boston must have had an unusually good musical director, for the historian Leyland, visiting the town in 1533 on an antiquarian commission, states that he found the parish church 'so served with singing, and that of cunning men, as no parish in England.'

At Ripon Cathedral on November 22, selections from the 'Creation' were sung, following a short address on Haydn, by Dr. C. H. Moody. On December 3 a special musical service was given by the Cathedral Choir. The first part consisted of unaccompanied Motets, and included examples by Palestrina, Byrd ('Sing joyfully' and 'Come, help, O God'), Vittoria ('Glorious in Heaven' and the six-part 'Deliver us, O God'), Gibbons, and Purcell. The second part of the service comprised Purcell's 'Rejoice in the Lord,' S. S. Wesley's 'Praise the Lord,' and one of Holst's Two Psalms. Dr. C. H. Moody conducted. We understand that this is the first of a number of Motet recitals. The second will be held in March, and a further series during the summer months.

Dr. Charles Macpherson, now on an examining tour in India, has given a recital at St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta. The building was crowded, many standing throughout. The programme included Bach's Passacaglia and a Chorale Prelude, Dr. Macpherson's own arrangement of the slow movement from Beethoven's second Sonata, a Rheinberger item, an extract from a Suite by Borodin, and two pieces by Vierne. (The Statesman, from which we learn of the recital, does not give the titles of the pieces.) Dr. Macpherson's masterly playing made a great impression, and the announcement that he was at the organ at Evensong on the following Sunday no doubt led to another large gathering.

We are glad to hear that a move has been made in regard to the restoration of the Alexandra Palace Organ. The fifty-year-old instrument—one of the finest examples of the late Henry Willis—has been silent since 1914, we believe. In pre-war days notable recitals were given on it by Mr. G. D. Cunningham. The sum of £6,500 is needed for its complete restoration, and for the installation of a new blowing system, which will considerably reduce the running costs. As things go now in the organ-building world the sum is not large, and we hope that when the committee launches its appeal there will be a ready and liberal response.

At York Minster a special Advent musical service took place on December 6. The works performed were by Bach—two of the Church Cantatas ('Sing we the Birth' and 'Watch ye, pray ye') and the aria, 'I should have wished for death,' from the cantata 'Happy is the Man.' Fine work was done by the Minster Oratorio Choir, backed up by a complete orchestra (mainly professional); the soloists were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Beatrice Fernandes, and six members of the Cathedral Choir. Mr. Cyril Ball played the continuo on the pianoforte, and Dr. E. C. Bairstow conducted. There was a very large congregation.

The possibilities of the organ in wireless programmes are not yet fully exploited in this country. We note that Mr. Edwin Stanley Seder, a well-known American recitalist, gave last year a long series of daily programmes at the Chicago station. The important point, however, is the quality of music he transmitted—forty-two Bach items, the whole of Franck's organ works, and Vierne's Symphonies Nos. 1 to 4 complete. In all, nearly a thousand organ works were played without repetition. This is a fine piece of missionary work on behalf of the organ and its repertory.

The annual Choir Festival in Alnwick Parish Church, on November 18, was very successful, choralists and others interested coming from long distances. The Festival lapsed during the War, and was revived last year. The choir consisted of three hundred voices. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to Stanford in B flat, and the anthems were S. S. Wesley's 'Blessed are they' and Weldon's 'O praise God in His holiness.' The service gained much from the fine choice of hymns. Mr. G. C. Gray conducted, and Mr. Jack Burn was at the organ.

At the Congregational Church, Blandford, the choir, combined with that of the Parish Church, Shillingstone, recently gave a musical service, the choral items being conducted by the organist, Mr. Alderman George Best. Mr. Alexander Popham, organist of Shillingstone, accompanied, and played organ solos. The programme included some extracts from 'The Dream of Gerontius,' in which the soprano soloist was Richard Myerscough, of the London Choir School and Southwark Cathedral.

In the hall of the Schola Cantorum, Paris, on November 27, M. Guy Wietz, organist of Farm Street Jesuit Church, gave a recital at which Louis Vierne assisted as accompanist in two groups of his own songs, sung by Madame Malnory-Marseillac. M. Wietz played Bach's B minor Prelude and Fugue, Liszt's Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, the Cantabile from Widor's sixth Symphony, Franck's Choral No. 1, the Prelude and Finale from Vierne's fifth Symphony, and his own Poème Elégiaque, 'In Paradisum.'

The Boston Choral Society, a hundred strong, sang the 'Christmas' Oratorio and Gibbons's 'Hosanna to the Son of David' in Boston Parish Church on December 10, conducted by Dr. Gordon Slater. Mr. George C. Gray was at the organ, and the soloists were Miss Sybil Cropper, Mr. Norman Stone, and Mr. Edward Dykes. There was a large attendance, many of the congregation coming from the surrounding districts.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and the second of Holst's Two Psalms were sung at Chester Cathedral by the Chester Musical Society on December 2, a huge congregation filling every seat in the Cathedral. Madame Blodwen Edwards, Mr. Cyril Moore, and Mr. J. Roberts were the soloists. Mr. J. T. Hughes conducted, there was an augmented orchestra, and Mr. G. Ormond did good service at the organ.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at Durham Cathedral by the Cathedral and Special Choir, accompanied by strings, on December 6. A vast congregation attended, and many thousands listened to the performance through wireless transmission. The Precentor, the Rev. A. D. Culley, conducted, and Mr. C. B. Maude was at the organ.

The St. Paul's (Halifax) Choral Society gave an impressive performance of Brahms's 'Requiem,' accompanied by string orchestra and organ, on December 3, in St. Paul's Church. Mr. T. Newboult conducted, and Mr. J. E. Parker at the organ gave valuable services. Mr. H. Crowther sung the baritone solos, those for soprano being sung by that section of the choir.

A selection from the B minor Mass was sung by the Grafton Philharmonic Society, at Clapham Congregational Church, on December 9. A contingent from the Bach Choir (including Dr. R. Vaughan Williams) assisted. The soloists were Miss Vera Devna, Miss Beatrice Foster, and Mr. Charles Young. Mr. Henry F. Hall conducted, and Mr. Reginald Redman accompanied at the organ.

A series of cantata performances on Sunday evenings by an augmented choir has been started at St. Nicholas, Coogee, Sydney, N.S.W., a crowded congregation attending for the first, when Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus' was given, conducted by Mr. G. G. Park, with Mr. David Brookes at the organ.

The Fylde branch of the Manchester Diocesan Church-Music Society held a Festival in Lytham Parish Church, on December 3, when the combined choirs of about two hundred voices sang admirably the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis of Charles Wood and Stanford's anthem, 'Lo, He comes.' Dr. F. H. Wood conducted, and Mr. Arthur Abbott accompanied.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at St. Stephen's, Bow, on December 6, conducted by Mr. W. E. Pepper. Miss G. S. Hancock played the organ. On Sunday, January 3, at 6.30, Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas' Oratorio will be sung.

Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, 'O come, let us sing,' was performed at Derby Road Baptist Church, Nottingham, on November 22, under the direction of Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson.

Too late for detailed notice we have received reports of performances of Brahms's 'Requiem,' by the Doncaster Musical Society, in Doncaster Parish Church; and in Exeter Cathedral by the Auxiliary Choir.

Mr. Herbert Hodge has been appointed Great Organist in the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, Palestine, Rhodes, and Malta.

We have received from the Oxford University Press 'A Kalendar of Hymns A. & M., and the English Hymnal for 1926'—the thirtieth issue of this useful sixpenny annual.

RECITALS

Dr. A. W. Wilson, St. Alban the Martyr, Cheetwood, Manchester—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Minuet ('Samson'), Handel; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Grand Chœur, Guilmant; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry.

Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe, St. Peter's, Sudbury—Sonata No. 20, Rheinberger; Minuetto in B flat, Handel; Fugue in C, Bach; Scherzo, Hollins.

Mr. R. Owen Terrington, St. George's, Leeds—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Allegretto in B minor, Lemare; Prelude, 'La Demoiselle Elue,' Debussy; Rhapsody No. 2, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Houldsworth Hall, Manchester—Minuet Gothique, Boëllmann; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Festal Toccata, Baynon.

Mr. J. Spencer, St. Mark's, —— (?)—Rhapsody, Rowley; Chorale Preludes, 'Worcester,' Ivor Atkins; 'University,' Grace; Tonus Peregrinus, Harrison; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; Postlude in C, Alcock.

Mr. H. V. Spanner, St. Lawrence Jewry—Aria in F, Bach; 'Pignus Futuræ,' Mozart; Sonata No. 2 (first movement), Rheinberger; Bridal March and Finale, Parry.

Mr. George Ryan, Hornsey Parish Church—March Pontificale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Choral No. 3, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach.

Mr. Paul Rochard, St. Mary's, Broughton Astley—Symphony No. 5 (first and last movements), Widor; 'April Song,' Wolstenholm; Passacaglia, Reger.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—Variations on 'Edina,' C. W. Pearce; Legend, Grace; Gothic March, Salome; Vision, Rheinberger.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Organ Concerto No. 2, Handel; slow movement from Pianoforte Concerto, Tchaikovsky; Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Park Avenue Primitive Methodist Church, Northampton—Sonata No. 7 (Andante and Finale), Rheinberger; Adagio, Bach; 'The Curfew,' Horsmann; Postlude in G minor, Stanford.

Dr. William Prendergast, Winchester Cathedral—Chorale Prelude, 'Farewell, henceforth,' Bach; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Chant Seraphique, Guilmant; Rêverie on 'University,' Grace; Kiev Processional, Moussorgsky.

Mr. Maurice Popplestone, All Saints', Weston-super-Mare—Sonata No. 1, Borowski; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme; Evening Song, Bairstow.

Mr. James M. Preston, Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle-upon-Tyne — Symphony No. 3 (Allegro maestoso and Intermezzo), Vierne; Fugue à la gigue, Bach; Chant du Printemps, Bonnet; Prelude and Fugue in C, Saint-Saëns; Meditation in ancient tonality, Grace; Final, Franck.

Mr. Frederick J. Nott, St. Peter's, Melbourne—Two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Sonata (second and third movements), Elgar; Rhapsody No. 2, Saint-Saëns.

Miss Doris Marshall, St. Andrew's, Nottingham—Lamentation, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. J. Roland Middleton, Mold Parish Church—'Come now, Saviour of the Gentiles,' Bach; 'Pilgrim's Progress' (Parts 10 and 11), Austin; Lament, Middleton.

Mr. Arthur Meale, Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster—Organ Sonata No. 5 (Scherzo, Chorale, and Fugue), Guilmant; Overture, 'A Midsummer Night's Dream'; Sonata in A, Borowski; Festal Toccata, Baynon; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn.

Dr. H. S. Middleton, Truro Cathedral—Three Chorals, Franck; Organ Concerto in B flat, Handel; Toccata in F, Bach; Introduction and Fugue (Concerto No. 1), Harwood.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Alban-the-Martyr, Westcliff—Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Scherzetto, Vierne; Trio in C minor, Bach; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow.

Mr. Ralph T. Langdon, St. John-the-Evangelist, Edinburgh—Kyrie Eleison, Karg-Elert; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Sonatas Nos. 5 and 6, Rheinberger; Lament, Sowerbutts.

Rev. G. S. Holmes, St. John-the-Evangelist, Upper Norwood—Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Sonata No. 3, Rheinberger; Chorale-Fantasia on 'Darwall's 148th,' Darke.

Mr. Leonard Henniker, St. Andrew's, Nottingham—Symphony No. 5 (third movement), Widor: Chorale Prelude, 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Sonata No. 20 (Finale), Rheinberger.

Mr. J. T. Horne, Unitarian Church, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin—Sonatas Nos. 6 and 12, Rheinberger; 'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; Concerto No. 6, Handel; Choral No. 3, Franck; Intermezzo, Stanford; Passacaglia, Bach.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Walter Blake, choirmaster and organist, St. Michael and All Angels, North Kensington.

Mr. W. Chapman Crouch, choirmaster and organist, Sutherland Avenue Wesleyan Church, Paddington, W.9.

Mr. Sidney J. Coates, choirmaster and organist, Holy Trinity, Clifton, Ashbourne, Derby.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, choirmaster and organist, Middleton Parish Church, Lancs, and musical adviser to the Stretford Education Committee.

Points from Lectures

Swansea was not attracted when Sir Walford Davies tried to set the people wondering what would be the answer to his query, 'Three Musical Minds—Who can they be?' The lecture itself, given at University College, was interesting enough, but instrumental trios do not attract locally. The illustrations were Handel's Sonata in E major, Beethoven's Trio in E flat, and Brahms's three Variations from the Trio in C major. These did not solve the riddle. The three great minds in music, the lecturer said, were the composer's, the performer's, and the listener's. The essential point was to find out how music moved these minds. There were three things of constant interest to the mind of Shakespeare, Michael Angelo, and Beethoven: (1), the vitality of the big artist; (2), the sense of mastery or control, and mastery in over-leaping obstacles; and (3), that single touch of exquisite wonderment. The talk became unconventional, and Sir Walford wandered off to the gramophone and jazz, and a little grumble that he was glad if he got half a roomful of people to a lecture in Wales, whereas in England he spoke to thousands.

Swansea had had a chamber music evening in the week preceding the above lecture, and as it did not conclude until eleven o'clock, people may have looked askance at announcements of the same sort. Mr. Leigh Henry's subject was 'Nationality in Music,' and he claimed much for Wales. 'The Celt and Welsh,' he said, 'were all we could speak of to-day as civilisation.' Dr. Vaughan Thomas, the lecturer added, showed the dawn of Wales, and three of that composer's songs were sung. Other illustrations were taken from Mozart, Scriabin, Debussy, Rimsky-Korsakov, and Byrd.

Sir Richard Terry addressed the University of London Catholic Society at Birkbeck College on Tudor music. In the direction of Church music, Sir Richard said that in spite of all the troubles of the 16th century there was a genuine continuity in Church music. That was due to Elizabeth's having practically made a law of her own regarding musicians, whom she protected as part of her own domestic property. Tallis, for instance, was made a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and so escaped the usual penalties.

That 'Music had done more than anything else in the world to reveal heaven to the human being,' was one of the leading phrases in a lecture by Mr. Rutland Boughton at Huddersfield Town Hall. Other theses advanced were that Bach showed music to have unity as well as contrast—After Bach, orchestral colour was introduced—Beethoven made music the expression of real living humanity and impulse—Wagner brought music into the real world of human beings.

In another lecture, at York, Mr. Boughton objected to personality in music. Composers, he said, should write for the glory of their art, and not impress their personality so greatly. Ugly music was doomed, and would be sooner if only audiences were honest and really said what they liked. The speaker qualified his censure of the taste for foreign music by saying that the best British work was not up to the standard of the best German, and never would be until we translated our English ideas into music and left foreign music to interpret foreign ideas.

Music is taking its turn in the courses of lectures which are given at the University of Aberdeen. It happens that the course coincides with the opening of a new hall given by Viscount and Viscountess Cowdray, for the encouragement of art and music. The first music course is being given by Mr. Willan Swainson, on the history of music, starting with the second period, that of polyphony. It was, he said, a choral age, while the present time was the instrumental age. The study of the former would wonderfully increase our sympathy with the modern musician. We should perceive clearly the difference, whether in composition or interpretation, between mere parade and feeling for empty effect on the one hand, and the sincere striving for the truest and noblest form of utterance on the other. We should no longer be irritated by the new men who wrote 'new music,' for we should know that right down the ages 'new music' had ever been the cry of the visionary musician. But, having been taught by study that the only new music which could hope to remain new was that whose originality was superimposed upon the sure foundation of the old, we should be able to distinguish pure and true art from that which was merely disordered sound.

Mr. Gustav Holst, lecturing at Bristol University Buildings, recalled the recent remark of a judge that he would like all children who were learning music to be drowned. Mr. Holst's experience was that all but one in a thousand of the general populace had a natural sensitiveness to music. The difficulty was that education in bad music was one of the most successfully commercialised forms of education. Children heard bad music—sung by the nurse—the moment they were placed in the cradle for the first time. He had a great admiration for the best of Mendelssohn's music, but when people were married they heard bad music played in a wedding march. As to what was played at funerals, perhaps he had better say nothing. The lecture had special reference to Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony. The composer first wrote the Symphony in the form of a pianoforte duet, and asked the Misses Lasker and Day to play it through to him several times. He then went home and completed the work, scored in form for orchestra.

In a survey of the evolution of chamber music down to the time of Bach, which Sir Henry Hadow gave in the Great Hall of Leeds University, the lecturer spoke of it as a development from the madrigal. When the vocal parts became more and more difficult to sing, the madrigal singers of the 16th century called in players on viols to double the parts, and from this they passed to a stage when the viols were left to speak for themselves. Sir Henry felt that we had lost a good deal in parting with the ideal softness in music that was prevalent in Elizabeth's day.

In a short report of a lecture given by Mr. W. A. Margerison, the Preston Herald mentions the subject of the lecture nine times as Crieg. One of the illustrations was No. 1 Suite of Peer Cynt. J. G.

BACH AT THE LEYS SCHOOL

'If it should come about that the Cantatas are performed publicly, but at the same time fall into disuse in domestic circles, in which the first enthusiasm for Bach sprang up about a century ago, we should have won only half the victory.' So Schweitzer. The domestic use of Bach's Church Cantatas is the ideal of Mr. J. F. Shepherdson, director of music at the Leys School, Cambridge. Mr. Shepherdson so organizes his music that no boy need leave school without some acquaintance with J. S. B., nor without some idea of the delight which is to be extracted from him once one has got used to the contrapuntal idiom, and learned to enjoy a rhythm which is less explosive than Beethoven or modern jazz, but is no less compelling. Every year Mr. Shepherdson gives a Bach programme in the School Chapel, at which the choir of boys, without magistral aid, perform Chorales and florid choruses from the Cantatas, to the accompaniment of amateur strings recruited from an obliging University, and reinforced by professional players for the obsolete or more remote obbligato instruments. It is not a purely domestic occasion, it is true, for privileged visitors are admitted, but it is intended primarily for the School.

Last year (November 29), to provide a contrast to the programme of 1924—which was full of brilliant things with trumpets and drums—the idea behind all five works performed was that of eventide, the Cantata 'Bide with us' being the most important work chosen. But another Cantata, 'I will my burden gladly carry,' of which four out of five numbers are for bass solo (Mr. Clifford Lathlean), illustrated the eventide of life, and the longing for death which inspired so much of Bach's best music. An accompanied recitative, remarkable for the vividness of its description of life's stormy voyage, the towering billows of grief and pain, and the disembarcation on 'that fair shore which is my heavenly home,' was the most striking piece of music heard, and it was followed by a fast, joyous aria with oboe obbligato. All the obbligati of the programme were for double-reed instruments, a fact which gave a somewhat sombre colouring to an already sober scheme. It was, perhaps, a rather stern programme for boys, as it contained nothing that had any superficial attractiveness, but its homogeneity carried it through, and left the audience refreshed and more rather than less attentive at the end. Mr. Shepherdson's boys mastered Bach's idiom very well, though the long, sustained phrases of the Chorales gave them more difficulty than the florid choruses. The other soloists were Mr. T. Purvis, who has a smooth voice suited to Bach but the wrong style of singing, and Miss Millicent Russell, to whom Bach can be entrusted with entire safety. Mr. Bernhard Ord played the organ, Mr. Shepherdson conducted, and some very full and suggestive programme notes were written by a local Bach enthusiast, Dr. E. H. Ezard.

F. S. H.

A NATIONAL OPERA TRUST

A meeting was held on December 9, at Westminster Central Hall, to inaugurate the formation of a trust to encourage opera and to subsidise it by means of the income from a capital of £500,000, which the public is asked to subscribe. The Earl of Clarendon was in the chair (in the unavoidable absence of the Earl of Londonderry), supported by various notabilities, including the principals of the most important London colleges and academies of music. Indeed, the most promising feature of the meeting was the number of influential people who had come forward to give it a blessing. If these gentlemen do not succeed, it will not be because they have not cast their net far and wide. The Earl of Clarendon, in his opening speech, advocated opera as a national necessity to give scope to British composers and musicians generally. Opera, he said, was the best introduction to the higher forms of music. He read also messages from Mr. Winston Churchill and Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, regretting inability to attend, but expressing most hearty approval of the scheme and its aims. Mr. Clynes joined in commending the cause of opera to the public, and urged the necessity of the subsidy, which alone could enable opera to be produced at a cost that would bring it within the reach of 'the workers.' Thus spokesmen of all political parties have pledged themselves to support the movement. The main contention of the promoters stands beyond question or cavil. If public money is spent in the upkeep of museums, why not in the upkeep of a theatre? The one houses one art, as the other houses another art. If there is a public fund upon which trustees can from time to time draw to buy good pictures and encourage painting, why not another fund to buy operas and support music? The logic is unanswerable.

It is when we come to practical details that we cannot contemplate without misgiving the vague wording of the trust deed. The widest powers are given to the trustees to use the income for the encouragement of opera in Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions. Even if we had unlimited confidence in the wisdom and discretion of the trustees, even if their good intentions were supported by practical experience of opera, we should feel that some explanation is needed before the scheme can appeal to the vast public. Is there not a disproportion between the amount available (the capital is to be invested in gilt-edged securities) and the vastity of the British Empire? Half a million is a good lump of money, but the income of it at five per cent. is only £25,000—far too little if we mean to support the operas produced in a year from Aberdeen to Adelaide. No doubt these eminent men have something more definite in their mind. It is a pity they have not thought it worth while to take us into their confidence. There is only one way in which opera can be established in the country on a firm basis. It is the way in which you can establish anything, a theatre for the drama, an emporium, or a grand hotel—by combining capital and organization. The National Opera Trust is appealing for capital. If the distinguished politicians and financiers who appeared on the platform bestir themselves the capital should be forthcoming. If Mr. Winston Churchill were to devote to the cause a twentieth part of the income he derives from the entertainment tax in one year, that alone would give the promoters all the capital they ask. Organization, however, suggests more difficult problems. With it—given capital—one could move mountains. Without it even an income of millions can be frittered away without any real benefit to anybody.

B. V.

Among the series of lectures and classes for teachers arranged by the London County Council are four on music. Mr. H. V. Spanner gives ten on the 'Appreciation of Music and its Power of Emotional Expression' (Thursdays, at 6.0, from January 14, at St. Clement Danes' School, E.C.); Dr. John E. Borland six on 'Musical Training in Schools' (Mondays, at 6.0, from January 18, at Toynbee Hall, 28, Commercial Street, E.); Mr. James Bates, ten on 'Children's Voice-Culture and Class Singing' (Mondays, at 6.0, from January 18, at St. Marylebone Grammar School, 248, Marylebone Road, W.); and Miss Mabel Chamberlain five on 'Songs Suitable for School' (Tuesdays, at 6.30, from January 12, at St. Aloysius Convent School, 50, Clarendon Square, Euston). Particulars as to fees, &c., from the Education Officer, County Hall, Westminster.

London Concerts

BERNARD VAN DIEREN

To some it seemed a noble and generous action on the part of Mr. John Goss to undertake, entirely unaided, the heavy financial responsibility of the Van Dieren concert at Wigmore Hall on December 14; to others, the fact perhaps appeared quixotic. Why, these others may well have asked themselves, should one of the best of our younger singers, who might, if he chose, command good money at the ballad concerts, devote a hundred pounds or so of hard-earned fees to giving public testimony to his belief in an almost unknown composer? Why, indeed? To feel passionately about any music is distinctly démodé; 'amusing' is the highest adjective of praise permitted in the best circles. The fact that Van Dieren has been acclaimed as a great master by a small group of musicians who have had the privilege of studying each successive work from the manuscript, and so following his development during the last ten years has been said, in the London press, to have prejudiced the public against him. I do not myself believe that the general public accounts it a crime when someone who has found a treasure invites his fellow-citizens to share it with him; but I am, of course, quite willing to admit that it is the height of bad form for mere composers and singers to pronounce emphatically upon the merits of any man's work without waiting for the verdict of the august fraternity of the musical critics. It is now nearly nine years since Mr. Cecil Gray gave the first public concert of Van Dieren's work in this country. On that occasion official critical opinion was unanimously hostile; indeed, so great was the derision this music aroused in the corner of Wigmore Hall reserved for official criticism that an attendant had to be deputed to endeavour to mute its all-too-audible expression. Now, after several years of neglect, this 'mystery Dutch musician' has bobbed up again, and has been most effusively greeted as the arch-blackleg of the musical profession. He cannot be classified, he belongs to no recognised school, and as each of his works actually sounds quite different from any of the others, he is said to have no style. It is insinuated that only those who care for no other music can possibly care for his; when Mr. Gray had the temerity to include an appreciation of Van Dieren in his 'Survey of Contemporary Music,' one critic went so far as to declare that 'Mr. Gray can find nothing to admire in the whole range of modern music except the unpublished and unperformed works of Bernard Van Dieren'—entirely ignoring the laudatory essays on Delius, Bartók, Schönberg, and Sibelius, and the appreciative tributes paid to the best work of Strauss, Debussy, Ravel, and many other composers. The injustice of such methods of so-called criticism is apparent. Equally unjust are the methods of those who, baffled at the first contact with something new and strange, seek to conceal their inability to make head or tail of it in a cloud of meaningless verbiage—as, for example:

> While Franck misses his melody note by a tone, another slides on to it chromatically; Van Dieren, instead of writing the notes he means, will substitute others for them and let them stand uncorrected.

The general opinion of Van Dieren's work may be aptly summarized by saying (as Mr. Sydney Grew said of the general opinion of Delius some years ago) that it is divided, those who do not know his works disputing the judgments of those who do. At the risk of being told that I am arousing further prejudice against Van Dieren, I am bound to say that a hearing of several works which I have known intimately on paper for a long time only confirms my opinion that Van Dieren is one of the two or three composers now living who are destined to be ranked among the masters. In his best work we find embodied so many qualities which have in the near past been thought, absurdly enough, to be mutually exclusive. The classical tradition of good craftsmanship has come to be regarded as a mere cloak for the lack of real musical invention, on the one hand, while on the other, a range of harmonic combinations whose limit is determined solely by æsthetic considerations, without regard for any theoretical system, is thought to be incompatible with a work conceived on classical lines. Thus Van Dieren falls between two schools: the older and more academic, which should at least admire the intellectual power and consummate technical mastery displayed in his work, is unable to assimilate his harmonic combinations, while the younger and more 'advanced,' whom the harshest and most arbitrary discord-for-discord's-sake fails never to delight, is repelled by the emotional quality of Van Dieren's music and by the essential seriousness with which it is conceived and planned. But to those who could listen with unprejudiced ears the String Quartet No. 3 and the songs performed at Mr. Goss's concert, and the Serenata for nine instruments (flute, bass flute, oboe, bassoon, horn, euphonium, violin, viola, and double-bass), which was played at the Contemporary Music Club's concert on December 2, under the capable direction of Mr. Anthony Bernard, must have come as revelations of a new and exquisite beauty in sound. The sheer sensuous beauty of the sound is the quality that strikes an unprejudiced ear most forcibly at a first hearing of Van Dieren's music. It is this same quality—a rare one in the music of to-day—that makes the deepest impression on anyone who listens for the first time to one of the great Masses of the Tudor period. After a while one sees deeper into the music, and begins to appreciate the spirit that conceived it and the intellect that constructed it; but at first one is enchanted by the sound alone. This quality is largely to be accounted for—in Van Dieren and the Tudor composers alike—by the polyphonic nature of the music. There is little or no mere filling-up of chords, for every instrument has an independent line of melody to sing, and these lines of melody are always beautiful in themselves. In reverting to the methods of the older polyphonists, Van Dieren has recaptured not only the serenity and sweetness of their melodic line, but also their sense of continuity and their ability to create works that are all-of-a-piece from start to finish. So much of the music of the last two decades has been made up of short and violently-contrasted sections, which themselves consist chiefly of harmonic repetitions rather than linear development, that the extraordinarily homogeneous nature of Van Dieren's larger works has obscured their structure for some hearers whose apprehension of musical form is entirely dependent on violent rhythmic or dynamic contrasts. But those who find monotony in his polyphonic methods would most assuredly find it also in the greatest works of the 16th century.

Of the songs which were interpreted with great insight by Miss Megan Foster and Mr. John Goss, with the very sympathetic and skilful assistance of Miss Kathleen Long at the pianoforte, special mention must be made of the two fresh and charming spring songs, on poems by King James I. of Scotland and Charles d'Orléans : the lovely 'Balow'—quite perfectly sung by Miss Foster—and 'Weep you no more, sad fountains,' of which Van Dieren has achieved a setting that loses nothing by comparison with Dowland's—and to say this is to rank it among the world's great songs. The Kutcher Quartet carried out its exacting task commendably on the whole, though the rhythm was at times sadly lacking in incisiveness. A long concert concluded with an excerpt from 'The Tailor,' an opéra bouffe on a witty libretto by Robert Nichols, which was excellently performed by Mr. Goss and a small orchestra, conducted by Mr. John Barbirolli. P. H.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The third concert of the London Symphony Orchestra, on November 23, was conducted by Bruno Walter, and Pablo Casals was the soloist, so that a full hall was assured. Mr. Casals has long had London at his feet, and on this evening he again played Schumann's Violoncello Concerto as he alone knows how. Others have convinced us—the look of the music on paper has convinced us—that this is far from being among Schumann's best works. But on what footing is the excellence of music to be judged? If it is to be allowed the advantage of ideal performance, the Concerto must be judged a work of overflowing poetic loveliness and charm. Others prove that Schumann wrote awkwardly and with exorbitant difficulties for the 'cello. But nothing of the sort struck Casals, or distracted him from his serene meditation.

Bruno Walter conducted the C major Symphony of Schubert. This zestful, irrepressible musician has won the greatest favour in London, thanks to the tirelessness with which he has guided to the end the movements of the longest Wagnerian operas. His unflagging, busy watchfulness has become enormously appreciated. He has reached that happy but dangerous point where he can do nothing wrong in the public's view. His Schubert was acclaimed as a triumph. Some of the applause was, perhaps, meant for the music—music that has been so repeatedly labelled as long that people were innocently surprised at finding it not long at all. Ah, this is music, indeed. Pegasus in glorious career across the firmament !

Our grievance against Bruno Walter lay in his disbelief that the music's natural self could beguile us sufficiently. Through three whole movements he fussed to exasperation. He was pointing out this and heightening the effect of that. He meant well, this busy, brilliant little man. Some music no doubt wants some such touching-up—but not Schubert's. Walter's fussiness was rather a reflection on our perception, and even a quite stupid man does not want an explanation openly to declare itself addressed to the meanest intelligence. However, the tremendous, driving Finale beat the conductor's little games. Here there was so clearly nothing to do but to ride where he was driven, and as he did it very cheerfully and with good grace all went capitally. At the end of the concert came 'Till Eulenspiegel.' C.

There was more than ordinary anticipation at the beginning of the L.S.O. concert on December 7, for it was to reveal a wider aspect of Casals's musicianship. It is an unmistakable sign of the times that so many musicians who have achieved greatness as soloists should find it necessary to turn to conducting. The famous lines beginning, 'Be not afraid of greatness,' divide the great ones into three categories. A fourth must now be added to include those who have thrust greatness from them. It could not be but that some of Casals's authority and lofty thought would find its way through the sensitive response of the L.S.O. For my part, too much of it was felt in the 'Tragic' Overture of Brahms. Music so laboured and labouring as this, breaks down as soon as it is called upon to bear more than its own weight. But the 'Don Quixote' Variations cry out for some solid content, lest they be discovered to be hollow, empty vessels. Strauss lives on because of his conductors, and who will deny that many a conductor lives on because of Strauss? But Casals can do without Strauss; that was plain enough at the end of the concert, when he brought all the genius of his 'cello-playing to draw out the essential lyrical beauty of the 'Unfinished.' The phrasing of each instrumental line here was of that quality and shapeliness which we meet with only in fine singing. Perhaps Casals will surprise us one day as an accomplished Schubert singer !

And this brings me back to my original point : the essence of greatness is that it should be accumulated, then concentrated upon one single spot. Its culmination comes upon you unawares, and for a fleeting moment only. Disperse its intricate organization, and culmination is impossible. Casals, as conductor, yielded none of those still, small moments which are distilled by his 'cello playing.

The soloist in 'Don Quixote' was Gaspar Cassado, a pupil of Casals. His performance was a worthy homage.

There were two failures at this concert—the famous 'realisms' in the Strauss work. The 'sheep' suggested amateur buglers, and the wind-machine was like nothing more than the creaking of a swing-door. There was no good cause for either of these 'effects.' B. M.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

After opening its season with two brilliant concerts, the Royal Philharmonic Society gave us a rather hum-drum evening on December 3. Borodin's Symphony is a work of good character, barbarous enough without going so far as to offend drawing-room manners. But it has no tunes to bring away, except that belaboured eight-note figure in the first movement, which we never, never want to hear again. Dr. Malcolm Sargent, who is beginning to over-exert himself in bodily action, made a good account of the Symphony, and of the other works in the programme. For once it was the soloist who gave us the best moments of the concert. M. Jacques Thibaud played the Mozart E flat Violin Concerto with the right mixture of directness and expression.

The best orchestral playing of the season was enjoyed on November 21 when the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood, gave the 'Italian' Symphony. Whatever one may think of the work there is no doubt that it tests an orchestra more severely, say, than anything by Tchaikovsky. It is almost as searching as Mozart. The Concerto of the occasion was Dvorák's for violoncello, played by Madame Suggia. There was also a Symphony of Haydn in the programme.

Madame Suggia made her last appearance before her marriage at Queen's Hall on December 15, when she played the Haydn Concerto for the Audrey Chapman Orchestra. M.

LÉNER QUARTET

The Léner Quartet has undoubtedly added to its reputation by its recent series of recitals illustrating the historical development of quartet music. These players had done something of the kind before. This year, however, the programme was better chosen. The first recital included an English work of the Tudor period—a good choice, since the claims of the Tudor composers to be first in the field are now generally admitted by competent and unbiassed scholars abroad. No doubt where a mistaken patriotism prevails, fantastic arguments will be put forth to question their just title. We have known ingenious romanticists to maintain that the elements of romance were to be found first in Plato's 'Republic.' But these men are not scholars. 'Heed them not; glance and pass on.' There was also an English work in the modern programme of the last recital—Frank Bridge's Fantasy Quartet, which represented worthily enough the saner element in the modern movement. Of late years Bridge has shown an inclination to flirt with the advanced parties. We hope he will not carry the flirtation too far. His strength is in lyricism, and lyricism to be effective needs clearness no less than distinction. As for the playing, the Léner Quartet has never done anything finer than its performances of Mozart. Two evenings were devoted to him, and in both cases the playing was a sheer joy. In Brahms the execution seemed just a little below standard—probably because, like the rest of us, the Quartet has its good and bad days. On one occasion both the first and second violinists were playing on two 'Strads' of the same year, one of which had been lent by Mr. W. W. Cobbett. B. V.

'PRO ARTE' STRING QUARTET

The appearance of the 'Pro Arte' String Quartet from Belgium, at one of Mr. Gerald Cooper's concerts, excited a certain interest, for these players' fame had preceded them, and in Belgium quartet playing has always been an art which the best soloists have honoured. Rumour had not exaggerated their abilities. In modern music the 'Pro Arte' Quartet must rank with the foremost. The ensemble—which was put to some severe tests in a Quartet of Béla Bartók—was above praise. But the players opened the recital with a Quartet of Mozart, and their reading of this simplest and most direct music was, at best, not on the same level with their interpretation of modern composers. They seemed unable to divest themselves of the habit of making points, or to free their minds from anxiety and nervousness. They seemed inclined to hustle up matters, to 'register' effects in season and out of season. The one thing they could not (or would not) do was to let Mozart tell his own story in his own way. This is evidently a case of specialists who have given not their mind only, but their very heart to modernity. We shall hear them again with pleasure, whenever their programme includes the names of Ravel, Debussy, or even Reger. Mozart they will do well to leave alone. But it would be rather interesting to discover how Beethoven fares under such treatment. B. V.

ISOLDE MENGES

We have heard Miss Isolde Menges play better than she did at Queen's Hall, where she gave a concert in conjunction with the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Bruno Walter. One or two runs in the Beethoven Concerto went astray, and even in the Brahms—the finer performance of the two—there were anxious moments. It is just possible that these slight failings were due to the fact that Walter had his own ideas as to what this music should be, and did not seem at all inclined to fall in with the views of the soloist. This, of course, has nothing to do with his abilities as a conductor or with the appeal his readings may make to the public, critical or uncritical. It is a simple question of fact. His readings may be the best in the world, but they are his own—unlike Richter's or Nikisch's or Sir Henry Wood's, or indeed unlike those of any other conductor we have heard. The four taps of the drum which open the work, for instance, were played so slowly that for the moment we had the impression that this was not an 'individual' reading of the well-known Concerto, but yet another 'in memoriam' tribute. The orchestra in fact did not get into its stride before the first ff. Now, whatever were Miss Menges's sensations, it is certain that most others would have felt their hearts sink at being suddenly confronted with a brand new interpretation. We imagine the soloist wondering: 'What am I expected to do? Shall I fall in with the conductor's views or insist on my own? I know that if I accept his ruling I must jeopardise my work, as it is impossible to alter in one moment ideas formed in months if not years of preparation. On the other hand, if I insist on my right to interpret Beethoven, the performance must result in a tussle. In either case I must go through some trying experiences.' In the circumstances it must be admitted that Miss Menges came through the ordeal with considerable credit. B. V.

MOZART'S C MINOR MASS

The London Choral Society and Mr. Arthur Fagge keep up their habit of treading unfamiliar paths. They did a real service by producing for our curiosity Mozart's C minor Mass at Queen's Hall. Few of us had heard the work, and it will not in all probability be heard again for a long while. But parts of it are first-rate Mozart, and consequently it is proper for the world to be reminded from time to time of the existence of the work.

The Society used the edition of Alois Schmitt, which was made for the revival of the Mass by the Dresden Mozart Society in 1901. Schmitt's preface was quoted in the programme. It is not at all a satisfactory statement. If Schmitt had intended to conceal what his editing had amounted to he could hardly have been more obscure. His words flow forth, but he never comes to the point of saying exactly whence he drew the music to complete Mozart's unfinished Creed—for the C minor Mass was, like the 'Requiem,' unfinished. Mozart began it at the time of his marriage. Handel influenced his choral-writing (Schmitt says Bach, too). In the Gloria there is something very like the theme of the Hallelujah Chorus. The Mass, still unfinished, was sung at Salzburg on August 25, 1783. The gaps (part of the Creed and the Agnus Dei) were filled in probably from other Church music of Mozart—but it is not known what, exactly. Eighteen months later Mozart quarried in the C minor Mass for material for his hastily compiled cantata, 'Davidde Penitente.' The Mass was published (as Mozart left it) in 1840, but it remained unsung until 1901.

Mozart left the Creed at 'Qui locutus est per prophetas' in G major, and Schmitt does not tell us whose are the modulatory bars that carry us in the E flat of the interpolated 'Credo in Unam Sanctam.' The 'Et Vitam,' likewise supplied, is a busy fugue on a dullish subject. Schmitt has used the 'Kyrie' music again for the 'Agnus Dei.'

Not the necessary additions, but the glaring inequalities of the completed portions, invalidate the work. Some of the choral numbers, above all 'Qui Tollis,' are Mozart at his grandest, but the solo music is frequently of an odd triviality and emptiness. The soprano's jump of two octaves in 'Christe eleison' is freakish. 'Laudamus te' (soprano) is the sort of music that dozens of composers of the rococo period were writing indiscriminately for Church and opera. 'Et incarnatus,' with its coloratura decorations and operatic cadenza, is really an amusing piece of Church music, à la Du Barry.

The soloists of the performance were Miss Dora Labbette, Miss Dorothy Moulton, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Harold Williams. Miss Moulton's improved technique was noticeable, but no one had quite the right art to cover up the weakness of the music. Mr. Topliss Green sang Brahms's 'Four Serious Songs' to a feebly orchestrated accompaniment.

C.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY SPECIAL CHOIR

The Westminster Abbey Special Choir sang on December 14, the choice of music ranging from Weelkes to Rachmaninov. There must be some shortcoming in the publicity given to these fine services, or surely the Abbey would have been overflowing that evening. It seems a great pity that when so much trouble has gone to the musical preparation, the public should not be there in the largest possible numbers to benefit by it.

The service opened with the setting of 'In Dulci Jubilo' of Pearsall, a name of which, in these days of a marked national revival in music, it is so surprising that we do not hear more. Stanford and Parry had a large share in the programme, the former with three of his 'Bible Songs,' and the latter with his fine setting of 'Never weather-beaten sail.' The Bach motet, 'The Spirit also helpeth us,' was admirably sung in the centre of the programme, but it is not music that can make the appeal of Bach's more passionate and more deeply felt works. An eight-part 'Hymn of the Cherubim,' by Rachmaninov, was distinctly effective—the writing of a man who knew what would best 'come off' in regard to cathedral acoustics. But Dr. Charles Wood's new motet, 'Glory and Honour,' was much more considerable stuff. Surely this is one of the finest pieces of a cappella writing of our time? If it did not make a great impression at the Gloucester Festival, it must have been that listeners were unduly jaded by the musical excesses usual at these functions.

P. W.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHOIR

The Civil Service Choir, which gave a concert under the direction of Mr. Rutland Boughton and Mr. A. Davies Adams at Central Hall, on December 2, resembles several other small choral societies in London inasmuch as it rather rushes into public performance with but too little preparation. The programme showed up one failing which exclusively unaccompanied singing entails, and that is limpness of rhythm. On the strength of this concert I can only say that it has the elements of a good choir. The tone was never less than pleasing, but the singers had not realised the interest and vividness that the appreciation of words can give to choral singing. The result was that a promising programme (twelve masterpieces of modern English part-song and other quite jolly things of the second rank) made a disappointing effect. Holst's 'This have I done for my true love' was one of the capital things of the programme, and we should well like to hear these people sing it again in a year or two's time. Mr. Angus Morrison played English pianoforte music that included a Toccata by Holst on a Northumbrian Pipe Tune which was, we fancy, a novelty. The new part-song, selected by competition, was a 'Song of Colours' by Alec Rowley.

C.

HAROLD BROOKE CHOIR

The Harold Brooke Choir (formerly the Novello Choir) gave its first concert in its new form on December 10, at Bishopsgate Institute. This useful hall is close to Liverpool Street Station. It appears worth while to mention that fact, for there was not the audience that the programme deserved—concert-goers, no doubt, imagining Bishopsgate to be somewhere in the wilds.

The programme included Bach's cantata 'Give the hungry man thy bread,' Gibbons's 'What is our life?' and modern pieces by Holst, Vaughan Williams, and others—altogether a dainty choice. The new choir invites more members, and is indeed not yet ideally balanced. But it contains some excellent voices, most notably in the sopranos and basses. In a way Gibbons's madrigal was the most exacting thing on the programme, or at least it was that the style of which the choir had least grasped. The singing was all too rigid and plodding, and also too little shaded. There was good choral singing in Bach, and the choir evidently enjoyed Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols'—as well it might.

The soloists in the cantata were Miss Maryan Elmar, Miss Cathcart Lynn, and Mr. Clifford Lathlean. Miss Elmar also sang Herbert Brewer's genial little set of Irish airs, 'A Sprig of Shamrock,' the first of which makes use of a particularly lovely old tune. Miss Cathcart Lynn, a newcomer, appealed to the ear with a contralto tone of beautiful and even quality, but her Bach-singing was too diffident and non-committal. In Gluck's 'Che faro,' later, she raised her eyes and head, and made a more vivid impression. Mr. Lathlean sang frankly and sensibly, if with a rather dry sort of tone. The chief instrumental piece was Holst's 'Fugal' Overture (oboe, Mr. W. S. Hinchliff; flute, Mr. W. S. Slater).

C.

OTHER CHORAL CONCERTS

The Oriana Choir was not in its best form throughout its Christmas concert at Æolian Hall, on December 15. There were some ragged edges here and there, and the quality of the tone did not endure some of the forcing that the singers gave it in climax. This by way of thanks for a first-rate concert, with a deal of rare good singing and a Kennedy Scott programme. Between the acts the English Folk-Dance Society gave us some folk-dancing for a delightful half-hour.

Mr. Kennedy Scott's other choir, the Philharmonic, gave its first concert of the season on November 30 and sang what was to these singers a new work, 'The Messiah.' The performance is reported to have been the best heard at Queen's Hall for many years—moderate praise in view of the facts. The solo singers were Miss Dora Labbette, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Robert Radford.

'The Messiah' was also sung by the Westminster Choral Society, at Central Hall, on December 3, Mr. Vincent Thomas conducting.

In the outer ring, the most notable choral performance has been that of 'The Kingdom,' given on November 28, at the Baths Hall, Croydon, by the Croydon Philharmonic Society. This Society is well trained in choral matters, and boasts an amateur orchestra of unusually professional gifts. So the performance under Mr. Alan Kirby, besides being expressive, could be heard without any aural distraction. Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Howard Fry were conspicuous among the soloists. Mr. W. H. Reed, who usually conducts the orchestra, led it.

'King Olaf' was performed on the same evening by the always competent Ealing Philharmonic Society, under Mr. E. Victor Williams.

Other concerts too numerous for detailed reference have taken place in the suburbs. Berlioz's 'Faust' was performed by the South London Philharmonic Society on November 21; 'Hiawatha' by Bromley Choral Society on November 24; 'A Tale of Old Japan' by the West Middlesex Musical Society on December 16. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane' served to open the season of the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society on December 5, under Mr. Hedgcock's direction. M.

SOME PIANISTS OF THE MONTH

There have been several recent recitals of more than common vitality and quality. But despite these virtues, they lead one to ask why it is, and where it is, that so many players fail to establish and maintain an atmosphere which is something apart from work-a-day experience. There must be some more definite reason than that of 'The prophet without honour,' &c., to account for the fact that it is more easy to fill a concert-room for our Continental visitors than for our home-grown pianists.

Have our visitors a wider intellectual outlook, a greater power of personal expression? Are they more spontaneous, less imitiative and academic? Perhaps so. It is a matter of common observation that their temperament and education enable them fully to express their feelings. With them, it is not 'bad form' to be individual. Given the same amount of original talent and equal technical training, it is more easy for a foreigner than an Englishman to 'arrive.' How few of our hundreds of students get as far as the concert-room, and of those that do, how few are able to create the atmosphere hoped for by their audience! There is enough and to spare of technical ability; but there seems to be a lack of intuition, cultivated imagination, and real personal conviction.

If we could have something more of the freshness of dawn, the glamour of sunset, the spaciousness of a moonlight and starry night, and less of what is all too frequent—a twelve o'clock noon effect, hard, clear-cut, devoid of character, all so obvious and commonplace—one feels that there would be a better future for pianoforte recitalists.

Surely there must be too much time devoted to overcoming technical difficulties, and far too little to cultivating the intelligent and imaginative attributes. There is no dearth of talent, but there is a very definite lack of insight and interpretation.

Mlle. Guiomar Novaes, a young Brazilian pianist, and rare visitor to London, has all the qualities of a fine pianist, with a strong conviction of what she wants to do and the ability to do it with grace and charm. Fluent and delicate in her readings of Chopin, she has power also to interpret the more severe themes of Beethoven. She plays with the ease and spontaneity of the finished artist, although one may not always agree with her temperamental representations.

Mr. Lamond, in concluding a series of six Beethoven recitals at Queen's Hall, played in a manner which tended towards dreariness and monotony. There was a lack of rhythm, and the tempi of some of the movements seemed abnormally slow. Perhaps he was tired after his strenuous programmes, and the mood of the 'Funeral March,' with which he opened his last concert, appeared to permeate all the succeeding numbers. The programme was a big one—four Beethoven Sonatas, including Op. 109, and the fifteen Variations!

Miss Beatrice Snell and Mr. F. W. Holloway opened their two-pianoforte concert with great spirit and at great pace with Mozart's Sonata in D. Obviously enjoying it, they succeeded in carrying their audience with them—though one member, at least, refused to follow quite as far as the fortissimo. A criticism of loud passages is almost inevitable if one's ears are sensitive. These two capable players exceeded the limit allowable for producing loud tone, and the music tended to become noise. How rare it is that we escape hearing this hammering of loud passages! Even one pianist can achieve tremendous results, but two . . . ! One's ears refuse to convey any message of beauty or pleasure to the mind, but on the contrary, repelled and upset, tell us so emphatically. A first performance of a composition by Mr. Holloway, the main theme of which is reminiscent of Chopin, proved a well-balanced piece of writing for two pianofortes.

The Palladium was crowded for M. Cortôt's last recital. He is a temperamental pianist, possessed of poetic feeling and great delicacy of touch. His interpretation of the twenty-four Chopin Preludes was more convincing than the descriptive titles he had invented for them. It was delightful to hear Schumann's Études Symphoniques, including the five Posthumous Études, but it is doubtful whether their inclusion enhances the value of a work which is so complete in its original form. Moussorgsky's 'Pictures from an Exhibition' were played with much charm and humour.

Mr. William Murdoch, a pianist brilliant and straightforward rather than imaginative, had arranged an interesting programme for his recital at Wigmore Hall—three incomparable Bach Chorale Preludes and the D minor Toccata, arranged and embroidered by Szanto and Busoni, Franck's Prelude, Aria, and Finale, some lighter Spanish pieces, a final

(Continued on p. 56.)

O Trinity, most Blessed Light

MOTET FOR EVENING USE (UNACCOMPANIED)

Words by J. M. Neale, from the Latin,
(Hymns A. & M. No. 14, verses 1 and 2)

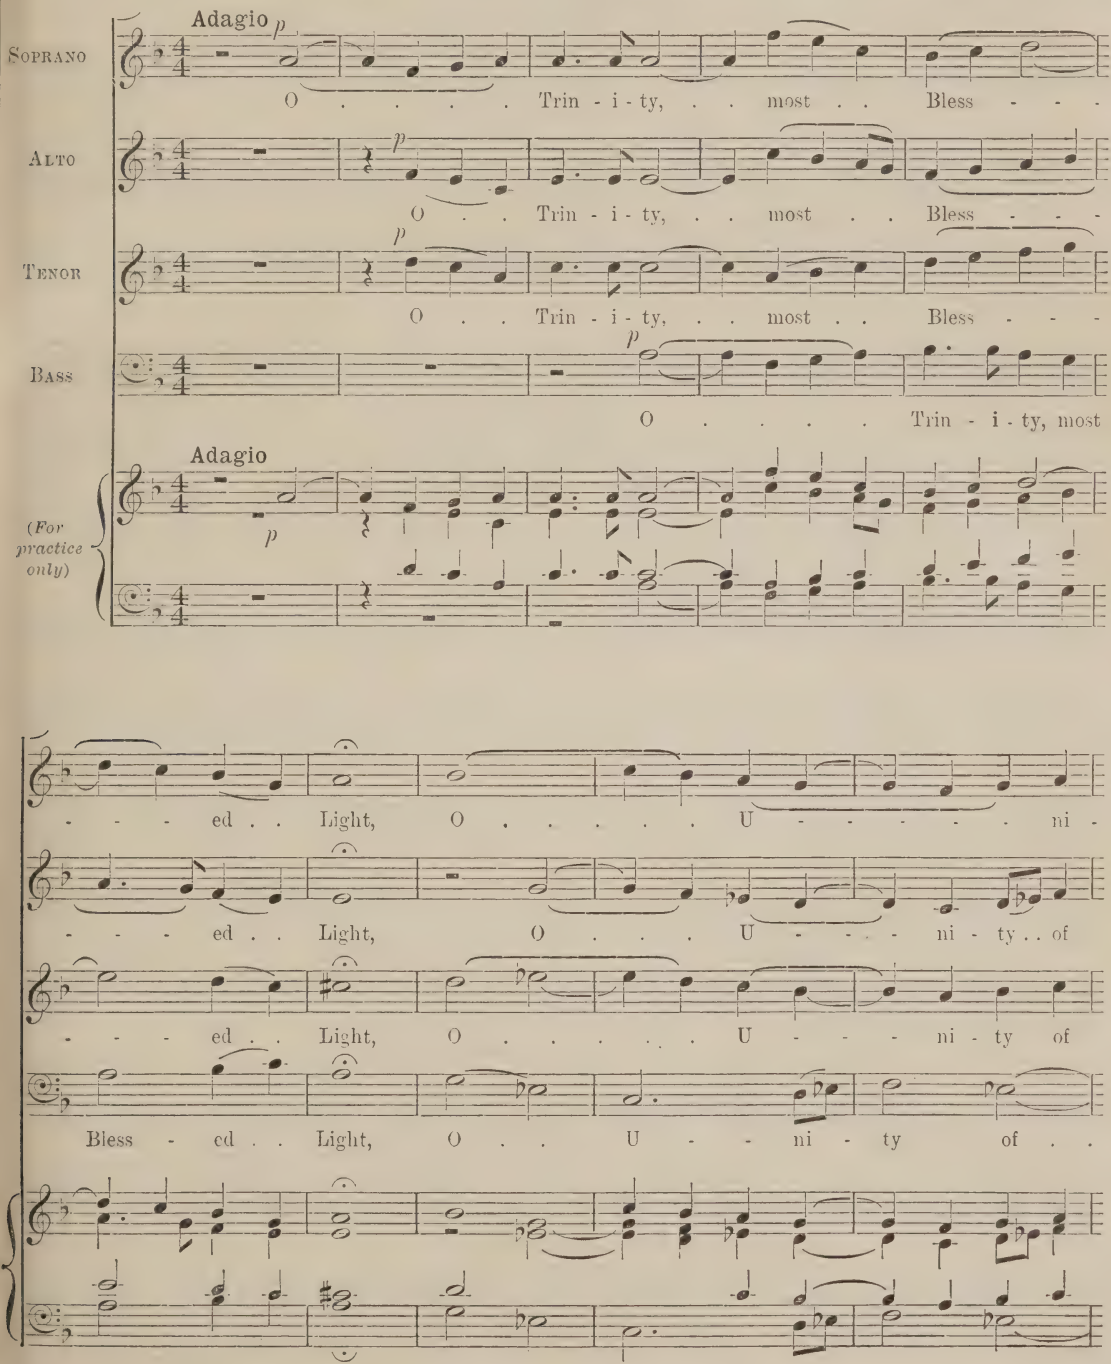
Music by Healey Willan

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Adagio
Soprano
O . . . . . Trin - i - ty, . . most . . Bless - - -
Alto
O . . Trin - i - ty, . . most . . Bless - - -
Tenor
O . . Trin - i - ty, . . most . . Bless - - -
Bass
O . . . . Trin - i - ty, most
Adagio
(For practice only)
- - - ed . . Light, O . . . . . U - - - - - - ni -
- - - ed . . Light, O . . . U - - - ni - ty . . of
- - - ed . . Light, O . . . . . U - - - ni - ty of Bless - ed . . Light, O . . U - - ni - ty of . .

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

mp
- ty of pri - - - - mal . . Might, As
mp
pri - - - - - - - mal Might, As now . . . . the
mp pri - - - - - - - mal . . Might, As now . . the fie - ry
mp
. . . pri - - - - mal Might, As now . . the fie - ry . .
now the fie - - - ry sun . de - parts, Shed Thou Thy beams, shed . .
fie - ry . . sun de - parts, Shed Thou . . . . . Thy sun de - parts, Shed . . . . Thou Thy beams . . . . with - sun de - parts, Shed . . Thou . . Thy beams with -
dim. e rall.
. . . Thou Thy beams with - in our hearts, . . with - in our hearts.
dim. e rall.
beams with - in our hearts, shed Thou Thy beams with - in . . our hearts.
dim. e rall.
- in our hearts, . . shed Thou Thy beams . . with - in our hearts.
dim. e rall.
- - - - - - in our hearts, with - in . . our . . hearts.
dim. e rall.

Più mosso
f
mp
To Thee our morn-ing song . . . of . . praise, To Thee our
To Thee our morn-ing song . . . of praise, To Thee our
To Thee our morn - ing . . song . . . of praise, To Thee our
To Thee our morn - ing . . song of praise, To Thee our Più mosso
eve - - - - ning . . prayer we . . raise, ... our eve - - - - ning . . . . prayer . . . we raise, our eve - - - - ning . . prayer . . . we raise, our eve - - - - ning prayer we . . . raise, our rall. . . . e . . . . dim.
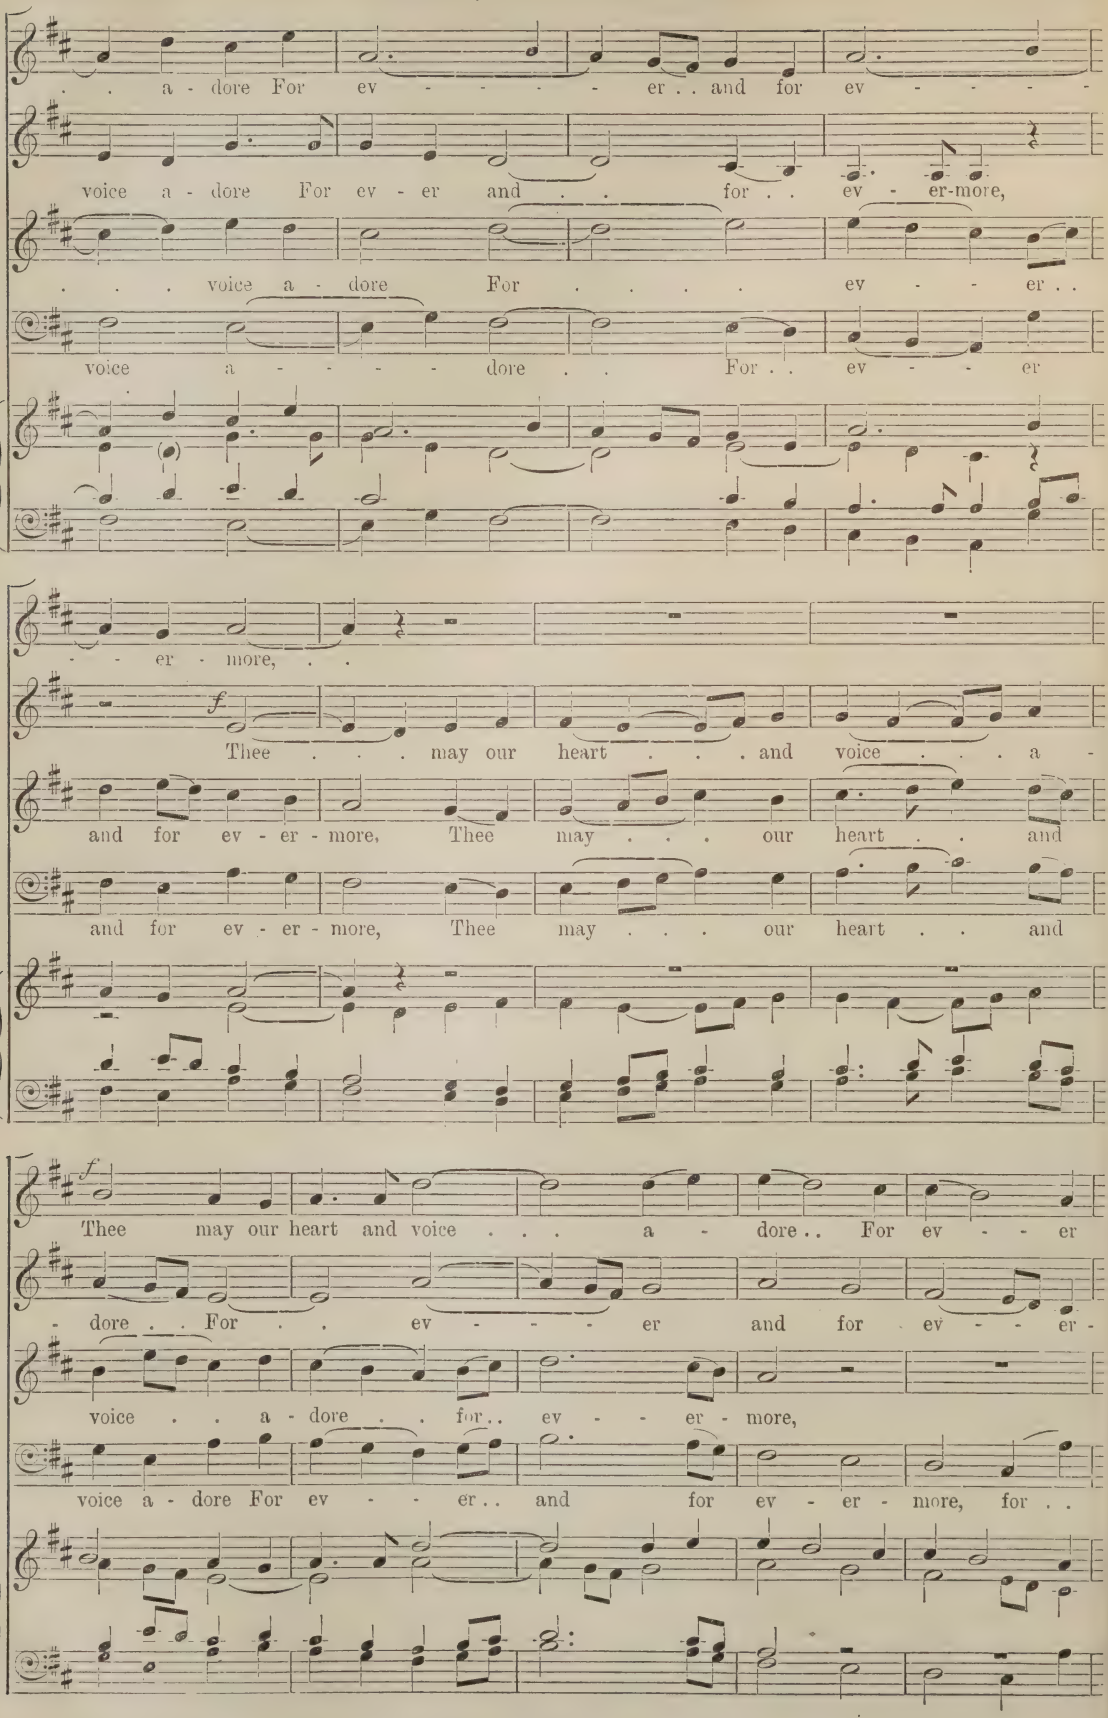
f a tempo
prayer . . . . . we raise; Thee may our heart and voice . . .
eve - ning prayer . . . we raise; Thee may our heart and . .
eve - ning . . prayer . . . we raise; Thee . . . may our heart and . . .
eve - ning prayer . . . we raise; Thee may our heart and



. . a - dore For ev - - - - - er . . and for ev - - - - - voice a - dore For ev - er and . . for . . ev - er-more,
. . . voice a - dore For . . . . ev - - - er . .
voice a - - - - - dore . . For . . ev - - - er
- - er - more, . .
f
Thee . . . may our heart . . . and voice . . . a - and for ev - er - more, Thee may . . . our heart . . and
and for ev - er - more, Thee may . . . our heart . . and
f
Thee may our heart and voice . . . a - dore . . For ev - - - er
- dore . . For . . ev - - - - er and for ev - - - er - voice . . a - dore . . for . . ev - - - er - more, voice a - dore For ev - - - er . . and for ev - er - more, for . .

and . . for ev - er - more, for . ev - - - er and . . for
- more, for . . ev - - - er and for ev - er - more, for
f
for . . . . ev - - - - - er and for ev - - - er - ev - - er and . . for . . ev - - - er - more, for ev - er
cres.
ff
ev - - - er more, for ev - - - er - more, Thee . . . may our cres.
ff
ev - - - er and . . . for ev - - - er - more, Thee . . . may our cres.
ff
- more, . . for ev - - - - - - - er - more, Thee . . may our cres.
ff
and . . . for ev - - - - - - - er - more, Thee . . may our cres.
ff

f allargando heart and voice a - dore For ev - er, for ev - - - - -
f heart and voice a - dore For ev - er, for ev - er and for
f heart and voice a - dore For ev - er, for ev - er and for
f heart and voice a - dore For ev - er, for ev - - er - allargando
f
- - - - - er and for ev - - er - more, . . . for ev - - ev - er - more, for . . . ev - - er . . and for ev - er - more, for ev - - - - er and . . . . for . .
ff
*
- more, . . for . . . . . ev - - - - - - - er

* 2nd Bass ad lib.

er and . . ev - - - - - - er - more,
ev - - - - - er - more, for . . ev - er - more,
ff
ev - er - more, ev - - - - - - - - - er - more, for
ff
and for ev - - - - - - - - - - - - er - more, for ff
molto rall.
for ev - er - - more.
ff
for ev - er, for . . ev - - - - er - more.
molto rall.
ff
for ev - - er and for ev - - - - - - er - more.
molto rall.
ev - er and . . for ev - - - - - - - - er - more.
molto rall.
ev - er - more, and for . . ev - - - - - er - more.
ff molto rall.

(Continued from p. 48.)

group of Chopin, and the inevitable Liszt. His playing of the Toccata was perhaps the most satisfying of the afternoon. Fear of that unforgivable fault, dullness, sometimes drives pianists to the other extreme, and Mr. Murdoch appeared to be thus driven when playing the Franck Prelude. It was taken in a light-hearted, if not superficial manner, and lacked dignity and breadth. Mr. Murdoch's qualities are more fully brought out in concerted music. Solid and accomplished, he is lacking in that indefinable quality which may be described as vision.

Miss Denise Lassimonne is a gifted and musicianly young pianist. At her recital at Wigmore Hall, Chopin's G minor Ballade proved to be as yet somewhat beyond her powers, but she played a Mozart Sonata and Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue in a convincing and finished manner, the Fugue of the latter being particularly well built up. D'A.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Mr. John Coates gave his second concert at the New Chenil Galleries, Chelsea, on November 27. The programme was 'from Purcell to Parry.' It was full of good things. We wish Mr. Coates would publish his repertory. There is a lack of a convenient volume of the classic English songs. Not even Purcell's songs are adequately published. Mr. Coates made a jolly choice from the 18th century. He sang the beautiful 'Self-banished' of Blow with fine seriousness; 'Golden Slumbers' with a wonderfully sustained softness; and two songs of Leveridge, 'Maidens, beware' and 'To all you ladies,' with all his irresistible fun. The later 18th century could not show quite such taking music. Storace's 'Pretty creature' is over-rated. As for the 19th century, Mr. Coates could find only two names, Hatton and Parry—the latter an under-estimated song-writer, still.

Mr. Parrish Williams gave three recitals at Æolian Hall. He possesses a fine, unforced voice, which is, after all, a singer's first need. His general technique, then, enabled him to build up effects without strain, and no little intelligence was used therein. Having done so much, Mr. Parrish Williams might do more. One felt that technical considerations were dictating the limits of his art. The range was not small. Still, the singer should aim at a greater freedom—a freedom to follow his every casual fancy, or at least give the impression of as much. Some soft singing in Schumann was what he did best at his first concert.

Mr. Kenneth Ellis sang Schumann's 'Poet's Love' at Grotrian Hall. It was a curious choice for a bass. He had a very fair success, but something less than a triumph. Arias of Handel ('Si, tra i ceppi') and Verdi (from 'Don Carlos') suited better this firm, resonant voice, which boasts a capital top E flat, and should at a later stage be useful in opera. Its expression was not flexible or finely shaded enough for Schumann's lyrics.

The 'Old Vic.' operatic performances are not only a source of intense pleasure to the frequenters; they also are giving experience to some very interesting young singers. Such a performance as that of 'Rigoletto,' on December 3, had no need to ask for any special indulgence. It was well sung all round, and the lesser parts, such as Maddalena (Miss Gladys Palmer), Sparafucile (Mr. Arnold Beauvais), and Monterone (Mr. Frank Sale) were in the hands of performers gifted enough to deserve principal parts when the occasion arises. Miss Joan de Ferrars was Gilda. She looked 'pretty as a picture,' and had a voice to match. True, her wide vowels were too 'white,' and her diction was mannered. It was singing that would have better suited the Italian text. Another thing: she must modify the hardness of her high notes. But her coloratura decorations were good.

The Rigoletto was Mr. Herbert Simmonds, who is a useful actor and a singer of talent. On various details he was open to criticism, but nothing was fundamentally wrong. Above E flat he was weak, but his middle notes were excellent. Rigoletto should, of course, be a high baritone, with brilliant, tenor-like top notes. In that direction, and in the acquiring of a greater physical vehemence (for instance, in the appeal to the courtiers), this singer may advance. He was best in recitative and semi-recitative. His expressive inflections here, and some resolute tones at other times, proved that the mind of a true opera singer is in him.

The Duke was a newcomer, Mr. Heddle Nash, and it was a pleasure to welcome a very beautiful tenor voice. Every word he sang could be understood. Yet he was not laboriously 'making' his diction. He was singing properly, and consequently the words slipped naturally into place. His success brought home the motto, 'Take care of your breath, and the words will take care of themselves.' This sounds like heresy, perhaps, to some. But the writer feels strongly on this point—having to listen to so many recital-givers whose singing seems to be some sort of phonetic exercise, studiously and uselessly verbal, because not song-like. Mr. Nash's wide throat and free jaw gave him command of a caressing legato, and at the end of the last Act one felt that the newcomer should be, barring accidents, one of the eminent lyric tenors of the future H. J. K.

Letters to the Editor

CHORALISM

SIR,—I have read the article in your December issue by 'Feste.' I do not intend to shower him with half-bricks, as he expects and deserves, but I want to show how foolish it is to compare the performance of Holst's 'Choral' Symphony at the Town Hall, Leeds, with the performance of the same Symphony given at the Royal Philharmonic concert at Queen's Hall on October 29.

First I would point out that owing to the limited accommodation of the orchestral platform and to the expense of conveying a large body of singers from Leeds to London, the choir at Queen's Hall consisted only of two hundred and fifty singers, and was not the full Leeds chorus. (I would also mention in passing that every one of these singers voluntarily gave up his time without fee or reward to take part in this concert.)

The orchestra at the performance in the Town Hall, Leeds, was the London Symphony Orchestra, and the players had three rehearsals of the work for orchestra alone, and three rehearsals with the choir. The orchestra at Queen's Hall was with few exceptions composed of entirely different instrumentalists, and I am informed that they had only one rehearsal of this difficult work.

When the choir arrived at Queen's Hall, at about 1.30 p.m., on the day of the concert, there was no opportunity for a rehearsal. Surely this is no fault of the choir's. The orchestra was not there. How can any sensible person expect a performance under these circumstances—the choir singing accompanied by a strange orchestra, and without rehearsal—to be as good as that given at Leeds?

The Musical Times. EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. January 1, 1926

No. 1428 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK (SECOND SERIES) Price (4d.)

THE DRUMS OF FREEDOM

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO (AD LIB.) AND CHORUS

WORDS BY DOROTHY BEVAN PARRY

MUSIC BY

HERBERT E. CRIMP

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Alla marcia. ♩ = about 104
f
SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO, OR FEMALE CHORUS
mf
Thou - sands and thou - sands of tramp - ing feet With a
mp
thou - - sand drums are.. blend - ing;
Thou - sands and thou - sands of
tr
tr
Ped.
* Ped.
*

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

Also published as a Unison Song in NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, No. 1188 lips re - peat The song of the way we're wend - ing.

sf
Ped.
*
f
Wi - der and wi - der the white road gleams, As the mile - stones fall be - -
f
cres.
- hind.. us; On, ev - er on, to our land of dreams We must cres.
f
poco rit.
a tempo
attacca
march, ere the dawn shall find us.
f
poco rit.
a tempo
senza rall.
sf
sf sf
mf
Down the road of Free - dom who will march with maestoso
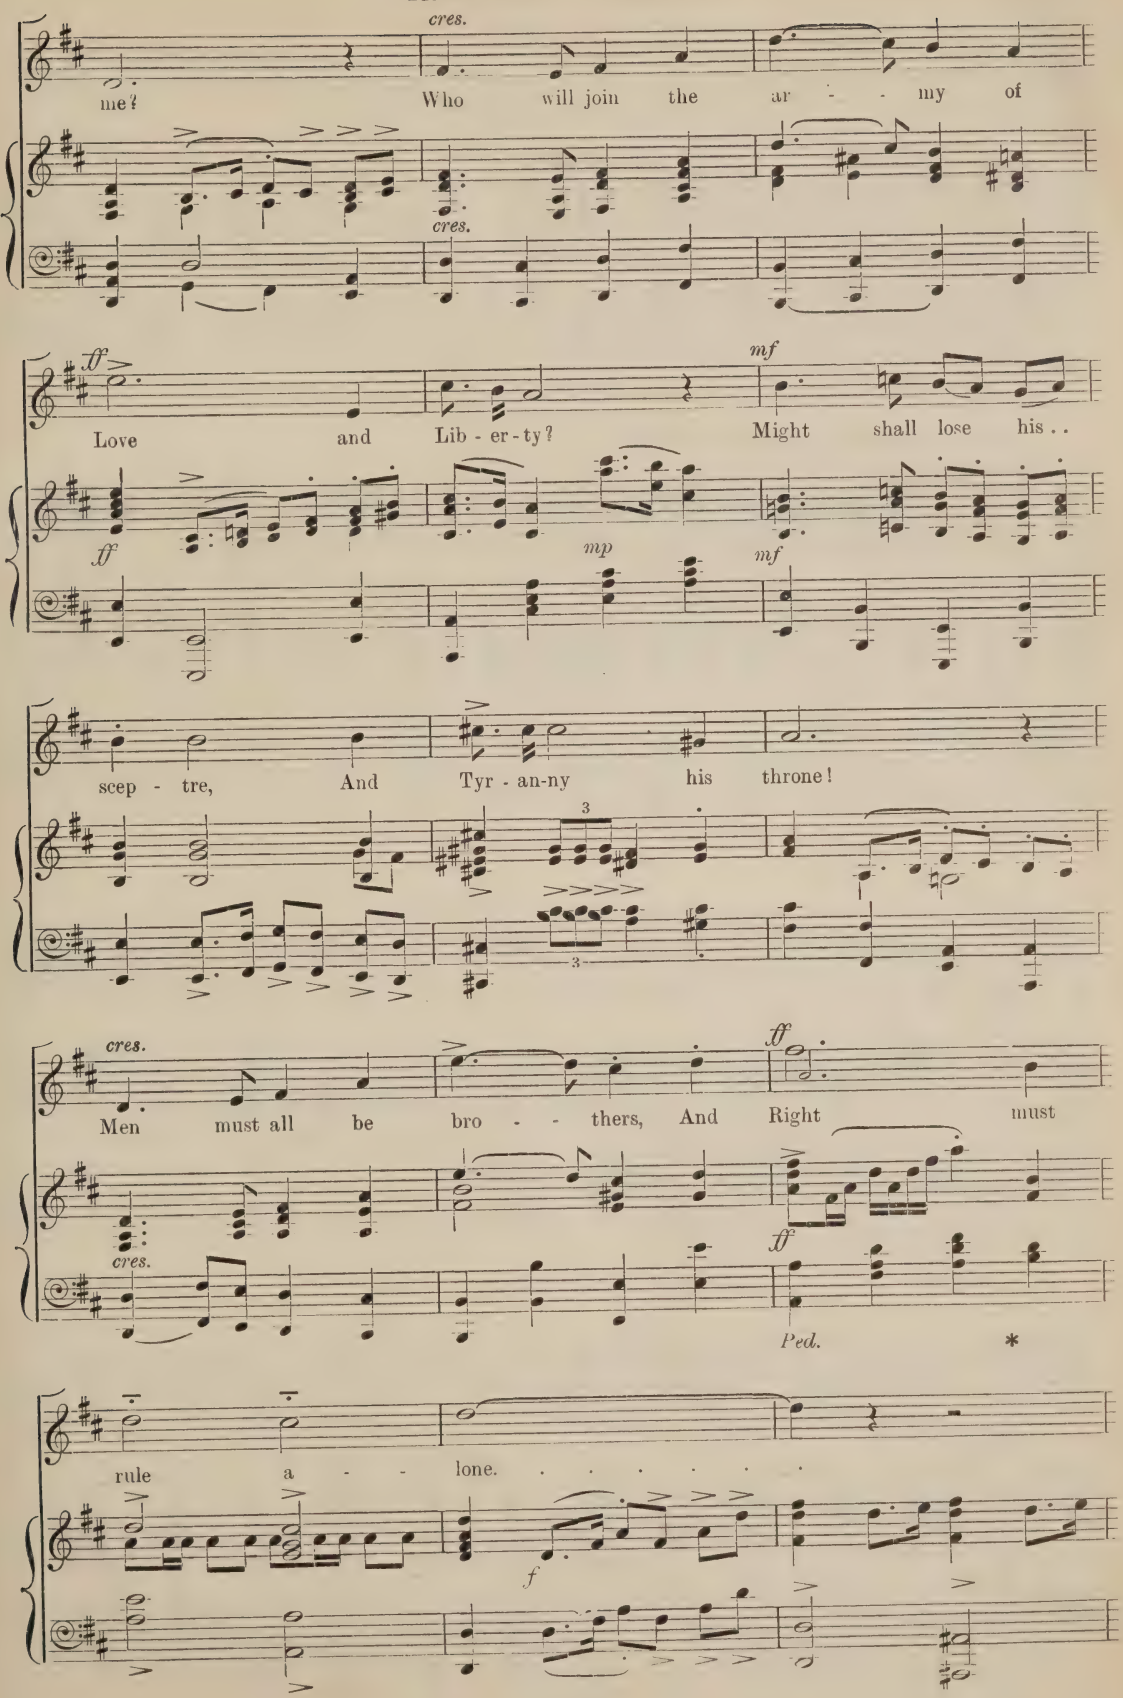
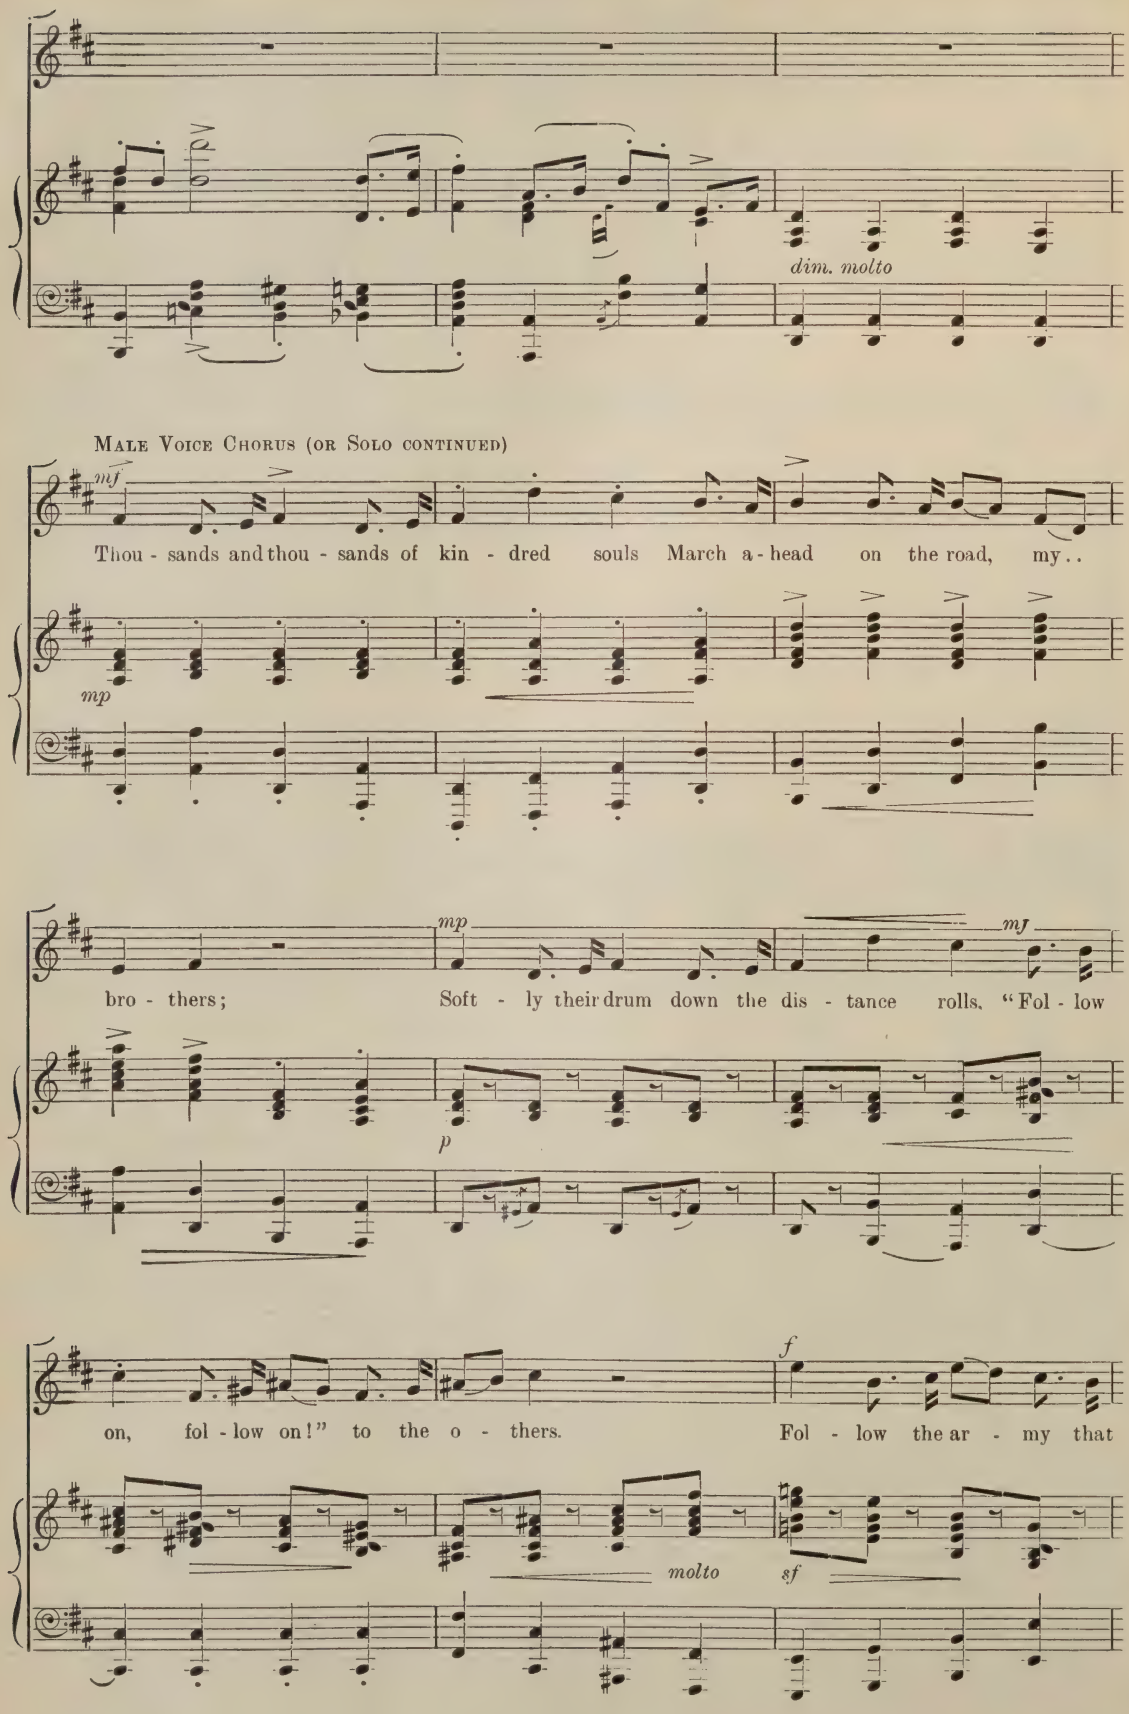
mf

THE DRUMS OF FREEDOM





dim. molto
Male Voice Chorus (or Solo continued)
mf
Thou - sands and thou - sands of kin - dred souls March a - head on the road, my..
mp
mp
mf
bro - thers; Soft - ly their drum down the dis - tance rolls. "Fol - low p
f on, fol - low on!" to the o - thers. Fol - low the ar - my that molto
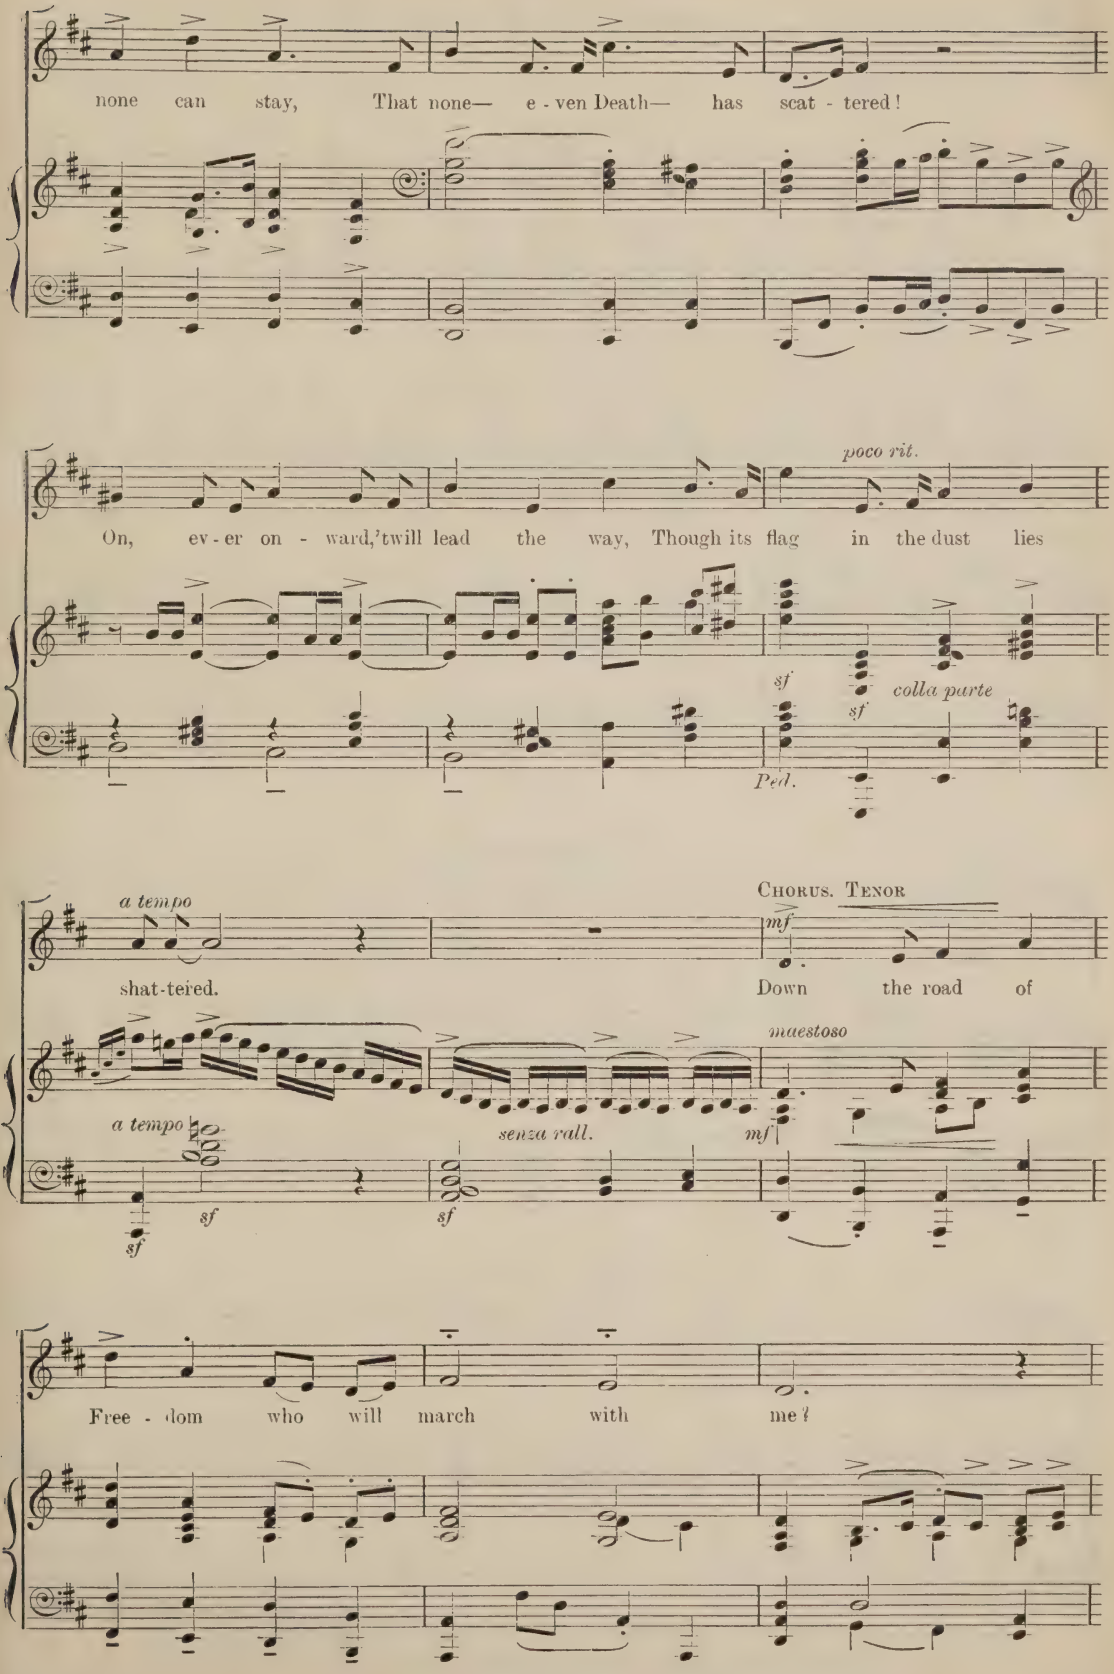
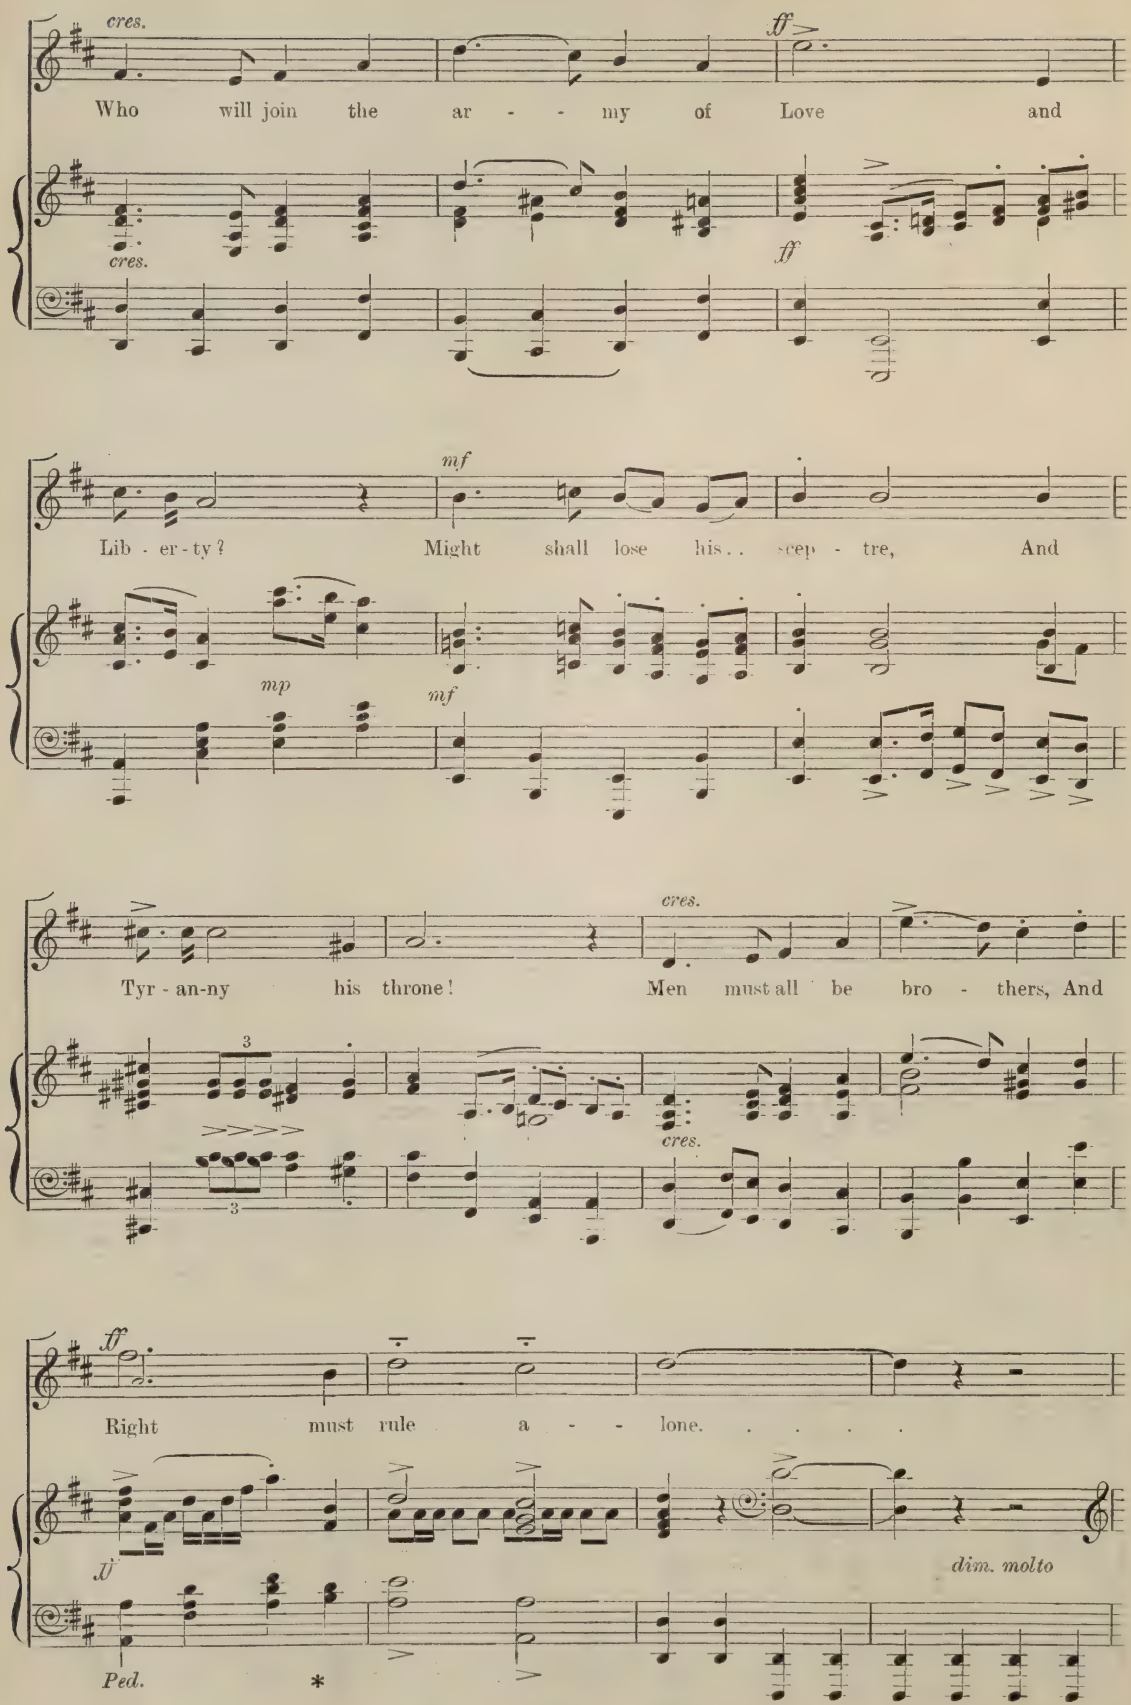
sf

THE DRUMS OF FREEDOM





cres.
ff
Who will join the ar - - my of Love and cres.
ff
mf
Lib - er - ty? Might shall lose his.. scep - tre, And mp
mf
cres.
Tyr - an-ny his throne! Men must all be bro - thers, And
3
3
cres.
ff
Right must rule a - - lone. . . . .
ff
dim. molto
Ped.
*

TWO EXAMPLES

FROM

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.
Voice parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.
MADE IN ENGLAND.

CONTENTS.

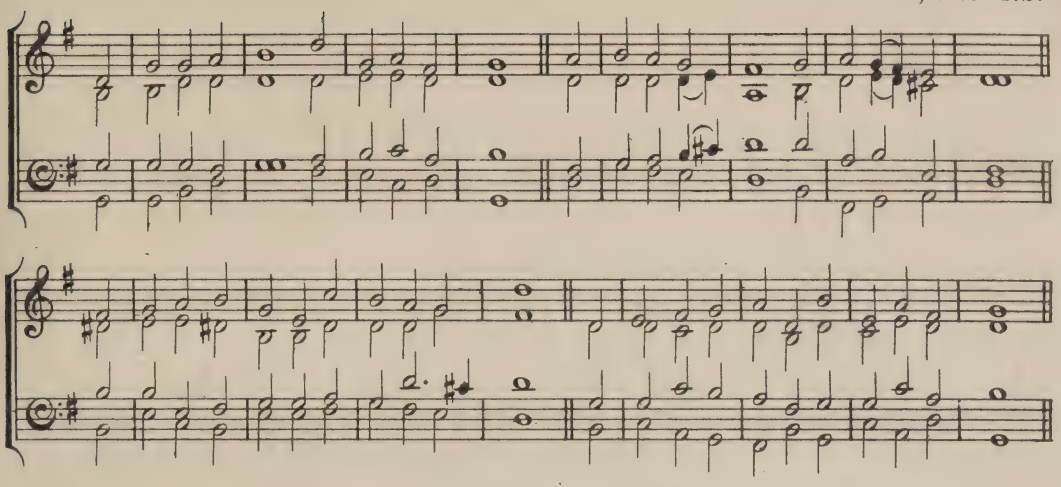
TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

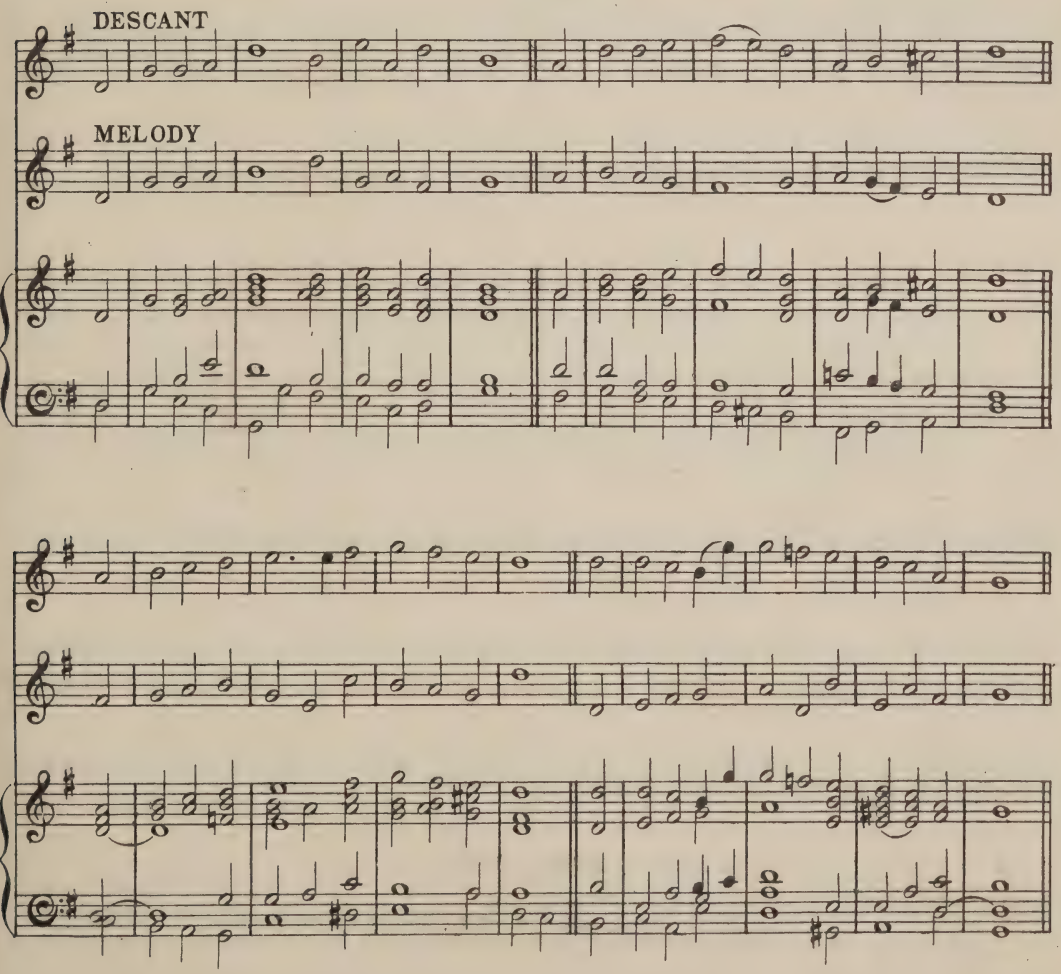
TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.	PAGE.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Glorious things of thee are spoke n	1
		Praise the Lord! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe ...	C.M. ...	This is the day the Lord hath made	2
Darwall's 148th	..6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4....	Ye holy Angels bright	3
Ein' feste Burg	...8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7....	A safe stronghold our God is still	4
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach ...	L.M. ...	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight... ...	6
		O Love, how deep! how broad! how high!
Hanover ...	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth ...	7
		O worship the King All-glorious above
Hyfrydol ...	8.7.8.7.D, ...	Alleluia! Sing to Jesus	8
Irish	C.M. ...	The Son of Man from Jordan rose	10
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias) ...	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky ...	12
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D. ...	The God of Abraham praise	14
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7. ...	Great God, what do I see and hear?	11
Melcombe ...	L.M. ...	New every morning is the love	16
Morning Hymn ...	L.M. ...	Awake, my soul, and with the sun	17
Nun danket	...6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6....	Now thank we all our God	18
Old 100th (1st Version) ...	L.M. ...	All people that on earth do dwell	20
Old 100th (2nd Version) ...	L.M. ...	Before Jehovah's awful Throne	21
Old 104th (1st Version) ...	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth ...	22
Old 104th (2nd Version) ...	10.10.11.11. ...	O worship the King All-glorious above	23
Richmond ...	C.M. ...	Praise to the Holiest in the height	24
Rockingham ...	L.M. ...	My God, and is Thy Table spread?	25
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version) ...	C.M. ...	O God, our help in ages past	26
St. Anne (2nd Version) ...	C.M. ...	The Son of God goes forth to war	27
St. Theodulph ...	7.6.7.6.D. ...	All glory, laud and honour	28
St. Thomas ...	S.M. ...	The Advent of our God...	30
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8. ...	The Lord my pasture shall prepare	32
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon ...	L.M. ...	Glory to Thee, my God, this night	31
Unser Herrscher	8 7.8.7.8.7. ...	Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem	34
Victory ...	8.8.8.4. ...	The strife is o'er, the battle done	35
Wareham ...	L.M. ...	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray	36
Warrington ...	L M. ...	Now that the daylight fills the sky	37
Wiltshire ...	C.M. ...	Through all the changing scenes of life... ...	38
Winchester New...	L.M. ...	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry	39
Winchester Old... (1st Version)	C.M. ...	When God of old came down from Heaven ...	40
Winchester Old... (2nd Version)	C.M. ...	While shepherds watched their flocks by night ...	41

HANOVER

10. 10. 11. 11.

W. Croft, 1678—1727

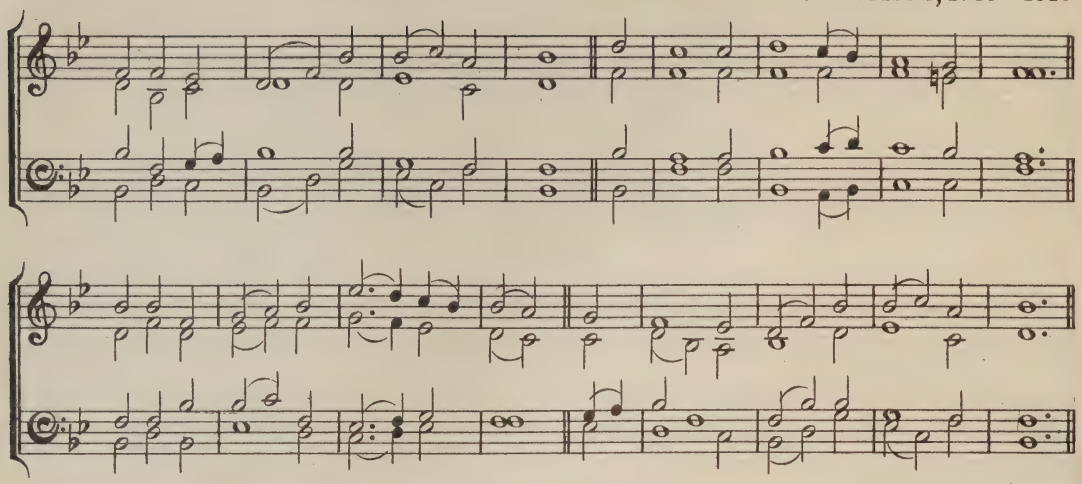


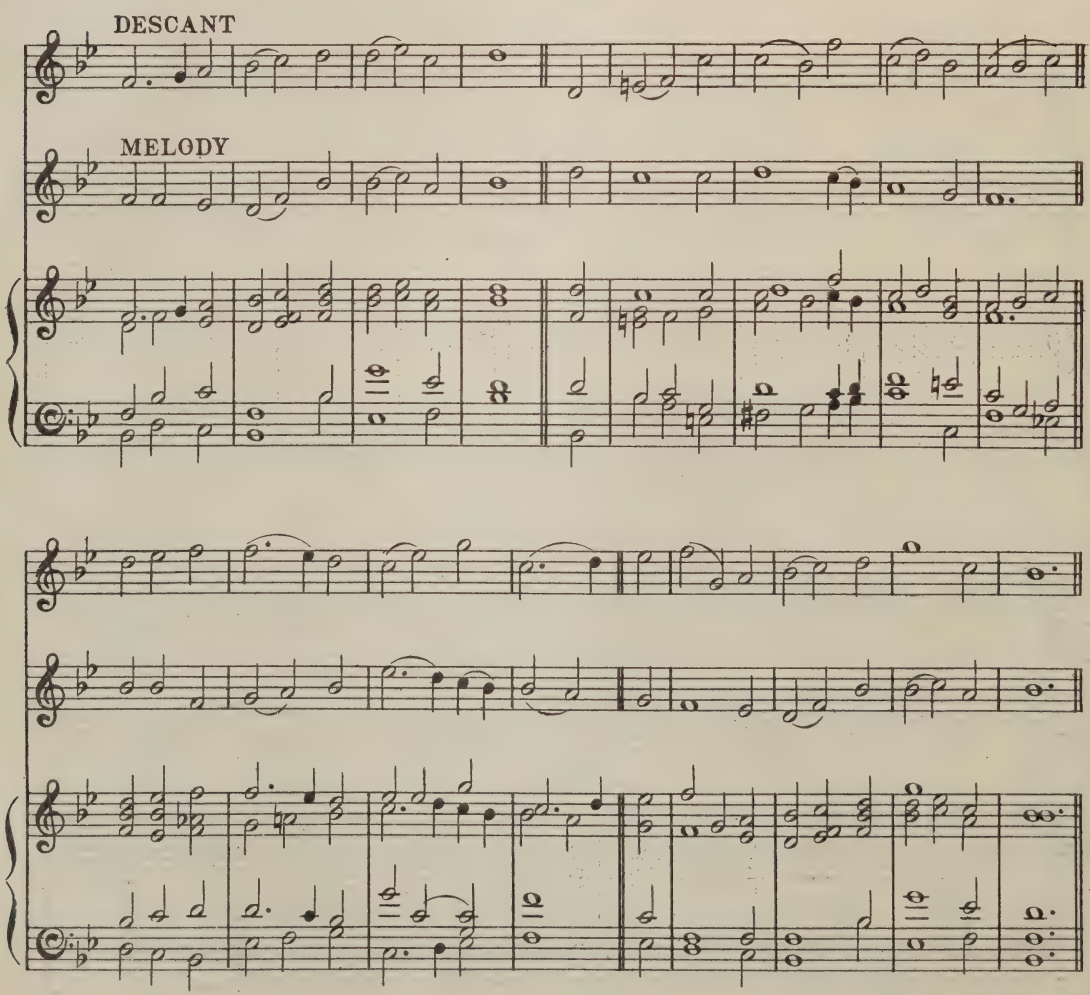


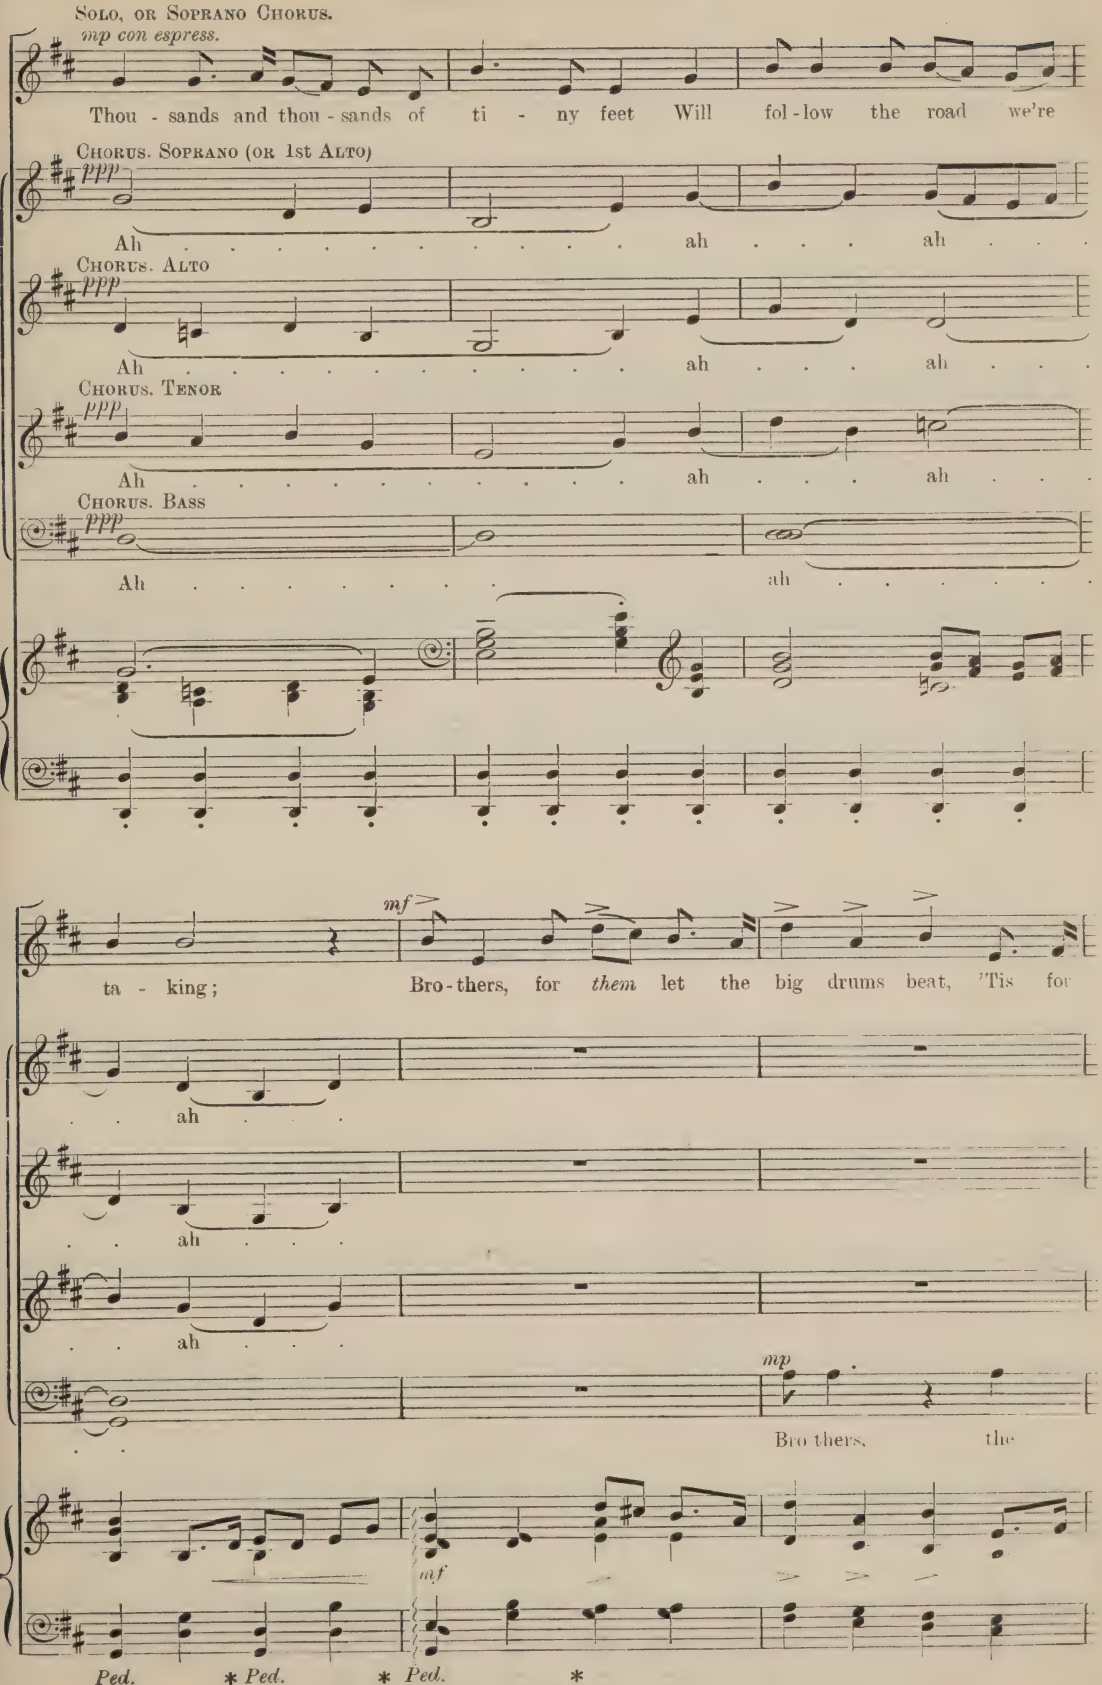
WARRINGTON

L. M.

R. Harrison, 1748—1810







Solo, or Soprano Chorus.
mp con espress.
Thou - sands and thou - sands of ti - ny feet Will fol - low the road we're Chorus. Soprano (or 1st Alto)
ppp
Ah . . . . . ah . . . ah . . .
Chorus. Alto
ppp
Ah . . . . . ah . . . ah . . .
Chorus. Tenor
ppp
Ah . . . . . ah . . . ah . . .
Chorus. Bass
ppp
Ah . . . . . ah . . . . . .
mf
ta - king; Bro - thers, for them let the big drums beat, 'Tis for ah . . .
ah . . .
ah . . .
mp
Bro thers, the
mf
Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

con entusiasmo them that the Dawn is break - ing. Shout back your song . . dow the
mp
Ah! the Dawn is break - ing.
Dawn . . . is break - ing.
long, long road, As far as your voice will car - ry,
Shout back your song down the long, long road,
Far as your voice will accel.

rit.
"On, lit - tle bro-thers, and for - get your load, Fol - low on! nev - er doubt nor
rit.
Fol - low on! nev - er doubt nor
rit.
"Fol - low on! nev - er doubt nor
rit.
"Fol - low on! nev - er doubt nor accel.
rit.
car - ry, "On, on, Fol - low on! nev - er doubt nor accel.
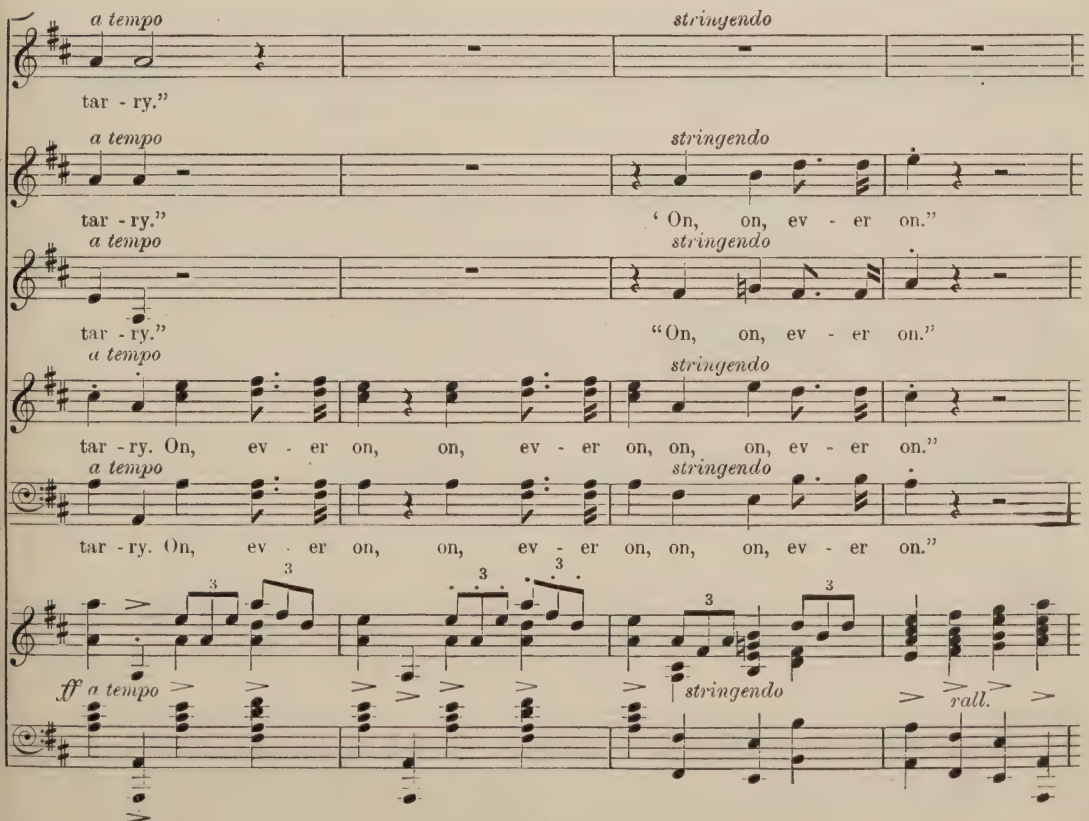
rit.
Ped.
Ped.
Ped.



a tempo
stringendo tar - ry."
a tempo
stringendo
tar - ry."
'On, on, ev - er on."
a tempo
stringendo
tar - ry."
"On, on, ev - er on."
a tempo
stringendo tar - ry. On, ev - er on, on, ev - er on, on, on, ev - er on."
a tempo
stringendo tar - ry. On, ev - er on, on, ev - er on, on, on, ev - er on."
3 ff a tempo
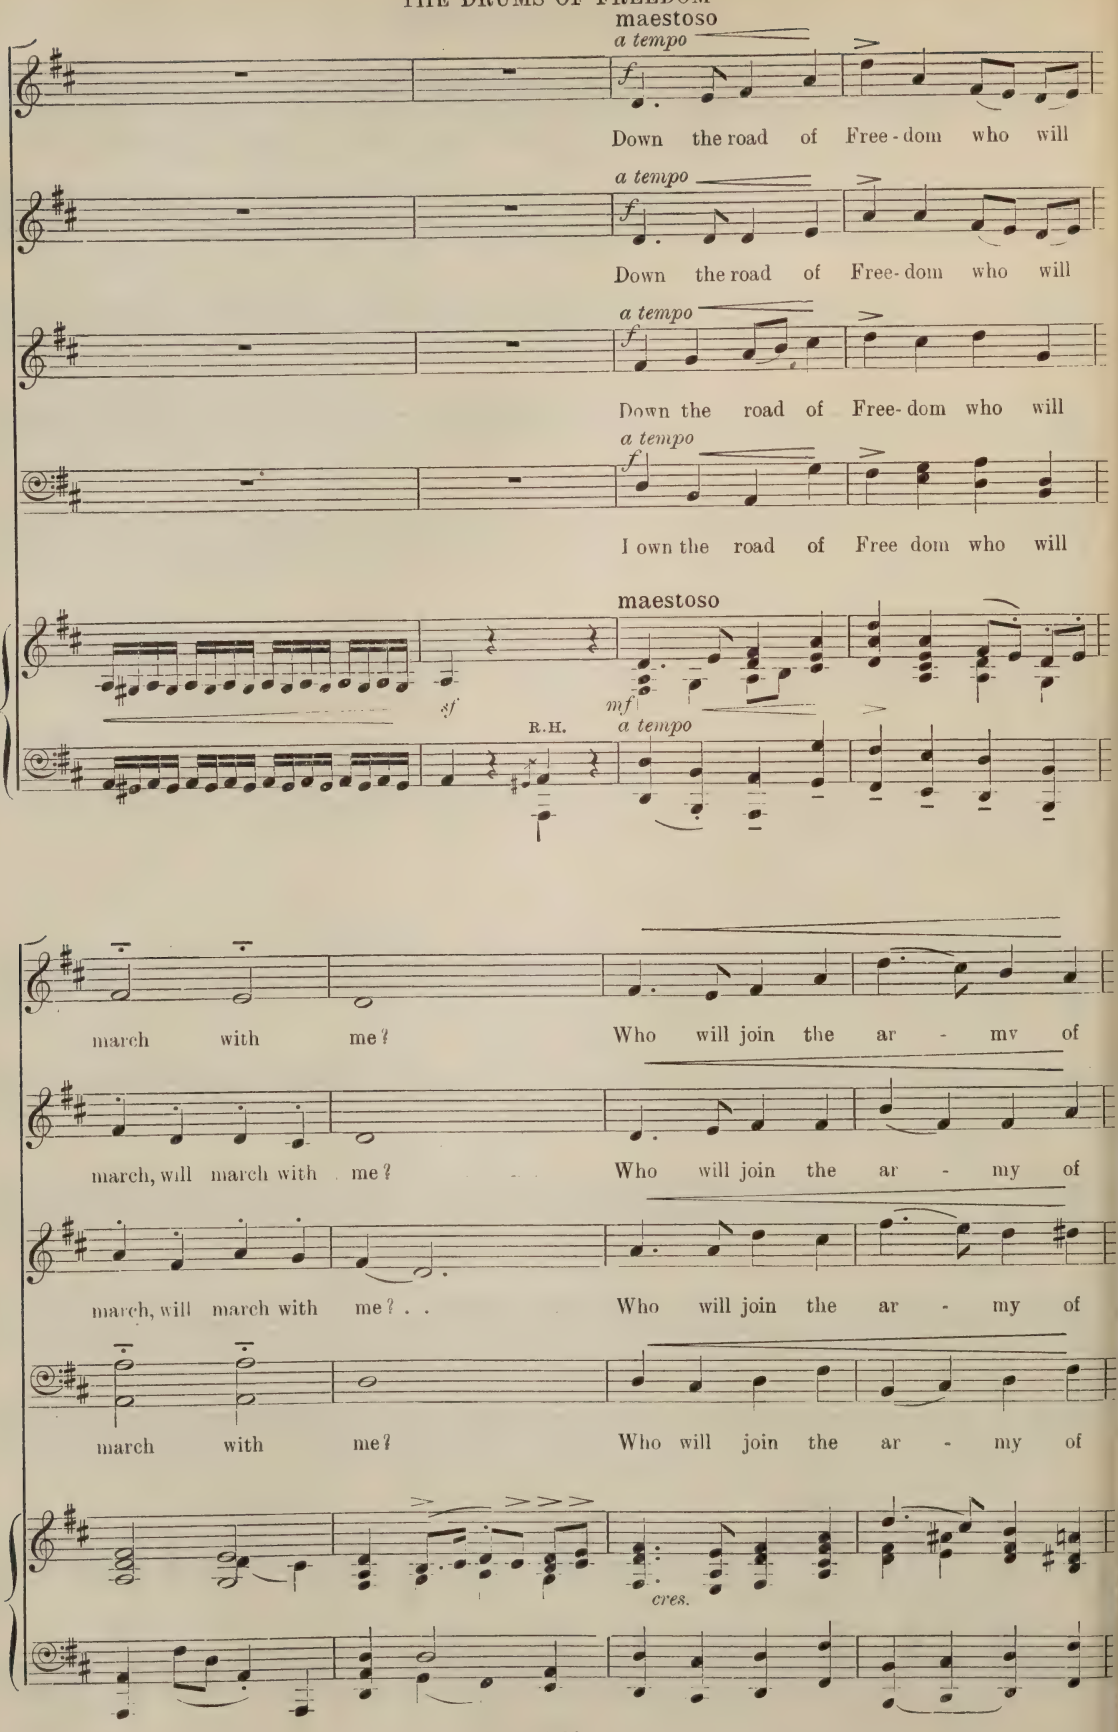
stringendo
rall.



maestoso
a tempo
f
Down the road of Free-dom who will
a tempo
f
Down the road of Free-dom who will
a tempo
f
Down the road of Free-dom who will
a tempo
f
I own the road of Free dom who will maestoso
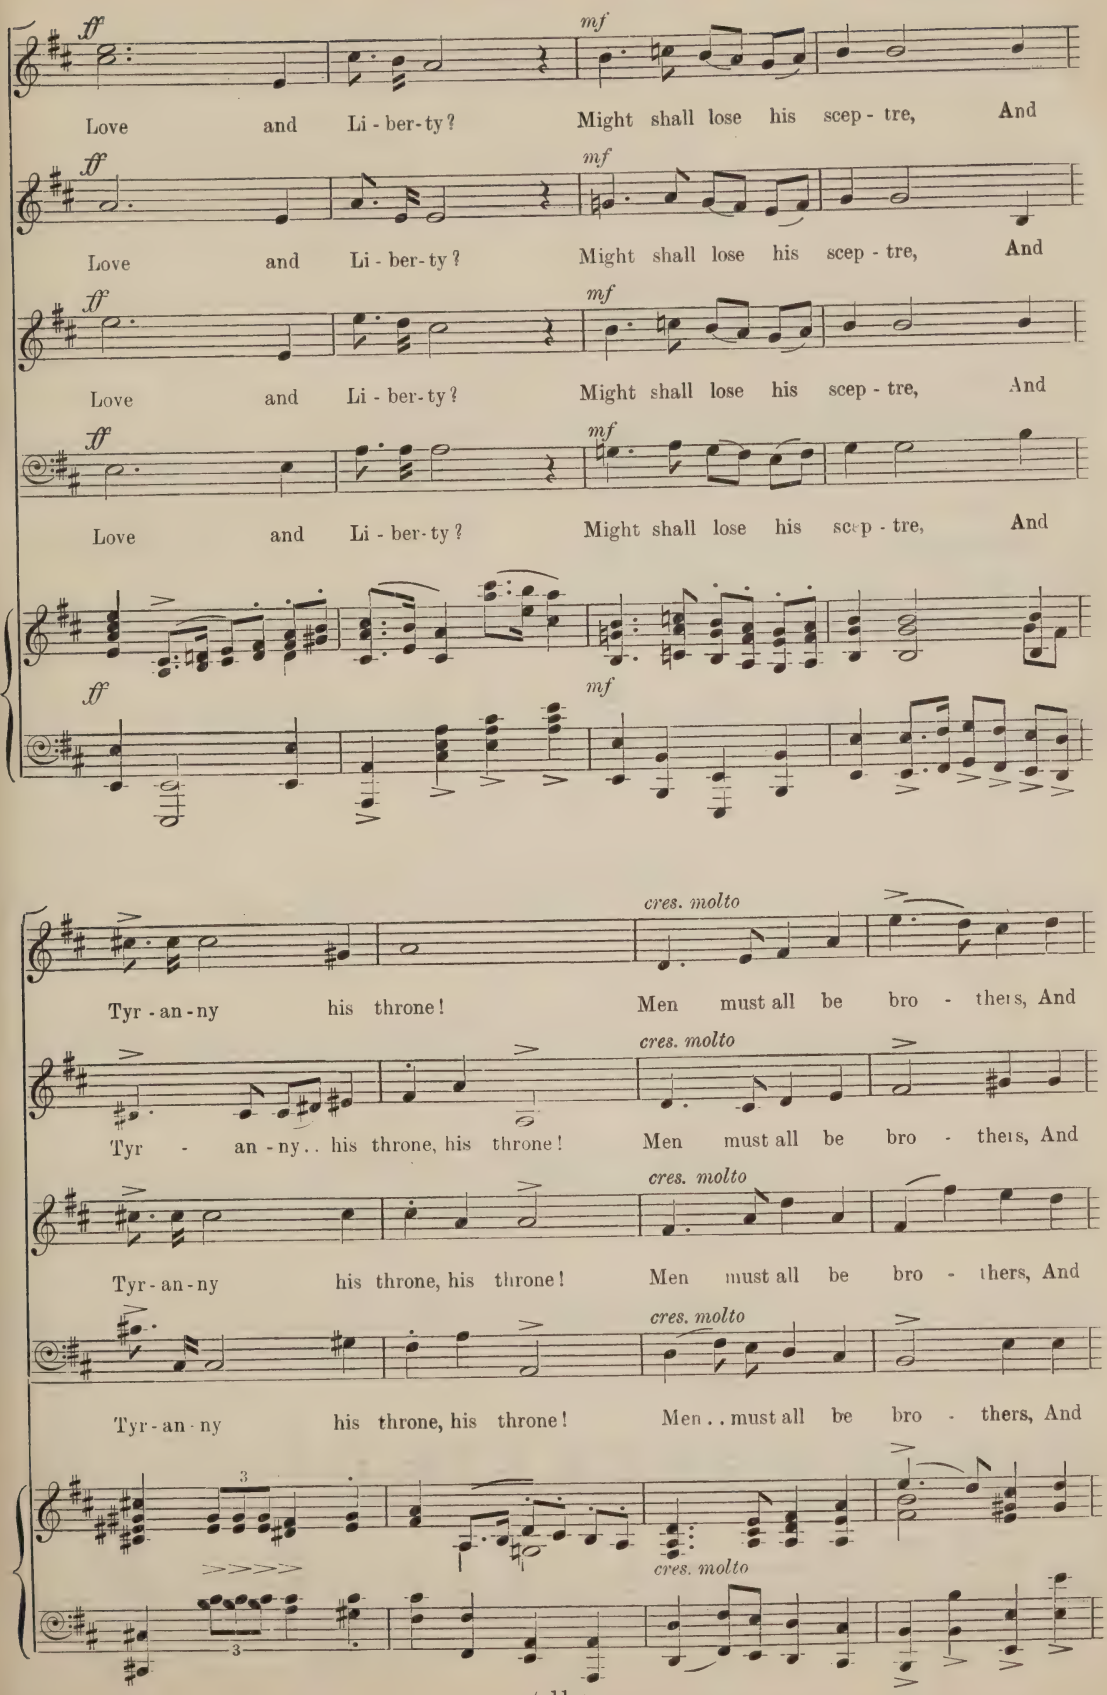
sf
mf
R.H.
a tempo
march with me?
Who will join the ar - my of
march, will march with me?
Who will join the ar - my of
march, will march with me? . .
Who will join the ar - my of
march with me?
Who will join the ar - my of
cres.



ff
mf
Love and Li - ber - ty? Might shall lose his scep - tre, And Love and Li - ber - ty? Might shall lose his scep - tre, And Love and Li - ber - ty? Might shall lose his scep - tre, And Love and Li - ber - ty? Might shall lose his scep - tre, And cres. molto
Tyr - an - ny his throne! Men must all be bro - thers, And Tyr - an - ny.. his throne, his throne! Men must all be bro - thers, And Tyr - an - ny his throne, his throne! Men must all be bro - thers, And Tyr - an - ny his throne, his throne! Men . . must all be bro - thers, And allargando

Right . . . . . must . . rule
Right . . . . . must . . rule
Right . . . . . must . . rule
Right . . . . . must . . rule
allargando
ff
Ped.
*
a - - - - - lone. . . . . .
a - - - - - lone. . . . . .
a - - - - - lone. . . . . .
a - - - - - lone. . . . . .
fff
sf

If London is prepared to pay the cost of a visit of the full Festival Chorus, including that of travelling up the day before, and to provide the singers with an orchestra familiar with the works they are asked to sing, and, further, give them an opportunity for rehearsing in the hall where they are to sing with the orchestra, I feel satisfied that the Leeds Festival Chorus will sustain the reputation which it at present has, and which 'Feste' and other southern writers endeavour to whittle away.

I can hardly believe that 'Feste' went to Queen's Hall prepared to be enthusiastic, and he appears to have spent his time with his nose in the score trying to ascertain where leads were missed—with such skill that he gives the actual page and bar!

The reception of the work by the audience is a far better test of how it was done, and is far more reliable than the prejudiced criticism of 'Feste.'

The Royal Philharmonic Society sold every seat in the house, and I say unhesitatingly, after forty years' experience, that the ninth 'Choral' Symphony of Beethoven was never more brilliantly sung than on October 29, 1925, when a section of the Leeds Festival Chorus sang it at Queen's Hall, London.—Yours, &c.,

Musical Festival Office, 30, Bond Street, Leeds. CHARLES F. HAIGH.

[Mr. Haigh's letter is discussed in 'Ad Libitum.']

'THE MALADY OF CHOPIN'

SIR,—I note Mr. Suckling thinks that when I objected to his description of Schubert as 'the most shallow Teuton who ever covered up a painful poverty of musical ideas by providing factitious opportunities to be soulful,' it was 'in despair at being unable to pick holes in the rest' of his 'argument,' and he calls this the only part of his letter 'which could possibly be conceived as a mere attempt at cleverness.'

Mr. Suckling is mistaken. I should never regard his 'little epigram,' quoted above, as an 'attempt at cleverness.' Nor am I concerned with his 'argument.' But I was concerned to find Schubert regarded as a blockhead with an undeserved reputation, for that is what Mr. Suckling's view amounts to. In a further letter to the Musical Times of December, Mr. Suckling justifies his censures by the comments:

> 'It [meaning Schubert's music] usually resolves itself into a series of tonic-and-dominant or similar threadbare progressions . . . outworn before the time of Beethoven, and the opportunities to be soulful are provided by . . . "lilt" or by an occasional sugariness of harmony.'

Mr. Suckling clearly mistakes the means for the end, and cannot see the wood for the trees. The music, as a whole, is lost upon him, and his sole response is in the direction of his objections that I have quoted above. This bears out my original view, that he must suffer from a fundamental weakness of musical appreciation; for not to see beauty in Schubert is on a par with failing to appreciate (say) Shelley or Burns. But that is no reason for traducing Schubert. As for his objection against tonic-dominant progressions, all geniuses have their mannerisms—not only Schubert—and all arts their necessities. A poet would not quarrel with his nouns and verbs, or a painter with his primary colours. And there is no reason why musicians should recoil in horror before such a fundamental—and quite pleasant—progression as the tonic and dominant progression.

What Mr. Suckling means by 'the deadening tradition of the Lied,' I am unable to understand.

In conclusion, may I say that while every individual's views of the great composers are bound to vary, to publish, like Mr. Suckling, a view so extremely opposed to the general estimation without adducing sufficient reasons to justify his standpoint, is likely to appear in the eyes of most musicians as ludicrous.—Yours, &c., L. J. GREEN.

49, Manor Road, Stamford Hill, N.
December, 1925.

[This correspondence is closed.—EDITOR.]

'ORFEO' AT OXFORD.

SIR,—I was beguiled, by reading Mr. Westrup's interesting article, into going to Oxford to hear Monteverde's 'Orpheo.' It was a pleasant entertainment: the colour schemes were beautiful, the choruses good, and the singing generally excellent; but when Mr. Westrup compared the music with that of the Elizabethans, to the detriment of the latter, he surely lets his enthusiasm get the better of his judgment. Beside such intricate and masterly polyphony as, for instance, Wilbye's 'Stay, Corydon,' or such models of deep expressiveness as Morley's 'Hark, Alleluia,' or Gibbons's 'What is our life?' Monteverde's music sounds like naive and child-like prattling. Even the works of lesser Elizabethans, such as the 'Ayres' of Pilkington and Dowland, sound melodious and finished by comparison.

The recitative in 'Orpheo' became to me (and to others) monotonous, and oftener unmeaning. May I suggest that the harmonium would better supply the place of the organ if the bass were played in octaves, to give the 16-ft. effect? It sounded thin in the body of the hall.—Yours, &c.,

Teddington. ARTHUR M. FOX.

CLEMENTIANA.

SIR—Since the appearance in your September issue of my article on Clementi, I find that, as kindly suggested to me by Mr. Southern, the author of a most interesting paper on Clementi, read before the Dorset Society, the Dorsetshire village which, in common with the 'Dictionary of National Biography' and the information supplied me by the Rev. Percival Clementi-Smith, I described as Stapleton, should really be spelled Stepleton or Steepleton, the latter form being that adopted in Cassell's Gazetteer. Mr. P. Cameron, the present occupier of Stepleton House, in the chapel of which Peter Beckford was buried, very courteously informs me that 'Stepleton is spelled indiscriminately with one, or two e's, but never with an a.' Unfortunately, the descendants of Peter Beckford have no records of Clementi's residence at Stepleton House, although all reliable evidence points to the fact that it was on Peter Beckford's Dorsetshire estate that the great master lived for the first six years of his life in England. As I stated in my article, Stepleton is not far from Yeovil, being about equidistant from Yeovil and Dorchester, and a few miles from the little market town of Blandford.—Yours, &c.,

Sirsa House, Cheltenham. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD.

'THE NATURE OF HARMONY'

SIR,—A curious lapsus calami occurs in Dr. Shirlaw's interesting article on 'The Nature of Harmony' (December issue, p. 1082). In Exx. 4 and 5 the combination tone is written an octave too low. The major sixth = 3 : 5; Therefore the combination (difference) tone = 2. In Ex. 12, F sharp should of course be natural.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions, Denton Road, Twickenham.

OBITUARY DATE OF THOMAS HAYDON.

SIR,—I wish to ascertain the date of the death of Thomas Haydon, a pianist, who, I believe, studied under Neate and Crotch. He was a professor at the Royal Academy, soon after its foundation. Ella, in his 'Sketches of Music at Home and Abroad,' mentions that Haydon gave him lessons in 1824. I think, therefore, he must have been a fairly well known pianist and teacher. I should be glad if any of the readers of your paper could give me the desired information.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR F. HILL.

[We regret being obliged to hold over a good deal of correspondence.—EDITOR.]

The Loughton Choral Society and Orchestra gave 'Merrie England' on November 26, and the 'Hymn of Praise' on December 13, both performances being directed by Mr. Henry Riding.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Pianist-violinist (medium ability) wishes to meet another player for mutual practice.—RYLEY, 32, Stanway Road, Coventry.

Baritone wanted for amateur male-voice quartet. London.—OLIVER, 25, Rosehill Road, East Hill, Wandsworth, S.W.18.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet vocalist for mutual practice.—E. G., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to meet other musicians. Classics only.—GEORGE BURL, 2, Doddridge Street, Hall Lane, Liverpool.

Male vocalist wishes to meet accomplished accompanist for mutual practice of classical music.—F. PARSONS, 2, Felday Road, Lewisham, S.E.13.

Violinist wishes to form string quartet or pianoforte trio in N. London. Musicians (especially viola) interested, please write.—J. D. B., 9, Green Dragon Lane, Winchmore Hill, N.21.

Advanced pianist (amateur) wishes to collaborate with advanced violinists to study classics or moderns. E.17 district, or near.—S. M., c/o Musical Times.

Good accompanist (sight-reader) wishes to meet vocalist, violinist, or 'cellist for mutual practice. Torquay district.—M. C., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet other good instrumentalists for the practice of classical works. Would like to form quartet or trio, or would accompany singer.—Miss AYTON, 35, Camynge Square, Clifton, Bristol.

'Cellist (lady) wishes to meet good pianist for mutual practice. Sonatas, &c. Kensington district.—M. R., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wanted (good reader) to join pianist and 'cellist for practice of sonatas and trios. Excellent library.—G. L., 1, Fontaine Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

Lady pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist to form trio. Leeds district.—G. G., c/o Musical Times.

Sharps and Flats

Do you mean that the orchestra is so loud that the singers cannot be heard? If so, it must be an exceptionally nice orchestra. (Laughter.)—Mr. Justice Horridge.

I cannot think of anything more likely to send one off one's head than to have children strumming on a piano. The bathroom may be convenient for drowning musical children even in the day-time. That is what I would have felt inclined to do with them. (Laughter.)—Mr. Justice Eve.

I have no ear for music; it is the torture of the damned for me to hear a child playing the piano. I should like to drown them, but I cannot do that. I do not like the piano, because I have no ear for music. The big drum and cornet I can stand. (Laughter.)—Mr. Justice Eve.

I have no ear for music—a misfortune that I attribute to the fact that I have always had my hair cut very short.—Mr. Justice Eve.

He [M. Pachmann] is certainly eccentric, and possesses a powerful personality, but he never descends to showmanship—that bête noire of the modern concert-platform.—'S.' in the Hull Daily Mail.

I am retiring.—Vladimir de Pachmann.

The Welsh way in music leads, not astray from the great march of world-evolution, but away from the comparatively straitened German cul-de-sac, whence all the leading musical races to-day are retracing their steps—in France, Italy, Russia, Spain, and Great Britain—to the main paths of natural human feeling and thought in music which were florescent before the four-square barrier of Germanic academicism was set about music and its bloom ravished to be preserved in the chemical jars of the German academic musical museums.—Leigh Henry.

I can sing splendidly in English.—Chaliapin.

It will, indeed, be a great day for art when Schumann's music will have wrested the monopoly which Chopin's puling, trivial, or merely acrobatic strains have obtained in piano recitals.—James Corbin.

I have recently attended many meetings [on grand opera] and have heard many well-meaning people talking and talking, when they didn't even know the price of a pair of tights.—Charles Manners.

The soloist was Mr. ——, who sang with taste, feeling, and power, 'On, away, awake Beloved.'—Local Paper.

It is clearly evident that a sense of spontaneous and clean humour and sincere emotion are parts of the necessary equipment of the successful syncopated composer. The nearer we can get to the natural care-free—one might almost say child-like—mind of the true American negro, the nearer will we be to success in this department of composition.—The Director of the London School of Syncopated Music.

Far too much nonsense is talked about the decay of the music-hall and the passing of the British songs and singers of the older sort. Take it from me, the music-hall stage is as virile and as human to-day as ever it was. The chairman and the beer may have mostly vanished, but the hearty old British beef and beer school is as popular to-day as all the jazz bands, Russian ballets, and similarly sophisticated diversions of these later days. Ask any income-tax man!—George Robey.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of January, 1865:

SIGNOR ARDITI'S CONCERTS

The enterprising director of these concerts has succeeded in the task of making a portion, at least, of the 'music of the future' popular, even with the mixed audience proverbially to be found at these entertainments. Whether Signor Arditi has carefully picked out all the melodies to be found in Wagner's 'Tannhäuser,' or has dressed up his materials in such a fashion that the cookery has thoroughly disguised the ingredients, remains to be proved at that problematical period when the opera shall have been submitted by Mr. Mapleson to his expectant subscribers; but certain it is that the applause is prodigious and the excitement immense at the selection now nightly performed to crowded audiences. Should the enthusiasm for this music spread beyond the walls of the theatre, and errand-boys be heard whistling the March from 'Tannhäuser,' we cannot but smile, in anticipation, at the astonishment of the many critical judges who, in Wagner's case, as in many others, have commenced a trial by pronouncing a verdict. Signor Arditi deserves much credit for having allowed Wagner to speak for himself; and the artistic vigour he has shown in the direction of these concerts leads us to hope that we may look forward to their annual repetition with full confidence that the public will hear not only what they know, but what they ought to know.

Madame Kirkby Lunn presented the awards at the annual concert of the Metropolitan Academy of Music, at Queen's Hall, on December 12. She commented favourably on the standard reached by the performers, and spoke of the valuable work done by the branches of the Academy throughout the Essex suburbs. The fortieth annual report of the Academy shows that there are now about 5,500 students being taught at fourteen branches by 230 professors. During the past year nearly 200 concerts have been given at various centres, the performers numbering about 2,850, and the audiences about 23,000. The list of honours gained at the Stratford, North London, London, and Southend Festivals was a very long one.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

An important and highly interesting item of news is the fact that a beginning has been made with the new buildings at York Gate. Very shortly the demolition of the old houses will be complete, and it is confidently hoped that the handsome addition to the accomodation will be complete and ready for the opening ceremony by next July. The erection of this valuable and necessary annex is long overdue, owing to the protracted negotiations with the ground landlords, and it is a relief to the Academy authorities to know that before long the inevitable congestion consequent upon the large increase of students will be relieved. The plans provide for a finely commodious practice hall, in addition to a number of professors' studios, and other much-wanted rooms. When finished, the new buildings should prove an effective architectural gain to the neighbourhood.

The Students' Chamber Concert held at Duke's Hall on November 2 made an extremely interesting entertainment. The Academy at the present moment is to be warmly congratulated on having an exceptionally good string quartet, and a company of six most efficient madrigal singers. The performances of these talented combinations added real distinction to an admirably constructed programme. The balance and ensemble of the instruments in the performance of Vaughan Williams's Quartet in G minor were first-rate, and some of the pianissimo passages in the Allegro section could not have been better played. M. Jean Pougnet is a discriminating and sympathetic leader. The madrigal singers made a notable impression in 'The little turtle dove,' and it is no exaggeration to say that they compared favourably with a famous organization which has been specialising within recent months in this charming trifle. Very beautiful, too, was the sextet's conception of Morley's 'April is in my mistress' face.' Another item worthy of commendation was the first movement of an Oboe Quartet by Mozart, played with great taste, and much appreciated by the large audience. It says a good deal for the worth of the performance of the Ravel Septet, that Mr. Lionel Tertis expressed his especial pleasure at its interpretation.

There were two notably outstanding features in the half-yearly Students' Orchestral Concert on December 8, which was conducted by Sir Henry Wood. The orchestral playing was of exceptional excellence, and Mr. Arthur Fear's singing of the air 'Ella giammai m'amo,' from Verdi's 'Don Carlos,' proved a real revelation. His voice is a bass baritone of fine quality and resonance, and he sings with rare dramatic sense. This most promising student has been awarded the Ruston Prize, the adjudicator being Sir George Henschel. In Bizet's 'Suite L'Arlesienne,' the three movements were conducted by three students, all of whom showed an intimate knowledge of the score. A sparkling performance was given of the Scherzo movement from Beethoven's ninth Symphony, but the high standard of playing was remarkable throughout.

During the past term two effective and well-conducted students' compositions have been heard. A Sonata in F minor for violin and pianoforte shows great promise, so much so that it was played twice at the chamber concerts by M. Jean Pougnet, with the composer, Mr. Reginald King, at the pianoforte. A Celtic Sketch No. 1, 'The Shore Road,' for orchestra, by N. McLeod Steel, made a good impression at Queen's Hall. This young composer should be encouraged to do further work in this direction.

On Tuesday, October 27, at a Livery Dinner of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, Mr. Roy Henderson, who gained the Medal given by this Company to the most distinguished student of the year in the Royal Academy of Music, received this award at the hands of the Worshipful Master, Mr. H. D. Truscott. The musical programme during the evening was provided by students of the R.A.M., and included songs by Mr. Roy Henderson, pianoforte solos by Miss Virginia Maclean, viola and pianoforte duet by Mr. Harry Berly and Miss Doris Sheppeard, and madrigals sung by six students.

The following awards have been made: Hine Gift (composition) to Edward Blyth (Bradford), Grace M. Evans being commended. Rutson Memorial Prizes (contraltos) to Freda Rich (London), Nancy Dyson being very highly commended); (baritones) to Arthur Fear (Blaina, South Wales), Glyndwr Jones being very highly commended. Sainton-Dolby Prize (sopranos) to Lesley Duff (Hendon), Maud Bostock being highly commended. Battison Haynes Prize (composition) to Madeleine Windsor (Bath). Philip L. Agnew Prize (pianoforte) to Francis G. Britton (London), Norman Franklin being highly commended, and Robert Edwards commended. Fred Walker Prize (baritones) to Edward Jones (Llanelly), Arthur Fear being highly commended, and Glyndwr Jones commended. Charles Lucas Medal (1925) (composition) to Guirne Creith (London), Arthur C. Gregory being commended. R.A.M. Club Prize (violin) to Hilda Parry (Harrogate), Enid Bailey and Phyllis McDonald being highly commended. Westmorland Scholarship (female vocalists) to Vera Kneebone (Plymouth), Leonore Weeple and Mary Durham being highly commended. Potter Exhibition (male pianists) to Richard V. Aldridge (London), Dennis L. V. Dance and Wilkinson Urquhart being very highly commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The last half of the term has been so crowded with performances of all kinds that it is not possible to do more than mention the principal events. Of the three orchestral concerts, in the last week of the term, the most interesting, educationally speaking, was, perhaps, that given by the third orchestra and the junior conductors' class, for on this occasion no less than fourteen students appeared as conductors, gently shepherded by Mr. W. H. Read. As an artistic achievement, the programme by the first orchestra takes first place; under Mr. Adrian C. Boult, the first Symphony of Beethoven, Rachmaninov's third Pianoforte Concerto, and the Prelude and a scene from 'Parsifal' were given. Mr. Norman Greenwood, as the soloist in the Concerto, made a great impression in this complicated and exacting work; Mr. Trefor Jones and Miss Carys Davies attacked the big scene between Parsifal and Kundry, in the second Act of 'Parsifal,' with courage and success.

The Patrons' Fund Rehearsal for composers was noteworthy for a new Viola Concerto, by Mr. Gordon Jacob, in which Mr. Bernard Shore gained a personal triumph by reason of the ease with which he surmounted the difficulties of the soloist's part. This work is short and attractive, and should prove a welcome addition to the viola répertoire.

Mr. W. W. Cobbett, the donor of the Cobbett Chamber Music Prizes, visited the College recently, and in presenting the prizes to the fortunate winners, gave them an illuminating discourse on 'Chamber Music,' warning them against the temptation to neglect old masters for new.

Under the auspices of the London University, a lecture was given by the Rev. Greville Cooke on 'International Folk-Song,' the director, Sir Hugh Allen, taking the chair and welcoming a distinguished visitor from a sister institution.

The first performances under the new scheme of the 'Ernest Palmer Fund for Opera Study' take place in November. The opera chosen was Nicholas Gatty's 'The Tempest,' and in accordance with the provisions of the scheme the cast included performers not connected with the College. It may be of interest, in this connection, to outline the objects which the founder, Sir Ernest Palmer, had in mind when establishing the Fund:

(1.) To assist the study, in the College, of all kinds of opera (especially British opera), and any music requiring stage presentation (including ballets and plays with incidental music.

(2.) To afford facilities to British operatic composers and Performers, not necessarily connected with the College, for rehearsal and trial performances in the College Theatre;

(3.) To further the development of the resources of the College Theatre in these respects;

(4.) To provide Operatic Exhibitions, tenable at the College, to be called the 'Ernest Palmer Operatic Exhibitions,' for performers of opera who are British-born subjects.

The following awards have been made: Leo Stern Memorial Gift.—Ida Starkie. Lesley Alexander Gift.—E. Gwendolen Windsor and Joyce Cook. Gowland-Harrison Exhibition.—Reginald S. Oakley and Gwendolen Higham. Ashton Jonson Exhibition.—Winifred Bowden and Gwendolyn Bray. Dove Prize.—John Robinson. Manns Memorial Prize.—Reginald B. Morley. Henry Blower Memorial Prize for Singers.—Trevor Jones. Bristol Scholarship.—Albert J. W. Foster. Lilian Eldée Scholarship.—Renewed for one year to Dorothy Augood.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

In pursuance of the special scheme inaugurated at this College, and based on the principle that a broad, informed view of the various arts is an essential in the education of the music student, a course of three illustrated lectures on 'Gothic Architecture' was recently given by Mr. Fred H. Crossley. Judging from the attendance last term when 'Poetry' was the 'course' subject, and that of the recent 'Architectural' course, the interest and appreciation shown have vindicated the inauguration of this scheme.

It is with pleasure that we record the success of Francis R. Mitchell, a past singing scholar of the College, who, after leaving, went to Worcester Cathedral, and was recently appointed to Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

The College is sustaining a loss by the resignation of the curator, Mr. J. A. King, who leaves after thirty-six years' good and loyal service. He will be much missed by the professors and students.

The College has been notified that the University of Birmingham will in future accept the Licentiate (Practical) diploma as exemption from the playing test for the degree of Bachelor of Music. It will be recalled that the Victoria University of Manchester similarly recognises this diploma.

The Dando Mesham Silver Medal, the Naismith Silver Medal, and the Gold Medal for 1925 have been awarded respectively to May Roberts, Roberta Geneviève Spencer, and Elga V. Collins.

A well attended recital of music for two pianofortes, given by Mr. Geehl and Mr. William Lovelock, was a distinctive feature of the last week of term. In this same week the terminal orchestral concert took place at Queen's Hall, when an interestingly varied programme was performed under the direction of Mr. Joseph Ivimey. Amongst the items given were: Overture, 'The Bartered Bride'; Symphony in E flat ('Rheinische'), Schumann; Concertino for flute, Chaminade; Ancient Airs and Dances, arranged by Respighi; and Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, Mendelssohn. In the last-named, Miss Irene Kohler greatly distinguished herself.

An enjoyable and seasonal feature of the students' chamber music and choir concert, conducted by Mr. Lebell and Mr. Alec Rowley respectively, at Æolian Hall, was the singing by the choir of half-a-dozen carols. The chamber music class played very commendably Schönberg's Sextet for strings, 'Verklarte Nacht.'

SOCIETY OF WOMEN MUSICIANS: ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

At the fourteenth annual general meeting of the Society of Women Musicians, on Saturday, November 21, a very satisfactory report of progress was presented. In the absence of the president, Miss Fanny Davies (on tour in Holland), and of the chairman, Lady Cooper (through illness), the chair was taken by Madame Lily Henkel. The report of the year's work showed progress in all branches of the Society's activities—orchestral, conducting, chamber-music, singing, &c.—and a satisfactory balance-sheet and substantial increase in membership were also recorded.

A short musical programme followed the business meeting and election of council and officers. Miss Evelyn Suart, who had been absent from the concert-platform for some years, showed her wonted clarity and facility equally in groups of pieces from the classical period and in more modern works.

Miss Janet Campbell-Fisher gave a seletion from Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's settings of Hebridean songs to the Celtic harp, and Miss Anne Liddle sang 'Extase,' by Lewis Carey, as a tribute to the memory of the late Miss Lucie Johnstone, whose recent death has deprived the Society of one of its best-known and loved members. The Society has also lost two other valued members during the year, Miss Marie Brema and Mrs. Hutchinson.

The outlook for 1926 is very encouraging, and an interesting programme of events is in course of preparation.

'THE RING' AT MANCHESTER

A NOVEL SUBDIVISION

[FROM OUR MANCHESTER CORRESPONDENT]

A happy combination of circumstances led to the staging of the 'Ring' dramas here in November last. The only three weeks in 1925 for which Mr. Albert Coates was free from engagements were November 2-21. The Opera House happened also to be available, and the B.N.O.C. was able to call, for the same period, on the finest English-speaking Wagnerian singers who could give time to study and rehearsal. The performances were without cuts, but it was hopeless to expect an industrial community to follow Bayreuth or even Covent Garden custom and spend hours from 4.30 onwards in or about the opera-house for four evenings. There was some chance of attracting them, however, if normal hours of theatre arrival and departure could be observed, hence the consideration of a subdivision of Acts spread over six evenings.

Until the actual experiment had been made, the possible clash of economic and æsthetic considerations might seem likely to bear results detrimental to the artistic unity of the 'Ring' dramas. To listen to such a sequence when on holiday or unpreoccupied with other affairs is one thing; to take it at the close of a normal day's work is a vastly different matter.

The subdivision decided upon by Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Albert Coates was: 'Rhinegold'; 'Valkyrie,' Acts 1 and 2; 'Valkyrie,' Act 3, and 'Siegfried,' Act 1; 'Siegfried,' Acts 2 and 3; 'Dusk of the Gods,' Prelude and Act 1; and 'Dusk of the Gods,' Acts 2 and 3.

The only impression of incongruity was on the evening when we started with 'The Ride of the Valkyries.'

Even the purist in these matters could hardly argue that Wagner's four-night lay-out was the only feasible one, for not only was the serial started at the last chapter but one, but the sequence of the composition-periods of its beginning and middle chapters was broken up by events, and Wagner certainly had no definite knowledge of how his four-night division would work out or what its effect would be on the powers of endurance of all concerned. The six-night arrangement has the supreme advantage that the big climaxes come when everyone taking part is fresh in body, mind, and voice, and the buoyancy of the whole mighty work gained in an incredible degree.

The orchestra was neither of Bayreuth, Covent Garden, nor Hallé dimensions; but no more was the opera house. The band of fifty or fifty-five players was as much as the scale of the building permitted, and a bigger one would have merely spoiled the entire scheme of musical and histrionic perspective. Similarly the scenic setting would have been useless on Drury Lane or Covent Garden stages. Very wisely Messrs. Austin and George King did not overdo elaborate detail; steam curtains were dispensed with, but the Verwandlungs-musik did not suffer in effect on that account. Brünnhilde did not pass to slumber on an illuminated hillock, but we had the much better idea of a mountain girt with fire, and in this and numerous other instances the suggestive electrical devices employed were beyond praise, providing a real stimulus to the imagination, which is a great gain over the excessive literalness experienced elsewhere. Some idea of the special nature of the difficulties to be overcome may be gained from the fact that not since 1911 had Mr. Robert Parker had the opportunity for singing the Wotan music in a non-cut performance of the 'Ring.'

Of the five 'Ring' presentations heard by me in England and abroad, this has been the only one where all the characters made the great argument perfectly clear even to the tyro's intelligence, with the consequence that the whole thing was listened to with a degree of concentrated interest quite unusual. In this great feat Robert Parker played a noble part, not only in the monumental periods, but also in the sections where the ultra-heroic must be abandoned for the more human note. The majestic sostenuto of Miss Austral's Brünnhilde was even more memorable, for not even Ternina at her best in the late 'nineties sang with more supreme nobility. Norman Allin's Fasolt, Hunding, and Hagen were miracles of just impersonation. Gladys Ancrum's Sieglinde had, too, the ultra-romantic quality without which that part becomes an impossibility. Briesemeister and Hans von Breuer, in 1905, at Bayreuth, were not more challenging in their characterisation of Loge and Mime than were Walter Hyde and Sydney Russell, and Hyde's Siegmund recalled Van Dyck in its resourcefulness. Widdop as Siegfried fulfilled the Wagnerian ideal of a revelation of sensual life in its natural and joyous fullness—voice, movement, and gesture abounding in vital force. Over all was the commanding presence of Coates, wise in counsel, ceaselessly active in rehearsal, ever watchful in performance.

MONTEVERDE'S 'ORFEO' AT OXFORD

Claudio Monteverde, so vivid a personality in life, has long lain in the valley of dry bones. 'And lo! they were very dry.' From time to time a historian has come and looked at them (e.g., Parry), and some even have prophesied unto them (e.g., Malipiero), so that sinew and flesh have come upon them; but it has been left to Dr. W. H. Harris and his Oxford collaborators to breathe upon them that they may live. Can these bones then live? They can indeed; for that is the outstanding fact that emerges from the production of the opera at Oxford on December 7 and the two following days. A modern audience may look for lyrical moments in Mozartian or Puccinian form, or, accustomed to the recitative and choruses of Bach and Handel, it may have few operatic preconceptions, or it may be more familiar with drama than with music of any sort. The audiences at Oxford contained listeners of these and other types, yet all were agreed that the work had astonishing vitality and beauty. Yes, beauty; for it is no longer possible to accept the judgments of former critics about the formlessness of the recitative or the harmonic crudities of the writing, or even of the recklessness of the instrumentation—though here the proof is naturally less direct, since no one will ever hear the original. It may be that our new appreciation of the Elizabethan idiom, both in its rhythmic freedom and in its methods of word-painting, has opened our ears to the extraordinary beauty, subtlety, and simplicity of Monteverde's recitative, and our release from the consecutives complex which darkened the emotions of our fathers has enabled us to listen without prejudice to what Monteverde says so forcibly and directly.

Recent articles in the Musical Times have pointed out the manifold beauties of the work, so that it is only necessary here to say that actual performance justified the claims therein made for it, and furthermore showed it to possess unsuspected virtues as a piece of stage-craft. It will be enough to make a few miscellaneous observations on the actual performance.

Mr. Westrup's orchestration (Musical Times, December, 1925) worked out well; it was both economical and dramatically effective. A doubtful place was the seven-part sinfonia, where oboes and clarinets formed a top to a brass foundation, and resulted in a lack of homogeneity in the tone. On the other hand, Monteverde's own cornetti may quite possibly have made a noise like that. It was unfortunate that practical difficulties compelled the use of a pianoforte instead of a harpsichord, since it meant the complete absence of plucked string-tone, which is a marked feature of Monteverde's instrumentation (duoi gravicemballi, un arpa doppia, duoi chitoroni). Dr. Harris, however, realised the basso continuo, and welded the whole work together on that useful maid-of-all-work, so that it went very smoothly. The translation, specially made by Mr. R. L. Stuart, proved to be nimble enough for the recitative and respectful of the quantities of the original; best of all, it was decent English, not translationese. The décor and the dancing were both designed by Mr. Michael Martin Harvey, and had the great virtue of signifying the emotions proper to every scene and situation. The producer was Mr. Nugent Monck, of the Maddermarket Theatre, Norwich, whose knowledge of music was a great help in the co-ordination of the dramatic with the musical department. The chorus knew the work well. The singers were best as Mortals. As Spirits of the Underworld, in Act 4, where minus sopranos they sing moral sentiments, their words could not be heard, and their gesticulations made the singing lumpy. This is one of the rough places in the opera, which could have been made plain only by more altos. Of the many soloists, Mr. Sumner Austin sang his recitative and his two solos—the song to charm Charon and his Song of Triumph—with great freedom and a keen sense of their dramatic possibilities. Miss Denne Parker doubled the parts of Music, who sings a prologue, and the Messenger; she too mingled dramatic interpretation with sheer beauty of tone. Miss Marie Howes, who doubled the parts of the Nymph and Hope, was particularly good in her diction and phrasing. Mrs. Bertha Phillips took the small part of Eurydice, and while at her first appearance she hardly sang with sufficient simplicity, the mute appeal of her acting, followed by her bitter cry of loss in the fourth Act, were poignant. The undergraduate singers all had good voices and sang out well. Mr. Mullens was hardly vigorous enough to be god-like as Apollo, and physical illness robbed the last scene of its feeling of triumph and climax. Charon was admirably done by Mr. R. Clotworthy, and the Shepherds, who had duets and trios to sing as well as solos, were more than adequately represented by Mr. Stuart (the translator) and Mr. Evernden. Enthusiasm, skill, and hard work on the part of all concerned made a great success of a very bold venture.

F. S. H.

Competition Festival Record

We have received a number of letters concerning the adjudication of the mixed-voice class at the recent Blackpool Festival. As no useful purpose can be served by their publication, we cannot afford the space for them. They include a long one from our Manchester correspondent, and another from the conductor of the choir whose inclusion in the final has caused so much discussion. Our Manchester correspondent's letter adds nothing to his original article. He quotes the marks allotted to certain choirs, overlooking the fact that such figures alone mean next to nothing. They have practically no significance unless they are studied in relation to the critical judgments on which they are based—i.e., the judges' comments. As the judges had no opportunity of delivering their comments, it is obviously unfair to discuss the marks. Nothing in our correspondent's letter alters the fact that, as we tried to show last month, the judgment of a choir rests not only on its faults, but on its virtues. How far the latter are to be allowed to atone for the former is purely a matter for the judges to decide; and, in any case, the balancing of interpretative virtues against technical faults—the spirit versus the letter—can be done only by those who are both listening intently and following the text closely.

The letter from the conductor of the choir concerned flatly contradicts our Manchester correspondent's statement in last month's Musical Times as to a breakdown. The conductor says that he did not miss a beat, and that there was no suspicion that he 'had practically to stop and try a re-start, only to end in hopeless confusion.' This agrees with our memory of what happened. The conductor quotes from the mark sheet the judges' view, 'we felt this choir gave us the atmosphere, and it was a pity they failed at page 12.' As he says, this proves that the judges were well aware of the mishap, and had taken it into account.

One other letter calls for a word. The writer, who seems to be decidedly anti-judge in every way, refers amongst other things to the fact that a judge at Blackpool some years ago admitted that he had not seen a certain test-piece until the morning of the performance. This is true. As this case has been quoted by more than one correspondent, it ought to be made known that the omission was not the fault of the judge—nor, indeed, of anybody: the copy had gone astray in the post. His only mistake in the matter was his public mention of the fact—an excess of candour. Judges prefer to study the tests beforehand; it enables them to do their work better, and far more easily.

The controversy has been honoured by a good deal of notice, including a leading article in the Manchester Guardian of December 8. We quote the following, which seems to us to hold the balance fairly between the judges in the box and those in the audience:

> The challenge [of the Musical Times Manchester correspondent] is made in the name of the man in the crowd whose horse-sense was violated by the passage into the final rounds of choirs one of which had had a practical breakdown, while another had shown a persistent flatness. The adjudicators naturally answer the correspondent's letter with reasons enough for their decisions, and ask why the more obvious judgment of the crowd should have any consideration in the matter. Surely this answer is complete so far as the authority of the particular competition goes. And it may be said that the great progress of the competition movement since the war, and of the Blackpool Festival especially, has been due to the eminence of the musicians who have consented to act as judges. There is, of course, the possibility that these eminent musicians take casually what to the competitors is a matter of intensive study. The answer to that possibility is that the judges have given intensive study to related problems of music all their lives.

The article ends with an implication that the competitive side of musical festivals is undesirable. That is not our experience in general. The vital factor is proportion. At festivals where the social, educative, and communal sides of music-making have full play, the competitive element merely adds an enjoyable touch of spice. On the other hand, where it is allowed to dominate the proceedings to such an extent that only marks and results matter, the cause of music is poorly served. Happily the present tendency is in the right direction, and where it is not, the cause is to be found in the congested programmes due to the popularity of the movement, rather than in any lack of vision on the part of the executive.

NORTH LONDON FESTIVAL

One of the difficulties of holding a large competition festival is that of finding sufficient accommodation. The North London Festival has been well suited at the Northern Polytechnic, but two halls are necessary. The Central Library Hall is too far away, though quite satisfactory for solo competitions. A new venue has been found for 1926, close to Camden Town, the chief converging centre of the district, where two competitions may proceed simultaneously under control of the same staff, thus allowing also of a competitor who has entered for two subjects to appear on the same day.

The Festival—which ended on November 28—was regarded by the judges as the finest in its six years' experience, especially in point of choice of music and high standard of performance. The tendency latterly has been for teachers and conductors to submit only their best pupils and choirs, thus missing the stimulus which beginners need. This problem is being tackled, so that there may not again be a slight decrease in entries, as happened this time, though an increase in choral competitors accounted for a larger total number of performers. On one afternoon, Sir Richard Terry heard nine choirs from girls' elementary schools in a sight-singing competition and again in prepared pieces, and in the evening he judged fifteen adult choirs from Chatham, Bedford, Portsmouth, Goodmayes, Enfield, and other places. A striking achievement was that of Mr. Leslie Mackay's (Chatham) choirs in winning the challenge shields for mixed, ladies', and men's choirs. The judge's remarks as to tempo may have a far-reaching effect upon the question of future singing of madrigals, though they may have been annoying opinions to conductors who had followed existing editions.

In competitions which lasted eight days in two halls and covered a hundred classes, there were many interesting features. Others of the judges were Miss Louie Bagley (elocution), Mrs. Jeannie Murray MacBain (nursery songs and singing-games), Messrs. Ernest Fowles and Frederick Moore (pianoforte), Spencer Dyke (violin, 'cello, flute, and string orchestras), Charles Knowles (vocal), Harvey Grace, Granville Humphreys, and Stanley Marchant (vocal and choral). The best attendances were those at the closing concerts, when thirty challenge shields and cups, a hundred and fifty medals (no money), and seven hundred graded certificates were distributed by the Mayors of Islington and St. Pancras. J. G.

BOY SCOUTS' COMPETITION FESTIVAL

The first competition Festival of the Boy Scout Association was held on Saturday, December 5, when classes were judged in Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, and by Mr. Gerald Bullivant and Mr. Thomas Armstrong in rooms lent by the Guildhall School of Music. In the evening a concert was given in Memorial Hall by the winners, at which certificates were presented by the chief scout, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, whose presence gave prestige to the occasion and delight to the assembly. Sir Robert in his speech urged the winners to beware of swollen head, a disease to which boys who could play or sing were sometimes subject: but the atmosphere that prevailed on Saturday was not one in which the airs of a would-be prodigy are likely to flourish.

The entries were good: competitors came from places as far distant as Harwich, Hitchin, Shoreham, and Aldershot; and the performances, judged by standards applicable to the circumstances, were most encouraging. The solo singing class produced a very fresh and charming performance of Sullivan's 'Orpheus with his lute'—no mean test—by Scout E. Grimble, 17th S. Poplar, who beat Scout Rolfe, Caldicott School, Hitchin, by only two marks. There was also unmistakable talent and musicianship in the playing of Scout G. Woods, 2nd Harwich, winner of the solo violin class: and several good performances were given in the class-singing tests.

As was to be expected at a Scouts' competition, entries were made and success or failure taken in the most sporting way. Personal keenness, however strong, was always tempered with generosity; and Mr. Shaw noted this in his speech, wishing that a similar spirit were to be found in some larger competitions. Of all the first festivals he had seen, few promised as well as this one, on account both of the spirit behind it, and also of the great possibilities within it.

It is safe to say that next year's Festival will be on a far bigger scale, with larger entries, competitors from a wider area, and higher standards altogether. But competition, however helpful it may be, is not the final aim of those in charge of the music of the Boy Scout movement; and Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Commissioner of Music, who was responsible for the organization of this first Festival, made it clear that he and his colleagues will be content with nothing less than to make the whole Scout movement a really musical concern. The enormous opportunities are obvious; and the success of Saturday's beginning shows that those in command can be trusted to make the most of them. T. A.

The thirty-second Annual Eisteddfod of Oaklands Congregational Church, Uxbridge Road, W., will take place on February 11. Syllabuses can be obtained from the secretary, Mr. Gordon Sutherwood, 17, Cromwell Grove, W.6.

GUERNSEY.—A popular Eisteddfod concluded, on November 13, with a concert by the competitors and a prize-giving by the Lieutenant-Governor. The keenness with which a great number of musical competitions were supported, and the good standard of performance shown, spoke well for the musical gifts of the islanders. The chief contest was for the trophy offered by the Guille-Allès Orchestral and Choral Association for church choirs. It was won by St. Paul's U.M. Choir (Mrs. A. A. Noel).

HALIFAX.—This Festival (November 27 and 28) received an encouraging increase of support in the shape of audiences, but the district does not yet fully realise what a good thing it has at its doors. There was a good entry, and a very high standard of work all round, a gratifying feature being the large number of young men taking part in the instrumental solo classes, especially for strings. Close choral contests ended in Huddersfield Vocal Union winning the mixed-voice, and Manchester Orpheus the male-voice. A capital class for mixed-voice church and chapel choirs was won by the Unitarian Church Choir, Todmorden. The judges were Mr. Julius Harrison, Mr. Harvey Grace, and Mr. Acton Bond.

LONDON LABOUR CHORAL UNION.—The second annual Festival took place at Kingsway Hall on December 11, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill judging some very keen contests. Ten choirs competed, the winners being the Lewisham and District Labour Choir (Mr. Sidney A. Court)—a body formed only ten months ago. Massed singing was a fine feature of the ensuing concert, at which Mr. Ramsay MacDonald distributed the prizes.

MILLOM.—Choral singing of a high class prevails at this Festival (November 26-28), and there is keen rivalry. In the chief male-voice choir contest the Bach Choir, Barrow (Mr. W. Broome), and the Millom Choir (Mr. J. Bond) were given a tie. In the mixed-voice class the first two were Millom United Choir (Mr. H. H. Thomas) and the Barrow Bach Choir.

SOUTHEND.—The Festival held at Victoria Hall, on November 6-14, brought in thirty choirs—ten more than in 1924. Among them were choirs from Purley and Beaconsfield. Solo singing and playing and junior competitions of various kinds, took up the bulk of the time, and kept the adjudicators busy distributing awards and praise.

Music in the Provinces

ARUNDEL.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Norman F. Demuth, gave a concert of Bach's music at the Baron's Hall on December 8. Between Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas' Oratorio came the 'Giant' Fugue and the Prelude from the fifth 'English' Suite, both arranged for orchestra, the third Suite, and an aria sung by Mr. Edward Nicholl.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The performance of a pianoforte concerto without the presence of a solo pianist is no ordinary event, yet this is what actually happened when Sir Landon Ronald visited the city and conducted the City Orchestra on November 27. The Concerto was Saint-Saëns's G minor, and the work was played by the 'Duo-Art' pianola. The recording was of Mr. Harold Bauer. Apart from a slightly 'plunky' pianoforte tone, such as is often heard on gramophone records, the reproduction was remarkably good. Paderewski, Katharine Goodson, and Irene Scharrer also gave us solos through the same medium. Sir Landon Ronald gave a very fine interpretation of Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, and Miss Florence Austral sang Weber's 'Ocean, thou mighty monster' with the orchestra.——Mr. Harold Samuel was the soloist at the City Orchestra's concert on November 17. He was heard in Bach's Triple Concerto in D major, assisted by Mr. Paul Beard (violin) and Mr. Walter Heard (flute), and Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto No. 1, in D minor. The latter was played very beautifully, particularly the slow movement, which was made deeply moving. Mr. Adrian C. Boult conducted.—— Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony was the principal item at one of the Orchestra's Sunday concerts. It was well given, for Mr. Boult has a 'feeling' for this kind of music, and the passages for solo trumpet were beautifully played. At another Sunday concert Sibelius's 'En Saga' was given. Mozart's C minor Symphony was also included in this programme, and Mr. James Howell sang Iago's 'Credo,' from Verdi's 'Otello.'—— The C minor Symphony of Beethoven had a forthright interpretation at Mr. Boult's hands on December 8. At this orchestral concert Pouishnov was the soloist in Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto No. 2. His playing had a good deal of brain behind it, though it lacked the warmth and passion displayed by Miss Irene Scharrer when she played the same work at a concert given by the 5 IT Orchestra at Wolverhampton on November 29. Mr. Percy Pitt was to have conducted on this occasion, but was prevented by illness. Mr. Joseph Lewis took his place at short notice, and in the circumstances did remarkably well. The Wolverhampton Musical Society Choir sang a number of pleasant little part-songs by Percy Pitt. Saint-Saëns's 'Carnival of the Animals' was given, and caused much amusement.——One of the musical treats of the season was provided by a concert in the Max Mossel series when three great artists, Casals, Cortôt, and Jacques Thibaud, joined forces and played pianoforte trios to an audience spell-bound with admiration. Schubert's B flat Trio, the Schumann Trio, and Beethoven's Trio in B flat were the works chosen.——In essaying a performance of Parry's 'Job,' the Birmingham Festival Choral Society did a courageous rather than a wise thing. The performance of Ethel Smyth's Mass in D, which followed, was less good, and the tempi were sometimes out of hand, but the strong choral writing made its effect even against such handicaps.— The Philharmonic Quartet, assisted by Miss Beatrice Hewitt, gave a performance of Brahms's F minor Pianoforte Quintet at one of the Mid-day concerts, and on another occasion Beethoven's C minor Quartet was heard.——Under the leadership of Mr. Joseph Lewis a Community Singing concert was given at the Town Hall on November 23. Mr. Parry Jones and Mr. Dale Smith were the soloists.

BOURNEMOUTH. — Glazounov's fourth Symphony and Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' were played under Sir Dan Godfrey at the Winter Gardens, on November 26. Beethoven's fourth was the principal attraction on December 7.——The Municipal Choir opened its season in November with a concert performance of 'Carmen.'—— The Norman and Saxon Dancing Studio has produced a new ballet, 'Dust,' composed by Cyril Crabtree, a pupil of Vaughan Williams and Holst, who writes novel and arresting music.

BRADFORD.—The twenty-fourth season of concerts by the Bradford Permanent Orchestra opened under the direction of Mr. Julius Harrison, on November 14, with a programme that included Holst's 'Beni-Mora' Suite.——Dr. Malcolm Sargent, who has been appointed conductor of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, made his first appearance with Bach's B minor Mass.

BRIGHTON.—M. Belinfante led a quartet party in the G minor Quartets of Vaughan Williams and Debussy at the West Pier on November 19.——Mr. Herbert Menges conducted the Symphonic String Players on December 4 in Gluck's 'Orpheus' ballet music, Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite, and Bach's E major Violin Concerto, the soloist being Miss Isolde Menges.

BRISTOL.—Brahms's 'Requiem' was performed by the Bristol Choral Society on November 14. Mr. George Riseley, now in his eightieth year, conducted with unimpaired vigour and musicianship.——The Philharmonic Society opened its twenty-fifth season on December 5 with a miscellaneous concert to which the choir contributed Parry's 'Ode to Music' and Harold Darke's 'The Kingdom of God.' Mr. Arnold Barter conducted an excellent performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony.

BURTON.—The Town Hall was crowded on December 2 for a performance of 'The Golden Legend' by the Burton Musical Society. The principal parts were taken by Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Gladys Palmer, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Andrew Shanks. The Society's president, Mr. T. E. Lowe, conducted in the absence of Dr. Gilbert Stocks.

CAMBRIDGE.—A programme of Bach was given by Mr. J. F. Shepherdson at the Saturday Popular concert on November 14. The choir sang 'Sleepers, wake' and the six-part cantata, 'God the Lord is a Sun and Shield.' Three pianists played the Concerto in C major, accompanied by strings. The University Chamber Orchestra assisted, under Mr. J. A. C. Rogers.——Madame Frieda Hempel, still unrepentantly costumed as Jenny Lind, sang at the Town Hall in November.——The London String Quartet gave a Beethoven Festival week on November 30-December 4.

CHESTER.—The Musical Society gave Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Holst's Psalm 148, on December 2, in the Cathedral, Mr. J. T. Hughes conducting.——Two important chamber concerts have occurred recently: the Catterall Quartet played Armstrong Gibbs's work in E major and Wolf's 'Italian' Serenade; the London String Quartet played the second 'Rasoumovsky.'

COLCHESTER.—The Musical Society, under Mr. W. F. Kingdon, gave an excellent programme on December 2. The composers represented were Vaughan Williams (Fantasia on Christmas Carols), Bach (choruses from the Mass in B minor), Morley, Gibbons, Elgar, Stanford, Parry, Rathbone, and Balfour Gardiner.

DARLINGTON.—Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Eaton Faning's 'The Song of the Vikings' were performed by Corporation Road Choir at its annual concert on November 18. Mr. Ben Bishop recited 'The Revenge' before conducting it.

DISS.—'A Tale of Old Japan,' performed by the Choral Society, under Mr. W. H. Aldrich, on December 8, had not previously been given in the district.

DONCASTER.—The Musical Society set itself a difficult task at its first concert of the season on November 19, and came through with the highest credit. Under Mr. H. A. Bennett's direction the singers gave Parry's 'The Vision of Life' and Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter.' The orchestra supported the choir well, and also played Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. Mr. Bennett opened the concert with a brief account of 'The Vision of Life.'

EXETER.—Mozart's G minor String Quintet and the first movement of Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet were in the programme of the Chamber Music Club on December 16.——Future plans of the Oratorio Society (under Mr. Allan Allen) include 'Elijah' and 'A Tale of Old Japan' in April.

GUILDFORD.—Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations formed the principal feature of the Symphony concert under Mr. Claud Powell on November 26.——At a special concert on December 16 the Guildford Choral Society and the Symphony Orchestra joined in two performances of 'The Song of St. Francis' by Walford Davies.

HALIFAX.—On November 19 Parry's 'King Saul' was performed with great credit by the Halifax Choral Society and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. A. C. Tysoe. The principals were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Etty Ferguson, Mr. Raymond Hartley, and Mr. Roy Henderson. The same Society had last sung the work in 1898.

HAZEL GROVE (CHESHIRE).—The Choral Society gave a Coleridge-Taylor evening on November 21. The works sung by the choir were 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' 'Dead in the Sierras,' 'Summer is gone,' and 'The Viking's Song.' Mr. J. Worsley Hatrop conducted.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The Choral Society was true to its reputation on November 13 when, under Dr. Henry Coward's direction, it gave a fine and memorable performance of Verdi's 'Requiem,' with well-known principals. The 'Requiem' was followed by Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and the orchestra also played the Largo and Finale from Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony.

HULL.—On November 26 Sir Henry Wood conducted the Philharmonic Society's orchestra in a well-chosen programme that included Beethoven's fifth Symphony.——Miss Eleanor Coward's Ladies' Choral Society sang a good deal of Bach in the course of an excellent programme on December 8. Both concerts were well attended. Meanwhile the Saturday 'popular' concerts, which offer chiefly solo singing and playing, are in want of audiences. Hull is threatened, it is said, with the loss of its 'celebrity concerts' for being so unmusical.

IPSWICH.—Beethoven's fourth Symphony was played by the Orchestral Society under Mr. E. R. Wilby on November 25—the Society's thirty-fourth concert.——The Male-Voice Choir appeared at the Municipal concert on December 2 and sang, among other things, Walmisley's 'Music, all-powerful' and Cyril Rootham's 'Jemima.' Mr. J. Job conducted.——Works of Fauré, Brahms, and Beethoven were played at the Chamber Music Society's concert on December 2.

JARROW.—The Jarrow Philharmonic Society (founded in 1890) sang Elgar's 'The Black Knight' and Bach's 'Be not afraid' on December 9. Mr. George Dodds conducted, and he and his brother, Mr. Yeaman Dodds, played duets for two pianofortes.

KIDDERMINSTER.—Mr. J. Irving Glover and the Kidderminster Choral Society opened their season on December 3, with a well-attended concert, at which the principal works performed were Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George.'

LEEDS.—On Armistice night the Philharmonic Society chose Stanford's 'The Last Post,' Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' and Parry's 'A Vision of Life.' This was a thoughtful and commendable choice on the part of Dr. E. C. Bairstow. 'A Vision of Life' is the most deeply reflective of Parry's works, too remote and philosophical for every-day popularity, but relevant to the mood of commemoration. The performance was in keeping with the high quality of the music, on the part of both the choir and the soloists, Mr. Harold Williams and Miss Elsie Suddaby.——An uncommon programme of music was played by the Edward Maude String Orchestra on November 21. It included Handel's Overture to 'Siroë,' Julius Harrison's 'Prelude Music' for strings and harp, a 'Neapolitan Suite' by Esposito, and a Pavane and Galliard by Orlando Gibbons.——Mr. Rutland Boughton conducted the Leeds Choral Union on November 25 when, with a little cutting, 'The Immortal Hour' and 'Bethlehem' were fitted into one programme. The chief solo parts in the opera were sung by Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. Steuart Wilson, Mr. Arthur Cranmer, and Mr. Frederick Woodhouse.——The Orchestral Society played Brahms's second Symphony on December 5, under Mr. Julius Harrison.——Recent visitors included Madame Makushina, Cortôt, and the London String Quartet.

LEICESTER.—At the second meeting of the Chamber Music Club on November 19, the Léner Quartet played Schubert, Haydn, and Beethoven (Op. 74).

LINCOLN. — At the Musical Society's concert on November 25, the programme included Stanford's 'Elegiac Ode,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols.' Dr. G. J. Bennett conducted.——The Kendal String Quartet played Quartets by Beethoven (Op. 59, No. 3) and Dohnányi (Op. 15, in D flat), in the Cathedral.

LIVERPOOL.—Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra' was conducted by Bruno Walter at the Philharmonic concert on November 17, the rest of the programme being Wagner.——On December 2 the conductor was Sir Henry Wood, who gave an admirable interpretation of the 'London' Symphony of Vaughan Williams. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi played a Mozart Concerto in D.——The Welsh Choral Union opened its season with Berlioz's 'Faust,' well performed under Mr. Hopkin Evans.——Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was given by the Post Office Choral Society on December 3, Mr. W. Matthews Williams conducting.——A Holst evening waa held, in the composer's presence, at Sandon Studios on November 28, the principal event being a stage presentation of 'Savitri.' The producer was Mr. F. Wilkinson, who also arranged, and danced in, a Ballet to two movements from the 'St. Paul's' Suite. The Fugal Concerto was also in the programme. Mr. Gordon E. Stutely conducted.——The Liverpool Chamber Music Players gave the Franck Quintet at a Crane Hall matinée.——Recitals have been given by M. Lamond, Messrs. Thibaud, Casals, and Cortôt, and Mr. John Tobin.

LUTON.—An excellent performance of 'A Tale of Old Japan' was given by the Choral Society on November 25, under the direction of Mr. William Mitchell.

NEWCASTLE (STAFFS).—The programme of the Male-Voice Glee Union on November 26 included Walmisley's 'Music, all-powerful,' Ireland's 'Heraclitus,' Elgar's 'Inside the bar,' and Mackenzie's 'A Franklyn's Dogge.' Mr. S. E. Lovatt conducted.

MANCHESTER.—The fifth Hallé concert on November 19 brought the first performance of Inglebrecht's 'Rhapsodie de Printemps.' He terms them word-pictures musically illustrated. The first, entitled 'In the Esterel on an evening in May,' is a dreamily languorous nocturne, leading quite simply to a suggestion of Vespers in an adjoining church; the children's voices, accompanied by harmonium, viola, and triangle, bringing a happily natural touch of colour into the general scheme. The Cathedral boys were very effectively utilized in this device. The second part of the rhapsody is styled, 'In the morning by flowery ways,' which, while expressive of somewhat pensive joy at the return of springtide, has not the same spontaneity of inspiration as the earlier section.——The sixth concert, on November 26, was devoted to excerpts from 'Siegfried' and 'Götterdämmerung.' Miss Austral and Mr. Mullings were the vocalists.——On December 3 the 'Hebridean' Symphony of Bantock replaced the 'Pastoral' Symphony of Vaughan Williams (announced as being its first performance at Manchester). Sir Hamilton Harty has since stated in a letter to the Press that he decided on the substitution because on maturer consideration he had come to the conclusion that the 'Pastoral' would not have appealed to a sufficiently wide public. Apart from the 'Sea' Symphony no considerable orchestral work of this composer has yet been performed here, and under the circumstances the 'Pastoral' might surely have been granted a hearing. Much less substantial and unsatisfying novelties have been introduced. Casals played the Concerto in D by Boccherini.——On December 10 the Schubert C major Symphony 'of heavenly length' displaced Strauss's 'Domestica' (postponed to March 18). Vincent d'Indy's Fantaisie for oboe and orchestra was played by Mr. Alec Whittaker.——The 103rd and 104th Hallé performances of 'The Messiah' on December 17 and 18 concluded the first half of the season.——At the Lane concerts Pachmann bade farewell to Manchester on December 2, leaving for Rome a fortnight later. His adieu took the form of our National Anthem, played very slowly and softly in D flat. We all stood as though he were giving the blessing, and walked out of Free Trade Hall with this solemn, prayerful benediction singing in our inner consciousness. It produced a bafflingly strange complex of emotions. At the first Bowdon Chamber concert the Hungarian String Quartet played Mozart, Hugo Wolf, and Dvorák, and Helen Henschel was the vocalist. At the second, on December 14, Mr. John Coates gave a recital.——The third Catterall Quartet evening (clashing with Pachmann's farewell) was devoted to Bax in G major and Dvorák in the same key, with a novelty in the shape of an Idyll by Alfred Wall (a Newcastle Conservatoire professor). Interest in this slighter work hardly reached the enthusiastic heights attained by his chamber Trio played here two or three years ago.——The Tuesday Mid-day Series has introduced Miss Joan Elwes to Manchester in a manner calculated to make her next appearance one of eager anticipation.——The Brodsky players in the Beethoven B flat major appeared on November 24; Miss Lucy Pierce in a Bach recital on December 1; Mr. John Goss (his first time here) and Miss Jessie Hinchliffe (from Huddersfield) on December 8, and Miss Irene Scharrer on December 15, the Cathedral choir winding up the year with carols on December 22.——At the first concert of the Manchester Vocal Society, Vaughan Williams's G minor Mass was the chief work, performed under Mr. H. M. Dawber.

MARLBOROUGH AND DISTRICT. — Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' Beethoven's 'Equali,' and the incidental music to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' have been the contribution of the Choral and Orchestral Society (under Mr. Francis Hill) to the town's music this term.——A new string quartet of former London players (Miss Yvonne Mont Clar, Messrs. C. and A. Hoggett and Francis Hill), lately settled in Wessex, made a successful début in the first three String Quartets of Beethoven, and also played at the College terminal concert. This concert, conducted by Mr. Ivimey, was broadcast.——Dauntsey College Musical Society gave an excellent concert under Mr. J. A. Davison—Bach's double Violin Concerto, Holst's Psalms, part-songs (Byrd, Holst, and Vaughan Williams), and half of 'Elijah.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—A selection of well-known music was finely played by the Philharmonic Orchestra on November 22, under Mr. Edgar Bainton. It consisted of Vaughan Williams's Overture, 'The Wasps,' Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration,' Debussy's 'L'Après-Midi,' Mozart's E flat Violin Concerto (Miss Jelly d'Aranyi), and 'The Mastersingers' Overture.——The programme of the concert given on December 8 by Armstrong College Choral and Orchestral Society included Bach's Cantata, 'Ach Gott, wie marches Herzeleid,' and Holst's 'Ode on a Grecian Urn' (from the first 'Choral' Symphony).

NORTHAMPTON.—The 'Siegfried Idyll' and the two middle movements from Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony were played on December 3 at the forty-eighth concert of the St. Cecilia Orchestral Society.——The programme of Mr. Cyril Pearce's second chamber concert with his string orchestra included a Boyce Sonata, Holst's Fugal Concerto, a Sinfonietta in D by Mozart, and a Concerto Grosso (No. 11, in F) by Corelli.

NORWICH.—The Schumann Quartet in E flat, a Bach Trio, and the Franck Pianoforte Quintet were heard at the String Quartet Club's concert on December 3.

NOTTINGHAM.—Works of four Nottingham composers made up the programme of the Concerto Club on November 25. They were Stanley Wagstaff, Gerald Marshall, Bernard Johnson, and W. Gaze Cooper. At Mr. William Turner's twentieth annual concert, the Ladies' Prize Choir and the Philharmonic Society gave an agreeable programme.——Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter' was performed for the first time at Nottingham by the Sacred Harmonic Society, under Mr. Allen Gill. It followed 'The Dream of Gerontius.' This was the first concert of the Society's seventieth season. The Albert Hall Choir gave Brahms's 'Requiem' on November 29, Mr. L. Gordon Thorp conducting.

OXFORD.—The Elizabethan Singers gave their first concert at Carfax Assembly Rooms, and sang some little-known works by Farnaby, Weelkes, and Cavendish. They sang again at the opening of the new B.B.C. studio at Oxford.

PORTSMOUTH.—W. Y. Hurlstone's Pianoforte Quartet, Op. 43, in E minor, was played by Major Bullin's Quartet Players at the opening of their sixth season.——The String Band of the Royal Marines, under Lieut. O'Donnell, played a Sussex Rhapsody, 'Selsey,' by Norman Demuth, and Maurice Besly's 'Chelsea China' Suite at a Saturday evening municipal concert. Other works heard at these concerts include Foulds's 'Suite Française,' Rheinberger's Organ Concerto, Op. 177 (Mr. Philip Dore), and 'Scheherazade.'——'The Martyr of Antioch' was given on December 9 by the Portsmouth North End Choral Society, a body of a hundred and forty singers and forty players under the direction of Mr. Ernest Birch.

ROCHDALE.—Mr. George Whitaker conducted the Male-Voice Choir on November 27 in an interesting programme that included the final chorus from Brahms's 'Rinaldo,' a 'Drinking Song' by Poulenc, and Elgar's 'Zut, zut.'

SHEFFIELD.—The Musical Union opened its jubilee season on November 12, and at the same time did honour to Dame Ethel Smyth by performing her Mass in D under the direction of Dr. Coward. The evening's work included Boughton's 'Bethlehem' music and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'——Sir Henry Wood's first visit with the Queen's Hall Orchestra produced a standard programme—Brahms's third Symphony and Casals in the Haydn Concerto.——The Amateur Musical Society gave Holst's 'The Cloud Messenger' on December 8, with Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and a choral fantasia on the 'Beggar's Opera.' Dr. Frederic J. Staton conducted.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The Southampton Symphony Orchestra has opened its career with a series of four Sunday concerts. At the first, on November 15, the 'Unfinished' Symphony was played. Mr. G. H. Osborne is the resident conductor. ——The Philharmonic Society, under Mr. Frank Bartlett, gave 'Elijah' on December 2.

SOUTHPORT. — Sir Hamilton Harty conducted the Orchestral Society in his symphonic poem, 'With the Wild Geese,' on November 20, when the Society opened its thirty-ninth season.

WINCHESTER.—The first public performance of the Winchester Music Club occurred at the Guildhall on November 19. The choral section, under the direction of Dr. Dyson, sang four madrigals by Weelkes and Wilbye, part-songs by Parry and Stanford, and arrangements by Vaughan Williams. Mr. Harold Samuel played Bach's 'English' Suite in A minor, and a Beethoven Sonata.

YORK.—Dr. Bairstow conducted the Musical Society on November 17 in a programme of typical excellence. In it were Morley's motet, 'O amica Mea,' Elgar's 'Yea, cast me from heights of the mountains,' Balfour Gardiner's 'An old song re-sung,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Sea-Shell,' and Holst's folk-song arrangement, 'I sowed the seeds of love.'——The Pianoforte Quintet of Arnold Bax was played by the Edith Robinson Quartet and Miss Lucy Pierce on November 12.——Anna Hegner, Cortôt, and Carl Fuchs have recently visited the city.

Music in Scotland

GLASGOW.—The opening of the Scottish Orchestra season introduced a new and interesting conductor in Prof. Hermann Abendroth, of Cologne, who directed the Scottish Orchestra at the first four concerts. Abendroth's tendency to be over-careful as to detail, and to treat his music compartmentally, interfered with the continuity of the music, and made the effect a little laboured at times, but he displayed virtuosic gifts as a conductor, and gave some remarkably fine performances, notably of the Brahms C minor Symphony, which we have never heard better done. Novelties included an Overture, 'As you like it,' by Wetzler, and a Suite, 'The Infanta's Birthday,' by Schreker, agreeable works without special distinction. The five concerts following were directed by Felix Weingartner, most of whose work we must confess to having found rather dull. Notable exceptions were the Beethoven 'Choral' Symphony and Brahms's D major Symphony, but Weingartner's own 'Tempest' music tilted the balance heavily in the other direction. Miss Alma Moodie made a brilliant reappearance as a solo violinist, although she was not too happy in her choice of solos. A programme which asks us to listen seriatim to the Prelude in Act 3 of 'Lohengrin,' Weingartner's 'Tempest' music, the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, and the Pergolesi-Stravinsky Suite for solo violin, places a powerful weapon in the hands of the anti-prohibitionist!——Under the ægis of the Glasgow Education Authority, several concerts to school children were given by the Scottish Orchestra.—— At the Max Mossel first subscription concert (at Glasgow and Edinburgh), Miss Maggie Teyte sang with characteristic clearness of vocalisation and perfect diction, and Mr. Arthur Rubenstein played with tremendous vigour, which miraculously never descended to mere noise. But he quite failed to reconcile us to 'Petrouchka' in its pianistic form, even after we learned that the composer had arranged it for the pianoforte for him. At the second Mossel concert, Cortôt, Thibaud, and Casals played Trios by Schubert, Beethoven, and Schumann as superbly as we are ever likely to hear them done. A memorable evening. ——The annual 'December' concert of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir filled St. Andrew's Hall for four successive nights, representing an aggregate attendance of fully ten thousand people. A varied programme of part-songs and madrigals included Bantock's remarkable arrangement of the Hebridean 'Death Croon,' perhaps his highest achievement as a choral composer and one peculiarly attuned to the characteristic excellences of the Orpheus Choir. A new part-song by Mr. Roberton, 'The twa corbies,' presented some original and effective features.—— At a Chamber concert given by the Glasgow Bach Society, the string orchestra of the Society (over thirty players), with the assistance of several well-known local soloists, presented Bach's E major Violin Concerto, D major Pianoforte Concerto, and 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 3, in G, and Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 12, in B minor. Mr. F. H. Bisset and Mr. J. Michael Diack shared the conducting——Miss Ella Voysey (who has come to Glasgow from the Madge Atkinson School of Classical Dancing, at Manchester, to take up teaching, and has been entrusted with the training of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir Children's Sangspiel) gave a memorable evening of 'Dance and Music' in the Lyric Theatre. The programme included dance interpretations of a number of familiar short pianoforte pieces by Bach, Chopin, Grieg, Scarlatti, Debussy, Brahms, and others. The outstanding feature was Miss Voysey's own dancing, if dancing it should be called. In its use of plastic art and rhythmic movement to poetic ends, and its completeness of imaginative absorption, we have never seen anything of its kind lovelier or more moving.—— Miss Doris Dutson, a young Southport singer who impressed us very favourably at her recital here last spring, made a return visit, and gave considerable pleasure by her sympathetic and thoughtful presentation of Schubert's song-cycle, 'Frauenliebe und Leben,' and a group of French and English songs, but showed a regrettable tendency to convert a lovely mezzo voice into a much less agreeable contralto. The McCullagh Ladies' String Quartet, from Liverpool, gave variety to Miss Dutson's programme with pleasant performances of some quartet movements.——Mr. G. Stirling Mavor, a Glasgow baritone, who gave a first recital, lacks as yet the resources necessary for the successful tackling of so heavy a programme as he set himself.——The Music Society String Quartet, from London, in a programme of Quartets by Purcell, Haydn, Goossens, and Ravel, gave us playing which was always sound and musicianly, but rather lacking in character.——Under the auspices of the British Music Society, Glasgow centre, a programme of vocal duets, sung by Miss Beatrice Beaufort and Miss Janet Christopher, introduced under the happiest conditions a quantity of charming music for the most part quite unfamiliar to us.——The British Music Society, the Workers' Educational Association, and Glasgow University Extra-mural Education Committee, are collaborating in a tutorial course of ten lectures on 'Instruments and the Orchestra,' given at the University by Mr. Percy Gordon, musical critic of the Glasgow Herald, which should serve as a capital introduction to the more ambitious University Cramb Trust Lectures on 'The Orchestra,' to be delivered later in the season by Mr. Gustav Holst.——For its annual autumn series of ballad and operatic Saturday evening concerts the Glasgow Abstainers' Union had quite a constellation of 'stars,' and had its reward in full houses.——Mr. Robert Taylor, a local pianist of undoubted gifts, chose for his annual recital works by Beethoven, Chopin, and modern Spanish composers. ——The Glasgow Philharmonic Opera Society gave a week's performances of 'Mignon' at the Theatre Royal. Mr. James A. Duncan conducted, and Mr. Miller Reid, late of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, was the producer.—— About seven hundred choristers drawn from the various Episcopal Churches in the district took part in a choral (non-competitive) Festival in St. Mary's Cathedral. Among the works performed were Macpherson's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, his anthem 'O praise God in His holiness,' and Stanford's Te Deum. Mr. John Pullein conducted. —— Mr. Jack Millar, a Glasgow baritone blinded in the war, gave his first recital, and sang with more promise than actual achievement a wide range of songs from Purcell and folk-songs to present-day composers. The Falconer String Quartet, from Edinburgh, gave variety to the programme.——Miss Jessie Bosomworth gave a first pianoforte recital, and displayed a highly developed technique in a representative programme.

EDINBURGH. — The programme of the Paterson Orchestral concerts followed the general lines of those of the Scottish Orchestra concerts at Glasgow noticed above. At the first concert of the tenth season of the Edinburgh Reid Orchestra concerts, Mr. Adrian C. Boult (in the absence of Prof. Tovey, who has been away for some months on a concert tour in the United States) conducted a programme comprising Sibelius's fifth Symphony (which, it had originally been arranged, should be conducted by the composer himself), Holst's 'Beni-Mora' Suite, Brahms's 'Tragic' Overture, and some 'Meistersinger' excerpts. At the second concert Prof. Tovey resumed control. At the third, the outstanding feature was Casals's superb playing of the Schumann 'Cello Concerto and Bach's Suite in C minor for solo 'cello.——At the first of Prof. Tovey's Sunday evening concerts, the Reid Orchestra (conducted by Miss Mary Grierson in Prof. Tovey's absence) played Haydn's 'Roll Call' Symphony, in E flat, Mozart's Horn Concerto, Beethoven's 'Prometheus' Overture, and other works. The second concert took the form of a pianoforte recital by Miss Fanny Davies, who made a welcome re-appearance at Edinburgh after a long absence. At the third concert, a chamber-music programme was presented by the Edinburgh String Quartet and Miss Mary Grierson (pianoforte). Prof. Tovey made his re-entry with two Beethoven pianoforte recitals, the underlying purpose of one of these being to elucidate the structure and characteristics of the 'Waldstein' Sonata. Other interesting features of these Sunday concerts were performances of Ravel's amusing Trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello, and Prof. Tovey's own long and exuberant Pianoforte Quintet, written by him in 1896 and since revised.——The third season of Children's Lecture-Concerts—organized conjointly by Messrs. Paterson Sons & Co. and the Edinburgh Education Authority, and directed by Mr. Herbert Wiseman—opened with a programme of Scottish folk-songs, varied with community singing. At the second concert, the programme was devoted to works for wood-wind instruments, varied by some Irish folk-songs. At the third, a string orchestra played a selection of classical and other dances, old and new. At the fourth, excerpts from Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Mikado' were presented; at the fifth a full orchestra played a representative range of familiar pieces illustrating 'the material of music'; and for the sixth the children themselves choose the programme by plébiscite.——At one of Dr. Ross's Sunday evening organ recitals in Usher Hall, St. Serf's Musical Association and Linlithgow Choral Union joined forces in Stanford's 'The Revenge.' Mr. T. Paterson Lamb conducted.——The British National Opera Company followed its successful fortnight at Glasgow with a two-weeks' season at Edinburgh, but was not nearly so well supported. Proposals have been mooted for a local guarantee fund on the same lines as that instituted (but not called upon) at Glasgow.——The d'Oyly Carte Opera Company visited Edinburgh and Glasgow with the usual Gilbert-Sullivan repertory, and secured the usual hearty support.——Miss Gladys Clark (violin) gave a series of three 'five o'clock' chamber ensemble concerts.——The Edinburgh String Quartet deserved much better support than it received for its Beethoven Festival week, in the course of which the combination played the whole sixteen String Quartets of Beethoven. The choir and orchestra of the Edinburgh Bach Society (conductor, Mr. Douglas Dickson) performed interesting excerpts from five of Bach's Church cantatas. ——An interesting experiment has been initiated by the Edinburgh Education Authority in connection with the evening Continuation Classes. Public works and warehouses are encouraged to arrange for singing classes in their own works for their own employees, the Education Authority accepting these under certain conditions as regular Continuation Classes and providing the necessary teachers and equipment. The possibilities (and difficulties) of the scheme are considerable, and it is being watched with interest by other districts.——Recitals have been given by Miss Mary Stuart Black (mezzo-soprano), Mr. Robert Taylor (pianoforte), Miss Edith Walton (pianoforte), Mr. Jean Baptiste Toner (pianoforte), and Miss Theo. Hunter (violin). Mr. David McCullum, the Glasgow violinist, and Mr. Roy Henderson, the Edinburgh-London baritone, gave a joint recital, and the Falconer String Quartet gave the first of a series of three recitals.——A sign of the times? . . . the Scotsman, perhaps the most conservative journal in the United Kingdom, has started a weekly causerie on 'Music and Musicians.' So far, the articles have been far below the general literary level of the Scotsman!

HELENSBURGH.—Pablo Casals and Madame Metcalfe-Casals were the artists at the second Helensburgh subscription concert, the honours naturally lying with the distinguished 'cellist.

KILMACOLM.—A pianoforte recital given by Miss Myra Hess at St. Columba's School showed her to have gained in dynamic vigour and breadth of style without any diminution of the characteristic qualities of her wonderful art.

PAISLEY.—The Paisley Lyric Choir sang a varied programme representative of Scottish song, Mr. E. W. Gould making a first appearance as conductor.

PERTH.—Perth Madrigal Society (Mr. D. T. Yacamini), one of the finest of Scottish choirs, employed a highly-finished technique to expressive ends in a programme of part-songs and madrigals.

GENERAL.—Pavlova, supported by a corps de ballet, made a tour of the principal concert-halls throughout Scotland, and was met everywhere with full houses and much enthusiasm.——The 'international celebrity' concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee certainly justified their name by presenting successively Pachmann, Hempel, and Heifetz. The veteran pianist was announced as making a final and last farewell appearance. We await with interest the description of his next visit. His playing seemed at times as fine, if as elfish, as ever, but his dynamic range never got beyond a mezzo-forte. Madame Frieda Hempel, abandoning her doubtful Jenny Lind stunt of last year, appeared this time as 'herself,' and was most successful where skilful musicianship and a lively intelligence could most effectively take the place of emotional subtlety and imaginative insight. One could not sufficiently admire her skill in delivering the goods even where she hadn't got them! Heifetz, by including in his programme such things as the Bach Chaconne and the 'Kreutzer' Sonata, gave us our first opportunity for hearing him in genuinely significant numbers. Tone and technique were alike quite flawless, but he seemed to react as little as ever to the expressive content of the music.——The Tetrazzini Scottish tour had to be curtailed owing to the prima donna's illness. At such of the concerts as were actually given, the most attractive feature was the really distinguished 'cello playing of M. Fernand Pollain.——Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Samuel Liddle made a week's tour in Scotland, giving song-recitals at Edinburgh, Perth, Falkirk, and Bridge-of-Allan, and lecture-recitals at Glasgow and Inverness.——The Glasgow Orpheus Choir gave concerts at Cumnock, Bathgate, Stirling, Greenock, Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy, Dundee (two), Edinburgh (two), and York (where it was accorded a civic reception), and paid a flying visit to London to make some choral records for the Gramophone Company (H.M.V.). SEBASTIAN.

Under the auspices of the New Education Fellowship Miss Marjorie Gullan will conduct at the Fellowship headquarters, 11, Tavistock Square, W.C., classes in Speech-Training and Verse-Speaking. The term begins on January 16. There will also be a course for infants' teachers on Saturday mornings, beginning on January 16. Full particulars from the Secretary, at the above address.

Music in Wales

Aberystwyth.—At the weekly College concert on October 22, Miss Dilys Jones gave a recital which included Schumann's song-cycle 'Frauenliebe und Leben,' and modern and folk-songs. On October 29 the College Choral Union gave the first and fourth movements of Brahms's 'Requiem,' and a small choir sang Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' and Holst's 'Evening Watch,' conducted by Sir Walford Davies. On November 12 the College Quartet was heard in Brahms's String Quartet in G minor (Op. 51), and the small choir sang Vaughan Williams's unaccompanied Mass in G minor. On November 19 Miss Dorothy Silk gave a song recital which included a group of Bach arias accompanied by the strings of the College orchestra, a group of 17th- and 18th-century songs and folk-songs, and some modern songs. The small choir contributed some choral items.——On November 26 Miss Anna Hegner's violin recital included Bach's Concerto in A minor for violin and string orchestra, Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, and a number of smaller items, in which her brilliant execution was ably seconded by Mr. Charles Clements at the pianoforte. On November 29, Parts 1 and 2 of Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio were given at St. Michael's Church, under the baton of Sir Walford Davies. On December 3, Dr. de Lloyd's setting of Henry Vaughan's poem 'Beyond the veil' was sung with orchestral accompaniment. A carol concert took place on December 10 in University Hall, conducted by Mr. W. R. Allen.

Bangor.—The ninety-ninth College weekly concert was given on November 19, the programme comprising Trio No. 2 (second performance), John Ireland; Scherzo from Trio in C minor, Mendelssohn; and Trio, 'Country Magic,' Armstrong Gibbs. Students of the College also sang songs by Purcell and Brahms. At the hundredth concert, on November 26, Dvorák's 'Dumky' Trio and Beethoven in D ('The Ghost'), together with Violin Sonata (Nardini) and Mendelssohn's 'Cello and Pianofore Sonata were given. On December 2 the College Choral Society, supported by the Bangor Orchestra (augmented for the occasion), gave a highly successful concert in the great Pritchard-Jones Hall of the College. The principal items were Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio, Parts 1 and 2, Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, Holst's Fugal Concerto for flute, oboe, and strings, and Handel's Concerto-Grosso in G minor, No. 6. The choir sang brilliantly, and evidently enjoyed the Bach choruses, and the orchestra of forty-four, which included six players from outside, performed very creditably. Miss Luned Lewis-Jones (a former Bangor student now at the R.A.M.), Mr. T. J. Pickering, and Mr. Powell Edwards were the soloists, and Mr. E. T. Davies, Director of Music, conducted. The hundred-and-first College concert was given on December 3, when the programme included Haydn's Trio in D (No. 6), and other items already reported during the term. The children's monthly concerts at the College are proving very successful. At the third, given on December 7, the programme comprised 'Introductory remarks on the art of listening'; Concerto for two violins in D minor (two movements), Bach; Quartet for flute and strings, Mozart; movements from Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte, Grieg; and the Trio in E flat, Op. 70, No. 1, Beethoven. Four hundred and twenty scholars from the local Intermediate schools attend these concerts, and each event is allowed by the local school governors to take the place of the last school lesson on that day.

Barry Dock.—On December 9 the Cathays Juvenile Prize Choir (of Cardiff), conducted by Madame Ben Davies, gave a concert consisting of Welsh airs and folk-songs.

Cardiff.—The University College sessional concerts were resumed on October 17, when Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in B and Mozart's Trio in E were played by the College Trio—Mrs. David Evans (violin), Miss Joan Willis ('cello), and Mr. Joseph Morgan (pianoforte). A Minuet by Handel, for 'cello, and a Prelude by Bach, were also given. On November 28 Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor (Op. 49) and three movements from Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 11) were played by the College Trio. Other items were a Sonata in G minor, by Henry Eccles, played by Mr. D. G. Collier, and Haydn's Pianoforte Sonata in E flat, played by Mr. Joseph Morgan. Miss N. Darby contributed vocal items. On November 5, Mrs. David Evans and Mr. Joseph Morgan played Pizzetti's Sonata for violin and pianoforte, Miss S. Rosser contributed vocal items, Miss Ena Phillips gave a pianoforte solo, 'Nuit d'été sur la terrasse' (by Josquin Turina), and the evening concluded with Brahms's Trio in C major, played by the College Trio. The final concert of the term, on December 12, consisted of Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio (Parts 1 and 2), and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, conducted by Prof. David Evans.——Mr. Dalrymple has instituted a series of weekly organ recitals at Tredegarville Baptist Church, which are well attended and much appreciated.——Mr. Warwick Braithwaite, the conductor of the broadcasting orchestra at Cardiff, has been appointed conductor of the Cardiff Musical Society in the place of the veteran Mr. T. E. Aylward. Mr. Braithwaite was formerly a Goring Thomas composition scholar at the Royal Academy of Music.——The proposal to inaugurate a symphony orchestra at Cardiff, to consist of sixty to seventy performers, has led to the formation of a committee to discuss further details.——On November 2 the London String Quartet gave a programme including Beethoven's Quartet in D, Dvorák's 'Negro' Quartet, and Brahms's Quartet in A. The playing was much appreciated.——Mr. Herbert Ware is continuing his series of Beethoven Symphony concerts, the last, on November 7, having been devoted to Symphony No. 7.——On November 29 a benefit concert was given to Mr. Falkman, at which the Newport Choral Society, conducted by Mr. A. E. Sims, gave a number of items, including Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the Unknown Region.' Mr. Tudor Davies contributed vocal items, and Mr. Falkman played Chopin's Nocturne in E flat.——On the same date a concert took place at the rooms of the Société Franco-Anglaise, consisting largely of French music. Mlle. Wieniawska played several viola and violin solos by Marais and Couperin, Mrs. Dunstan Price, Mrs. D. K. Prosser, and Mr. Alfred Davies sang a number of French and English songs, Miss Ena Phillips played pianoforte solos by Debussy and Ravel, and M. Valet, the French consul, gave two recitations.——The annual concert on behalf of the Jewish League took place on November 6, when the Max Pirani Trio contributed instrumental items, and Madame Selma d'Arco joined Mr. Topliss Green in two operatic duets, besides giving several solo numbers by Charpentier, Gretchaninov, ond Franco Leoni.

Ferndale.—On November 30, the boys of the Hendrefodog School gave a performance of 'The Gondoliers,' under the stage-direction of Mr. J. Fraser, the headmaster, and his staff. Mr. Tom Jones, a member of the teaching staff, conducted an augmented orchestra. The proceeds were devoted to acquiring further gramophones and classical records for the various departments in the School.

Landore.—On October 29 the Landore Juvenile Orchestra, conducted by Master Cyril Gregory, gave selections from the works of Bach, Handel, Mozart, and Adam Carse, in collaboration with the Swansea and District Royal Male-Voice Choir.

Merthyr.—During the week ending November 14 the Merthyr Borough Operatic Society produced the opera 'The Rebel Maid,' under the direction of Mr. Dan Rees and Mr. S. Roberts.——Mr. Mostyn Thomas gave a vocal recital previous to his return to Italy.——Mr. Gatty Sellars, of Kingsway Hall, London, gave an organ recital at Zoar Chapel on December 3, assisted by Madame Laura Evans-Williams, whose singing of Welsh folk-songs was much appreciated.——Organized by the Merthyr Borough Ex-Service-Men's Club, an interesting orchestral and vocal concert took place at the Temperance Hall on December 6. Included in the programme were two compositions by the conductor, Mr. W. S. Parry, one an orchestral number, 'Forest Dances,' and the other a song, 'Billy and me.'

The soloists were Mr. Todd Jones and Miss Nancy Powell Williams (vocalists), and Miss Elsie Thomas (harp).

NEWPORT.—On the completion of its fourth term, the Newport Orchestral Training Class organized a concert, conducted by Mr. D. E. Parry Williams (Cardiff). The first and second movements of Beethoven's Symphony in C, Handel's 'Water Music,' and the first of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Four Characteristic Waltzes,' were among the items contributed.——On November 9 the Newport Operatic Society gave a performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Princess Ida,' under the direction of Mr. Lindsay Harman.

NEWTOWN. — The small choir of the Aberystwyth College Choral Union, conducted by Sir Walford Davies, gave a performance on October 31, at Gregynog Hall. The programme comprised Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater,' Vaughan William's unaccompanied Mass in G minor, Holst's 'Evening Watch,' and Sir Walford's 'Men and Angels.' Sir Walford gave a short lecture on the use of the fourth in the music of the early Church, and its revival at the present time.

PEMBROKESHIRE.—In connection with the Pembrokeshire 'Education week,' Sir Walford Davies gave a number of lecture-concerts at Kilgerran, St. David's, and Pembroke Dock, assisted by the members of the Aberystwyth College Trio. At Pembroke Dock, the County School gave a performance of 'Hiawatha.'

PENARTH.—Mrs. Dunstan Price gave an artistic song recital, ranging from Handel and Scarlatti to modern British composers, assisted by Mr. Albert Sammons.

PONTYPRIDD.—The hundred and forty-fourth meeting of the South Wales section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians was held at the Y.M.C.A., Pontypridd, on December 3, Mr. T. Davies, Cardiff, in the chair. The delegates were entertained to tea by Mr. D. Lleufer Thomas, the stipendary magistrate, who occupied the chair in the evening, when a lecture was delivered by Mr. A. J. Thompson, the blind organist of Pontypool, whose subject was 'Musicians.' He gave illustrations from the old masters, and compared them with ultra-modern works. His playing of illustrative excerpts was greatly appreciated. The next meeting will be held at the Park Hotel, on March 4.

RESOLVEN.—On December 7 the Mountain Ash Girls' Choir gave a concert at Jerusalem Chapel, under the conductorship of Mr. W. Badham, with Miss Annie Webber at the pianoforte.

SKEWEN. — Mr. Ivor Owen (Swansea) lectured at Tabernacle Hall on November 8. His subject was 'Sir Edward Elgar,' and there were numerous musical illustrations.

SWANSEA.—On November 5, Madame Tetrazzini paid her first visit to Swansea, when she was assisted by Mr. Eric Marshall (baritone) and M. Pollain (violin). She gave several operatic selections, songs by Rubinstein, Rachmaninov, and Ambroise Thomas, and also an English song 'Spring is coming.'

WREXHAM.—Under the conductorship of Dr. Hopkin Evans, of Liverpool, the Wrexham Philharmonic Society opened its season with a concert performance of 'Pagliacci.' The principals were Miss Gladys Naish, Mr. Parry Jones, and Mr. William Michael of the B.N.O.C., supported by Mr. John Roberts and Mr. Emlyn Davies, and a chorus and orchestra of three hundred performers. Mr. Pullein, the organist of the parish church, accompanied, and Mr. W. Whittaker led the orchestra.

The review of Bach's Sonatas for flute and pianoforte, Nos. 1-3, edited by Louis Fleury, in last month's Musical Times, omitted the name of the publisher—Durand. A similar omission occurred in the notice of André Caplet's 'Un tas de petites choses,' for pianoforte duet, also published by Durand.

Music in Ireland

The Rathmines and Rathgan Musical Society gave a delightful programme of Edward German's 'Merrie England' at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, during the week November 30 to December 5. Mr. T. H. Weaving, as musical director, had his forces well in hand, and the principals gave a good account of themselves. Mr. Philip Hurley (London) was producer during the following week (December 7 to 12). The 'Duchess of Dantzig' was given by the Society to full houses. At the Abbey Theatre, on December 2, Miss Ida Starkie gave an interesting 'cello recital (including Elgar's Concerto), with Mr. Percy Whitehead as vocalist and Mrs. Boxwell as accompanist. Miss Jean Nolan's song recital at Engineers' Hall, on December 2, was highly successful, with Dr. Hewson as a capable accompanist. She was heard at her best in a song from 'Acis and Galatea,' and in Sir Hamilton Harty's 'The Wake Feast.' Mr. Victor Love's pianoforte recital in the same hall, on December 9, was successful. He played selections from Bach, Liszt, Dohnányi, Beethoven, Paderewski, as well as a short group of his own compositions.

Mr. Vincent O'Brien, musical director of the pro-Cathedral, Dublin, has been appointed musical director of the new Irish Broadcasting Station, Dublin (opened by the Marconi Company). The call-signal of the station is 2RN, and the wave-length has been determined at 390 metres. The Dublin studio is in Denmark Street.

Dr. W. H. Gater has been elected president of the Leinster Society of Organists and Choirmaster for 1925-26, with Dr. G. H. Hewson and Mr. T. H. Weaving as vice-presidents.

On November 17 the Leinster Society organized a recital at the Unitarian Church, Stephen's Green, Dublin, by Mr. J. T. Horne, organist of St. Finbar's Cathedral, Cork. He displayed fine interpretation in Rheinberger's Sonata in E minor.

The house concert of the R.I.A.M., on October 29, was very enjoyable, the programme being varied and suitable to the requirements of the students. At a recent meeting of the Academy, Mr. T. H. Weaving, who has been for some years a teacher in the institution, was promoted to the position of professor, with a seat on the Board of Studies. At the annual meeting of the R.I.A.M., on December 9, under the presidency of Mr. W. J. Drury, a storm of criticism was evoked over the adoption of the report. Finally it was decided that the report should be merely 'submitted,' without any reference to it being 'adopted.' The statement showed a credit balance of £1,162. Mrs. Starkie, Miss Griffiths, and Dr. Larchet were elected Governors.

On December 10, at the Graduates' Memorial Buildings, Trinity College, Dublin, Prof. Dr. C. H. Kitson gave an interesting lecture on Sir Robert Stewart, whose centenary was on December 16. An admirable selection of his compositions was sung by members of the Dublin University Choral Society.

The chamber music recitals under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society, at the new Members' Hall, Ballsbridge, Dublin, on November 2, had a splendid send-off for the season 1925-26, with M. Phillipovsky, who appeared at the afternoon and the evening events. The distinguished pianist expressed his satisfaction at the excellent acoustics of the hall. The auditorium is capable of accommodating over eighteen hundred persons. M. Phillipovsky's really artistic performances attracted an afternoon audience of upwards of sixteen hundred. On November 9, the Snow String Quartet gave an acceptable performance, including the Elgar Quartet, the attendance being even larger than that on the opening day. The Pirani Trio gave much pleasure to a crowded audience on November 16. Solomon, the English pianist, was the attraction at the recital on November 23. He played brilliantly, but there was no need to follow the custom of picture theatres by juggling with the lights in the intervals. The new hall of the R.D.S. was also the venue of an interesting lecture by Dr. J. F. Larchet, on November 20. His subject, 'How to Listen to Music,' was admirably illustrated by numerous selections. So great has been the demand for seats at the Society's chamber recitals, that the innovation of having two recitals every Monday—one in the afternoon and the other in the evening—has relieved the congestion, and made for comfort. At the viola and pianoforte recital on November 30, Mr. Lionel Tertis and Mr. William Murdoch gave a varied programme, including Brahms's F minor Sonata and the Scherzo (Op. 19) by Rachmaninov. The attendance in the afternoon was upwards of thirteen hundred, and over seven hundred in the evening. On December 14, Moiseiwitsch delighted two large audiences. The Catterall Quartet, on December 7, attracted two full houses. Arnold Bax's G major Quartet was delightfully played.

M. Marcel Dupré, organist of Notre Dame, gave a recital in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on November 24, before an immense audience.

Much sympathy is felt with Mr. Brendan Rogers, the veteran organist of the pro-Cathedral, Dublin, on the death of his son Percy (aged fifty-five), who has been for some years organist of the Church of SS. Peter and Paul, Clonmel.

Under the direction of Col. Fritz Brase, the Army School of Music No. 1 Band gave an enjoyable recital at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on November 8, a special feature being compositions by the Colonel's countryman, Strauss, the Waltz King, in honour of his centenary. On December 13, the Band gave a concert in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, conducted by Col. Fritz Brase, Miss Bridie Moloney and Mr. Joseph O'Neill being vocalists.

An enjoyable revival of 'Les Cloches de Corneville,' by the Cork Operatic Society, filled the Opera House, Cork, during the week November 23 to 28, under the direction of Herr Theo. Gmür, who has been for upwards of forty years connected with the musical life of the city.

At the annual meeting of the Gervase Elwes Fund, at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on November 25, Major Whewell read the report, and stressed the need for alleviating distress among musicians.

Rev. J. C. O'Flynn (Cork) delivered the annual address at the general meeting of Dublin Pioneers at the Theatre Royal on November 29, and gave a lecture at the Pioneer Hall on November 30, his subject being, 'Irish Music and Song,' in which he had the valuable assistance of Mr. Arthur Darley (violin) as illustrator, with three Cork folk-singers.

On December 15 an orchestral concert took place in Molesworth Hall, with Miss Dorothy Stokes and Mr. T. G. Wallis as singers. The orchestra numbered forty performers, under Miss Petite O'Hara.

Dr. T. G. O'Feely (Oxon.) received the Mus. D. of Dublin University, ad eundem, on December 11.

The Belfast Philharmonic Society's opening concert for the season 1925-26 took place on October 16, in Ulster Hall, the pièce de résistance being 'Carmen,' with Miss Moxon, Miss Willis, Mr. Heseltine, and Mr. Michael as soloists, under the direction of Mr. E. Godfrey Browne. Mr. J. H. MacBratney supplied the accompaniments. The chorus, although now and then unsteady, was in the main very good, and was well supplemented by the orchestra. On October 17 the Ulster Hall Popular Concert 'starred' Mr. John Goss and the Mayfair Glee Singers. Mr. Goss's sea shanties were much appreciated. The concert on November 13 was attended by the Governor of Northern Ireland and the Duchess of Abercorn. Miss Irene Scharrer and Miss Mavis Bennett contributed to the programme, which also contained choral and orchestral selections, one of the novelties being Brent-Smith's 'In Glorious Freedom.' Mr. Godfrey Browne conducted, and Mr. J. H. MacBratney accompanied.——Bach's Cantata, 'God's time is the best,' was splendidly sung at the Carlish Memorial Church, Belfast, on November 29, under the direction of Mr. J. H. MacBratney, with Dr. Norman Hay at the organ.

The Belfast postmen's fourteenth annual concert, on December 2, was held in Ulster Hall, and won a deserved success. The artists included Miss Dorothy Moulton, Mr. Harold Fry, Mr. William Murdoch, and Adila Fachiri, with Mrs. Warwick and Mr. A. F. Parker as accompanists.

A new organ (built by Messrs. Evans & Barr) was dedicated in St. Donard's Church, Belfast, on November 28, by the Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore. A short recital was given by Dr. E. M. Chaundy (Armagh). The usual service was conducted by Mr. W. A. Crone, an appropriate sermon being preached by the Lord Primate. Dr. Chaundy gave another recital on November 30.

Before an overflowing audience at Dufferin Hall, Bangor, on October 22, the Bangor Harmonic Society, now in its twenty-second year of usefulness, gave a delightful concert-social under the guidance of its original conductor, Mr. Robert Jones. A sum of over £40 was realised. Lisburn Choral Society (Mr. John Vine, conductor) gave a creditable performance of 'The Messiah' on December 10.

At the annual meeting of the Dungannon Musical Festival, Mayor Dickson presiding, it was decided to hold a four days' Festival next year. Several new items were added to the syllabus, and the radius for school choirs was extended. In addition, the adult choral competitions are thrown open to all Ireland.

The 'international celebrity' concerts at Dublin and Belfast on November 7 and 9 gave prominence to Heifetz, who is a truly marvellous player. M. Isidor Achron accompanied.

Dublin and Belfast alike—on November 21 and 23 respectively—appreciated to the full the 'farewell' appearance of Madame Tetrazzini, who gave of her best in her own inimitable fashion. She had the valuable assistance of Messrs. Bratza, Eric Marshall, and Fernand Pollain, with Mr. Ivor Newton at the pianoforte.

Mr. T. C. Corrin, who was formerly organist at Portadown, and who has been for over a year assistant musical director of the Belfast Broadcasting Station, has been appointed Inspector of Music for primary schools in the six counties.——Miss May Codd, organist of the Franciscan Church, Wexford, has been appointed organist of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Wexford, and is replaced, in the former post, by Miss Murphy.

Mr. Gerald Patrick Ward, a young Irishman living at Sheffield, has won first place, out of three hundred and ten entrants, in a competition in London, entitling him to three years' free music tuition, under Signor Guido Delui.

SPANISH MADRIGALS

There was an unusually large meeting of Musical Association members on December 1, when Mr. J. B. Trend read a paper on 'Spanish Madrigals,' which proved to be the result of much labour and research in Spanish libraries. The word 'madrigal' was not a Spanish musical term. There were numbers of secular compositions which, though not called by that name, often approached to the madrigal type. They were sometimes called 'Sonnets' or 'Songs,' but in Spain the native word for these was 'Villancico,' which by derivation seemed to mean a little song sung by country people, or 'villains' in the literal sense of the word. Its chief characteristic was a refrain which occurred at the beginning of each verse as well as at the end. It was obviously a musical form. The earliest music to Villancicos dated from about 1270. A collection of over four hundred 'canticles' for a single voice, formed by King Alfonso the Sage, was preserved in the Escurial, but these had nothing to do with the madrigal. The earliest compositions definitely labelled madrigals were Italian, and dated from the middle of the 14th century. The earliest Spanish compositions of the kind—secular music in three or more parts, with Spanish words—dated from not later than 1500. The oldest MS. belonged to Ferdinand Columbus, the nephew of the discoverer. He bought all the new music he could get, and his books and music were now in the Chapter Library at Seville. His collection included some of the greatest treasures of early printed music. Another early MS. of Spanish music was the 'Song Book of the Palace,' now in the Royal Library at Madrid; it contained four hundred and sixty pieces of music in from two to six parts. This MS. was scored and printed about thirty-five years ago, but it was only within the last ten years that anyone had paid any attention to it. A few extracts from it were given in the 'Oxford History.'

It might be asked, perhaps, Where did the Spaniards learn composition? It used to be thought that their first teachers were Flemish. Morales certainly learned a good deal from Flemish composers, and the Spaniards certainly knew the music of Josquin des Près; there were numerous illuminated MSS. of his Church music in several Spanish Cathedrals. The two MSS. mentioned above showed that the Flemish teachers must have come earlier. Nor were they all Flemish. Among the minstrels kept in attendance by the mediæval kings of Castille, and kings of Aragon, there were generally to be found Englishmen and Scotchmen, some of whose names have been preserved. By 1492 a certain amount of English music was known in Spain, as well as Flemish, Italian, and French, and by the beginning of the next century there were a number of active Spanish composers. The composer of that time of whom most was known was Juan del Enzina (1469-1534), an Archdeacon of Malaga and subsequently Prior of Leon.

In Spain, ever since the beginning of the 16th century, it was secular and not sacred music which had taken the lead in the development of expression. And by the end of the century the ecclesiastical style of Palestrina had become, musically speaking, a dead language. The only opportunity for progress in vocal music lay with compositions in the vernacular, and in Spain the chief of these was the Villancico. The most obvious changes in structure in Spanish vocal music of the time were changes in the location of the tune, whether it was in an under part or at the top. The words of the early Villancicos were not so much popular songs as court poetry masquerading as popular songs. A vulgar refrain was often used with a sentimental verse for contrast; words and music were sometimes deliberately ill-assorted for a comic effect. Madrigals, or compositions more like those recognised as madrigals, were a reaction against this vulgarity, with words written by real poets. They were mainly chordal in structure, with the melody first at the top, and then, as time went on, given in turn to each part, so that every singer might have his share of the tune. In the next stage, the madrigal was typically in five parts, with alternate chordal and contrapuntal passages. The last stage was that of Marenzio, the Prince of Venosa, Monteverde, and most of the English madrigalists, who of course in contrast to the Spaniards all belonged to the very end of the 16th century and the beginning of the 17th.

Spain never produced a Morley or a Weelkes; but it produced a protest against the dull Italianate madrigals by a man who was genuinely fond of folk-songs—Juan Vasquez. His music was now practically unknown. There were a few modern and not very accurate transcriptions made from lute arrangements; but his original part-books had not been seen for about eighty years, and then by a man who had copied not the music, but the words. The lecturer had, however, been enabled to work in the Medinaceli Library at Madrid, and had copied and scored a good deal of the music. Vasquez apparently lived at Seville, where he published two sets of part-books: 'Villancicos and Songs' for three and four voices (1551), and 'Sonnits and Villancicos' for four and five voices in 1560. There was a delightful freshness both in the tunes and the words, and these little compositions were very popular with the lutenists who made many transcriptions from them. The five-part 'Del rosa sale la rosa' was a strangely beautiful piece of writing.

The next stage in the history of Spanish madrigals showed the gradual progress towards conventional examples of the Italian type. Morales wrote at least three madrigals to Italian words, and his earliest known work was a secular piece, though the words were Latin, written for a Peace Conference at Nice, in 1538. It was a monumental work for six voices, constructed on a plan which Morales used frequently in his Motets. Five voices sang the words in florid counterpoint, while the sixth voice had the one word 'Gaudeamus,' which it sang again and again to the same six notes. This was not a new device, but was found all through the 16th century, from Josquin des Près to Orlando di Lasso. It was essential, of course, that the independent voice should have a good tune to sing, and with Morales this always seemed to be the case. In scoring his Motets, it was impossible not to feel that he had carefully arranged for the odd voice to come through with telling effect.

Doubt was sometimes expressed as to whether there really were any Spanish madrigals. Besides the MS. called 'Castillian Tones' in the Medinaceli Library, which contained a large number of genuine but unknown madrigals, the following list might help to clear the question: Pedro Vila (1561) wrote a set of 'Odes which in the vulgar tongue we call Madrigals.' Of this, the alto part alone is extant. Matthew Flecha the elder (1568) published a set of madrigals at Venice. They were real madrigals, but all except one were in Italian. Pedro Valenzuela (1572) published, at Venice, a set of madrigals with Italian words. Two of them had been edited by Mr. Barclay Squire. John Brudieu was really a Frenchman, but for many years he had been an organist on the Spanish side of the Pyrenees. A set of madrigal part books by him was now in the Escurial. Francisco and Pedro Guerrero both composed madrigals. Sebastian Raval was a Spaniard living in Italy, who published sets of madrigals for five voices in 1593, and for three voices in 1595, and also a book of canzonets in 1593. Pedro Ruimonte lived in Flanders. The madrigals in his set, published in 1614, were as complicated and chromatic as some of our English ones, though not so good. Nearly all were in Spanish, but the most interesting were his arrangements of popular Villancicos with a refrain for two or three voices and a chorus of six voices. There was a set of part-books at Christ Church, Oxford, but unfortunately the sextus was missing.

At intervals the lecture was illustrated by groups of the various compositions alluded to by Mr. Trend, sung with all their wonted artistry and finish by the English Singers.

In this way, as Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, who occupied the chair, remarked, the Musical Association had been the means, as often before, of affording an opportunity for musicians to hear little-known works.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

RICHARD STRAUSS'S 'PARERGON'

When it became known that Richard Strauss had made a pasticcio for pianoforte of his 'Sinfonia Domestica' for the one-armed pianist Paul Wittgenstein, it was evident that not the inspiration of the artist had led him to this composition. Paul Wittgenstein is the son of a rich Viennese merchant. He was unhappy enough to lose an arm in the war, a misfortune aggravated by its being his right arm. For some years he was content to give concerts in Germany and Austria, availing himself of certain transcriptions, for the left hand, the number of original compositions destined for one-armed pianists being, of course, not very large. This did not satisfy him, and he became more enterprising. He entrusted the young composer Erich Wolfgang Korngold with writing a work for him, hoping that the name of this composer would help him in his career. His expectations were not, however, fulfilled, and he—or, rather, his father on his behalf—turned to Richard Strauss. The financial transactions preceding the new work, which indeed was an old one, are interesting as illustrating once more the smartness of the famous composer. He called his work 'Parergon,' a nomenclature that seems designed to prevent criticism. Considering all that has been written by Strauss in the last decade of his activity, we must confess that the 'Parergon'—i.e. the 'accidental' work—is the leading motive of his art. He seems to have renounced giving us essential things.

'Parergon' was played at a Philharmonic concert under Wilhelm Furtwängler, by Wittgenstein himself. Now the fate of the performing artist who has been deprived of the best means for carrying out his intentions, must certainly be deplored, but at the same time we cannot approve of the appearance of a one-armed pianist in the concert-room. He represents for us rather a curious phenomenon, appealing more to sensation than inspiring true artistic interest. On the other hand, a Straussian composition, however bad it may be, has every right to be heard. Though neither the melodic substance of 'Parergon' — partly furnished as it is by the 'Sinfonia Domestica,' but nourished also by others of Strauss's works—nor its texture deserve higher attention, yet it must be recorded that probably no other living composer could so cleverly write for the left hand in a way that enables the hearer, if not wholly to lose sight of the essential vigour of a keyboard performance, yet to go near to rejecting the idea that something essential is missing. As to sonority, the composition leaves scarcely anything to be desired.

JOHANN STRAUSS CELEBRATIONS

Undoubtedly the other Strauss, with the name of Johann, though not having written symphonic poems, and having been dead since 1899, is destined still to play an important part in the musical life of Germany. The centenary of the famous waltz composer has been celebrated all over the country. Once, before the fox-trot conquered the dancing room, the waltz was the great inspirer of the social form of the art. Now the form has become so aristocratic that the 'Blue Danube' can be played at symphonic concerts and performed by great conductors without the public finding it strange. 'Fledermaus,' which at the beginning of its career lived in small operetta theatres, has long since entered the great opera houses.

Berlin has, in the last weeks, seen a great many Johann Strauss celebrations, which found adherents even among those to whom jazz seemed particularly dear. The difference between jazz and the now aristocratic waltz lies, of course, in the musical side. The fox-trot is being dominated by a rhythm which all too soon becomes mechanical. How came it that the musician Johann Strauss, guided solely by his instinct and by his violin, and having nothing metaphysical in his make up, could create works outliving two or three generations! The 'Blue Danube' was composed in 1867. It is as fresh to-day as it was in the day of its birth, though, of course, it expresses the spirit of another age and of Viennese life of the middle of the past century.

Two conductors, Bruno Walter and Erich Kleiber, celebrated Johann Strauss, the first-named with 'Fledermaus'—the second Act of which, the society Act, is a very good pretext for exhibiting all sorts of artistic achievements—the other, Viennese by birth, with 'Zigeunerbaron,' performed with that elasticity of rhythm characteristic of Viennese music, but at the same time with some mannerisms. 'Zigeunerbaron' had never before entered the Staatsoper; now it belongs to its repertory, having won a full measure of public approval.

Some days before, Meyerbeer's 'The African' had again come to a hearing, thus enabling the observer to compare the effects produced by these different composers. Meyerbeer, who, for Wagner as well as for Verdi, meant a guide into new operatic territory, and who evidently possessed much more intellectual force than Johann Strauss, seems antiquated in the greater part of his work.

GLUCK REVIVED

Another forerunner of Wagner, the man who laid the foundation of the music-drama, has been revived at the Städtische-Oper by Bruno Walter. That 'Iphigenia in Aulis' is a monumental work remains uncontested, but it is doubtful whether its revival will prove sufficiently attractive for the great public. How many times have the opera houses tried to win Gluck back for the mass of opera goers! At Paris, where an old tradition supports the classical drama even in music, this idea is more easy of attainment than in Germany, where Wagner, the great admirer of Gluck, has done all that was possible to make him an historic personage. It remains, however, that the performance of 'Iphigenia' under the baton of Bruno Walter is a great deed. Never before had I found the spirit of Wagner so fully realised from the very beginning of the Overture. No accent was lost. The heavy rhythm indicated that something great was in process. Even the scenery had a colour of its own. The painter Emil Praetorius had been called from Munich to give his advice for the performance. First-rate singers did their best to carry out the artistic intentions of Bruno Walter, who everywhere made his influence felt. It cannot be denied that the language of Gluck, monumental as it is, lags behind modern demands so far as the expression of the passionate is concerned. There is a sculptural repose both in the structure of the drama and of the music intimately connected with it. It is extremely difficult to fuse monumentalism and vitality. The arias and recitatives resemble each other so much that it is difficult to make them different in expression. Only in the two monologues of Agamemnon and of Klytemnestra is there any outlet for an outburst of feeling. It was here that Emil Schipper and Maria Olszewska were really remarkable. Delia Reinhardt, as Iphigenia, borrowed from the Staatsoper, was impressive, though not greatly representative of her part. The performance was well received, and may be viewed as a personal success for Bruno Walter, who in the last weeks had been the subject of negotiations initiated by the Vienna Staatsoper to win him as general musical-director. These efforts have not, for the moment at least, obtained the desired success.

A NEW CRISIS IN THE BERLIN STAATSOPER

Ever since he became intendant of the Berlin Staatsoper, much stormy dissension has centred round Max v. Schillings, German composer and conductor. The question was one of general art policy. In the times of the monarchy, the Royal Opera was governed by an amateur of aristocratic lineage, who enjoyed the royal favour. After the revolution, when several small opera-houses passed to the State, it was held to be natural that they should be under the direction of artists whose competence was uncontested. The years after the revolution have proved rich in experience. They have taught us that the status of an Opera is a question of personality. But at the same time a new inconvenience made itself felt. Bureaucratism, which had flourished under monarchical government, proved a no less obstructive menace under a republican administration. In the former state the intendant depended only upon the will of the monarch. Of course, this could be fatal to artistic development. What we call progress in stage management had very little chance of being carried through. In this respect the situation has no doubt improved, although on the other hand, the position of the intendant has become more difficult. His initiative now depends upon the will of the minister of public instruction and fine arts, who, himself incompetent, turns for guidance to importuners and secretaries.

Schillings, who had done his best to overcome the system, has been suddenly dismissed. Public opinion, which had been often against the intendant, supported him in the moment when bureaucratism won the upper hand. Max v. Schillings, a man born more for diplomatic negotiations than for energetic measures, had often been reproached with damaging the Staatsoper by his lack of firm will. But now his force of resistance commanded respect. It is true that he will never again be restored to his position at the Staatsoper; but a change of system will be a necessary outcome of the present crisis.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

Among the many chamber music works performed recently, those of Czechian composers deserve special attention.

The November Group, that association which is intimately connected with the German Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, welcomed as its guests the new Novak-Frank Quartet, of Prague, bringing the String Quartet by Bohuslav Martinu, a young Czech composer who on the occasion of the last Prague Festival had been represented by an orchestral work strongly influenced by Stravinsky. This was due to the fact that Martinu had spent some time at Paris. He has not yet freed himself from this influence, but his new work has the great advantage of showing clear outlines as well as interesting details. Most striking is its rhythmical force, sustaining motion. Well-defined tonality is another feature of the piece, though in the second part certain fourths seem hostile to it. On the whole, the musicianship of the composer, and his spontaneity of feeling, arouse the best hopes for his future.

The well-known Amar Quartet has given new proofs of the high level maintained by these players in the performance of chamber music. The Quartet also provided us with the opportunity of hearing a new work in C sharp minor by Hans Pfitzner, which, however, seemed more the result of methodical fatigue than of real inspiration.

ADOLPH WEISSMANN.

HOLLAND

Willem Landré's 'musical mystery play,' 'Beatrijs,' although open to criticism on various counts, which the newspapers have not hesitated to cite, has achieved a real success. Where it has failed is in its attempt to avoid extremes ; the production would have been more notable if the composer and his librettist had been either more wholeheartedly mystic or more completely operatic. The action, however, is sufficiently quick to make a real stage work, and the music is always effective and often very charming. It is somewhat old-fashioned in its manner of presentation, all the 19th-century conventions having been carefully observed, though Landré's technique is so distinctly modern. His strength lies in his power of characterization and in his splendid orchestration. The hearer feels the impersonation of the various rôles in their music, and the orchestral background is always exactly right. The one place where there is anything that is not quite related is where Beatrice hears the Voice calling her to return to her duties at the Convent. Here the voice is very obviously that of a vocalist stationed in the wings. It is curious that Landré should have made this mistake, for at another definitely mystic moment, where the figure of the Virgin is seen bending over the discarded habit, the mood is one of rare beauty and appropriateness. Yet the whole thing is as distinctly Dutch as the Rheinhard-Humperdinck 'The Miracle' was German, and although there were some weaknesses in the opening in this respect, the singers went on to show that Dutch is as good a language to sing in as any other. No pains had been spared to make the production as perfect as possible, and Messrs. van Raalte and Poolman—the former as conductor and the latter as stage director—are to be warmly congratulated on giving a new fillip to Dutch opera. 'Beatrijs' is appearing in their list wherever they go, and is receiving quite a large number of performances, balanced, at present, by such old-favourites as 'Faust,' 'Tannhäuser,' &c. Later we are to have Leo Sach's 'Les Burgraves,' and other modern productions.

The de Hondt Italian Opera troupe is also doing good business, though its repertory is still more conventional, with 'Bohême,' 'Aïda,' 'and La Traviata' as its mainstays.

The question of whether opera should be performed on the concert-platform is a vexed one here as elsewhere, but so long as either entrepreneurs or their supporters cannot pay for productions of certain works, the only way of keeping in touch with them is by recourse to choral society representations. The Roman Catholic Oratorio Society, with its three great branches at The Hague, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam, has already given an excellent performance of Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godunov'—needless to say, in the Rimsky-Korsakov version—which has provoked some speculative articles in the press concerning the discovery by 'a certain Robert Godet.' The Christian Oratorio Society, on the other hand, has devoted its first efforts to Bach, Bruckner, and Hubert Cuypers. Cuypers is among the men of the moment, and his own Society at The Hague, The Haghe Singers, a choir of some sixty men, at its annual concert devoted the bulk of the programme to the very well-written though somewhat mild works of its conductor. His Te Deum for double-choir, of men's voices, is well conceived, though I should place on a somewhat higher artistic level his simpler and less ambitious 'Jesu dulcis memoria' and 'Sacris solemniis.' Except for the 'Laus Tibi' of Orlando di Lassus, exquisitely sung by the choir, the remainder of the programme was of no importance whatever. Another choir which does good work, particularly in old Church music, is the Palestrina Choir conducted by Jos. Vranken. A happy idea of combining Palestrina and Bach, the latter chiefly in his organ music, was recently carried out by this choir and de Zwaan, the organist at the old church at The Hague, with the most gratifying results. The Palestrina works included the Mass 'Veni sponsa Christi,' and a number of Motets. Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion is almost as popular here as 'The Messiah' is in England, but thanks to the Amsterdam, Haarlem, The Hague, and other Bach Societies, as well as to soloists who find in the arias of the Church cantatas good material for their recitals, other and smaller works of Bach are rapidly taking prominent places in the musical life of the country. The first two of these bodies recently joined forces in a splendidly comprehensive programme, which included the Magnificat, the so-called 'Actus tragicus,' a Concerto for clavicembalo and strings, and some smaller items. Modern music, from Johann (and Richard) Strauss to Percy Grainger, Bartók, Kodály, and Honegger, is not, however being neglected, and both the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam and the Residentie Orchestra of The Hague have constant performances by these and other moderns. Stravinsky's 'Petrouchka' music has just been played under Dr. Pieter van Anrooy (described in a recent English musical dictionary as Pietr van Anrovy) at The Hague for the seventh time ! Vaughan Williams also looks like becoming popular. His works are being included in 'Folks' concert programmes at Amsterdam, the latest being the 'London' Symphony. Chamber works of the younger composers that have lately been heard include examples by Goossens, Honegger, Stravinsky, and Hindemith, played by the Concertgebouw Sextet, and among British works must be mentioned a fine group of songs by Arnold Bax, Nicholas Gatty, Gordon Bryan, and Martin Shaw, admirably sung by Rient van Santen who, with his accompanist, the composer B. van der Sigtenhorst Meyer, is doing much to popularise British music here. Another 'national' programme was that of 'Modern Hebrew Music,' arranged by Alexander Schmuller, the Russian violinist who is now resident here. Schmuller's own remarks about the rise of the distinctively Jewish music were very interesting, and the programme included works for voice, violin, and pianoforte by Ravel, Milhaud, Bloch, Achron, Engel, Milner, Krein, Guessin, and Saminski.

Interest in native music, old and new, grows apace in this little country of a glorious past and a promising future. The Amsterdam Schola Cantorum drew quite a large audience to its annual performance of Dutch music given in the large hall of the Concertgebouw. Sweelinck headed the programme with his Psalm 108, a work still possessing great freshness and charm, which was followed by shorter items by Josquin des Près and Orlando di Lasso. Hubert Cuypers, the Schola conductor, figured among the moderns with works that are already familiar, and compositions by Louis Schmidt and Antoon van der Horst proved more interesting for their evident sincerity of effort than for their actual achievement. The Rotterdam Teachers' Choral Society undertook Lili Boulanger's 'Du fond de l'abîme,' a work of varied merit and character, and the contrasted 'La Vida Breve' of de Falla. The choir is an excellent ensemble, and gave a good account of these works under the direction of Phons Dusch. Erich Korngold has paid a visit to the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam, when he made a much greater impression as a conductor of the famous orchestra than as a composer. Richard Strauss's 'Parergon zur Sinfonia Domestica,' played at the same concert, was a disappointment, its remarkable technical qualities failing to compensate for its lack of inspiration. Korngold also appeared at a Concertgebouw chamber concert, winning success as a pianist and arousing wonder at the comparative maturity of his youthful efforts. His recent Pianoforte Quintet is notable for its Straussian character. Ernst Krenek's Violin Concerto, with Alma Moodie as soloist, impressed by its originality of treatment and by the excellence of the violinist's tone and technique. Emile Enthoven's Scherzo from his second Symphony reveals real talent, though this composer seems still to be subject to outside influences. This number, and some ballet music of Grétry, showed Monteux at his best, a conductor of keen perceptivities for beauty rather than of great power. Co-Opera-tie has produced Leo Sachs's opera, 'Les Burgraves,' giving two performances in each of the three principal towns, with a considerable measure of success. Sachs himself had superintended the rehearsals. With a cast that included as guest performers Georges Petit, Daniel Vigneau, and Jules Feiner, and the leading members of the troupe, Helen van Raalte-Hornemen, Liesbeth Poolman-Meissner, and Richard van Helvoirt-Pel, the work was given in a manner that could be taken as authoritative. 'Les Burgraves' does not betray any striking dramatic power, and towards the end the lack of musical climax causes the interest to fall away. But it has moments of real beauty, and one or two that grip. The composer's talent as shown in this work does not, however, rise above a technical realisation of the requirements of the stage. The appointment of Willem Feltzer as director of the Rotterdam Conservatoire, in place of Wouter Hutschenruyter, establishes the amalgamation of the Lyceum Willem Feltzer, the largest private music school in the town, with the Conservatoire,

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

NEW YORK

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the last of the orchestral organizations to begin its New York concerts—but not, like the others, with a Brahms Symphony. Instead, these players opened with a superb performance of Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 3, in G, for string orchestra. Kussewitzky held the baton, but one surmises that this wonderful band would have produced much the same effect on the ears of the listeners if no one had stood at the conductor's desk. Bach is not to be tampered with, and the Boston leader did not attempt to do so. Afterwards Kussewitzky came into his own, introducing two novelties and the Tchaikovsky 'Pathétique.' The first novelty, on a Chinese legend of 700 A.D., composed by Henry Eichheim (born at Chicago and living for some years in China and Japan), was written for a ballet, and was produced as such at Chicago last year by Adolf Bolm. Like 'Petrouchka,' it should be heard and seen first in ballet form before it is encountered in the concert-room. The story is simple. Two generals fight a duel and one is slain. The widow vows revenge, and, seizing the spear of the dead man, rushes to attack the survivor, but their eyes meet and they instantly fall in love with each other, with the result that each commits suicide! Eichheim's 'Oriental Impressions,' produced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1922, have already shown us that he knows all the resources of the orchestra in striving to produce (sometimes with success) Oriental effects. The Chinese legend does not equal the earlier work, as the composer has a more restricted background to work upon. He produces remarkable effects with drums, cymbals, bells, &c., but that is all, for the love music lacks originality and makes no appeal. In Ibert's 'Escalas' (the translation is 'Ports of Call') the Frenchman has even less to say. Whatever impressions he may have received on his Mediterranean trip there is nothing to remind one of Sicily in 'Palermo' nor of North Africa in 'Tunis,' and there is only a slight Spanish flavour in 'Valencia.' Rhythms and melodies there are, but such as are instantly forgotten. There remains the orchestration and—the rest is all due to the conductor! Both the novelties received most brilliant performances. In opening this year's season Kussewitzky only intensifies the impression he made last year. He seems to desire above all things to force his individuality upon his listeners. Such a distorted, exaggerated reading of the 'Pathétique' could hardly be given by any other conductor. The real beauty of this time-worn music is destroyed by any attempts to impart an individual interpretation without any apparent regard for the composer's wishes or intentions. Tchaikovsky's Symphony is a great work, that may be played too often—audiences are always demanding it—and it cannot always be played by such a wonderful band as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yet true admirers of the great Russian do not feel that his compositions need be made to reflect anything of the personality of an eccentric conductor.

Far more interesting than any of the novelties given us by our various orchestras was the production by the Society of the Friends of Music of Arthur Honegger's 'King David.' Formerly one of the notorious 'Six,' at Paris, Honegger has done well to dissociate himself from them, for he is at least clever even if not always startlingly original. Very few of the moderns can claim much originality. Stravinsky? Yes—but who else? 'King David' is very short, taking only a little more than an hour for its performance. Bodanzky has found much beauty in Honegger's score, and has given it its full value without any attempt to make it sensational. Discords there are, of course, but marvellous harmonies also. It is a composition that demands several hearings, and it will be repeated at a later concert of the same Society. The story of David's life is told in Biblical text, either by the soloists (soprano, contralto, and tenor), or by the choir, or by the narrator. There may be differences of opinion concerning the merits of the work of the soloists and of the choir, but there is only one opinion about that of the narrator, Leon Rothier. His superb speaking voice, combined with his perfect enunciation, were at times half merged into his equally superb singing voice, and his eloquence easily surpassed that of his contemporaries on the dramatic stage. Rothier was the star of the occasion.

At a second concert, Bodanzky repeated the very beautiful performance of Gluck's 'Orfeo' in concert form that he gave last year. The third concert presented a curious mixture of good and bad music, the first number, 'The Poet in the Desert' (a poem by Charles Erskine Wood, of San Francisco, set to music for baritone voice by Frederick Jocobi), was neither good nor bad. It was simply dull, though the music was magnificently sung and the poem finely interpreted by Lawrence Tibbett, the young American baritone who made such a sensational success at the Metropolitan Opera House last year. The second number was an Ode for two voices (contralto and baritone) and pianoforte by Ella Adaiewsky, a friend and pupil of Franz Liszt, now living in Germany and over eighty years of age. She is known as an authority on Greek music. The Ode (to Lydia, sung in Latin) proved to be a very charming piece of simple music. How faithfully it suggests the compositions of the Greeks is a question to be answered only by students of Greek music. Following this melodic work we were called upon to hear a Septet for pianoforte, string quartet, horn, and contralto voice, by Paolo Gallico, who, though born in Italy, has lived over thirty years in this country and is called an American composer. Heaven forbid that he foretells what is to come! Such a mass of discordant sounds, totally unrelated to each other, convey the sole impression that each instrument is out of tune. Why call such horrible noise 'music'? After all these novelties, Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' was given, perhaps with the intention of taking the bad taste of the Gallico out of our mouths (or ears), but it really came too late. Only time could obliterate the strain produced on our nerves by the torturing dissonances presented to us by Mr. Gallico.

No greater contrast to the offerings of this Italianized American or Americanized Italian—it is difficult to place him—could be heard than the charming work of the Six English Singers who, appearing first at Mrs. F. S. Coolidge's Festival at Washington, afterwards gave one concert at New York. The present group consists of three men and three women—Flora Mann, Nellie Carson, Lillian Berger, Norman Stone, Norman Notley, and Cuthbert Kelly. They have been singing together for about two years, though the organization has been in existence for two or three years longer than that. The individual voices are blended so perfectly that whenever a short solo is given it appears as a part of a unified whole. The combined voice, of great beauty of tone, is rich also in colour, and the singers, sitting informally around the table with their music-books at hand—but not always looked at—sing as if they had known every note for years and as if they loved it with all their heart and understood it with all their mind. The songs were mostly English, of the 16th and 17th centuries.

There was first a group of Motets by William Byrd and Thomas Weelkes, followed by a group of madrigals by Byrd, Francis Pilkington, and John Wilbye, and a delightful ballet by Weelkes that had to be repeated. The next group was of folk-songs arranged by Vaughan Williams, and after that came French and Italian madrigals and songs. The sextet, with its perfect diction, added to its wonderful vocalism, gave the large audience an afternoon of unalloyed pleasure, and one awaits the return of these artists with feelings of high anticipation.

Mr. Gatti does not often delve into the archives, and when he occasionally does so he is not always successful. But his venture on this year's exploration of the past provided a welcome surprise. 'La Vestale,' an opera written in 1805 by Gasparo Luigi Pacifico Spontini, tells the story of Julia, a young Roman maiden who, through a misunderstanding, became a vestal virgin during the absence of her lover at the wars. The first Act of the opera shows the triumphant return of her lover, Lucinius, and it is Julia who has been selected as the vestal to place the crown on his head. That night, while Julia is on duty, there is a passionate love scene between them, and Julia, forgetting everything but her love and her lover, lets the fire go out. For this dereliction she is condemned to be buried alive, but at the last moment a flash of lightning rekindles the fire on the altar, and her life is saved. The music is old-fashioned and decidedly thin from a modern standpoint, but in its day it represented advanced ideas, looking both backwards and forwards. It is dignified music, admirably suited to the story, and nobody could call it dull while such a gorgeous spectacle was unfolded before his eyes. The triumphal return of Lucinius was the triumphal return of Rhadames raised to the *n*th power. Nothing so absolutely splendid was ever before presented on the Metropolitan stage, nor probably on any other stage. Rosa Ponselle surpassed all her previous representations in her rôle of Julia, always admitting the wonderful beauty and power of her voice, yet many times she has not given complete satisfaction in her use of it, and many times she has not given complete satisfaction histrionically. In 'La Vestale,' however, she failed in nothing. It was a wonderful impersonation, superbly sung and superbly acted. The American girl has arrived at the rank of a great artist.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

Owing to the International Exhibition of Modern Decorative and Industrial Arts the present musical season began at an early date. The Independent Music Society (S.M.I.) devoted its inaugural concert to Albert Roussel. The programme comprised, along with some of the popular songs by this composer, forcibly sung by Madame Croiza, new items of chamber music, e.g., a Sonata for violin and pianoforte warmly interpreted by M. Louis Asselin and Madame Lucie Caffaret. Roussel has been a much-discussed composer so far as technical skill is concerned. On that ground he was often compared to Berlioz. It was, therefore, all the more comforting to listen to this new Sonata of solid structure and wealthy musical context. For some years past, lyrism, whether in dramatic or in pure music, was considered as an unavowable element, and relegated to second-rate productions. But such a necessity as the expression in terms of music of one's innermost feelings had finally to get the upper hand. Not even Stravinsky remains impervious to lyric inspiration, as his latest pianoforte music obviously betrays. This reversion to a kind of subjective inspiration seems to coincide with a notable moderation in the harmonic language of three composers. Roussel's Sonata frankly admits tonality, and those impatient for new musical scandal must have been deceived when listening to the work. Another item that was given a first performance was a Serenade for flute, violin, alto, violoncello, and harp. It testified to the composer's ever-increasing musical assets in variety of melodic line, in harmonic wealth, and in rhythmical invention.

Laudable mention must be made of the two song recitals given by Madame Vera Janacopoulos. This artist has long been an unchallenged exponent of Moussorgsky's songs, and of vocal works proceeding from the advanced groups represented by Ravel, Roussel, de Falla, Stravinsky, and Prokofiev. With no less success Madame Janacopoulos extended the scope of her talent to works of the classical age. In flawless style she sang songs by Purcell and Campra.

Mlle. Eve Curie, daughter of the renowned scientist, Madame Curie, gave her first pianoforte recital on November 10, at the Salle des Agriculteurs. This young artist is endowed with a remarkable personality, and her technique is well up to the requirements of the classic and the romantic répertoires. Her playing of Bach's Toccata and Fugue in G minor, as well as that of the Sonata, Op. 57, by Beethoven, revealed to an enthusiastic public a pianist of fine intelligence and pure style. Mlle. Curie betrayed her half-Polish origin by a warm and well-nigh feverish execution of four Studies, of the Nocturne in C minor, the Mazurka, Op. 24, No. 2, and of the Scherzo in C sharp minor, all by Chopin. I venture to believe that more will soon be heard of this young and yet very promising pianist.

PETRO J. PETRIDIS.

TORONTO

The long-heralded Kussewitzky has been with us, and the ruffled waters of our musical season have become peaceful once more. Critics have enjoyed to the full an opportunity for comparing him with the great American Stokowski, and our orchestra-loving public has heard something entirely new, for whatever may be said for or against this conductor from the Volga, his interpretation of his own Russian music must remain unrivalled, so far as our experience goes. Not only is he gifted with the Slav intensity of feeling and a masterly way of arousing his men to enthusiasm, but he strikes a clear note of sincerity which is convincing. The fact must not be overlooked that these are early days to criticise, let alone compare, for a leader cannot thrash or mould into shape an American orchestra in a few months, even though it be the Boston Symphony. Suffice it to say that the Rimsky-Korsakov number, 'The Battle of Kerjenetz' (from 'Kitesch') and three 'Escalas' or 'Ports of Call,' by Ibert, were undoubtedly well done and equally well received; and the Brahms Symphony No. 1, despite a tendency towards fidgety tempo in the slow movement, contained some beautiful moments reminiscent of Nikisch. The concert opened with a spirited interpretation of the 'Euryanthe' Overture.

Sixty Singing Crusaders, or, in less militant terms, the Dayton Westminster Choir, under John Finley Williamson, gave a concert here evidently intended to arouse enthusiasm among smaller choral bodies and church choirs. Unfortunately the date followed that of the Boston Orchestra, and the audience was not large. Enough people turned out, however, to learn an excellent lesson regarding American choral singing. The Choir's intonation was sound, the tone well-balanced and of imposing quality, and the conductor managed to infuse into his work a spirit of beauty and reverence which we of British race are apt to consider our own especial heritage. The programme is interesting enough to quote in full: 'Judge me, O God' (Mendelssohn), 'Jesus, Friend of sinners' (Grieg), 'Praise to the Lord' (Soehren), 'Father Most Holy' (Crüger), 'How fair the Church of Christ shall stand' (from Schumann's 'Gesangbuch'), Psalm 50 (Christiansen), 'The Day of Judgment' (Arkhangelsky), 'Voix Celestes' (Alcock), 'Going Home' (Dvorák), 'Fierce was the wild billow' (Noble), 'What Christ said' (Lutkin), and 'The Shepherd's Story' (Dickinson).

Well-chosen programmes drew comfortably large audiences to the third and fourth Twilight Concerts of the New Symphony Orchestra, the last-named including a new work by Dr. James Lyon, 'The Miracle of the Roses,' dedicated to our esteemed benefactress of Canadian music, Mrs. A. E. Gooderham. This symphonic poem, though perhaps not an outstandingly great work, is programme music of a high order that is likely to please where the palate is not too highly educated. The orchestra seemed entirely at home in the work, especially in the effective string quartet interlude. Acceptable interpretations were given of the Prelude to 'The Mastersingers,' the Brahms Concerto, Op. 102, for violin and violoncello (Luigi von Kunits and Leo Smith, soloists, under the conductorship of Frank S. Welsman), Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture, the 'Mignon' Overture, and Prelude and Love Death from 'Tristan and Isolda,' the soloist being Athens Buckley, of the San Carlo Opera Company.

Home talent has been busy this month. The Canadian Operatic Society, under Reginald Stewart, did splendid work, especially as regards the chorus, in 'The Mikado.' Successful vocal recitals were given by Jean Dusseau and Burke T. Callaghan (a pupil of R. Watkin-Mills), assisted by Elsie Watkin-Mills (organ), Ethel Peake (mezzo-soprano), and Geza de Kresz (violin), assisted by Norah Drewett (pianoforte). The Hart House String Quartet began a heavy season of over sixty trans-continental bookings with finished performances of Haydn's E flat, Op. 33, No. 2, Bartók's No. 1, Op. 7, and the Mozart C major, K. 465. New York attractions have been strangely conspicuous by their absence.

Quite a unique event in our musical life has been an illustrated lecture by the famous critic of the London Observer, Percy A. Scholes, who gave our leading musicians and teachers much food for serious thought in an inspiring hour or so of his extensive knowledge in the realms of musical theory and history. And we learnt, with modest pride, that musical Canada is known in England chiefly through the fame of our Toronto Mendelssohn Choir. This, from a choral country and through the medium of one of its authorities, came as music to our ears. Mr. Scholes's visit will not easily be forgotten.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

A NEW OPERA-BUFFA

The Staatsoper has produced, as the second novelty of the season, 'Sganarelle,' an opera-buffa by Wilhelm Grosz, one of the most talented among young Viennese musicians. 'Sganarelle' was mounted in conjunction with 'Das höllisch Gold,' an earlier opera by Julius Bittner, which has previously been heard at the Volksoper. It is not belittling the merits of Grosz's maiden opera to say that it suffered from comparison with the work of the older, more experienced, and far less 'progressive' exponent. Not that Grosz may be classed with the radicals. His talent is not dissimilar to that of Korngold, his junior by three years, both in formal dexterity and fluency of diction. Korngold, however, is more addicted to sentimentalism and pathos, while Grosz is more brilliant and witty. In fact, Grosz's whimsicality marred the value of his previous efforts, which were more or less superficial and heedless of the deeper aspects of musical expression. 'Sganarelle,' his first operatic effort, betrays the same facility and facetiousness, but also there are new qualities of sincerity and warmth. Not that his opera (based on Molière's 'Le Mariage Forcé') is a master-stroke. The poor book which Dr. Robert Konta has concocted, and which grafts a false psychological ending on Molière's mirth, would prevent that. Moreover, Grosz still has to learn that above all the requirements of the stage are concision and dramatic tension. In his operatic score he remains for the most the chamber musician that he is. His creative exuberance induces him to distribute his melodies among the orchestral instruments with a profuseness which creates the impression of restlessness, and dissolves the melodic outlines into too much detail work. So freely does he indulge in contrapuntal bywork, that the hearer begins to long for a bit of real 'singing' and sustained melody. He gets it in the short love scene, which, like so much of this score, savours of Strauss's 'Rosenkavalier.' Grosz's buoyancy is more in place in the comic scenes, and his wit is amply displayed in the buffo scene of the two musicologues (one 'progressive,' the other 'reactionary') who, in Konta's libretto, displace the two philosophers of Molière's play, and who have a few acrid things to say. It is too bad that their remarks are mostly drowned by the orchestra, and the hearer thus deprived of a neat bit of self-parody on the part of the collaborators.

The orchestral work, under Robert Heger, was, however, excellent. Vocally, 'Sganarelle' left much to be desired. The stage pictures and stage business were indeed mediocre and old-fashioned. The scenic reform which Emil Pirchan began so promisingly at the Staatsoper with 'Boris Godunov' seems already to have returned to well-worn routine. It is deplorable.

Bittner's music is of quite different stuff from that of Grosz. He has none of the refinements of modern chamber orchestration, but instead a sincerity and directness of appeal which at once make his work music of the people and for the people. Both Bittner's music and his book are firmly rooted in the soil. 'Das höllisch Gold' is modelled along the lines of the Austrian baroque theatre, with elements of old mystery plays, and steeped in a strongly-popular atmosphere reminiscent of Hans Sachs's classic comedies. In his score, too, Bachian grandeur in the serious scenes has its foil in Viennese waltz strains in the comedy episodes. Unlike Grosz, Bittner lets his orchestra and his actors 'sing' in boldly-drawn melodic arches, and his invention moves the heart rather than the intellect.

LEHAR'S NEW OPERETTA

Comic-opera of the operetta variety does not, as a rule, enter into the consideration of the musical critic. The debasement of the species is too apparent, and has been greatly precipitated by the type which took its rise from, and is constantly gaining in vogue at, Berlin, i.e., revue-like pot-pourri of catchy 'hits,' strung together without any regard for logical or dramatic continuity. When a composer like Lehar undertakes to write a new operetta, however, one may be certain to encounter a work of more than ephemeral importance. Since the passing of the late Leo Fall, Lehar, with Oscar Straus and Emerich Kalman, alone uphold a standard of taste and craftsmanship which is distantly related to the classic master of Viennese operetta, Johann Strauss. Of the three, Lehar is palpably most bent upon lifting the species of operetta into the higher sphere of grand opera—which, to be sure, is not always an advantage to the genre. In his latest example, 'Paganini,' Lehar goes even further than in his other recent works, in disdaining the cruder elements of success by writing not for the man in the street but for the musical connoisseur. He avoids catchiness most painfully, and, steering clear of topical 'jazz' idiom, reverts to the traditional Viennese waltz and march. But rarely does he fall into the 2-4 rhythm current in the dance music of the day, and even then he sprinkles his melodies with ample contrapuntal solo work for the violins and 'celli, and with delicate passages of the harp and celesta. Lehar's language in 'Paganini' frequently betrays his native Hungarian idiom, but makes good use also of the possibilities which the plot offers for the display of Italian local colour. The libretto, to be sure, has little to offer beyond this. It is another of the unhappy attempts (customary since the success of 'Blossom Time') to make the life of a great musician the flimsy pretext of a cloyingly sentimental story. But though the book is open to improvement, Lehar's music is of undoubted musical value.

NEW ORCHESTRAL WORKS

The strong radical wave in contemporary composition has come to a standstill, for the moment at least, and the conservatives are raising their heads again. But if some of the extremists derived their passing fame solely from their capacity to write unusual music, the fact that his music is conventional does not, on the other hand, suffice to justify a moderate's claim to greatness. Conventional music is rarely welcome, and is particularly disagreeable when it comes from a young and talented composer. Rudolf Kattnig, a Viennese musician to whom his friends have hastened to affix the attribute of greatness on the strength of a promising early work labelled 'Burlesque Suite,' is distinctly disappointing in his first Symphonys He has added to his erstwhile buoyancy a pseudo-seriou. flavour, and if he seemed thus satisfied to follow the style of Korngold (in itself a conglomerate of Strauss and Puccini), he has since turned aside to listen with profit to Mahler and Tchaikovsky. Kattnig's orchestra is hypertrophic, and his melodies obvious; his Symphony No. 1 is a colossus on feet of clay. Endowed with talent beyond any doubt, he is yet in danger of falling a victim to his over-zealous friends and remaining an eternal child-prodigy like Erich Korngold—a living promise without a fulfilment. Young Korngold himself recently reappeared at the conductor's desk to lead his Suite from 'Much Ado About Nothing,' which still remains an example of super-sentimental melodies and all-too-thick orchestration. The wealth of beseeching gestures and stimulating motions which he displayed in conducting this unassuming little piece, revealed his lack of experience as a conductor and capability as a composer.

The very opposite of Korngold and Kattnig is a composer like Josef Suk, whose symphonic poem 'Asraël' was designed as a tribute to his deceased wife and father-in-law, Anton Dvorák. To the last-named he has set up a monument by building his second movement upon a theme from the Master's 'Requiem.' Suk's is music of a beautiful, big pathos, but devoid of all obtrusive display and replete with deep musical inspiration. It is, to be sure, over-long, but its merit is proven by the fact that the hearer's attention is held almost to the very end. 'Asraël' is a fine specimen of inspiration along Brahmsian lines. Brahmsian, too, was the novelty of Felix Weingartner's latest Philharmonic concert, viz., the Symphony No. 3, by Fritz Brun, a Swiss composer who, however, does not succeed in avoiding monotony in this piece. Weingartner's other recent novelty, three movements from Holst's 'Planets' Suite, proved far more interesting. This work created a veritable sensation among the musical fraternity when Adrian C. Boult presented it here for the first time some three years ago. If it seemed sensational then, through the assimilation of topical dance rhythms (vide the 'Jupiter' movement) to the symphonic idiom (a device unheard of here in the days of Austria's post-war musical blockade), there were no such startling features associated with Weingartner's performance. This time Holst's music stood on its own merits, and captivated through its solidity of workmanship and earnestness. Certain Wagnerian elements—especially in the tubas of the 'Uranus' movement—were now more evident than they were three years ago.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC AND PIANISTS

Very few contemporary composers have so far succeeded in creating a pianoforte concerto to be at once effective and to invest the species with new and modern significance. Prokofiev's Concerto stands as a brilliant example, but it stands almost alone. Leo Weiner—a young Hungarian composer, who sprang into prominence two years ago as winner of the American Coolidge prize, and who has now written a Pianoforte Concertino for Ignaz Friedman—is not the man to cope with the problem. Turning aside from speculative experiments, he abandons himself freely to the temptation of providing a technical master like Friedman with a brilliant pianistic vehicle. The piece, beginning like Grieg and ending in romantic style, is strewn with plenty of moments of dashing display. Its effectiveness is the sole justification of its existence.

By a strange coincidence, both Katharine Goodson and Elly Ney, two foremost women pianists, appeared here on the same night. Madame Ney exhibited her largely emotional temperament in the Bach Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue; Miss Goodson succeeded in ennobling the banalities of Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Concerto, and exhibited the more lyrical, exquisite aspects of her art in Schumann's 'Kinderscenen.' A certain disappointment was the reappearance of Robert Goldsand, a fourteen-year old Viennese pianist who has on previous occasions inspired great hopes for his future. Meanwhile certain blemishes which seemed of lesser importance in a wonder-child have become more perceptible with his increasing age, and the weakness of his left hand, along with his tendency to rely on the benevolent pedal to hide his frequent blurs, are deplorable in so talented and promising an executant.

PAUL BECHERT.

The Title-page and Contents of Volume 66 (January to December, 1925) of the Musical Times will be ready early in January. Subscribers can obtain them post free on application to the publishers.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

GEORGE MERRITT, on December 5, in his seventy-seventh year. He was a prominent worker in Sunday School and other branches of choral work, and was an enthusiastic sol-faist, having made his first appearance in public at the Tonic Sol-fa Festival of 1858. He was born and spent his life in the East End, where he did much good social work amongst the poor.

LADY GODFREY, at Bournemouth, suddenly, on December 1, in her fifty-sixth year. She was the eldest daughter of the late J. Townsend Stewart, of Pietermaritzburg.

Miscellaneous

CAROL CONCERTS

Carols and choral songs suitable for Christmas singing made an enjoyable programme at the Royal Albert Hall on December 19, and a task into which the singers of the Royal Choral Society threw themselves with a will. The listeners, a vast crowd, were not backward when their turn came. The best of what may be called the interpolated music was 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' and this was performed with dignity and broad musical effect. Mr. H. L. Balfour conducted, and the solo singers were Miss Dora Labbette, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. John Goss.

At Queen's Hall, on the same evening, the L.N.E.R. Musical Society, an orchestra and a male-voice choir collected from here, there, and everywhere on the Company's system, gave a rousing carol concert under Col. W. Johnson Galloway's direction. 'For unto Him a Son is born' and the 'Hallelujah' Chorus made a fine effect with male voices. The chief contribution of the orchestra was 'Finlandia.'

In response to the Civil Service Choir's invitation for MS. choral works, about seventy compositions were received. The choice of the committee fell on 'A Song of Colours,' by Alec Rowley, and the work was accordingly put in the programme of the Choir's concert on December 2.

The Bach Prize at the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School was competed for on December 10, and won by Anthea Bowring, Enid Brook being very highly commended, and Norman Fraser highly commended. Mr. Percy Waller was the adjudicator.

Mr. Douglas Tayler, organist of Lancaster Parish Church, has been appointed Supervisor of Instruction in Vocal Music to the Educational Department of the New Zealand Government.

Answers to Correspondents

MAVOURNEEN.—For your evening with Handel the choice of a Concerto, arranged for pianoforte duet, is a good one, as these works are too little known. But if it is very long, don't hesitate to omit a movement, or to play it without repeats. If your duettists are capable soloists, one should give something lively or specially tuneful from the Suites—say the Gigue in F sharp minor or the so-called 'Harmonious Blacksmith' Variations; the other might well choose one of the best of the Fugues—e.g., the one in G from the Six Fugues, or that in the E minor Suite. The latter is long and full of 'go.' Its freedom—even looseness—might lead to a brief comparison between the methods of Handel and Bach in regard to this form. Handel's Violin Sonatas should certainly be drawn on for a couple of movements. For vocal examples, leave the more hackneyed of the oratorio airs, and try to include a few of the songs from the operas, say, 'O sleep, why dost thou leave me,' from 'Semele' (but only if you have a soprano with unusually good command of sostenuto and nuance), and one or two of the fine bass songs. You do not say whether a choir is available. A Handel evening without a few choral items would be incomplete. Even a dozen capable singers could manage one or two choruses. If you include material of the kind, choose something from the less familiar oratorios. For the lecture, Newman Flower's recent biography should be consulted.

J. R.—We are glad to hear that as a result of our advice on sight-reading you 'have started work with renewed vigour.' You now ask, 'How is perfect pitch obtained?' Assuming you to mean a sense of absolute pitch, we answer that it isn't; even if it could be, we should advise you not to worry about it. The absolute pitcher is born, not made; and the faculty is, as often as not, a nuisance rather than a help. All you need acquire is an ear that can be depended on to spot at once the slightest defects in intonation. For this there is nothing better than the study of the violin, combined with a cultivation of the habit of keen listening on all occasions.

F. N. M. S.—We know of no arrangement of the orchestral part of Brahms's 'Requiem' for pianoforte and organ. When the accompaniment is played on these instruments, the usual course is for the pianist to play the more florid parts of the accompaniment published in the vocal score, the organist filling in the wind parts. The orchestral score should be studied, and the vocal score copies of the two players marked. (For such marking, bright blue or green ink, or blue pencil, is better than black or red. Under very bright artificial light, red is apt to become disconcertingly tame.)

E. B. P.—(1) and (2). Your organ questions are too elementary, and call for more space than we can spare. Get a book on organ construction, and study the matter generally. (3.) The four bowings would be (a) a separate bow for each note; (b) the four slurred notes in one bow; (c) a group played staccato, but with one bow; and (d) staccato with bow, usually a bow to each note. (4.) The six-four chord is not as a rule good on an unaccented beat, because of its strong cadential effect. (5.) Opinions differ as to the practical value of strict counterpoint. The general trend now is in the direction of free counterpoint of two kinds: (a) Vocal polyphony of the classic madrigalian type, and (b) instrumental, after the manner of the Bach figured Chorale.

W. M. L.—For information concerning negro 'spirituals' see the article, 'Negro Music of the United States,' in 'Grove.'

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£ s. d.
Two Lines	0 3 0
Three Lines	0 3 4
For every additional Line	0 0 10
One inch (displayed)	0 10 0
Half a Column...	2 0 0
A Column	4 0 0
A Page	7 10 0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To insure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Reflections on Liszt. By Erik Brewerton	17
On Tempering the Wind to the Shorn Lamb. By Alexander Brent-Smith	21
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	22
Occasional Notes	25
In Memoriam Agnes Zimmermann: Pianist and Composer, 1847-1925. By Lady Arbuthnot ...	28
The Musician's Bookshelf	29
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	31
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	34
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	35
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	36
Church and Organ Music	38
The Case for Unison Singing in Churches. By C. Whitaker-Wilson	38
Points from Lectures	42
Bach at the Leys School	42
A National Opera Trust	43
London Concerts	44
Letters to the Editor	56
The Amateurs' Exchange	58
Sharps and Flats	58
Sixty Years Ago	58
Royal Academy of Music	59
Royal College of Music...	59
Trinity College of Music	60
Society of Women Musicians: Annual General Meeting	60
'The Ring' at Manchester	60
Monteverde's 'Orfeo' at Oxford	61
Competition Festival Record	61
Music in the Provinces	63
Music in Scotland	66
Music in Wales	68
Music in Ireland	69
Spanish Madrigals: Musical Association Lecture ...	70
Musical Notes from Abroad	71
Obituary	77
Miscellaneous	77
Answers to Correspondents	77

MUSIC.

'O Trinity, most Blessed Light.' Motet for Evening Use (unaccompanied). By HEALEY WILLAN ...	49

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:
'The Drums of Freedom.' For Soprano (or Tenor) Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus. By Herbert E. Crimp.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT (with list of 75 Solos).
ESSAY.

3*s*. each. 10*s*. 6*d*. the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5*s*.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 44, BLANTYRE RD., LIVERPOOL.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

C. A.—"There were shepherds abiding." Anthem. For Christmas. 2d.

COWEN, F. H.—"November" (from "The Months"). String parts (5). Each, 8d.

ENGLISH PSALTER.—The Canticles only. Demy 8vo. 6d.

HORN, C. E.—"Cherry Ripe." Arranged as a Two-part Song. (No. 219, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.

KLUMPKEY, J.—"The Lord is my Shepherd." Anthem for Mixed Quartet and Organ. 4d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—General Hymn No. 13 ("Have faith in God"). 1d. each, or 2s. 6d. per 50.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 403, contains the following music in both notations.—"My Lady Greensleeves." Arranged as a Unison Song with Chorus (two-part ad lib.). 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
Book 274.	Nine Folk-Songs, Set 9. Arranged by CECIL J. SHARP	1s.	—
	Vocal Part only	4d.	—
No. 975.	"In Derry Vale." Unison Song. Arr. by W. MCNAUGHT	—	1½d.
1018.	"Sweet and Low" (Arranged as a Two-part Song). J. BARNBY	—	1½d.
1372.	"Windlass Song." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY	—	1½d.
1403.	"Ring out, wild bells" (Arranged as a Two-part Song). PERCY E. FLETCHER	—	3d.

THIMAN, ERIC H.—"The Silver Swan." Song (in B♭ minor and C minor). Each, 1s. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2496.	"Ring out, wild bells." Arr. for S.S.A. PERCY E. FLETCHER	3d.
2499.	"John Peel." S.S.A. Arranged, JOHN E. WEST	3d.
2500.	"Hark! a thrilling Voice is sounding." S.A.T.B. ERIC H. THIMAN	2d.

WILLAN, HEALEY.—"O Trinity, most Blessed Light." Motet for Evening Use. (No. 995, The Musical Times.) 2d.

WINCHILSEA AND NOTTINGHAM, Countess of.—"A Child's Garden of Verse." Words by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. 6s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ANDREWS, MARK.—"O Lord God of my salvation." Song. 50 cents (2s.).

—— "The Shadow of Thy Wings." Song. 50 cents (2s.).

BOWLES, G.—"Praise waiteth for Thee, O God." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

DICKINSON, C.—"Thy Word is like a garden, Lord." S.T. and B. Solos and Chorus. 12 cents (6d.).

HALL, J. H.—"Life of Life." Benediction Anthem. 10 cents (6d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"When Christ was born." S. Solo and Chorus. 12 cents (6d.).

WILLAN, HEALEY.—"Hail thee! Festival day." (Whit-Sunday.) 10 cents (6d.).

ORAL or CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
ESSAY AND PAPERS FOR
Mus. Bac., A. and F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and T.C.L. Examinations.
Also private preparation in AURAL WORK for the above.
G. H. SKAER, Mus. Bac.,
114, Castelnau, Barnes, S.W.13.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., Specialist in Postal Tuition, assures each individual student personal care and attention. Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for Diplomas, &c. Model workings. Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Camden Town Congregational Church (Park Chapel). Two-manual Willis Organ (electric blown). Salary, £40 per annum. Apply by letter, Church Secretary, 97, Arlington Road, N.W.7.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST REQUIRED at "Oaklands" Congregational Church, Shepherd's Bush. Use of fine three-manual organ (electric blown). Apply, "Organist," 49, Maldon Road, Acton, W.3.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Congregational Church, Walthamstow. Two-manual organ. Salary, £28. Apply, Rev. Norman Goodall, 1, Merton Road, E.17.

ALTO and BASS WANTED for All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth, in return for Organ, Piano, or Singing Lessons. "W. A.," 21, Thurlestone Road, S.E.27.

SOPRANO WANTED.—City Church. £20 per annum. "J. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS WANTED, Church of the Annunciation, Marble Arch, W. £20. R. A. Ebdon, 1, Denning Road, Hampstead, N.W.3.

YOUNG ORGANIST (22) desires appointment at Nonconformist Church (N. London). Experienced in Congregational and Baptist Services. Services in return for expenses. Must be reasonably good and musical organ. "W.," 14, Worsley Road, Hampstead, N.W.3.

WEST LONDON CO-OPERATIVE ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.—Amateur Instrumentalists wanted for above. Particulars from Conductor, John Mason, 9, Wardo Avenue, Fulham, S.W.6.

TENOR (Voluntary) seeks place in West-End London Choir (C. of E.). "J. K.," 32, Balfour Road, South Norwood, S.E.25.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS GIVEN. Postal or Personal. Write for prospectus and testimonials. Cawson, Pianoforte Tuner, Bankfield House, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

ORGAN by Cavaillé-Col, FOR SALE.—3 Manuals, 47 speaking stops, 17 other stops, 17 pedals to combination. J. Clare Billing, Organist, Stamford.

PIANO.—Broadwood Horizontal Grand, splendid tone, and good condition. £40, or reasonable offer considered. Can be inspected by appointment. A bargain. "V. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PEDALS FOR PIANO, radiating, concave, stool, stickers, £5; also Estey 11-stop organ. Good condition and tone. £10. Strutt, 37, Queen's Road, Kingston Hill, Surrey.

SMALL CHANCEL ORGAN required for Church of 350 worshippers. "G. F.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 274.

FOLK-SONGS
FOR SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY
CECIL J. SHARP.

No.	SET IX.
1407	BLACKBIRDS AND THRUSHES
1408	DABBLING IN THE DEW
1409	THE BONNY LIGHTER-BOY
1410	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON
1411	THE TREE IN THE WOOD
1412	THE BOLD FISHERMAN
1413	MY BOY WILLIE
1414	SCARBOROUGH FAIR
1415	SEARCHING FOR LAMBS

Price Twopence each number.

Price One Shilling.
Voice Parts only, 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors... ... ... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ... Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ... ... J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ... Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"... ... F. A. G. Ouseley
March ... ... Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ... Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ... Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" Mozar
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ... ... Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Tschaikowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1926), on the book "WILLIAM BYRD," 12 MODEL ESSAYS, with valuable hints. 1st Series of 6 Essays, 4*s.* 6*d.*; 2nd Series of 6 Essays, 4*s.* 6*d.* Send P.O. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 60, Wardour Street, W.1.

Produced at the Leeds Musical Festival, 1925

FIRST CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF
JOHN KEATS
AND SET TO MUSIC FOR
SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
BY GUSTAV HOLST.
(OP. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

Separately from the above:

Ode on a Grecian Urn
FOR CHORUS AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Band Parts of the Complete Work and of the SCHERZO
which may be played as an Orchestral Piece without Chorus may be had on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH
VIOLIN MUSIC
EDITED BY
ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken. ALFRED MOFFAT.

		s.	d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major ... ... JAMES LATES	3	0
,, 2.	SONATA in D minor ... ... HENRY ECCLES	3	0
,, 3.	SONATA in B flat major ...WILLIAM BABELL	3	0
,, 4.	SONATA in G minor ... ... JOHN STANLEY	3	0
,, 5.	SONATA in A major ... ... JOHN COLLETT	3	0
,, 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4	6
,, 7.	SONATA in D major ... ... RICHARD JONES	3	0
,, 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor ... WILLIAM BOYCE	4	6
,, 9.	THREE PIECES ... ... WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
,, 10.	SONATA in E major ... CHARLES MACKLEAN	3	0
,, 11.	SONATA in G minor ... ... WILLIAM CROFT	3	0
,, 12.	SONATA in D minor ... ... JOSEPH GIBBS	3	0
,, 13.	SONATA in D minor ... ...JOHN HUMPHRIES	3	0
,, 14.	SONATA in A minor ... ...THOMAS VINCENT	3	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CARR'S CINEMUSIC

A SERIES OF LOOSE-LEAF BOOKS OF MUSIC TO SUIT ALL SCREEN SITUATIONS.

Composed, Adapted, and Orchestrated by

HOWARD CARR.

THIS unique edition of Cinema Music has been designed to render the task of the cinema musician in fitting music to pictures as easy as possible. It consists of a series of loose-leaf volumes containing characteristic and descriptive music specially composed, adapted, and orchestrated to meet the requirements of modern film presentation. The compositions of the classical masters have been largely utilised, together with useful modern works. The inclusion of those works common to the average orchestral library has been avoided, and unhackneyed compositions have been given preference. The four volumes comprise a complete cinema library, all screen situations being provided for.

Liberal and clear cueing enables the books to be used effectively for any number of instruments from Piano alone to Full Orchestra. Also, section lettering, repeats, da capo signs, &c., together with modulating bridges from one piece to another, enable the musical director to fit and perfectly synchronise any film, the aim of the publishers being to provide books of general all-round utility at a low comprehensive cost. If required, the books can be supplemented by items from existing libraries.

NOW READY.

VOL. I. Provides twenty-nine short numbers suitable for a large variety of scenes coming under the headings of: Love and Romance; Dramatic and Pathetic; Humorous; Hurries; Ballet and Dance; Naval and Military; Racial and National.

VOL. II. ROMANTIC MUSIC. Provides fourteen longer numbers coming under the headings of: Music for scenes of quiet or light sentiment; Passionate Love or deep Romantic emotion; Scenes of a poetic nature, night, &c.

VOL. III. DRAMATIC AND PATHETIC. Fourteen numbers comprising themes suitable for every kind of Dramatic or Heavy Dramatic scene, also music for Sad Episodes.

VOL. IV. AGITATOS AND HURRIES. Comprising fourteen numbers suitable for all scenes of Excitement, Battles, Riots, Pursuits, Fires, Storms, Mob Scenes, &c.

SCORING:

SALON ORCHESTRA: Piano-Conductor, Organ, 1st Violin (Leader), 2nd Violin, 'Cello, Bass.
SMALL ORCHESTRA: Piano-Conductor, Organ, 1st Violin (Leader), 2nd Violin, Viola, 'Cello, Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinets, Cornets, Trombone, Drums.
FULL ORCHESTRA: The same as S.O., plus Bassoon and Horns.

PRICES EACH VOLUME.

Full Orchestra 15*s.*; Small Orchestra 12*s.* 6*d.*; Salon Orchestra 7*s.* 6*d.*; Piano-Conductor 2*s.* 6*d.*; Organ 1*s.* 6*d.*; Parts, each, 1*s.*

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS OR:

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Orchestral Catalogue, C. 401, gratis.

NAVAL AND MILITARY MUSICAL UNION SONG BOOK

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS FOR MEN'S VOICES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
(Tonic Sol-fa, 1*s.* 6*d.*)

CONTENTS.

1. A VINTAGE SONG ... Mendelssohn
2. DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES ... (Arr. by) H. Elliot Button
3. FAR DOWN THE GREEN VALLEY ... C. H. Döring
4. GIPSY SONG ... Mendelssohn
5. MAIDEN FAIR, O DEIGN TO TELL ... Haydn
6. MEN OF HARLECH ... (Arr. by) J. Tilleard
7. O WHO WILL O'ER THE DOWNS ... R. L. Pearsall
8. ONCE MORE WITH JOY (Pilgrims' Chorus, Tannhäuser) ... Wagner
9. SERENADE ... Mendelssohn
10. SOLDIERS' CHORUS (Faust) ... Gounod
11. SWEET AND LOW ... J. Barnby
12. THE COMRADES' SONG OF HOPE ... Adolphe Adam
13. THE DEAR LITTLE SHAMROCK ... (Arr. by) H. Elliot Button
14. THE FROG (humorous) ... Ernest Newton
15. THE LONG DAY CLOSES ... Arthur Sullivan
16. THE THREE CHAFERS (humorous) ... H. Trühn
17. THE THREE HUNTSMEN (humorous) ... C. Kreutzer
18. THE WINTRY WINDS ARE BLOWING ... J. Müller
19. THURINGIAN VOLKSLIED ... Franz Abt
20. WHAT CARE I HOW FAIR SHE BE ... Jacques Blumenthal

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS.

HYMNS AND TUNES

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

Price Three-Halfpence each.

		Words by	Music by
1.	COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD	F. BEVAN	G. C. MARTIN
2.*	FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING	W. ST. HILL BOURNE	LADY EUAN-SMITH
3.	I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY	EMILY H. MILLER	F. CLAY
4.	COME, O COME, IN PIOUS LAYS	G. WITHER	J. STAINER
5.	THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE	MARY F. MAUDE	W. C. HARVEY
	NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY	F. R. HAVERGAL	J. ADCOCK
6.	JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE	J. F. WHEELER	H. E. BUTTON
7.*	SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR	F. A. CHALLINOR	F. A. CHALLINOR
8.	WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE	H. R. PALMER	C. J. MAY
9.	ON OUR WAY REJOICING	J. S. B. MONSELL	W. B. GILBERT
10.	AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS	J. ELLERTON	J. STAINER
11.	THE ANGEL'S SONG	F. R. HAVERGAL	A. RANDEGGER
12.	FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN	HELEN W. SELBY	A. MOFFAT
13.	THE GOLDEN SHORE	E. OXENFORD	J. STAINER
14.	SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR	G. THRING	JOHN E. WEST
15	ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING	W. ST. HILL BOURNE	F. H. COWEN
16.	MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE	W. H. DRAPER	J. V. ROBERTS
17.	STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY	J. BOGUE	J. STAINER
18.	THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER	J. M. NEALE	J. BARNBY
19.	WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY	G. MOULTRIE	J. BARNBY
20.	HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN LOUDLY PEALS	G. THRING	G. J. BENNETT
21.	O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO	G. W. HINSDALE	H. E. BUTTON
22.	THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN	C. F. ALEXANDER	A. SULLIVAN
23.	LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE AND KEEP	W. W. HOW	A. S. COOPER
24.	THE BEAUTIFUL LAND	E. OXENFORD	J. STAINER
	JESU, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME	M. L. DUNCAN	H. PARKER
25.	THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND	J. COMPSTON	J. STAINER
26.	THE CITY OF LIGHT	F. ALDER	E. J. TROUP
27.	GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR	A. GILBERT	H. E. BUTTON
	GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD	C. WESLEY	J. STAINER
28.*	HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES	W. ST. HILL BOURNE	LADY EUAN-SMITH
29.	THE CROWN IS WAITING	E. OXENFORD	J. STAINER
30.	RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS	G. SPILLER	E. J. TROUP
31.*	FLOWERS	F. R. HAVERGAL	A. RANDEGGER
32.	THE GOOD SHEPHERD	E. OXENFORD	J. STAINER
33.	ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY	M. BOURDILLON	H. E. CRIMP
34.	WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR	L. WHITEHEAD	E. J. TROUP
35.	COME SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS	J. J. DANIELL	G. W. TORRANCE
36.	WE WILL PRAISE THEE	E. OXENFORD	J. STAINER
37.*	WHAT CAN I GIVE JESUS	A. C. BENSON	A. M. GOODHART
38.	COME, PRAISE OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR	W. W. HOW	H. A. CHAMBERS
39.	NOW THE DAY IS OVER	S. BARING-GOULD	F. W. BLUNT
40.*	WE THANK THEE, LORD, FOR THIS FAIR EARTH	G. E. L. COTTON	W. C. HARVEY
41.	THE LESSON OF LOVE		J. BARNBY
42.	COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING		E. J. TROUP
43.	CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD	MARY BRADFORD WHITING	J. H. MAUNDER
44.*	O GOD, WE COME BEFORE THEE	J. GIBSON	Tune—"ELLACOMBE"
45.	WHAT IS THE GIFT THAT I CAN BRING	MARY BRADFORD WHITING	H. A. CHAMBERS
	HOSANNA WE SING	G. S. HODGES	H. A. CHAMBERS
46.	HEAVENLY FATHER, SEND THY BLESSING	CHRISTOPHER WORDSWORTH	W. C. HARVEY
47.	THE DAYS OF OLD	ETHEL BOYCE	ETHEL BOYCE
8.*	BLESSED JESU, WE CAN SEE THEE	DORIS ROWLEY	ALEC ROWLEY
	THE EARTH IS FAIR AND SWEET	DORIS ROWLEY	ALEC ROWLEY
19.*	WHILE OUR LORD WAS PASSING BY	ETHEL BOYCE	ETHEL BOYCE
50.	PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT	F. W. FABER	OLIVER KING
51.*	THE HOLY LIGHT	W. M. W. CALL	C. H. LLOYD
52.*	NOW SINKS THE SUN THAT LIT OUR FESTAL MORN	MARY BRADFORD WHITING	C. J. MAY

* These Hymns are suitable for Flower Services.

The above are also published in Six Sets, containing Ten Hymns and Tunes, price 6d. per Set.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS

ANTHEMS. ETC.

Sacred Unison Songs for Soprano Voices (or Solos).

Children's Angel, The (both Notations)	CH. GOUNOD	2d.
Come, let us all this day (both Notations)	J. S. BACH	2d.
Lord, at all times I will bless Thee (both Notations)	MENDELSSOHN	3d.
Lord of our being (both Notations)	G. F. HANDEL	1½d.
O for the wings of a dove (both Notations)	MENDELSSOHN	2d.

Sacred Two-part Songs and Anthems for Soprano Voices.

Except the Lord build the House (both Notations)	M. J. MONK	3d.
Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard (both Notations)	MYLES B. FOSTER	4d.
God sends the night (both Notations)	G. RATHBONE	4d.
Like as the hart (both Notations)	V. NOVELLO, arr. by H. ELLIOT BUTTON	2d.
Lord is my Shepherd, The (S. & C., both Notations)	HENRY SMART	3d.
O for the wings of a dove (Staff Notation only)	MENDELSSOHN, arr. by J. E. WEST	4d.
O how amiable are Thy dwellings (Staff Notation only)	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.
Songs of Praise the Angels sang (Staff Notation only)	ATTWOOD	2d.
Within the fold (both Notations)	ROLAND ROGERS	4d.

Contralto Solo and Three-part Chorus for 1st and 2nd Soprano and Contralto.

Within Thy sacred fane (both Notations)	JOSIAH BOOTH	3d.

Hymn-Anthems for Children and Choir.

		O.N.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Happy Day! Festal Day!	H. A. CHAMBERS	4d.	3d.
Hosanna be the children's song	E. M. BARBER	3d.	1½d.
Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST	4d.	2d.
I love to hear the Story	MYLES B. FOSTER	4d.	2d.
Lord, Thy children	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.	2d.
Sweet is Thy mercy	J. BARNBY	2d.	1½d.
Thine for ever	H. ELLIOT BUTTON	4d.	2d.

Anthems for Soprano Solo and Chorus.

Open to me the gates	FRANK ADLAM	6d.	2d.
Praise the Lord, O my soul	T. P. ROYLE	4d.	2d.
Sun of my soul	JOSEPH H. ADAMS	4d.	3d.

Anthems for Four Voices.

Lift up your heads	S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR	4d.	1½d.
Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy House	G. W. TORRANCE	4d.	2d.
O how amiable are Thy dwellings	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.	2d.
Rejoice in the Lord	GEORGE J. ELVEY	2d.	1½d.
Rejoice in the Lord	J. BAPTISTE CALKIN	2d.	1½d.

Anthems for Evening Service.

Save us, O Lord, while waking. S.A.T.B.	GEORGE C. MARTIN	2d.	2d.
Saviour, Thy children keep. S.S.A.A.	ARTHUR SULLIVAN	4d.	—
Saviour, Thy children keep. S.A.T.B.	ARTHUR SULLIVAN	4d.	2d.
Through the day Thy love has spared us. S.A.T.B.	H. A. CHAMBERS	2d.	2d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK

(Op. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Vocal parts, 1s. each.
An Edition with Latin words (Stabat Mater) may also be had.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, With Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.
THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.
ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR
TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 10
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE

(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY
E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
(An Edition with Latin words may also be had, price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS

TOGETHER WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE
SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY
FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.

No.
1.	LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH	Hugh Blair
2.	GRANT, O LORD	Josiah Booth
3.	LORD, WE PRAY THEE	H. A. Chambers
4.	HIDE NOT THOU THY FACE	Richard Farrant
5.	I WILL GO UNTO THE ALTAR	H. J. Gauntlett
6.	O LORD, INCREASE MY FAITH	Orlando Gibbons
7.	ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD	G. A. Macfarren
8.	LET MY PRAYER COME UP	Henry Purcell
9.	GOD BE IN MY HEAD	R. Walker Robson
10.	LEAD ME, LORD	S. S. Wesley
11.	HIDE ME UNDER THE SHADOW	John E. West
12.	BLESSED LORD	C. Lee Williams

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."
Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."
Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."
Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many 'quires and places where they sing.'"
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."
Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."
Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

RISE, O SOUL, THIS HAPPY MORNING.

(SCHMUCKE DICH, O LIEBE SEELE.)

CANTATA

For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(CANTATA No. 180.)

Edited by JOHN E. WEST.
English version by A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW

SET TO MUSIC BY

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

EDITED BY

EDWARD ELGAR AND IVOR ATKINS.

BOOK OF WORDS,
with the Music of the Chorales.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

THE

ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... ... Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto. (Welsh Words.)
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto. (Welsh Words.)
*HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
*JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
*LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (New Edition) (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
*SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf.

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS.

Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment.

VOLUME I.

THIRTY-FIVE CLASSICAL SONGS.

Alone ... Mendelssohn
Autumn Song ... Mendelssohn
Come, ever-smiling Liberty ... Handel
Come, gladsome Spring ... Handel
Come, happy Spring ... Giordani
Contentment ... Mozart
Cottage, The ... Schumann
Creation's Hymn ... Beethoven
Crusaders ... Schubert
Evening Song ... Mendelssohn
Fairest Isle ... Purcell
First violet, The ... Mendelssohn
Fisherman, The ... Schubert
Forget me not ... W. Sterndale Bennett Greeting ... Mendelssohn
Hark! hark! the lark ... Schubert
Hear thou my weeping ... Handel
Hey, Baloo! ... Schumann
May-dew ... W. Sterndale Bennett
May Song ... Mendelssohn
Mermaid's Song, The ... Haydn
My mother bids me bind my hair ... Haydn
O for the wings of a dove ... Mendelssohn
O sunny beam ... Schumann
Rose, softly blooming ... Spohr
Say, ye who borrow ... Mozart
Slumber Song ... Mendelssohn
Song of May, A ... Beethoven
Sun of the sleepless ... Mendelssohn
To Chloe (in sickness) ... W. Sterndale Bennett Verdant Meadows ... Handel
Wandering Miller, The ... Schubert
Welcome to Spring ... Mendelssohn
Whither ... Schubert
Who is Sylvia? ... Schubert

VOLUME II.

THIRTY-SIX CLASSICAL SONGS.

Angels, ever bright and fair ... Handel
Ave Maria ... Schubert
Bird is softly calling, A ... Mendelssohn
Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... Arne
By Celia's Arbour (The Garland) ... Mendelssohn
Coming of Spring, The ... Schumann
Cradle Song ... Schubert
Evening Star, The ... Schumann
Fisher's Song ... Schubert
Free Mind, The ... Schumann
Garland, The (By Celia's Arbour) ... Mendelssohn
Gentle zephyr ... W. Sterndale Bennett
Holiday on the Rhine, A ... Schumann
Huntsman, rest ... Schubert
I love thee ... Beethoven
Joy of Spring, The ... Mendelssohn
Know'st thou the land? ... Beethoven
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman ... Schubert
Litany ... Schubert
Lord, at all times I will bless Thee ... Mendelssohn
Lotos Flower, The ... Schumann
O star of Eve ... Wagner
Old German Spring Song (Frühlingslied) ... Mendelssohn
On Wings of Song ... Mendelssohn
Rose among the heather ... Schubert
Sailor's Song, The ... Haydn
Slumber, beloved ... Bach
Smiling dawn of happy days, The ... Handel
Thou art repose ... Schubert
Though far away ... Mendelssohn
Thou'rt like unto a flower ... Schumann
To Music ... Schubert
Trust in Spring ... Schubert
Two Grenadiers, The ... Schumann
Wanderer's Night-Song ... Schubert
Where'er you walk ... Handel
Where the Bee sucks ... Arne

VOLUME III.

THIRTY-EIGHT CLASSICAL SONGS.

Art thou troubled (Dove sei) ... Handel
But the Lord is mindful of His own ... Mendelssohn Butterfly, The ... Cornelius
Courage ... Schubert
Dawn, gentle flower ... W. Sterndale Bennett Deep treasur'd in my heart ... Schumann
Erlaf-lake ... Schubert
Fishermaiden, The ... Schubert
Full-orbed moon, The ... Schubert
Good-night, my dearest child ... Brahms
Greeting to Spring, A ... Schumann
How beautiful are the feet ... Handel
I will sing of Thy great mercies ... Mendelssohn
In May ... Schumann
Know'st thou the land? ... Schubert
Lark, The ... Rubinstein
Let the bright Seraphim ... Handel
Little Sandman, The ... Brahms
Lord of our being (Sorge nel petto) ... Handel
Memory, A ... Brahms
Morning Song ... Mendelssohn
Nazareth ... Gounod
Nymphs and Shepherds ... Purcell
O my love 's like the red, red rose ... Schumann
O rest in the Lord ... Mendelssohn
O think of me ... Cornelius
Ode to joy ... Schubert
Oft in my dreams ... Cornelius
Oh! had I Jubal's lyre ... Handel
Out over the Forth ... Schumann
Peace ... Schubert
Sandman, The ... Schumann
Secrets ... Schubert
Sing, Maiden, sing ... W. Sterndale Bennett
Spring advancing (Frühlingsglaube) ... Mendelssohn
Swallow 's flying west, The ... Brahms
Trout, The ... Schubert
Violets ... Cornelius

VOLUME IV.

THIRTY CLASSICAL SONGS.

Cherry Ripe ... Horn
Children at play ... Mozart
Come let us all this day ... Bach
Flower thou resemblest, A ... Rubinstein
Gentle Flowers ("Faust") ... Gounod
Gentle touch, The ... Goetz
Greenwood calls, The ... Schubert
Harper's Song, The ... Schubert
I attempt from love's sickness ... Purcell
It was a lover ... Morley Jerusalem ... Mendelssohn
Lass with the delicate air, The ... Arne
Legend ... Tchaikovsky
Like to a linden tree ... Dvorák
Longing ... Schubert
Lullaby ... Brahms
My heart ever faithful ... Bach
Now fades the sun's last lingering ray ... Franz
O come, do not delay ("The Marriage of Figaro") ... Mozart
Organ-grinder, The ... Schubert
Orpheus with his lute ... Sullivan
Prepare thyself, Zion ... Bach
Serenade ... Gounod
Shepherds, The ... Cornelius
Tender wood-dove ... Gounod
Under the greenwood tree ... Arne
Violet, The ... Mozart
Walnut-tree, The ... Schumann
When all was young ("Faust") ... Gounod
When daisies pied ... Arne

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH VOLUME.

Separate Numbers from 1½*d. to* 3*d. In Books, containing six or eight songs, from* 8*d. to* 1*s.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

FIRST SET.

1. *My true love hath my heart ...Sir Philip Sidney
2. Good-night ... ... Shelley
3. Where shall the lover rest ... ... Scott
4. Willow, Willow, Willow ... ... Shakespeare

SECOND SET.

1. O Mistress Mine ... ... Shakespeare
2. Take, O take those lips away ... Shakespeare
3. No longer mourn for me ... ... Shakespeare
4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ... Shakespeare
5. When icicles hang by the wall ... Shakespeare

THIRD SET.

1. To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... ... Lovelace
2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... ... Beddoes
3. *To Althea, from prison ... ... Lovelace
4. *Why so pale and wan ... ... Suckling
5. Through the ivory gate ... ... Julian Sturgis
6. Of all the torments ... ... William Walsh

FOURTH SET.

1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... ... Emerson
2. *When lovers meet again Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
3. *When we two parted ... ... Byron
4. Weep you no more ... ... Anon.
5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... ...Byron
6. Bright star ... ... Keats

FIFTH SET.

1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... ... Julian Sturgis
2. *Proud Maisie... ... ... Scott
3. *Crabbed age and youth ... ... Shakespeare
4. Lay a garland on my hearse Beaumont & Fletcher
5. Love and laughter ... ... Arthur Butler
6. A girl to her glass ... ... Julian Sturgis
7. A Lullaby ... ... E. O. Jones

SIXTH SET.

1. *When comes my Gwen ... ... E. O. Jones
2. *And yet I love her till I die ... ... Anon.
3. *Love is a bable ... ... Anon.
4. *A lover's garland ... ... Alfred P. Graves
5. At the hour the long day ends ... Alfred P. Graves
6. Under the greenwood tree ... ... Shakespeare

SEVENTH SET.

1. On a time the amorous Silvy ... ... Anon.
2. Follow a shadow ... ... Ben Jonson
3. Ye little birds that sit and sing Thomas Heywood
4. O never say that I was false of heart Shakespeare
5. Julia ... ... Herrick
6. *Sleep ... ... Julian Sturgis

EIGHTH SET.

1. Whence ... ... Julian Sturgis
2. Nightfall in winter ... Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
3. Marian ... ... George Meredith
4. Dirge in woods ... ... George Meredith
5. Looking backward ... ... Julian Sturgis
6. Grapes ... ... Julian Sturgis

NINTH SET.

1. Three aspects ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) Mary E. Coleridge
3. The witches' wood ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
4. Whether I live ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
5. Armida's garden ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
6. *The maiden ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
7. There ... ... Mary E. Coleridge

TENTH SET.

1. My heart is like a singing bird Christina Rossetti
2. Gone were but the winter cold Allan Cunningham
3. A moment of farewell ... ... Julian Sturgis
4. The child and the twlight Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
5. From a city window Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
6. One silent night of late ... ... Herrick

ELEVENTH SET.

1. One golden thread ... ... Julia Chatterton
2. The spirit of the Spring ... Alfred Perceval Graves
3. What part of dread eternity ... Author unknown
4. The Blackbird ... ... Alfred Perceval Graves
5. The faithful lover ... ... Alfred Perceval Graves
6. If I might ride on puissant wing Julian Sturgis
7. Why art thou slow ... ... Massinger
8. She is my love beyond all thought Alfred P. Graves

TWELFTH SET.

1. When the dew is falling ... ... Julia Chatterton
2. To Blossoms ... ... Herrick
3. Rosaline ... ... Lodge
4. When the sun's great orb ... ... H. Warner
5. Dream pedlary ... ... Beddoes
6. O World, O Life, O Time ... ... Shelley
7. The sound of hidden music ... Julia Chatterton

* Published separately, price 1*s.* 6*d.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOR THE ORGANIST.

"FAUST" BALLET MUSIC

GOUNOD.

TRANSCRIBED FOR THE ORGAN BY HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

By the publication of this important transcription, Gounod's famous work is made available for the first time for organ performance. The arrangement has been made by Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, the eminent organist to the Liverpool Corporation, who has transcribed the work from the original orchestral score in its entirety. While primarily intended for performance on large organs, Mr. Ellingford has borne in mind the limitations of the average organist both as regards technical powers and the resources of his instrument, and has therefore made a point of ensuring that effective performance may be secured on organs of small dimensions. This fact will commend itself in particular to cinema players. The work is divided into seven movements as follows:

Allegretto—Tempo di Valse; Adagio; Allegretto; Moderato Maestoso; Moderato con Moto; Allegretto; and Allegro Vivace.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS NET.

OF MODERATE DIFFICULTY.

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS, OR—

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD.

22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for complete Graded Catalogue, C. 501, gratis.

JUST PUBLISHED.

OVERTURE IN D MINOR

COMPOSED BY

HANDEL.

ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN

BY

H. F. ELLINGFORD.

FROM THE ORCHESTRAL TRANSCRIPTION

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ORGAN WORKS

OF

RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE

Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,
Paper Boards, 7s.
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4s.
Music only, 3s.

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Rewritten and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO
JOHN PEEL
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT
SCOTS WHA HAE
THE OAK AND THE ASH
EARLY ONE MORNING
O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
THE ASH GROVE
GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE FIRST NOWELL

PRICE EIGHTPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."
Price 5s., by Post, 5s. 4½d.

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3s. 6d. each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.
Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

SUITE

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA (OR QUARTET)
TRANSCRIBED FROM THE CLAVICHORD WORKS OF

DOMENICO SCARLATTI

BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

SCORE.
Price ... Three Shillings.
String Parts, 3s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX
SEA SONGS

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE DUET

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE-TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOCTURNE

FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.

BY

COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY

F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

STRING PARTS, Price 8*s*.

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.

Price 3*s*. 6*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LOVE INCARNATE

A SETTING OF LINES

BY ROBERT BROWNING.

With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"

BY

ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.

Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.

Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 37.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Lording's Daughter

BALLAD.

WORDS

ELIZABETHAN.

MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY

AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY

FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited,

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., Oxon.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX.

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW

MUS. D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - - PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement-feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonetics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs: balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Latin Church Music of the Polyphonic Schools.

EDITED BY H. B. COLLINS.

No. 1. SALVE REGINA.
Motet for S.A.T.B. By WILLIAM BYRD (1610) ... ... 6d. net.

No. 2. SENEX PUERUM PORTABAT.
Motet for the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for S.A.T.B. By WILLIAM BYRD (1610) ... ... 3d. net.

No. 3. THE WESTERN WYNDE.
Mass for S.A.T.B. By JOHN TAVERNER ... ... 2s. 6d. net.

No. 4. DUM TRANSISSET SABBATUM.
Motet for Easter on the Plainsong for S.A.T.B. By ROBERT JOHNSON ... 6d. net.

No. 5. GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO.
Short Motet for Christmas Day, for S.S.S.A. By DR. ROBERT COOPER (1507) 4d. net.

This Series will be continued.

In speaking of the "Western Wynde" the Laudate says:

"Mr. Collins is one of the greatest of our experts on Taverner: and he is not merely expert but exponent also. He has done the art and science of religious music a real service by bringing this masterpiece of Henry VIII.'s reign within the reach of choirs. His edition is specially prepared for liturgical use, and a complete and valuable Preface is prefixed.

"The vigour and beauty of the music, the composer's consummate mastery of the technique of the golden age of polyphony which was dawning in his life-time, and the wonderful fresh simplicity which runs through the whole Mass, cannot be described in words. The music must be heard to be appreciated."

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Friday, January 1, 1926

No. 996

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

FEBRUARY 1, 1926

THE WORLD FAMOUS

Bösendorfer

PIANOS

(Established 1828.)

BUSONI "The Piano was ideal & helped me to give expression to my highest conceptions".....

HAROLD BAUER "These instruments are sympathetic to me in the highest degree."

PADEREWSKY "The Piano was quite wonderful".....

MORITZ ROSENTHAL "The Piano sounded ravishing"...

SOLE AGENTS

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

ROGERS

PIANOS

are the outstanding Pianos of the present day for their superb musical qualities, and ahead of all in value.

Call or write for Catalogue

GEORGE ROGERS & SONS

60 Berners Street

London W.1.

An Astounding Record . . .

made at the Royal Albert Hall during the actual performance of the MESSIAH

by the

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

IT is a tradition of the Royal Choral Society to give a performance of the Messiah at the Royal Albert Hall on the first Saturday of the New Year. This year, on Saturday, January 2nd, "His Master's Voice" made a wonderful record of two of the finest moments during the actual performance.

It reproduces faithfully the singing of a chorus of over 800 VOICES, accompanied by an orchestra of 80 PERFORMERS, and the Grand Organ—the whole performance inspired by the enthusiasm of a great audience and conducted by Mr. H. L. Balfour.

THE LEEDS FESTIVAL CHOIR (1925) consisting of 250 voices, conducted by ALBERT COATES, have recorded in a masterly manner, under Record Nos. D.1044 & D.1045, 6/6 each, Arnold Bax's "Mater Ora Filium." Ask your dealer to play over this record.

D. 1057 { Worthy is the Lamb ("Messiah") Handel
{ Lift up your heads, O ye gates Handel

12-inch Double-sided 6/6

Ask your dealer to play this record for you.

"His Master's Voice"

THE GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD.
OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 996—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

FEBRUARY 1 1926

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

(ELGAR).

MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. STEUART WILSON.
MR. KENNETH ELLIS.

Conductor: SIR HAMILTON HARTY.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

ORGAN RECITAL, Monday, February 1, at 3 p.m.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, February 13 and 27, at 3 p.m.

CHAMBER CONCERTS, Monday, February 15, at 3 p.m., and Wednesday, March 3, at 3 p.m.

L.R.A.M. EASTER EXAMINATION. Last day of entry, February 7, but entries will be accepted up to February 22, on payment of a late fee of 5s.

LENT HALF-TERM begins on Monday, February 22. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Wednesday, February 17.

THE STERNDALE BENNETT SCHOLARSHIP, for Male Candidates in any branch of music, will be competed for in April. Last day of entry, April 12. Particulars and entry forms on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS.DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, ESQ., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, ESQ., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

A

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION, are:

Prelude (without Fugue) in E flat, "St. Ann," J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 6, page 28; Augener, p. 133; Peters, Vol. 3, No. 1.)

Choral Prelude on Newtoun, Charles Wood. (No. 6 of 16 Preludes, Vol. 1, Stainer & Bell.)

Fantasia in F minor, Mozart. (Best's arrangements, No. 76, p. 1000; Novello.) This arrangement only.

The selected pieces set for the July, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1926.

The Choir-Training Diploma and Certificate Examinations will both be held between Monday, May 10th, and Saturday, May 15th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Wednesday, April 14th. Application for re-election to Membership must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before April 14th.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2.

Four Lectures on "The Mind of Beethoven," by Sir Walford Davies, at 6 p.m. On February 9, "His Melodies"; February 10, "His Chords"; February 11, "His Rhythms"; February 12, "His Likeness to Shakespeare."

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

ESTABLISHED 1882. INCORPORATED 1892.

PAST PRESIDENTS:
H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G., 1893-1900.
ARTHUR H. MANN, M.A., D. Mus., F.R.C.O., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, 1922-1923.
C. H. ALLEN GILL, F.R.A.M., 1923-1924.
SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., F.G.S.M., 1924-1925.

PRESIDENT
PROFESSOR DONALD FRANCIS TOVEY,
Reid Professor of Music, Edinburgh University.

Founded for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of those who practise music as a profession.

The first broad divisions of the Musical Profession are those of "Performers" and of "Teachers," but these merge into each other at many points, for it is one of the most healthy characteristics of the Musical Profession that eminence as a teacher of music is often accompanied by a distinguished career as a composer or a performer.

The need for Unity is manifest, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians invites all qualified Professional Musicians to enrol themselves as members and assist in securing the same status and privileges as those enjoyed by other branches of the Teaching Profession.

For particulars of membership write to :—

HUGO CHADFIELD, General Secretary,
19, Berners Street, London, W.1.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, Mus. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

THE KIRKBY LUNN SCHOOL OF SINGING.

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN (of the Covent Garden, New York Metropolitan, and Principal Opera Houses of Europe) has much pleasure in announcing that she will open a School of Singing next April. Special attention will be given to Languages and Stage Deportment, in addition to all branches of the Vocal Art.

Madame Kirkby Lunn will give a Scholarship, to be known as the KIRKBY LUNN SCHOLARSHIP.

This is to be won in open by Competition for all voices. Auditions will be held in March, and the name of the successful Candidate announced in April.

Madame Kirkby Lunn will give a few private lessons at her residence meanwhile.

For particulars, apply to the Secretary,
15, MARLBOROUGH ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

PAPER WORK BY Mus. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2*s.* 6*d.* per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

IF YOU CAN PLAY WITH MUSIC YOU CAN PLAY WITHOUT.

Thousands of promising musicians have failed to achieve the success they deserved through their inability to trust their memory.

If you can play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ at all from the music, I guarantee by the

Master-Method
OF Memory-Playing

to teach you in a short correspondence course to play your instrument from memory with ease, certainty, and accuracy. Your memory need no longer be a handicap to your progress.

My booklet, which is sent free and post free, deals with the fascinating subject of memorising music, and tells you how in a remarkably short time you can master this dreaded weakness. Send a post card to-day, stating which instrument you play.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,

19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

THE REAL USE OF RELAXATION

as applied to pianoforte playing. Important discoveries giving more rapid and definite development of technique with DURABLE RESULTS and remarkable beauty and purity of TONE PRODUCTION. The stiffest hands quickly yield to this teaching.

D. Mus. Oxon., F.R.C.O., writes:

"I do think your 'School' is so excellent. The thoroughness and lucidity with which you treat every detail of pianoforte playing are amazing, and one can have no possible doubt that the principles you put forward are the correct and fundamental ones for which we have sought so painfully in years gone by."

ENTIRELY UNIQUE CORRESPONDENCE COURSE OF 12 PERSONAL and INDIVIDUAL LESSONS, designed for the PIANO ENTHUSIAST, and expounding fully and clearly the "MODERN TEACHING AND APPLICATION OF WEIGHT TOUCH," the only source of beautiful and finely graded tone.

No matter where you live, these lessons will help you tremendously. The course is remarkable for the amount of personal and individual attention given to each pupil. The lessons are supplemented by POSTAL CONSULTATIONS on all points which may arise during the course, bringing the pupil into direct touch with Mr. Gillett.

Full particulars will be sent to all bona fide inquirers. Write to-day, naming one or two pieces you play and your individual difficulties. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons with Mr. Gillett, by all means do so.

PERSONAL LESSONS DAY and EVENING.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

Candidates for these examinations cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard" System, to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."
"Worth twenty times the fee charged."
"I have passed my examination with honours."
"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."
"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."
"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."
"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."
"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Musical News describes my system as "the most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."

20,000 Successful Pupils of all ages.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

PIANOFORTE RECITAL-LECTURES

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

(Mus. Doc., Lond.).

Subjects of Recital-Lectures already given include:

1. "LISZT'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
2. "MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
3. "THE STORY OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
4. "ROMANTIC PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
5. "THE STORY OF THE PIANOFORTE SONATA."

For vacant dates, &c., apply,
46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.
Telephone: Bristol 3033.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Papers.
2. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Papers.
3. Short comprehensive Course for L.R.A.M. "Form and Teaching" Paper.
4. Touch and Technique (Matthay Method) for L.R.A.M., vivâ voce.
5. Fingering and Pedalling.
6. Rudiments, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, as separate subjects.
7. Courses on Mr. Stewart Macpherson's "Melody and Harmony."

Over 90% Postal Successes at Diploma Examinations.

MR. GILBERT THOMAS,
M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A.Mus. T.C.L.
Private Pupil of STEWART MACPHERSON, BACKHAUS, OSCAR BERINGER.
Formerly Student at Matthay Pianoforte School, London.
Terms, Appreciations, on application:
ASHCROFT, 42 BURTON ROAD, S.W.9.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),
undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.
2, HILL SIDE, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

ELIZABETH LEVY, L.R.A.M., Gold Medallist. Tobias Matthay's Piano Method taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. Write, 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

VOCAL QUARTET CONCERT PARTIES.

MR. EWART DARTREY Coaches in the art of Vocal Ensemble and Interpretation. Write, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

ALBERT GARCIA'S

VOCAL STUDIO.
59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.
VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.
PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"
revised from the original edition by
ALBERT GARCIA.
Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland St., W.1. Price 6s.

MR. WILLIAM DELASAIRE is prepared to give Lessons in the TECHNIQUE OF THE PLAYER-PIANO

AND THE
INTERPRETATION OF ITS MUSIC.
North 2634. 51, HILLMARTON ROAD, N.7.

"Your work has my full sympathy."—Tobias Matthay.

"Your scheme of recitals is very interesting, and, I am sure, will be of service to many people."—Ernest Newman.

"I have the greatest sympathy with what you are doing."—Percy A. Scholes.

"Remarkable insight matched with interpretative skill of the highest order. The lecture was an absolutely convincing demonstration of the instrument's artistic capabilities."—The Gramophone.

"Perfect control of a remarkable instrument and deep insight into the various composers and their work."—Kentish Mercury.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.

Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.

Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.

Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac.
FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7, 1925.

Treatise on "Hand Development, with Photos, 1s. 6d.
Full particulars from the Secretary—
Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.

(Registered No. 692810).
FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.
A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2s. 6d., POST FREE.
1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,893rd) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on February 2nd, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

There are two REASONS WHY Dr. Sprankling's method of Correspondence tuition is so successful:

(1) Because students are shown exactly the STYLE of work needed for success in the various examinations;

(2) Because the lessons are entirely INDIVIDUAL.

Thus each pupil receives exactly the help that he or she specially needs.

"SUCCESS IS THE GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS."

THIS MONTH'S COURSES - -
(1) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. for Easter Examinations.
(2) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. for July.
(3) First and Final Mus. B. and Mus. D.

Candidates for any of the above examinations should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

SCARBOROUGH
Competitive Musical Festival.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE
SCARBOROUGH TOWNSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

MAY 13th, 14th, 15th, 1926.
GRAND HALL, THE SPA.

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL, SCHOOL CHOIR, ETC., COMPETITIONS.

Syllabus may be obtained from
MR. F. CROMACK, Secretary,
Scarborough Townsmen's Association,
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough.

MIDLAND
Competition Festival.

NEXT OPEN FESTIVAL.

APRIL 19*th* to MAY 1*st*, 1926.
ENTRIES CLOSE FEBRUARY 24TH.

New Championship Classes restricted to winners at other Festivals for SOLO SINGING, PIANOFORTE, AND ELOCUTION.

Particulars and Entry Forms from General Secretary, Queen's College, Birmingham.

N. STAFFS
ROYAL INFIRMARY GOVERNORS'
COMPETITIVE
MUSICAL FESTIVAL
VICTORIA HALL,
HANLEY, STOKE-ON-TRENT.
MARCH 25, 26, and 27, 1926.

CLASSES.

Choral: Mixed Voice, Male Voice, Female Voice, Juvenile Choirs, Church and Chapel Choirs.
Quartets: Male and Mixed Voice.
Duets: Four Sections.
Vocal and Instrumental Classes, Sight-Reading, and Elocution.

PRIZES.

The Grosvenor Challenge Cup, the Collis Silver Challenge Shield, the Harrison Silver Challenge Shield, and other trophies.

£100 IN CASH PRIZES.

PRINCIPAL ADJUDICATOR:
SIR RICHARD TERRY, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

Entries close February 25, 1926.

Official Syllabus and Entry Form (on receipt of prepaid postage) from P. J. FROST, Hon. Secretary,
19, Crawfurd Street, Fenton, Staffs.
W. STEVENSON,
Secretary and House Governor, N. S. Royal Infirmary.

LYTHAM ST. ANNES
MUSICAL FESTIVAL

APRIL 28, 29, 30, and MAY 1, 1926.

SCHEDULES NOW READY.
Post free, 4*d.*

Apply,
I. COOMBES, B.A.,
"Dale Garth," Lytham, Lancs.

HASTINGS MUSICAL FESTIVAL
(COMPETITIVE).
MAY 13, 14, 15, and 17, 18, 19, 1926.

CHORAL SOCIETIES PLEASE NOTE.

For SYLLABUS (post paid, 2½*d.*), apply to Hon. Secs., 40, Havelock Road, Hastings.
LADY ISHAM, JOHN LOCKEY, } Hon. Secs.

SIXTEENTH
GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
1st to 15th MAY, 1926.

COMPETITIONS IN 160 CLASSES.

Syllabus now ready. Price 1*s.* (post free).
From Festival Office, 168, Hope Street, Glasgow.

CROYDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
MAY 3rd to 8th, 1926.

PUBLIC COMPETITIONS.
IN MUSIC, ELOCUTION, SOLO AND FOLK-DANCING.
Challenge Shields for Mixed-Voice, Girl Guides, Boys' and Girls' School Choirs.
Challenge Cups for Folk-Dancing.
Gold Medals for Solo Singing, Piano, Violin, and Elocution.
84 Classes, open to any district.

SYLLABUS (Postage 1½d.) from the Secretary,
7, Katharine Street, Croydon, Surrey.

PORTSMOUTH
MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL.

MAY 6TH, 7TH, 8TH, 1926.

SYLLABUS now ready. Post free, 2*d.*
Obtainable at Music Dealers, or from Hon. Sec.,
7, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT
ESSAY.	(with list of 75 Solos).

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the
A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.
Price 5*s.*
"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 44, BLANTYRE RD., LIVERPOOL.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1*s.* 6*d.* "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6*d.*
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

Letters of appreciation from SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES at the ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS' EXAMINATION.

FAILED TWICE BEFORE JOINING M.C.C!

"I had previously failed twice, but thanks to your excellent hints and methods of preparation I was successful."

SUCCESSFUL AT THE FIFTH ATTEMPT! (A.R.C.O.)

"Previous to my joining the M.C.C. I had made four attempts at the Exam., and failed each time, so please accept my grateful thanks."

A.R.C.O.

"You will be pleased to hear that I was successful in obtaining the A.R.C.O. Diploma last week. I had little hope of getting through when I first wrote to you. In fact, I merely wanted to go up to see what it was like!"

THOROUGH CRITICISM (A.R.C.O.).

"I owe my success to the valuable hints and thorough criticisms of your tutor. I do not think I shall be so long over the Fellowship, for I know that I am studying on the right lines."

A.R.C.O. AFTER A LAPSE OF 18 YEARS.

"My success is entirely due to the very excellent coaching I have received from you during the past few months. Your system is splendid and very effective. When you consider my last lessons in Harmony, Counterpoint, and Composition were received over 18 years since, it is really remarkable I should pass in the Paper work after such a short period of tuition."

A.R.C.O. FIRST ATTEMPT.

"I have passed the Paper work section of A.R.C.O. at first attempt. Your lessons were extremely valuable in securing this success."

F.R.C.O. FIRST ATTEMPT.

"I attribute much of my success to the fact that your systematic methods of dealing with my work have enabled me to see exactly where I stood with regard to the standard of work required. I have found your remarks on Orchestration very valuable."

F.R.C.O. EXCELLENT TUITION.

"You will be pleased to know that I have been successful in passing the Fellowship Exam. May I thank you very much for your excellent tuition."

A.R.C.O.

"I did not experience any difficulty this time with the Counterpoint. Your system of teaching it has made interesting to me a subject which, before, I detested."

A.R.C.O.

"I have found the tuition extremely helpful in the points which not only show musicianship, but gain marks at examinations."

EXCELLENT TUITION (A.R.C.O.).

"I am glad to say that I have passed A.R.C.O. at the recent exam., and am now ready to work up for Fellowship, July next. I feel certain that I shall pass in the Paper work, because the first time I attempted A.R.C.O. under your excellent tuition, I passed, although I had failed before."

A.R.C.O.

"I am glad to tell you that I was successful at the exam. for A.R.C.O. held this week, and must thank you for the help you have given me in the Paper work."

A.R.C.O. FIRST ATTEMPT.

"I attribute my success at first attempt, to the system and thoroughness of your course of training."

A.R.C.O. AT 16 YEARS OF AGE.

"You will no doubt be pleased to hear that I have gained the A.R.C.O. Diploma. Please convey to the A.R.C.O. Tutor my best thanks for his invaluable help and unfailing courtesy."

NOTE.—This young student is now working with us for F.R.C.O.

F.R.C.O. (NOT ONE OF A CROWD!)

"From beginning to end I never felt that I was merely one of a crowd, for the criticism and advice received from the M.C.C. always responded to my particular troubles."

EXCELLENT TUITION F.R.C.O.

"As you know, it was through the excellent tuition I received from the M.C.C. that I passed the F.R.C.O. last January."

LESS THAN TWO YEARS.

"Up to the present, less than two years' coaching with you has obtained for me A.R.C.O. Paper work at the first attempt, F.R.C.O. Paper work, second attempt, and Matric. (Durham), first attempt."

— SUCCESS IN 1926. —

Guarantee Courses - - MATRIC., MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. MUS. T.C.L., A.T.C.L.

FREE - Guide to Matric., Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A. Mus. T.C.L., &c.

Please state Exam.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

HORACE CURTIS
TENOR
"St. John" and "St. Matthew" Passions, Oratorios, Works, &c.
99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12. 'Phone: Streatham 5246.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5

REGINALD BUSSELL
(BARITONE) R.C.M. (Leipzig).
LONDON, PROVINCIAL, and 2LO CONCERTS,
CONCERTS, ORATORIO, ETC.
15, Aberdeen Road, Clifton, Bristol.

JAMES CAPERN
BASS-BARITONE.
Cleeve, Parkside Drive, Watford. Telephone: Watford 531.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

JOHN HENDERSON
BARITONE. Lent Music, Masonic (Lodges), Concerts, &c.
Press Notices, &c., "Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.
Telephone: Willesden, 70.

TOM LLOYD (L.R.A.M.)
BASS-BARITONE.
Open for Engagements for
CONCERTS, ORATORIO, ETC.
Press Comments, &c., supplied upon application.
125, Tuam Road, London, S.E.18.

MR. EDGAR LUNNON
BARITONE.
ORATORIO AND CONCERTS. LESSONS GIVEN.
52, St. James' Square, Holland Park, W.11.
Tel.: 6698 Park.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

IVOR WARREN
Professor of Singing at Trinity College of Music receives pupils for VOICE PRODUCTION AND RÉPERTOIRE.
Complete training in Opera, Oratorio, and for Concerts.
WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, W.;
and 175, GOLDHURST TERRACE, N.W.6.

DR. REGINALD H. HUNT
D. MUS. (LOND.), F.R.C.O.
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1.
PREPARATION FOR
D. MUS., B. MUS., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., ETC.
CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS IN PAPER WORK.
Address: 7, WOODGRANGE AVENUE, N. FINCHLEY, N.12.

MR. JOSEPH WHITESIDE
(A.R.C.M.)
SPECIALISES IN
VOICE CULTURE AND SINGING.
Extract from recent Press report of pupils' concert:
"In every case, the singers showed evidence of careful training on right lines—power was always subordinate to beauty of tone; and—rare virtue—the production was effortless."
37, Quernmore Road, Stroud Green, N.4.
'Phone: Mount View 3397.
West-End Studio: 72, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.
'Phone: Mayfair 2596

EDWARD W. GROOCOCK
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., A.G.S.M.
Organist, Rugby Parish Church.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
6, Regent Place, Rugby, Warwickshire.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

MISS MARY WILSON F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

HARRY LYTTLER
SOLO FLUTE (AND PICCOLO), L.R.A.M.
Provincial and 2LO Concerts.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, &c., also Tuition.
20, Hampstead Road, London, N.W.1. 'Phone: Museum 9365.

MADAME ALBA.—Dramatic Soprano (Italian bel canto), receives pupils. Perfect breath control. Clear enunciation. Compass extended. Professional vocalists coached. Faulty breathing corrected. Technique improved. Cramer's Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes. Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9*d.* Studies in Modulation, 3*s.*
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations.—Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

MR. RONALD BRIDGER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. (Registered Teacher), prepares pupils for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. examinations in singing, either personally or by correspondence. Lessons also given in Voice Production and Singing. Highest references. Full particulars from 54, Pembridge Villas, W.11.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ...286 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 76 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

J. C. BRYDSON, MUS. B. (Dunelm.). Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Guarantee Courses (One fee, Tuition until successful). Kegworth, Derby.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O. Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus., B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1: for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus. Bac. pass. Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto: Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto · F.R.C.O.: F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
279 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
174 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the July, 1926, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition pupils are trained to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.

Special attention given to the Pianoforte Accompaniment Test, as most organ students fail to utilize the distinctive idioms of pianoforte writing, and make their work look like an organ accompaniment.

F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as Episode and Middle Entries, Stretto, and Song Writing, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon when so many candidates come to grief.

A complete analysis of the Brahms Sextet was sent to all pupils for the January examination, and this supplied the answers to the questions set by the examiners.

Hints on how to study the score selected for the July examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.

All the new tests will be covered in these lessons, and complete musical illustrations will be sent to each candidate showing exactly what the examiners require.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte, Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., Specialist in Postal Tuition, assures each individual student personal care and attention. Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for Diplomas, &c. Model workings. Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

MRS. J. SHARP, A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte), Coaching for Examinations and Festivals. Visits Streatham, Wallington, and Westminster. Address: Wigmore Hall Studios, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

TUITION

WELL-KNOWN LONDON MUSICIAN (having a Car) visits Woking, Epsom, and neighbourhood each week, and can arrange for two or three more pupils en route. Pianoforte and Organ playing, Harmony, &c. Full particulars from 19, Clarendon Gardens, W.9.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

CHARLES A. TREW, Composer and Author of "Elements of Music" and "Harmony Lessons" (30,000 Edition); also sole teacher of Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji, instructs and coaches pupils in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c., by Correspondence. Successes by pupils Inland and Overseas. Preparation for all accredited Examinations. Communications, 45, Greyhound Mansions, London, W.6.

SUCCESSFUL CORRESPONDENCE PAPER WORK LESSONS for R.C.O. DIPLOMAS. Also Practical Work: Extemporisation Specialist. 1925 Successes: Paper Work, 5; Playing, 4. Jan., 1926: Organ, 2; Paper Work, 2. "F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

J. W. WILSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., T.C.L. Exams, &c. Solutions and Model Essays. Moderate Terms. 47, Hinckley Road, Leicester.

ELOCUTION taught by ROSA GLYN, Medallist, L.A.M., at pupils' houses. Write, "R. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There are VACANCIES in the Choir for ALTO, TENOR, and BASS Choral Scholars. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year, with considerable allowances in addition.

The Competition will be held on Tuesday, February 23.

Applications to be sent in not later than February 15.

Successful candidates must pass or secure exemption from the Previous Examination before coming into residence.

For further information apply to the Deans, King's College, Cambridge.

SOUTHWELL CATHEDRAL.

There is a VACANCY in the Cathedral Choir for a TENOR LAY-CLERK. Applicants must be Communicant Members of the Church of England. Good sight-reading essential. Stipend, £100 per annum. Applications, which should be made as soon as possible, may be sent with copies of recent testimonials to H. W. Tupper, Mus. B. (Oxon.), Rector Chori and Organist, Vicars' Court, Southwell, Notts.

ST. ANNE'S, SOHO, W.1.

TENORS AND BASSES (voluntary) required to augment the choir of this well-known Church. Excellent opportunities. A hearty welcome will be extended to gentlemen with good voices, who desire to gain experience. Send full particulars to the Master of the Music.

LAY-CLERK (Tenor).—There is a vacancy for a Tenor Lay-Clerk in Carlisle Cathedral Choir. Salary, £90. Attendance is usually required on Week-days at the afternoon service only. Applications, with testimonials or references, should be sent not later than February 15th to the Chapter Clerk, Dean and Chapter Registry, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

WANTED.—St. Peter's, Cricklewood. One tenor, one bass (good readers). £15 per annum each. Apply, "Organist," 21, Thorverton Road, Cricklewood Lane, N.W.8.

WANTED.—TENOR for St. Peter's, Belsize Park. £10 per anum. Write, "Organist," 42, Heath Street, Hampstead, N.W.3.

TENOR WANTED.—Church in South Kensington. £15. Sanders, 34, Altenburg Gardens, S.W.11.

BASS REQUIRED, North London Liberal Synagogue. Salary, £25. Apply, "Organist," 11, Netherwood Road, W.14.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for Lewisham High Road Congregational Church. Salary, about £50. State age and qualifications, to Clayton C. Hall, 14, Clifton Road, Brockley, S.E.4.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Congregational Church. 3-manual organ (electric blown). Salary, £50 per annum. Efforts to find a Commercial situation will be made. Apply by letter, Walter Day, 42, Earl Street, Maidstone.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, after Easter. Must be practising R. Catholic, able to train choir, and understand Vatican Chant. High Mass and Vespers, Sundays and Holy Days, two week-night services. Apply, stating qualifications, references, and salary required, to Rector, 41, Brook Green, Hammersmith, W.6.

CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST REQUIRED for the Parish Church, Falmouth. Stipend, £100. Applications to be sent to the Rector, Falmouth.

ORGANIST.—WANTED soon for Mickleham Church, Dorking. Write particulars and references to Rector.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED, Whitsuntide. New Church, developing residential neighbourhood. Communicant, used sung Eucharist. £60 start. Write, St. Mary's Parsonage, Sanderstead, Surrey.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for Muswell Hill Baptist Church (Rev. D. J. Hiley). Salary, £40 per annum. Apply by letter to Church Secretary, 51, Muswell Road, N.10.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, A.R.C.O., of well-known Parish Church, REQUIRES POST as Organist and Choirmaster, C. of E. Good references and long experience; or as musical instructor in School, will undertake to teach organ, singing, musical appreciation, and harmony. His wife, L.R.A.M., also desires position as Teacher of Pianoforte (Matthay and Curwen methods), and is open to give class-training in aural culture. Apply, "C. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CAPABLE and Experienced ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, now at Streatham Church, desires post as Assistant, moderate salary, at Church situate City, S.W. or S.E. district. Capable of taking full charge. Apply, "F. K.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER requires post. Thirty years' experience (good organ). Mr. F. Gardner, 47, Brown Road, Hoe Street, Walthamstow, E.17.

AN EMINENT MASTER with pupils of world-wide repute, will train and present a good voice on exceptional terms. Write, "Maestro," c/o Gould's, 6, Bloomsbury Street, W.C.1.

COMPETENT PIANIST (lady) seeks position with high-class Orchestra. "Box 1," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

REQUIRED, CHAMBER ORGAN (pipe or reed), 2 or 3 manuals, with or without pedals. Send full specification and photo—if possible—which will be returned, to "Organ," c/o Dale's Advertising Offices, 46, Cannon Street, E.C.4.

JOHN HOLT REED ORGAN.—Second-hand, two-manual and pedal. Great Organ, 4 rows of reeds, Swell 6, Pedal 2 (one being 32-ft.), 4 couplers, and Tremulant. Balanced Swell pedal and 2 composition pedals. Oak case. Packed on rail, £195.

Also a smaller one, having 4 rows of reeds on Great, 4 on Swell, and 2 on Pedal (8-ft. and 16-ft.), 6 couplers, Tremulant. Balanced Swell pedal, 3 composition pedals. Mahogany case. Packed on rail, £130. John Holt, Reed Organ Builder, Station Road, Harborne, Birmingham.

ESTEY ORGAN.—2-manual and pedal, 12 stops, in compact walnut case, 5-ft. high, 4-ft. 10-in. wide, and 2-ft. 8-in. deep. Suitable for private house or mission hall. In good condition, except repairs to bellows. Price, £30, or near offer (cost £90 pre war). Hutchins, Churchwarden, Egham, Surrey.

HOLT ORGAN, two Manuals and R.C.O. Pedals, new condition. £85. Seen London. "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SECOND-HAND PIPE ORGANS.

Three-manual, containing 35 Stops; very fine, large instrument. Rebuilt to suit any position. Pneumatic action throughout.

Also,

Two-manual, 20 Stops, pneumatic action. This instrument is in a very fine oak case, with decorated front pipes, and can be adapted to any position.

Room is required, and a low price will be accepted for these instruments. Particulars and specifications, Reeve, Endwell Road, Brockley, S.E.4.

PIPE ORGANS RESTORED, Enlarged, Revoiced, Repaired and Tuned. Attractive Terms. HENRY MORGAN & SON, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

WURLITZER ORGAN MANIPULATORS.

Expert Modern Pianists with sound organ training wanted to manipulate Wurlitzer Orchestral Organ. Apply by letter, with experience, to Walter Pearce, 22, Henrietta Street, W.C.2.

WANTED.—Apollo Pedal Reed Organ. Seen London. Price, "L. C. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour, or 6*s.* a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. Single practices (pupils only), 9*d.* an hour. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6. Tel.: Putney 4208.

FOR SALE.—Norman & Beard Piano Pedals, Radiating, Concave, and Stool. What offers? "M. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ÆOLIAN SOLO ORCHESTRELLE, Model F, 116 notes. Perfect condition. Fumed oak case, 8-ft. 3-in. by 8-ft. by 3-ft. 6-in., with 500 rolls. 6, Merlin Road, Blackburn.

FOR SALE.—Strohmenger Upright Grand Player-Piano, Higel all-metal action. SPECIAL FEATURES—double valves, divided hammer-rest, and variable accompaniment device. Mr. WILLIAM DELASAIRE is acquiring a player-grand piano, and is prepared to sell this instrument, costing £210 15 months ago, for £160. 51, Hillmarton Rd., London, N.7. 'Phone: North 2634.

PLAYER-GRAND, middle size, FOR SALE. Nearly new; noted maker. Cost 500 guineas. In Spanish mahogany; a really magnificent instrument. Best offers wanted, Manchester district; also 150 classical rolls. "R. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANO, No. 10 upright grand. Overstrung. 7¼ octaves. Perfect condition. £90, or nearest offer. W. C. Anderson, 274, Banbury Road, Oxford.

SINGING TEACHING.

FOR SALE.—One of the largest Connections in Colonies. Two Pianos, Furniture, &c. Ideal climate. Golf, Tennis, Surf Bathing all year round. Write for particulars, first instance,

MRS. VIVIAN BENNETTS,

79, Talgarth Road, Barons Court, London, W.14.

THE REVISION OF MSS. is undertaken by an Experienced Musical Critic and Song Composer. Lessons in Harmony. Herbert H. Nelson, 9, Grange Road, Canonbury, N.1.

VIOLA PLAYER.—Experienced orchestral, desires evening engagements. Gordon Boden, 85, Pretoria Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

STRING-BASS PLAYER WANTED for Stockwell Orchestral Society. Instrument provided. Weekly rehearsal, Tuesdays. Overtures, Suites, Symphonies, &c. Also vacancies for violins, violas, oboe, bassoon, horn, and trombone. Amateurs only. First-class rehearsal guaranteed. Apply, Secretary, Mr. P. A. Ayles, 36, Durand Gardens, Clapham, S.W.9.

'CELLO, ¾ size. Copy of Strad., 1721. Two cases, sent securely. £10, or nearest offer. Jones, "Teesdale," Hughendon Road, Weston-super-Mare.

YOUNG GENTLEMAN (23), Musical, Scotland, wishes pen friendship with gentleman about same age in England. Write to "M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING: Undoubtedly the only solution of the difficulty. Post free, 1*s.* (Postal Order). Cecil Hamilton, 10, Applegarth Road, W.14.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRICISTS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions wanted for Publication. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (words or music) to The Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

FOR SALE.—BOOKS ON MUSIC, including the complete set of E. Prout's works; also books by Coward, Mackenzie, &c. Condition as new. Write for list of complete library. Allan, High Street, Ayton, N.B.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.

(a) Outline of Course of Instruction (lists of Technical Exercises, books of Studies, Pieces), 5*s.*

(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5*s.*

(c) Four Special Test-Papers for A.R.C.M., 5*s.* each.

"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

12,000 WORDS. 1*s.* 9*d.* Illustrated Method! Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1*s.* (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK II. (1925).

TWELVE SONGS AND DANCES

OF

FLANDERS, ARTOIS, PICARDY, NORMANDY, CHAMPAGNE, LORRAINE, and ALSACE

COLLECTED AND EDITED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENTS

BY

LEOPOLD ASHTON, GUSTAVE FERRARI, AND OTHERS.

With Illustrations, English translations, and descriptions and diagrams of the dances.

PREFACE BY DR. W. H. D. ROUSE, Perse School, Cambridge.

FOREWORD BY HARVEY GRACE and LASTWORD BY EDWIN EVANS.

CONTENTS.

FLANDERS-ARTOIS	Ah! le joli Bois, Mesdames; Sur les Clanquarts.
PICARDY	Les trois Canards; Semons la Salade.
NORMANDY	Les trois Pommes blanches; Compère et Commère.
CHAMPAGNE	Le petit Bonnet rond; Eh! qui marierons-nous?
LORRAINE	Vous n'êtes par mon Berger; Je vais entrer dans la Danse.
ALSACE	La Chanson des Beignets; Le Maître et Jacquot.

Messrs. NOVELLO & Co. beg leave to announce that they have acquired the Sole Agency for all British Territory and the United States of America for the sale of the Work above described, and that copies are now on sale.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS EACH.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BY APPOINTMENT.

A PERFECT SUPPLY OF WIND FOR YOUR ORGAN

THE ORGAN is, without question, the King of Musical Instruments. To enable the organist to give the fullest possible expression and to put power and inspiration into his rendering, it is essential that he should have ample blowing arrangements. The fact that he has a "Discus" Organ Blower doing this gives him that complete confidence so often absent when the blowing is done by hand. An illustrated booklet, entitled "Organ Blowing" will be sent free on application.

"DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

REGD. TRADE MARK.

WATKINS & WATSON.

Telephone. NORTH 2039.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN. BORD.
SCHIEDMAYER. ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 439.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Three Preludes on Anglican Chants

FOR THE ORGAN

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 42.)

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CANTATA FOR LENT and PASSIONTIDE.

PANGE LINGUA

(SING MY TONGUE, THE GLORIOUS BATTLE.)

By the REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

"Thoughtful composition . . . . devotional in spirit and artistic in aims."—Musical Times.

"Worthy the attention of churches where Passion music is sung." Church Times.

"The music is dignified, expressive, and thoroughly devotional, interesting to the singers, yet not too difficult. We have given it several times at Holy-Week Services in Exeter."—Dr. D. J. Wood, late Organist of Exeter Cathedral.

PRICE 2*s.* Words, with a suggested service, 5*s.* per 100.
This Cantata is scored for orchestra.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"O LAMB OF GOD."

A SHORT PRELUDE TO DEVOTIONAL SERVICES OR PERFORMANCES OF "THE CRUCIFIXION" AND OTHER LENTEN CANTATAS.

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS.

By R. WALKER ROBSON.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHOIRMASTERS

should send for specimen copy of the anthem

"I WILL LIFT UP MINE EYES."

Gratis and Post Free.

P. LEECH, 588, Holderness Road, Hull.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES

No. 5,

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND

Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D.	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord ! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M.	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4.	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7.	A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M.	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep ! how broad ! how high !
Hanover	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D.	Alleluia ! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M.	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias)	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D.	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7.	Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M.	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M.	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6.	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M.	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M.	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M.	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M.	My God, and is Thy Table spread ?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M.	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version)	C.M.	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D.	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M.	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8.	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M.	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4.	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M.	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M.	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M.	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M.	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version)	C.M.	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version)	C.M.	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NATIONAL SONGS
WITH DESCANTS

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 271.
SET I.

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)	EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)	OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)	THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)	GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)	THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

JUST PUBLISHED.
NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 275.
SET II.

COME LASSES AND LADS (English)	THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)	THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)	THE FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

JUST PUBLISHED.
NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 276.
SET III.

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)	LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THERE 'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)	THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

PRICE EIGHTPENCE EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CONTINENTAL FINGERING. READY BEGINNING FEBRUARY. ENGLISH FINGERING.

PROGRESSIVE STEPS
THE MODERN INSTRUCTOR FOR THE PIANO.
BY J. A. O'NEILL.

Author of "A Practical Guide to the Theory of Music," "Exercises for the Weak Fingers," "Melodious Technique," "Picturesque Technique," &c.

Containing features of new and special interest. Valuable hints are given on practising, both in Technique and in Ear-Training and Memorising.

BOOK ONE.—CONTENTS.

STEP 1. Names of Notes on Keyboard. Hand Gymnastics. Finger control apart from the instrument.
STEP 2. The Great Stave. Notations learned on an A B C Method and applied by degrees to rhythmical little Exercises; hands separately, then together. Fingers and advice on Five Finger Exercises.
STEP 3. Simple Time Values. Exercises and little pieces in 4/4, 3/4, and 2/4 time. Rests. Dots. Exercises on Intervals.
STEP 4. Scales and Keys. Advice on Sight-Reading. Very simple Sight-Reading Tests. Sight-Reading tests of sharps and flats.
STEP 5. Difference between Major and Minor. Early English Melody (Major), Russian Air (Minor). Ledger Lines. Regimental Calls.
STEP 6. Studies on Black Keys. Exercises in Shakes, and Turning over and under the thumb. Duets. Musical Vocabulary and Index.

PLAN.

In this book, little phrases are formed as the notes are gradually learned, so that Time and Rhythm are thus impressed on the pupil's mind from the first. The finger exercises are placed on a more musical basis than the old-fashioned, ear-wearying five finger exercises. The actual muscular control can be first acquired apart from the piano, by means of the exercises specially given for this purpose.

The Notation is learned alphabetically, the stave being regarded as a ladder for sounds to mount step by step. The beginner starts from the bass notes, and climbs the notation ladder steadily and surely, instead of being hoisted into the middle of it as is the case with so many other methods.

The silent preparation at the keyboard of things to be played is invaluable in obtaining note accuracy and correct fingering, and prevents stumbling. Tapping out the rhythm apart from the piano, while counting Time aloud, facilitates playing rhythmically and in keeping good time. 2s. NET.

BOOK TWO.—CONTENTS.

STEP 1. Time continued from Book I. Advice on Silent Practice. Hints on Ear Training and Memorising. Folk Tunes.
STEP 2. Easy Duets. The Old Mode Scales. Exercises on turning over and under the thumb.
STEP 3. Scale Construction. New Method of ensuring correct fingering. Reading Exercises.
STEP 4. Explanation of Minor Scales. All the Diatonic Scales, major and minor, followed by chords of the respective keys.
STEP 5. Preliminary exercises for facilitating smooth playing of arpeggios. Arpeggios in all keys, and Broken Chords.
STEP 6. Tuneful Studies on Intervals. Triplets and exercises on playing two notes against three. Syncopation. Chromatic Scales. The Whole-Tone Scale. Musical Vocabulary and index.

PLAN.

Book II., although a continuation of the first, is quite suitable for more advanced pupils as a Scale and Arpeggio Manual. It meets all the requirements of the "School" Examinations. It also gives the chords of keys, the Old Mode Scales, the whole-tone scale, so much used by modern composers.

The preliminary exercises for facilitating scale playing are used in the Paris Conservatoire, and are valuable alike for execution and acquiring certainty of fingering.

The selection of fine old folk-tunes is a useful feature for "Musical Appreciation" purposes, for fostering musical memory. The subject of touch is left entirely to the teacher. The main object of the book is to help pupils in their practice, by suggesting ways and means for making it less irksome and more successful. 2s. NET.

ROWLAND'S, 10, Talbot Mansions, Museum Street, London, W.C.1.
COPIES SENT ON APPROVAL.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

February 3rd, at 3 p.m—Recital by students in Mr. T. W. Holgate's Class.

February 10th, 17th, and 24th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concerts.

March 6th.—Last day of entry for the April Diploma Examinations, and for the next Open Competition for Scholarships.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

ELKIN & CO.'S

CHORAL SERIES

(General Editor: DR. JOHN BORLAND).

LATEST ISSUES
INCLUDE NEW

PART-SONGS and UNISON SONGS

BY

ELGAR, QUILTER, BRENT-SMITH,
PERCY JUDD, CHARLES WATERS,
LESLIE WOODGATE, ETC., ETC.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE COLLEGIATE PSALTER

CONTAINING THE

CANTICLES, PSALMS, AND PROPER PSALMS, WITH CHANTS

TOGETHER WITH

VERSICLES AND RESPONSES
AND
THE LITANY.

POINTED AND EDITED BY THE

REV. H. G. DANIELL-BAINBRIDGE, M.A.,
Late Precentor of Westminster Abbey,
AND
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A.,
Late Organist of Westminster Abbey.

Well Bound in Cloth, 6*s.* net.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE
ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, MUS. DOC.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

Demy 8vo size, 4*s.* net.
Imperial 32mo, 1*s.* 6*d.* net
The Canticles only, Demy 8vo, 6*d.* net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FEBRUARY 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 175.)

GRESHAM ESSAYS

By WALFORD DAVIES

III.—THE PERFECT FOURTH

(FROM HUCBALD TO HOLST)

In Hucbald's 10th-century diaphony the so-called perfect fourth  seems clearly to be used as a euphony in its own right, neither attendant nor contingent upon any other intervals:

Ex. 1

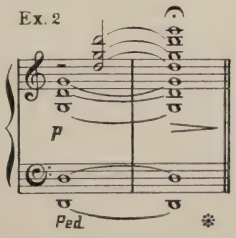
In Holst's Choral Symphony, 'Evening Watch,' and other works, the fourth after much recent experiment again seems to be passing into its own rights, as a new-old harmonic coin, struck afresh from the mint of the musical mind of to-day, perhaps destined to prove common 'legal tender' in the world of music, after all.

From Hucbald's fourths to Holst's is just a thousand years, perhaps almost to the day. What has happened to the perfect fourth meanwhile? What sort of serviceable friend has it been to musicians? Or, rather, what sort of friendly use is to be made of this unchanging euphony?

THE FOURTH AS 'DISCORD'

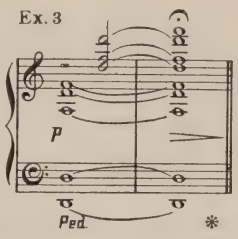
The reply to this question lies, of course, deeply embedded in the loveliest music of the past ten centuries. It would take a heap of sagacity, with years of labour to extract, and many volumes to record, an adequate answer. But two significant facts emerge at a glance, and seem to throw a flood of light on the question: (1) Men have continually agreed to call the fourth a perfect concord; and (2) they have hitherto conspired to treat it as a discord. Let the reader play the following, listening watchfully to its effect upon his own mind, especially as it dies on to the edge of silence (always a good moment to observe intervals):

Ex. 2



He will be listening to a chord of the open fourth; and no man will ever be able to say that it is dissonant by comparison with a similar chord of the minor third:

Ex. 3



But he will also be sounding a chord which, from Hucbald's time till to-day, ceased to be reckoned or used as a concord. In other words, while men consented to bring their minds to rest harmonically on a minor third (see Ex. 3), yet for centuries they have refused to find rest on a chord of the perfect fourth. It has implied and mostly led to a third. Why?

It cannot be, as has sometimes been thought, that the concordant fourth from the bass was in some mysterious way disqualified because it is not to be found between a fundamental tone and any of its natural harmonics; for (unfortunately for this theory) exactly the same is true of the minor third from the bass, and that has been accepted as a concord for many a long day. Still less can it satisfy the inquiring mind to be told that the whole treatment of the fourth is a matter of historic accident, due to human vagaries of art, which any new turn of history, any new 'accident' or newly-willed vagary can displace so soon as an equally accidental prejudice in favour of triads and a given key-system can be dispelled or lived down. Both these explanations are manifest failures. The 'harmonic series' theory fails because it explains away the minor third as well as the fourth. The 'accident' theory fails in that, while explaining anything and everything, it literally leaves all still unexplained. Yet though both theories may look ridiculous when taken alone and pressed too far, they may also point towards the truth if taken together and not pressed at all. Consider for a moment Prof. Prout's hope (expressed a few years back in his revision of the theories of his time) that if the eleventh harmonic from any fundamental failed to explain a certain current chord, perhaps the twenty-first harmonic might satisfactorily explain it! That is a case of pressing things very far; and the most learned and lovable Professor leaves us utterly behind him when he rides away to such lengths on such a theory as this. Yet though the twenty-first and eleventh harmonics are too faint to have even a pale theoretic interest for the practical thinker in chords; though possibly the seventh and ninth harmonics have really signified far less than has been commonly and very naturally supposed; though even so strong a fellow as the fifth harmonic cannot prevent any vigorous mind from enjoying a cadence on to a minor seventeenth:

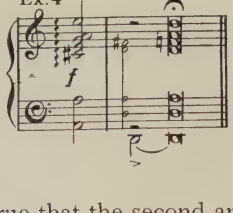
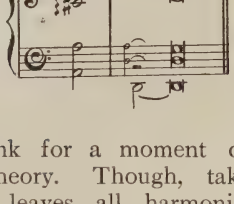
Ex. 4



it may still be true that the second and third tones of the harmonic series—the big two:  are inherently so present to the ordinary ear and mind as materially to affect an ordinary unbiassed man's thoughts of the perfect-fourth chord:

Ex. 5



Then think for a moment of the 'historic accident' theory. Though, taken alone, this explanation leaves all harmonic developments (whether of the fourth or anything else) to whim, fantasy, chance—which may be very presumptuous and absurd; yet no one would refuse to accept as an obvious fact that the whimsies of the ages do play a part in musical history substantially affecting its developments.

Indeed it seems clear that the charm of harmonic thought is neither to be explained by impersonal, calculable euphonies alone, nor by personal, incalculable uses of them, but by both these elements taken together.

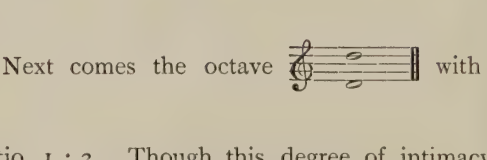
All ages hold in common all beautiful sounds; in the nature of things they do not change. Of these each man alive needs to take fresh and first-hand stock, if his mind is to be equipped to receive and enjoy lovely music of any kind. And while a changeless use of changeless things might be deadly unprogressive and dangerous, on the other hand a progressive mind which refuses to delight in the changeless is in obvious danger of isolating itself, stultifying its output, and of developing a peculiar personal 'idiom' literally only suitable for just one lonely 'idiot.' The lines of progress in harmony apparently lie along ever-changing thoughts that are lovely, about unchanging things that are lovely too. And high up in importance among the latter stands this fascinating, simple, new, yet ancient consonance of the fourth. It may be that in the process of time a moment has now arrived when men's thoughts are ready to change and develop round about this very interval.

THE NATURE OF INTERVALS

An interval is not (as is superficially suggested by its name) the distance between two notes. Almost as well measure the relationship between a father and son by the distance between the tops of their heads. An interval is not a distance, but a discernible relation between any two notes. It is an intimacy; and the mind obviously delights in relating notes in very varying degrees of intimacy, whether melodically or in chords, whether gradually or instantly. This delight of the mind in musical relationship is not dependent upon an active knowledge of the ratios enjoyed. We can delight in ratios that we cannot mathematically distinguish or explain, just as we can delight in natural beauty which we can neither describe, explain, nor control. Yet it seems true to say that the pleasures of the musical mind are dependent upon its power to discern simple ratios or relationships in such a way as to be able (1) to differentiate between them and (2) sensibly to relate them. In order to understand a language men must be able both to distinguish between words in that language and to relate them with each other in a sentence; and no less is needed in the language of Harmony. Furthermore, it seems natural to expect and reasonable to accept as a principle of action that the simplest relationship—that is, the intervals holding the highest degrees of intimacy between their tones—are the first to be generally detected. enjoyed, and used. This expectation is abundantly verified in musical history.

It will now be well to run through the natural simple euphonies in the approximate order in which the ordinary mind might be expected to group them. First of course comes the unison  where every vibration of the one note agrees with every vibration of the other (ratio 1 : 1). Its complete unity gives it unique place among intervals; and there can, I suppose, be no moment comparable for beauty with the moment when diverse voices merge to rest on a final unison (as so often, for example, in Bach):

Ex. 6



Next comes the octave  with its ratio 1 : 2. Though this degree of intimacy is inferior to that of the unison, it is yet so great and so instantly recognisable that it may well be compared with the intimacy of father and son. The very names of the two notes are always the same, though they are as two distinct persons; and though their vibrations are not identical, yet because those of the lower note lie wholly within those of the upper note, with only one vibration intervening, the ear so completely identifies the two as to think of them as one ; and so it comes about that our thoughts of any note C are the same in whatever part of the audible compass C may be sounded ; B flat is B flat to the mind, whether sounded high up or low down. There is little wonder that our common values for these two perfect intervals, the unison and the octave, control the harmonic situation to-day as in Hucbald's day, and as also they have long controlled the melodic situation.

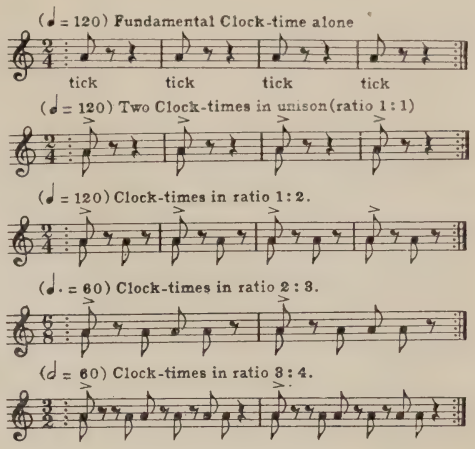
There is no other interval within these two which shares their perfection ; though the next two in order of intimacy, the fifth (2 : 3) and the fourth (3 : 4),  and  are called perfect, yet between these and the perfect octave there is a profound difference. For while in the unison and octave every vibration of one of the notes wholly agrees with vibrations of the other, even the fourth and fifth have not this perfection of intimacy. They share rather with all inferior intimacies another vital characteristic, viz., that only some of the vibrations of the one note coincide with some of those of the other. All such intervals have only relative degrees of perfection or imperfection, of intimacy or estrangement, likeness or difference, consonance or dissonance. So it seems sounder to group fifths and fourths—for all their smoothness—with the thirds and sixths, and even with sevenths (rather than with the octave), recognising in all these lesser agreements their due degree of intimacy, and giving the so-called perfect fifth and perfect fourth chief place among them all.

This distinction between the nature of the two most perfect relationships (unison and octave) and the two next degrees of relationship (fifth and fourth) is perhaps best grasped by a rhythmic analogy. By one Gresham student the very happy name of syncopated interval has been suggested for all the lesser perfections of intimacy, the unison and octave being, by contrast, unsyncopated intervals. To make this rhythmic simile clear, let it be supposed that a clock in the room ticks at a uniform or basic clock-time of sixty ticks a minute ; and on this unchanging 'pitch,' or clock-time, we are about to explore relations or intimacies with other clock-times. At first, let us imagine that every other clock we bring near it ticks away gaily unrelated or, rather, unrelatable, by our minds. But some one devises a way to show us the simplest clock-time relationships successfully. And first he shows us a clock that is in unison with our clock (ratio 1 : 1) ; then a clock that ticks at a hundred and twenty (ratio 1 : 2) ; this will make possible a rhythmic picture of an octave. Then he brings a clock at ninety (ratio 2 : 3) ; this, put together with our sixty clock, gives us the picture in rhythmic form of the vibrational intimacy of a fifth ; and lastly a clock that ticks at eighty (ratio 3 : 4) is brought. If we then can exactly relate these clocks, one by one, with our original or basic clock, the four successive experiments will yield the following audible results : *

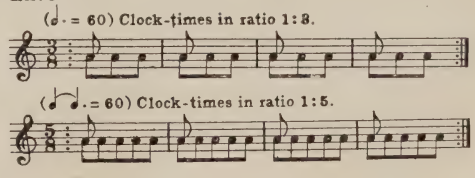
Ex. 7



(♩ = 120) Fundamental Clock-time alone
tick tick tick tick
(♩ = 120) Two Clock-times in unison (ratio 1 : 1)
(♩ = 120) Clock-times in ratio 1 : 2.
(♩. = 60) Clock-times in ratio 2 : 3.
(♩ = 60) Clock-times in ratio 3 : 4.

and the successive rhythmic patterns corresponding with such intervals as major sixth (3 : 5), major third (4 : 5), minor third (5 : 6), &c., grow, of course, more and more intriguing, till they pass out of our powers of enjoyable discernment. But here may be seen a most significant fact, which probably is capable of making, as I believe, a measureless difference to musical thought and which yet seems never to have been deemed worthy of note in any text-book that I remember : it is that while a fifth is a 'syncopated' intimacy and thus for ever different in its kind of perfection from the unison or octave, the twelfth (ratio 1 : 3) is not a syncopated interval ! It in fact shares with the unison and octave their own kind of perfection. Still more remarkable, the major seventeenth (ratio 1 : 5) is a perfect consonance in a way that the perfect fifth is not. A glance at their rhythmic analogues will make this quite clear :

Ex. 8

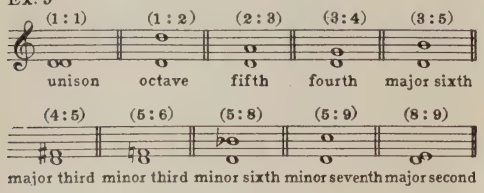


These facts indicate the essential distinctions between intervals, and they do so in a clear and, incidentally, quite an encouraging way. For if the differences between the intervals we are about to examine are only differences of degree, it may be new delights await us both among chords and rhythms which at first seem bewilderingly different from those to which we have grown accustomed. It is only a question of time, diligence, and an open mind, and we may travel speedily and far into new chords and rhythms. More about the latter in another essay.

* I have so arranged them that the coincident ticks always stand at the first beat of an imaginary bar, thus showing the natural accent which would occur where a tick of double power strikes the ear.

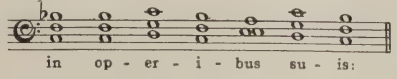
To return now afresh to simple intervals of historic fame and of inherent loveliness: if a table of them be set down in what may be called their order of expectation, it will soon be seen that this order proves also to be the approximate order in which their euphonious qualities were actually recognised and used in musical history:

Ex. 9



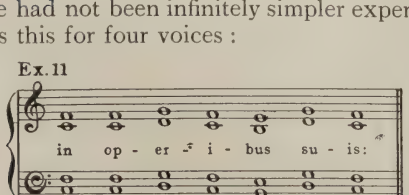
Now let the above series be quietly and repeatedly sounded by the reader for his own purposes in the order in which they are written, and he will as it were be surveying history at a great speed. He will also be moving logically and deliberately along the first euphonies which most concern him in whatever age he lives, and to whatever kind of music he may find his mind suited and himself devoted. And it is refreshing to realise with what swiftness the mind can educate itself to detect the restful bond of perfection in the less perfect relationships. A useful personal test seems to lie in this question: Can my mind come contentedly to rest on this or that interval? If it can, it will be at home in such music as treats such intervals as concords. (We must of course recognise that our contentments are mostly relative.) It is surprising how an unfamiliar chord such as  may with practice become wonderfully restful to the mind—not during a decade, nor a year, nor a week, nor even a day, but during the course of a quiet half-hour. As suggested in a previous essay, the harmonic mind is a bird of passage that can take a swift flight across the ages. From Hucbald's fourths to Holst's fourths and sevenths is truly a very little mental journey, though historically a long one; and I believe it would be true to suppose that Hucbald himself could soon have enjoyed such an experimental passage as this:

Ex. 10



if there had not been infinitely simpler experiences such as this for four voices:

Ex. 11

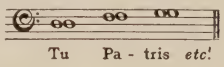


still waiting to be explored, enjoyed, and revealed to men at that time. The simplest mental experience has a natural precedence over the less simple.

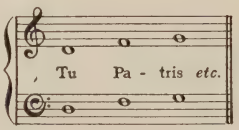
THE NATURE OF CHORDS

It was precisely the joy indicated in the last-named example—that of hearing three or more voices sing at different intervals—which seems to have determined the fate of the fourth itself Whenever men moved from the mere discovery of singing at a new interval to the momentous discovery of combining the new with the old intervals, they would quickly find that some combined well and some did not.

Here let the student of 1926 imagine an equally interested student of A.D. 926 keenly considering the new riches at his disposal. He had long been brought up on plainsong, both at the unison:

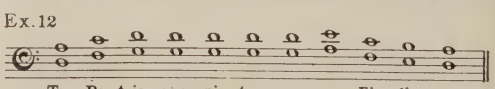


and at the octave:



and had now entered into the daringly new joy of:

Ex. 12



It would probably not dawn upon him at first that the arrival of one new interval had brought a good deal more than one possibility, viz., that of two voices merely singing the same song or chant at the new interval. Sooner or later (it may have been quite casually) it would be seen that this new arrival had also made possible two startlingly new and lovely mental experiences—for whenever two voices singing a plainsong in the new interval reverted to the old familiar octave, then might easily become and our student must have been startled by the glorious dawn of a chance that two different melodies could now actually be sung simultaneously. Perhaps the whole idea of independent melodic movement arrived at some such informal moment in history. Perhaps in this humble cradle the great art of counterpoint may have first lain. When once the power to sing two different tunes simultaneously was cultivated, however crudely, other intervals than the unison, octave, fifth, and fourth arose naturally; and each new interval would arrive to challenge men's minds, then and now, to discern their relationships and enjoy them if they could. As seen in this often-quoted Hucbald fragment:

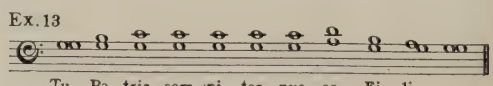
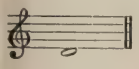
Ex. 13



even seconds as well as thirds were cautiously allowed to be used if sandwiched between more enjoyable relationships. We can now picture this 10th-century student, having enjoyed the four-voiced versions of the new diaphony (quoted in Ex. 11 above), and having become more or less familiar with many or possibly with all the simple intervals named in Ex. 9; would he not be ready and eager to move on to chords in the true sense—that is, to the enjoyment of two or more different intervals simultaneously, with the consequent new pleasure of discerning a three-fold or four-fold unity?

'Two is company, three's none,' is a proverb that breaks down utterly in music. Three or more notes in a chord form such excellent company that from Hucbald's time to ours (and from the first moment of any individual harmonist's life to the last) a steady development of the power of chord-discernment is the normal process.

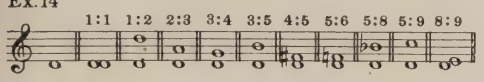
It is at this point that the remarkable fate of the fourth becomes intensely interesting. For had advance definitely stopped at two-part writing, the whole status of the euphony in question might possibly have remained a dominating one. But the moment our imagined student moved from the novel enjoyment of sounding one voice at a new interval (from the plainsong) to the obvious sequel of sounding two voices at two new intervals from the plainsong, it will be seen that a very practical issue arose (often a crucial one) as to the relationship of the two intruders not only to the plainsong itself but to each other. The arrival of a second visitant involves not one new interest, but two, i.e., three in all—the relationship of the first visitor to the original note, and of the second visitor to both of the others. Here, then, is any plainsong note:



and here is its first use:

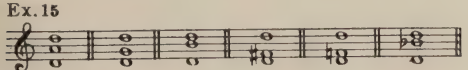
and here, when once the flood-gate is open, come in quick succession the new diaphonic possibilities:

Ex. 14



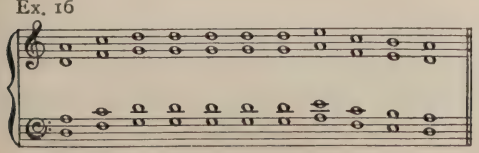
When the student of that day began, casually or of set purpose, to combine any two of these intervals (involving the simultaneous presence of three notes in his mind), we can imagine that he would soon discover that all except the intervals of the second and seventh combined well with the octave:

Ex. 15

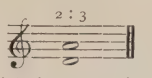


This fact accounts for the early happy use of diaphony in four parts simultaneously:

Ex. 16

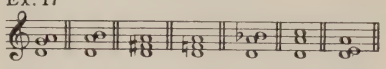


But when our student moved to the next perfect interval:

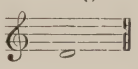


and began to try to combine with it other intervals than the octave, he would discover momentous things:

Ex. 17



Not only do the thirds triumph over the fourths and sixths, but the triads emerge, and soon even the seventh looks happy. The things hereby discovered are perhaps best realised in a childish parable which may help the simple without wearying the wise. Let D, the plainsong note, be imagined as an amiable person in a room:



There enters his 'son':

It does not matter who comes into the room next, for should their relation with the fatherly note be pleasant they will by nature not prove seriously incompatible with the son (see the picture of them in Ex. 15). But the son departs; the father is alone again and now his most intimate friend re-enters the room:

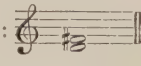
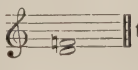
and immediately he is followed by another intimate friend:

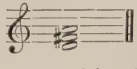
Relations are now a little strained between the visitants. Their claims on their host are too nearly alike; whereas had one of a lesser degree of intimacy entered instead:



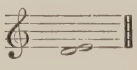
or



there is a far more contented communion established:



Furthur than this, in certain cases where a friend of a scarcely recognisable degree of intimacy enters:



so far from complicating matters it may even be a positive gain to have the other more intimate friend back into the room:

His is, in this case, a mediatorial presence, because it happens that his relations with the intruder are almost as perfect as his relations with his host. He is closely intimate with both. We may safely drop the parable here, and admit readily that nothing could be more natural under natural circumstances than that which actually happened, viz., the gradual rise of the major and minor triad, and their complete ascendancy as time went on, together with the temporary degradation of the perfect fourth to the position of a servant, a mere attendant upon the third, as the ninth was upon the octave and the seventh upon the sixth.

Three-note chords which work well were and are always likely to be in demand, naturally welcomed, relied upon, and loved as points of clear thought in the course of the act of combining melodies. Indeed so gradual and unforced does the emergence of the triad as a working basis of all part-music seem, that a guess might be hazarded here. Should our present harmonic civilization ever be submerged, then—slowly but surely—by the same order of natural selection, I cannot but imagine the triad would arise again, as a friendly clearing house of any normal musical mind which finds it possible to relate and enjoy any three sounds as one.

But all this does not dispose of the immediate problem of the perfect fourth in 1926. Indeed, it merely serves to lead up to it. One mental power leads up to another. Two mental concepts can lead to a third. 'Then there were three!'—for it is clear that new thoughts do not exclude old ones. They contain them. The mind that can brood happily over the triad in one set relation of its parts:  may learn later to do so in another  The mind that can enjoy the major and related minor triad separately may in favourable conditions rejoice in their instant sounding ; and when Holst ends the 'Evening Watch' in this way:  the mind that protests to-day may rejoicingly companionize and contain the composite concord, say, by Tuesday-week or thereabouts.* May it not be as natural to-day to move from combined thirds and fifths to combined seconds and fourths  as it was a thousand years ago to move from fifths and fourths  to the triads themselves?

The answer to this seems, curiously enough, to depend upon the mind's potential attitude towards the major second  . It would be strange indeed if Debussy's recent indefatigable quarrying in the rock of the whole-tone chord and his persuasive gentleness in the use of such a sounding  which (like its predecessor, the diminished seventh) has no perfect fourth at all in it, had actually been the means whereby the latter interval should be now ardently desired by Ravel or Holst and recalled and actively reinstated in the realm of harmonic thought. And what, after all, is that realm? It seems to be one, as already suggested, of ever-changing loveliness to be enjoyed, resting upon a few changeless principles to be grasped.

Two things should be noted here: (1.) It seems clear and remarkable that in harmonic thought the spelling of the chord affects the meaning of it. This is only another way of saying that the mental context determines the exact meaning of any chord; and the spelling can suggest the context. Thus  suggests one context and  quite another, so much so that when a composer approaches this chord in its first form and quits it in its second, he has made an ordinary pun in music (see an article on 'Word-play in Music' in the Musical Times of December, 1913). The result is that, broadly-speaking, names of notes mean thoughts of notes, and chords in the language of music mean groups of such thoughts taken as one thought—a very easy and customary mental feat of which we are no more laboriously conscious in the course of beautiful music than of any other composite fact, like type-writing or organ-playing, or short-handing. (2.) It seems equally clear that the same harmonic thought can be presented to the ear in ways so different in physical effect that in one case it may be made quite muddy and unacceptable, and in the other quite acceptable and clear. Beethoven sometimes showed a fine contempt for comfort of the ear, and hurled his concords harshly at our ears, thus: Let this chord be contrasted with Chopin's presentment of it:

In this latter case every component is in perfect relationship with the first and lowest note. If a three-note thought can survive the harshest presentment of it to the ear, it by no means follows that a six-note thought can do so. Thus:

* That is what actually happened to our choir when laboriously rehearsing this particular cadence in Wales. We shrank at first, and enjoyed to the full when our minds gripped the concord.

Try this thought in Chopin's way and the chord and the physical presentment of the chord may be said to be stabilized happily enough for practical use.

When some day we hear the whole chromatic scale sounded simultaneously by some future young Chopin or younger Debussy who does it with taste and sensitive courtesy to the listener, then we really shall have heard the 'last word' in the well-tempered harmonic system which was set in loving order for us by old Bach just two hundred years ago. Having heard the last word we shall then possess our whole vocabulary. What then? Nothing very different. The perfect will still be perfect, and ardently sought and loved. The simple will still be desirable. Thought, however deeply versed, can still only wait on intuition as it waits on perfection.

A dear old country parson friend of mine said one Sunday afternoon (in that amiable mood when, having had a great Sunday dinner, we suspended activities till the early cup of tea arrived): 'Mr. Davies, take down the dictionary and see if there is any word I do not know.' There wasn't one, if I remember rightly, and I tried the hard ones, and marvelled. Then we walked a mile and a half to a service with a tiny congregation in a tiny building with an equally tiny organ (and a very bad reed in it). And quite forgetful of all learning, the old man read the Bible with solemn gusto, and exhorted us to try to be good boys for another week.

I believe the solvent truth of the present absorbingly interesting harmonic position will prove to be very simple. It may be that, when we have at last received the chromatic twelve-note chord in its most persuasive form, and when we have mentally contained it (if a twelve-note thought prove possible to the mind and practicable for beautiful use), we shall through it acquire a new appraisement and enjoyment of the simple unison (or one-note chord), just as an organist with a vast acquisition of Great organ-stops also acquires a totally new value for his echo dulciana; and we shall be ready to begin an altogether more enjoyable understanding of plainsong, of diaphony, of Palestrina, of Bach, and of every five- and six-note thought expressed with mastery by any and every composer who is sensitive enough to find new harmonic beauties for us, and incidentally to love his audience as himself.

PERSONALITIES AMONG MUSICAL CRITICS

I.—A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS

By Basil Maine

There is, I venture to assert, no more trenchant musical criticism to be read at the moment than that which appears in the 'Music and Musicians' column of the Observer each Sunday. Mr. Fox-Strangways not only writes readily (which is not in itself so much an aid as a hindrance to criticism), but he arrives swiftly. I have always imagined that he writes as easily as he talks—his work gives that impression. Indeed, his converse is as sure and trim as his writing, so that one can almost believe that he telephones his column to Tudor Lane as an impromptu discourse every Friday evening. Do not deduce from this that his opinions are ready-made; on the contrary, as often I have proved, he will readily modify an opening declaration, if, after thoroughly sifting your counter-declaration, he finds that it, too, has its points. 'An exquisite reason' gives him delight; 'reason good enough' is not good enough for him.

Controversy is the salt of his life, and never does it lose its savour. You cannot be with him for more than a moment or so before you find yourself entangled in your speech. You have remarked perchance upon some fleeting or immediate topic intending that it should 'pass by as the idle wind' and not be too much respected. Immediately you are met with 'Whys?' and 'Wherefores?' searchings and dissections, definings and word-trials.

Then you find yourself following with eager mind and bated breath: you are fascinated and forget ordinary necessities. What fun it all is! I remember one November night being involved in this delightful way over some detail in the question of 'Song-Translation.' The night air was cutting with a sharp edge; Fox-Strangways and I were ostensibly waiting for our respective buses at Marble Arch. We paced up and down between Stewart's and the landing-stage from ten minutes past eleven until twenty minutes past twelve. The debate was still unfinished, and by that time we had both missed the last bus home. There was nothing to do but continue the contention, which we did until one o'clock, and then parted, numb with cold, yet visibly warmed by the verbal strife.

There are some critics of whom it can be said that they never leave a stone unturned. Fox-Strangways is one of them. But the mere act of turning stones is in itself a tiresome business; the common habit is to forget to put the stones back in their exact position, and the last state is worse than the first. One of the chief reasons for the great length of a Fox-Strangways discourse is that he is never content merely to dig up the foundations and to search for a possible flaw in them. That is only the beginning. The longer process is the repairing of the defects (if any) and the relaying of the loosened stones. He never sends you away with the feeling of disillusion; yet he is a man entirely without illusion of any kind. He is essentially a radical, but by no means a revolutionary. There is no sign of the visionary in his writing; he indulges in no flights of fancy; a quick and youthful sense of humour will not permit them.

He endows the mind with a kind of 'Divine Right.' It can do no wrong. So it is that on occasions we find him concentrating upon some point which may seem to us a little removed from the centre; at other times he will be harbouring an oddly remote theory which is difficult to reconcile with the context.

Often enough I have thought that he leads us into jungles which are best left undisturbed; on occasions, the exploration has proved unnecessary (except as an arduous schooling), for we find that the tortuous path leads back again to the high road, and we feel inclined to grumble a little, as—to change the image—did the sailors in 'The Shadowy Waters':

> Has he not led us into these waste seas for long enough?'
> Aye, long and long enough.
> We have not come upon a shore or ship these dozen weeks.
> And I had thought to make a good round sum upon this cruise.

If we may compare together a vivid reality and a poetic myth, we may say that with Fox-Strangways, as with Forgael, the 'good round sum' is made up of fine thinking, stern experience, rigid discipline, and an occasional taste of bread. If you embark with him, you must observe the rules of the ship to share the tentative reward.

There is something of great significance in the fact that a whole column of a weekly newspaper is given up to such finely-pointed musical criticism. It is a good sign in these out-of-joint times that the big journals of this country are beginning to look upon musical criticism—and upon all criticism—not merely from the point of view of its news-value. Editors now realise that there is a vast public, which demands to know something of cause as well as effect, and that this public has been so well trained that it can, and is willing to, follow a train of thought which is calculated to lead to the cause. It is impossible to measure influence statistically, but we may be certain that the 'Music and Musicians' column of the Observer will develop, beyond all reckoning, the potential intelligence of musical audiences. It cannot be but that dissensions will come; but it is more salutary to disagree with a statement made by Fox-Strangways than to agree with relations and friends.

I have touched upon two qualities in the man which appear to be contradictory. I have written of his swiftness of mind and of the long and arduous processes of his reasoning, and you have probably asked, 'Can these two be reconciled?' They can be and are reconciled in Fox-Strangways. He is both speedy and enduring, which is as much as to say that he gets further than most people. Of redundancy there is not a trace in his work; he resents the intrusion of a single superfluous word; the result is that he covers more ground in a paragraph than is ordinarily covered in a series of articles. Only you must be alive to the implication of his words. I cannot do better than end with an example of this quick analytical process. In his book on 'Musical Taste and How to Form It,' Mr. M.-D. Calvocoressi holds that the major and minor scales are based on æsthetic choice. Fox-Strangways's review bites shrewdly. He writes:

> If that means stress of circumstances, then by all means; but it sounds more like caprice. Is not the explanation more human? There were too many fine tunes in modes to let them die out, so we epitomised the modes in our multiform minor; but at the same time harmony became so important that we turned mode into key and called it major; and later on talked by analogy of a minor key.

There is something almost athletic in this reply. The way the whole question is gathered up on the run and returned with the same continuous gesture brings to mind the agility of a fielder. If criticism were cricket, Fox-Strangways would be spoken of as one of the best cover-points in the country.

VARIATIONS ON VARIOUS VERBAL THEMES

By Mrs. Frank Liebich

The attitude of mind that brings 'a touch of glad, confident morning into all to-day's musical enthusiasms' is undoubtedly one to be envied and admired. It must necessarily be allied with vivid sympathies, enthusiasm, unbiassed outlook. All that is clear, eager, hopeful, unites with one's impressions of dawn and morning; while, conversely, a good deal that is irresolute, arrested, even completed, mingles with those of sunset and evening. The intellectual faculties are easily paralleled at different stages of most men's lives with the light, quick stir of morning, the repose of noon, or the ambulatory dusk of evening. But the saying, 'Those whom the gods love die young,' can surely never have been intended to mean that those favoured ones are cut off in the springtide of life; rather does it convey the idea that through a long existence they retain a perennial boyhood; that their youth, their buoyancy, keeps pace with their advancing years, and sustains them unimpaired by old age to the end. Sunrise and the morning stars are their auxiliaries.

These thoughts have been prompted by Sir Walford Davies's interesting Gresham lectures in the Musical Times of 1925, especially by that in the August number:

> It is clear [said the lecturer] that the man who hears most in the courageous complexities of to-morrow's music is he who has the very highest values for the equally courageous simplicities of yesterday. Such a man brings a touch of glad, confident morning into all to-day's musical enthusiasms.

It is somewhat difficult to imagine any musician to the manner born lacking this comprehensive outlook. Yet sometimes even to such there may come, unbidden, a hardening of the mental faculties and a consequent blunting of the apprehension, casting a chill, wintry mist over the mind. But apart from this benumbing of brain and intelligence, corresponding to the gradual merging of autumn into winter, the eclectic mind in health and strength, so aptly described by Sir Walford, is undoubtedly one for whom the terms reactionary or progressive would be equally out of place and meaningless. The notion of walking backwards or forwards contained in the signification of these words could never be fitted to one whose thought is winged, and consequently planes far above the ordinary paths of custom and prejudice. Sir Walford Davies's two essays* focus the attention, also, on the unlimited possibilities of beauty to be found by the wise in simple, homely things. For if one realises that each of the seven white notes is a multitudinous single thing, the amazing adventures they may be led into among themselves may well seem endless. They have been, and are, the common property of every past and living composer, and will continue so to be for their heirs and assigns throughout the coming ages. This may sound trite and commonplace, yet what each and all have accomplished with those slender assets has filled, and will continue to fill, unnumbered volumes of history and biography.

It is a charming idea of the Gresham lecturer to liken the appreciative musical mind in its flight across past musical ages to a bird of passage. But for rapid freedom of volition the mind can outstrip any migratory winged creature. Thought is swifter than bird or wireless. It can travel instantaneously backwards and forwards across remote centuries. For instance, in a flash I can imagine myself at Esterhazy, in Austria, towards the end of the 18th century, among the stiff, bewigged audience, listening to a Quartet of Haydn. I take up a miniature score, and in my mind's ear the set, prim little phrases of the first movement of his D minor String Quartet make themselves heard. In another fraction of a second I can visualise the interior of the Bayreuth Opera House at the end of the 19th century, and the Prelude to 'Tristan' repeats itself within my consciousness; or if the score of 'Pelléas' happens to be lying on the pianoforte, an uncomfortable 'loge au 2ème étage' of the Paris Opéra-Comique presents itself to my memory, and squeezed up within it, in imagination I hear the orchestra reproducing the flowing of water, while in the bright sunlight Mélisande plays with her wedding ring, throwing it up and catching it until it eludes her grasp and plunges into the depths of the pool. The faculty of mental imagery, as has been pointed out by Sir Francis Galton in his 'Inquiries into the Human Faculty,' is often allied, in the case of a musician, with the power of silent mental audition. For remembering operas the combination is a valuable asset. And if what are termed the ultra-modern complexities were made as familiar to us by repeated hearing as are any of the older music, we should gradually store them in our mental warehouse according to the measure of our faculty of comprehension. But performances of the music of the outstanding composers of to-day are now too infrequent to induce familiarity. A good deal, however, can be done at the yet not defunct pianoforte. With its aid any amount of flights can be made across musical ages, alighting with equal pleasure on simplicities and complexities.

Debussy's music now ranks with the simplicities of yesterday, but Bartók's hardly does so yet; neither does that of Malipiero, save in one or two instances. Thus a delightful and enjoyable mental flight can be taken into the tangle of sonorities in the first two numbers of Malipiero's 'Risonanze'; afterwards, for the tranquillising of the aural faculties, the 17th century in Italy will provide a little peaceful Andantino in G of Padre Rossi. Similarly, it is possible for an open-minded individual to derive pleasure from a coruscation of words in a poem by a Sitwell as well as from one of the simple early English rhyming songs composed between 1300 and 1500; or from a short Ode of Ronsard as well as from a lengthier one by Paul Claudel. Complexities of art begin by intriguing the mind, but when closer acquaintance has made them familiar to us they are then classed with other bygone simplicities, while fresh and still more tortuous intricacies will continue to present themselves for elucidation:

> And the more ample years unfold
> (With a million songs as song of one)
> A little new of the ever old,
> A little told of the never told,
> Added act of the never done.

Most interesting and amusing are the comments of 'Feste' in the December Musical Times on Miss Edith Sitwell's appreciation of the work of Gertrude Stein in the October issue of Vogue. While reading it a well-known dictum interposed itself between my eyes and the printed page. The letters of 'There is nothing new under the sun' seemed to span the distance from my writing desk to my bookshelves, forcing me to rise and search for one of the works of Villiers de Lisle Adam, a French author whose writings were published some fifty years ago in France. In 'L'Ève Future' the author makes the great scientist, Edison, one of the heroes of his novel. His personality is portrayed more as the 'Sorcerer of Menlo Park' than according to any intimate biographical details:

> In truth [says Edison in the first chapter of the fifth part of 'L'Ève Future'], all things whatsoever, I can assure you, are absolutely reciprocally related: they form the great kaleidoscope of human vocables. If the colour and tone of subject-matter are presented to the mind, any kind of word can always in some way or other be adapted to it according to the eternal à peu près of life and verbal intercourse. There are so many indefinite, suggestive words, possessing a strange, intellectual elasticity! And their charm, their depth of meaning, simply depends on their affinities.

* Musical Times, February and August, 1925.

As a pioneer, therefore, Miss Stein is with the rear-guard. Villiers de Lisle Adam, Mallarmé, and Baudelaire with his 'correspondances,' his responding colours and forms and sounds, were among her precursors. She is trying to link the idea of the dynamic energy of words to the resonance of musical sound. Long ago the sculptor, Condillac, had an intuition of the interrelation of the arts, and of their joint and combined permeation of the senses, when he carved on the pedestal of his statue the words, 'I am the scent of the roses.' It was an effort to associate the apparently dissociated senses; an attempt to make them responsive and vibrational to each other. But if it comes to essaying to borrow the function of one art from another, music will never be impoverished by the endeavour. By reason of its very indefiniteness it is all things to all men. It adapts itself unceasingly to each separate listener; each and every individual receives and subdues its beauty to himself. Expression is of course the prime function of words. But they reflect, also, and radiate their meaning. In many of the great poems of the world they scintillate like jewels. Miss Stein's use of them may appeal to a future or a rising generation. But it is questionable whether her 'Book of Verse' would be taken along with 'a loaf of bread,' 'a flask of wine,' into the wilderness, and even if it were so taken conjointly with an owner of one of the present-day vibrato voices 'singing in the wilderness,' the last line of Omar Khayyám's quatrain might fail altogether as an appropriate simile for describing the situation.

Undoubtedly one would agree with 'Feste,' and prefer 'a rose by a long chalk' to a description of it by Miss Stein. The point is, could he give a better verbal idea of a rose than the one he quotes? And assuredly one imagines he could do so. But Miss Sitwell is too dogmatic. She says of Miss Stein's designation: 'It means exactly what a rose means,' thus delimiting and waving aside the thousand and one different definitions that might occur to a similar number of minds. And amongst these might be found one that might out-pioneer that of Miss Stein.

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

The time seems to be ripe for a kind of Almanach de Gotha of the musical profession, seeing that almost all the available grandiose labels have been appropriated. This particular brand of foolery apparently began with singers of the markedly inferior sex, though it is difficult to say which lady first assumed, or allowed her publicity agent to confer on her, the title of 'Queen of Song.' I have lately amused and depressed myself with making a little collection towards the Almanach. 'Britain's Queen of Song' heads the list, of course, but she is now joined by 'Britain's King of 'Cellists,' who before his accession was plain Mr. W. H. Squire. But one king on his wild lone will soon be of little account: they are now being made by the bunch, one such bunch having recently descended on us from America in 'The Four Harmony Kings.' I have heard their Majesties several times per wireless, and found myself wishing this country had an Ellis Island on which such visitors could be detained and made to show cause why they should not be given a return ticket for immediate use. (Odd, when you come to think of it, that Republican America should be richer in these self-conferred titles than any other country. And a glance at American musical journals reveals an astonishing partiality for such Christian names as Roy, Earl, Duke, Queena, and so forth.) Returning to royalty, we read in recent American papers that Luella Melius is a 'New Queen of Song.' And, by the way, the Four Kings mentioned above are even more resoundingly known as 'The Monarchs of Syncopation.' The title of Emperor goes begging so far. Perhaps recent happenings are against its adoption, as may also be the case with Czar and Shah. However, there are many other highly picturesque labels used across the Atlantic. Ignaz Friedman has quite a selection, being described as 'the Toreador among Pianists,' 'the Colossus of the Keyboard,' and 'a GIANT of the Pianistic World.' Curiously, the page that gives the whole set is headed 'This Unassuming Man WORKS WONDERS,' though one does not look for unassumingness in Giants, Toreadors, or Colossuses. (No; not colossi in this connection; it is too small a word.) However, he is not the only pebble on the beach, for the Chicago Herald-Examiner announces that Beryl Rubinstein is 'Giant of Piano.' And so one might go on. Thank heaven that a certain elderly Pole, not without points as a pianist, still prefers to be billed as Mister Paderewski.

The enterprise of the press agent is well backed up by opulence of phrase and flowery diction on the part of critics. Thus Vincente Ballester is a 'golden-voiced baritone'; Julia Claussen's voice struck one critic as being 'like soft, warm velvet,' while to one of his colleagues it was 'fresh and golden like some great throbbing 'cello'; a third says it 'kept its floaty and fluffy quality throughout,' and another tells us that 'at times she subdued her mighty organ to the purling of a brook.' (There is also a reference to her 'handsome appearance' and to the fact that 'the stage was banked with flowers.') Queena Mario, we learn, 'sings as though she had a thrush in her throat'; a baritone has a voice as 'sure-winged as an eagle's flight'; a conductor is a 'star of the first magnitude . . . 20,000 enthralled as master wields baton . . . this man out of whom flames the power of a Titan,' et cætera.

The chief point made by one Chicago critic is that 'Rosa Raisa sang one high B flat that alone was worth the price of admission.' It must be remembered, however, that the writer paid no price for admission, and so is hardly a fair judge. We may be sure that if he had paid a couple of dollars, and Rosa had limited her performance to that top B flat, he would have wanted his money back no less than his fellow victims.

Here is another example of absurd exaggeration:

> Never has an audience heard notes more crystal clear; never witnessed a more discerning force that gave the interpretation of the Mozart Concerto in A its poetic rendering.

What, never? A critic who remembered that the Concerto has been heard by many hundreds—perhaps thousands—of audiences during the past century and a half, would hesitate before writing such a sweeping absurdity. And here is a specimen of wildly-boastful advertisement—one of many that might be quoted. It comes from a Perth (West Australia) paper:

> MARVELLOUS MERLE ROBERTSON: SUCCESSOR TO CARREÑO
>
> The greatest Pianist To-day. No Pianist of the Day has received more remarkable criticism. The Headline writers of the daily newspapers throughout the world have vied with each other in attempting in telling form the sensational successes achieved by Merle Robertson.

One result of the critical style sampled above is inevitable: superlatives thus lavishly used soon lose their effect, and what will the critic do then? There is thus a good deal to be said for the comparative reserve that prevails on this side of the water. The press agent of Tito Schipa unwittingly hit on a truth when to a page of extracts from frenzied critics he adds:

> They Say Such Things As These—And Still There's A Something in The Magic Voice and Art of SCHIPA > Beyond all Analysis—that Cannot be Described.

Exactly; the dictum applies to all fine performance, and the weakness of so much present-day critical writing is that it attempts the impossible and slops over badly in the effort.

Just as I am writing this comes the first of the 1926 seedsmen's catalogues. There are few more delightful trade publications than these lists, with their vivid pictures, not only of flowers, but of the hardly less picturesque beet, broad bean, borecole, and dozens of other things that make a good kitchen garden an ideal place for pottering, pipe in mouth. But I mention the catalogues here because you will find that the seedsman has much in common with the press agent. Ordinary expressions of praise are not enough, and both alike draw heavily on royal and other titles. Similarly, just as there is a Colossus among the pianists, so there is a Majestic among the potatoes, and the title is hardly more absurd in the case of the potato than of the pianist—for though a potato be rich in all the good qualities we demand of it, it cannot be called majestic. On the other hand, the naming of a well-known species as 'Great Scot' was a happy touch; this particular murphy comes from the right side of the Tweed, and the title suggests also the delighted exclamation of the beholder on seeing a potato which the catalogue calls 'very handsome, of great repute, round, of somewhat reddish skin, and very prolific'—a description which might fit a successful tenor as well as a prize tuber. However, the vegetable over which the seed merchant really lets himself go is the pea. The word 'grand' appears over and over again. Thus, 'a grand old favourite'; 'scores heavily; the flavour is exceptional and is reminiscent of the grand old "Ne Plus Ultra" at its best.' Having given 'grand' a good innings, the catalogue speaks of 'a noble pea,' and even more incongruously of 'a magnificent dwarf.' Still, there is some excuse, for with over fifty varieties to praise how can an urgent salesman do other than exhaust superlatives? All the fifty are wonderful, like all the singers and players acclaimed in the American journals. Whence, then, come those flavourless green bullets that afflict the dyspeptic? And those singers that bellow and shriek, and pianists that bang and thump? 'Mother,' said a youngster after a walk round a graveyard reading the tombstone inscriptions, 'where do they bury all the bad people?'

I hope I shall not appear to undervalue the abilities of the brilliant folk whose advertisements are quoted above. Much as some of us may dislike the star system with its barefaced boosting, its limitations on the repertory side, and its frank commercialism, we must not overlook the fact that the real tip-toppers have achieved their position only after very hard work. Nor should we forget that an even greater strain sometimes accompanies the effort to maintain the position so hardly won. Think of the nervous ordeal of almost daily public appearances; of the weary travelling; of a life spent largely in hotels; of the need of being always up to concert pitch whatever one's physical condition; and worst of all, perhaps, the jealousies, squabblings, and petty annoyances, and the difficulty of maintaining a fair and generous attitude towards fellow artists in the same line. There is a world of significance in the anecdote that went the rounds a year or two ago concerning two stars—a pianist and a violinist. I forget their names, so we will call them respectively A and B. They met at a violin recital given by a third star. A packed house was applauding wildly, and the player was excelling himself. 'Phew!' says B to A, 'it's getting uncomfortably hot in here!' 'Not for pianists,' replied A.

Let us then give the stars their due, both in admiration and sympathy. At the same time we may venture to suggest to them that less flamboyant methods of publicity would do them no harm financially, and would regain for them much of the respect they have lost among musicians. Do they really imagine that the assumption of such titles as 'Queen of Song,' or 'Colossus of the Keyboard,' is of any value from the box-office point of view? It is more likely to be a drawback, for there are not a few of us who, resenting the dragging down of the musical profession by such methods of advertising, resolutely stay away from recitals given by self-styled 'Kings' and 'Queens.' No other branch of art is degraded in this way. We do not find Sybil Thorndike announced as 'Britain's Queen of Tragedy,' or Seymour Hicks as 'England's Comedy King.' They would gain nothing in appreciation from such announcements, and they would certainly lose a good deal of prestige. There are thousands of musicians no less jealous than painters and actors for the honour of their profession, and I suggest to Dame Clara Butt, that having set a bad example by adopting the title 'Britain's Queen of Song,' she should now set a good one, and at the same time increase her prestige among musicians, by dropping it.

Mention was made above of the limited repertory of stars. Sometimes it is bad as well as limited, and in this connection one cannot refrain from commenting on some recent utterances of Dame Nellie Melba. Her farewell tour has been well boosted, chiefly by means of interviews. In all of them Dame Nellie has attacked the taste of provincial audiences, thus:

> Do you know that in the provinces musical taste has not developed at all in the last forty years? London has made great strides. I think that Manchester and Liverpool, thanks to Hallé and the orchestral concerts, are rather in advance of the others; and Glasgow has made good progress, too. But in the provinces generally they won't learn anything new. They cannot get away from Tosti's 'Good-bye,' 'Down in the Forest,' and that awful song, the 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust.' It is sad.

And she says the same thing in her recently published 'Melodies and Memories.' But who has had a bigger share in creating the vogue of these songs than the Dame herself? I turn up the Musical Times of June, 1921, and find quoted an interview from the Daily Mail (which at that time was campaigning on behalf of her 'Au Revoir Concert'). Therein she says that she 'loves an English audience as much as it loves her. To appeals for their favourite songs she is never deaf.' What were the 'favourite' songs she gave them so readily? I have not the complete programme, but from a newspaper report I find that at the 'Au Revoir Concert' at the Albert Hall she sang the 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust,' Tosti's 'Good-bye,' and 'By the Waters of Minnetonka,' the last-named being a song which, judging from the sample of text and music quoted in the Musical Times of June, 1921, is surely one of the world's very worst. As these songs were deemed good enough for London in 1921, we may be sure they were not too bad for the provinces at that time. In the face of these facts, the Dame's lament over public taste is the sheerest humbug. If thirty years ago she had realised the responsibilities of her position as one of the most gifted and popular of singers, she could have done a great work for music. Able to count on halls crowded with devotees ready to eat out of her hand, she could have popularised hundreds of fine songs. Instead she took the easy line and popularised a handful of bad ones. And now she says 'It is sad.' True; but the cause for sadness is other than the one she has in mind. However, better late than never. The Dame thinks it is time her audiences were weaned from 'Good-bye' and the 'Jewel Song'; and her farewell tour will give her a chance of starting the process at once. Will she take the strong line, and, for the first time in her career, be 'deaf to appeals for their favourite songs'? As this 'farewell tour' is not the first of a series, but a really truly farewell, it is the Dame's last chance. What will she do with it?

Not much, it seems, for at her concert at Glasgow a few days ago Tosti's 'Good-bye' was forthcoming as usual. It is sad.

RAVEL'S HARMONY

By Alfredo Casella

In order effectively to 'place' Ravel as a harmonist, it must not be forgotten that his musical studies were carried on between the years 1890 and 1902, i.e., during a period that was extremely chaotic and unsettled. Wagner was then at the height of his fame, exercising a proud autocracy over three-quarters of the world. Some day, in all probability, there will be found to exist a certain analogy between the ravages caused by the genius of Michael Angelo and those caused by that of Wagner. At all events, it is henceforth manifest that Wagner was mainly responsible for the profound and lamentable crisis in the theatrical world, from which we are only now painfully beginning to emerge. We are also indebted to him for another crisis, equally grave, that through which harmony has passed from the time of 'Parsifal' down to yesterday. Indeed, vertical rhetoric, i.e., the abuse of harmony and chords, as opposed to the freedom of counterpoint, is the fundamental evil that assails the entire music of this period, and was destined finally to lead to the phenomenon of Schönberg—utter absence of tonality. Both in France and in Italy there is now an entire generation of new musicians who are able to look upon music as purely devoid of tone, as young painters nowadays regard the defunct 'cubism.'

Nevertheless, while the good sense of the Latin race has preserved certain schools from the harmonic excesses of Vienna (which, indeed, were necessary and salutary in view of the final clarification), it must yet be admitted that no European musician, during the period extending from 1880 to 1920, has succeeded in escaping from the great 'harmonic nightmare,' and that a feverish embellishment of harmony has been the main technical preoccupation of these musicians.

Consequently, Ravel could not evade the law of his time. Indeed, we note that his music is characterised by harmonic refinement of extreme preciosity and of absolute perfection.

We have now to consider what are the more or less immediate origins of this harmony, and afterwards of what it consists essentially.

When the amazing personality of Maurice Ravel began to express itself, many critics thought it right to dispute the existence in him of any originality at all, and doubtless there are certain trustworthy memoranda still extant consisting of violent articles in which one of the most famous of Parisian critics eloquently maintained that Ravel plagiarised Debussy. A like mishap has since befallen other musicians; there are some even now whom criticism for long years has delighted in depicting as honourable successors of Stravinsky or of Schönberg, though manifestly quite different from them.

Nevertheless there is no error—or even stupidity—that does not contain at least some element of truth. And in the Debussy-Ravel affair we can now readily discern that while the personalities of both musicians are fundamentally divergent, and quite as impossible to confuse as those of Schumann and Mendelssohn, it is nevertheless evident that both had identical predilections as regards the past. And the essential trait that unites the two creators is that they altogether repudiated the tiresome and ridiculous burden of a philosophico-musical Wagnerism, and, instead, returned to a more Latin conception of music. Both revered Mozart and Chopin; they were ardent admirers of the Russian influence and faithful friends of Chabrier. In short, they remained stubbornly opposed to the post-Wagnerian Franckist movement, which, by reason of its Germanic and Flemish origins, was at the very antipodes to their aspirations, so French in their clarity.

Still, though undoubtedly Debussy and Ravel have one and the same ancestral spirituality, we must not lose sight of the immediate influences which largely contributed to the ultimate formation of their personalities. Whereas the indolent and voluptuous muse of Massenet manifestly entrances Debussy in his youth (see 'L'Enfant Prodigue,' 'Printemps,' &c.), the neo-classic spirit of Camille Saint-Saëns—also emphatically French—and of his disciple, Gabriel Fauré, who was Ravel's master, finally and irrevocably marks out the personality of the future author of 'Ma Mère l'Oye.' The result is that the musician, whom some regarded at most as a pale reflection of Debussy, appears before us to-day as diametrically opposed to his proud rival. Whereas Debussy created—and at the same time exhausted—musical impressionism, Ravel remained faithful to classic structures, renewing and rejuvenating them. So profound is the abyss that separates the two creators.

One day Ravel confessed to me: 'What a melodist I have become!' And indeed he is far more than a polyphonist, he is both a delightful 'monodist' and an unrivalled harmonist. Not that, on occasion, he cannot also add melody to melody. As a rule, however, his supple lyricism is unsuitable to polymelodic dullness, and then, like Mozart, Scarlatti, or Chopin, all he requires is a melodic line, of rich and subtle harmony, that is also both natural and light.

There is no harmonic language, however complex, that cannot be synthesised in a few fundamental concepts.

Jean Marnold once said that the only musical difference between romanticism and the 18th century dwindled down to a single chord: the dominant major ninth  There is much truth in this, even though it seems to reduce a century of music to a purely technical problem. Assuredly the chord of the major ninth, introduced by Weber, gave a totally different complexion to the entire musical language of the 19th century. Nor is it less evident that the exploitation of this chord reaches its culminating point in Debussy, and afterwards rapidly dies away.

Still, in conformity with the law of human evolution, which governs the formation of successive cycles, a study of the 19th century shows us, along with the magnificent expansion of the chord of the major ninth in Wagner and Debussy, the gradual elaboration of the following harmonic concept, i.e., of the eleventh harmonic  the first traces of which are actually to be seen in Mozart.

Truth to tell, we find in Debussy frequent allusions to this harmonic. Nevertheless, Debussy still remains the exponent of the major ninth. And it is only in Ravel that the new chord is finally used in a constant, conscious, and spontaneous manner—for while his early works still contain such rare examples of the major ninth as:

Ex. 1.

(Jeux d'eau, 1901)

from the period of the magnificent String Quartet (1902-03) we meet with the first unequivocal use he makes of the eleventh harmonic:

Ex. 2.

—so personal even then and so characteristic of the harmonic style of Ravel.

But the exploitation of the eleventh harmonic comes within the category of 'physical' facts, seeing that it is based on the phenomenon of natural resonance. There is also another very important aspect of this question of harmony: the great use which Ravel makes of the appoggiatura, and of its exceptional resolutions.

Ravel's early detractors disdainfully referred to his music as le culte de la note à côté. There is much truth in this also. Ravel's marvellous sensibility, eager to create a special sound language of its own, was compelled to make him adopt and regularly employ a certain number of harmonic aggregations which his predecessors had scarcely dared to consider.

Apropos of Ravel, much has been said of unresolved appoggiature, thus exaggerating the importance of this artifice in his music. In most cases the appoggiature of this harmony are resolved upon other appoggiature. Genuine unresolved appoggiature, however, are few in number.

Of Ravel's favourite appoggiatura chords, the most important are  which dates back to the 18th century ; and

The former has supplied Ravel with splendid possibilities, as in the passage :

Ex. 3.

(Daphnis et Chloé)

The latter forms the basis of a host of valuable examples, one of which is the following :

Ex. 4.

Ravel is particularly fond of the chord  which he has used very frequently :

Ex. 5.

and which he evidently borrowed from Chopin :

Ex. 6.

Amongst other harmonic artifices we are constantly finding, must be quoted the pedals, principally inverted, which Ravel utilised in masterly style. I mention only the 'Gibet,' entirely built up round an inverted pedal for forty-eight bars, and containing this amazing passage :

Ex. 7.

The 'Alborada del gracioso' offers us another example :

Ex. 8

We may also call to mind the Epilogue in the 'Valses nobles et sentimentales,' which ends with a marvellously rich tonic pedal, thirty-four bars long.

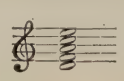
In such opulent harmony we are continually finding a chromatic succession of major seconds, the combination of which with other elements has suggested a host of savoury details, such as :

Ex. 9.

In 'Scarbo,' the same artifice is carried to such pianistic virtuosity as the following :

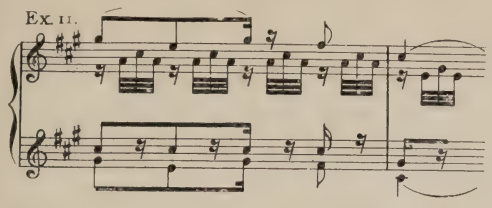
Ex. 10.

Here is a chord frequently exploited by Ravel :



It is interesting to note that in certain cases like :

Ex. 11.



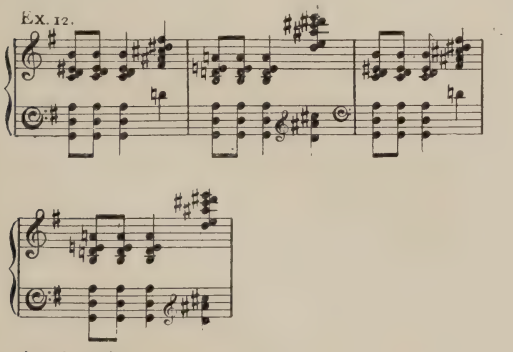
the use of this chord makes us momentarily connect Ravel with Puccini. A mere chance, doubtless, though amusing enough, considering how slight the resemblance between the two musicians.

Apart from the traditional major and minor scales, Ravel fairly often uses the Greek scales—the Dorian, the Hypo-dorian, and sometimes also the Phrygian. In this he approaches Debussy, doubtless because, like the author of 'Pelléas,' he had come strongly under the Russo-Byzantine influence. His polymodality, however, is essentially different from Debussy's in that it never employs the hexaphonic scale (in whole-tones) ; and it is this that clearly distinguishes Ravel not only from Debussy, but also from d'Indy and from Dukas, musicians who have made considerable use of this scale, which at one time was considered so opulent and was subsequently found to be so deficient.

The preceding may suffice to show how profoundly classic is this music which at first appeared to be so revolutionary. The harmony of Ravel is deeply rooted in tradition. It contains no striving whatsoever after atonality, nor does it even attain to polytonality. Its power consists mainly in the fact that, far from being a perilous and empirical leap into the unknown, it is nothing else than a splendid embellishment, an amazing ornamental 'variation' brought to the edifice of high tradition by a fascinating craftsman, an artist of genius.

The following bars, which have caused so much discussion in the past :

Ex. 12.



are simply this :

Ex. 13.

I have said nothing at all of harmonic evolution in the case of Ravel. Ever since he concluded his studies, this musician has been in possession of so miraculously perfect a technique that, as happened to Bach, Mozart, or Chopin, the perfection of the instrument inevitably assigns limits to the possibilities of evolution. All the same, it would be a profound error to imagine that so refined and subtle an art does not have an adequate re-awakening. And indeed we find that harmony, starting with 'Jeux d'Eau' (1901), gradually reaches a maximum of elaboration in 'Daphnis et Chloé' (1910). Then a new style appears in the Trio (1914), and more than ever in the 'Tombeau de Couperin' (1916-17). In this style, without repudiating the past, Ravel seems bent on simplification ; it is then that his harmony becomes less overburdened. The sense of tonality also tends towards modification along the line of a synthetic permeation of divers scales (such as the charming début of the Forlane in the 'Tombeau de Couperin'). And this tendency towards simplification is continued in the 'Valse' for orchestra, and in the 'Duo' for 'cello and violin.

Ravel has been dubbed both scolastique by certain youthful compatriots of his, and tarabiscoté by other fretful minds. There is much truth in both definitions. Still, it is precisely because he succeeded in effecting a wonderful equilibrium between sane tradition and an ardent thirst after novelty, that he has proved himself the greatest musician in France since the death of Debussy.

At all events, only one thing in art is of importance : that the creator attain to that mysterious region where spirit and matter are one, where it becomes impossible to dissociate phantasy from technique, because they are so intimately united. And it is henceforth evident that Ravel belongs to that small band of the elect to whom it has been given to contemplate the serene visage of ultimate perfection.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

OPERA RECORDS

I.—LONDON, PARIS, AND DRESDEN

BY WAKELING W. DRY

Two interesting centuries of performances were reached during the last season at Covent Garden in the case of 'Tristan and Isolda' and 'The Mastersingers.' This reminds us that in the case of the more popular operas the number of times each has been performed is growing very large.

It is interesting to recall that Wagner began his masterpiece 'Tristan and Isolda' in 1855, and three years later had completed the first Act. He finished it at Lucerne, after having been robbed of a sum the publishers, Breitkopf & Härtel, advanced to him on account of royalties. It is said that £50 was the price paid for the copyright of this immortal work. 'Tristan' waited six years after its completion before it saw the footlights, and was first played under von Bülow at Munich, in 1865, with Schorr von Carolsfeld and his wife as the Tristan and the Isolda. It was first seen in London, in 1882, at a season of opera in German—then quite a new departure which Sir Augustus Harris organized and Richter conducted—Winkelmann being the Tristan and Rosa Sucher the Isolda. Later that same year these two went to Bayreuth when it first entered the Festival scheme. These artists were also the Walther and Eva in the initial performance of 'The Mastersingers,' which was also first done here during the same Drury Lane season. Neither opera seemed to attain much success.

In the case of others of the more familiar operas, 'Faust' reached its three-hundredth performance at Covent Garden on May 10, 1906, when it was conducted by Messager, with Madame Donalda as Margaret, Altchewski as Faust, and Journet as Mephisto. It was first seen in London at the old Her Majesty's, in the Haymarket, on June 11, 1863, and was given at Covent Garden the following month. Later on it was done in an English version by the critic Chorley ; and for Santley, who was the Valentine, Gounod consented much against his custom to add a song, 'E'en the bravest heart may swell,' the melody of which he adapted from a phrase in the Overture, of which no further use was made in the score. Another opera which has three hundred performances to its credit is 'Don Giovanni,' which it reached on July 15, 1904, when Polacco conducted.

Puccini's delightful and very characteristic 'La Bohême' registered a hundred and fifty performances to June, 1923, when Melba and the famous Scottish tenor Joseph Hislop sang. Contrary to usual custom this opera was introduced in English, at Covent Garden, in 1897, the Carl Rosa Company having been first in the field with a performance at Manchester in 1895, for which the composer came to England.

'Aïda'—perhaps the one and only satisfactory work of art ever written to order on a given subject—reached its hundredth time in 1912, when Emmy Destinn and Franz were the principals. The first production comprised a memorable cast with Madame Patti and Nicolini.

Other centuries that have been passed are 'Lohengrin,' in 1899, when Jean de Reszke was the Swan-knight ; 'Cavalleria Rusticana' (first seen at the Shaftesbury Theatre in 1891), on December 28, 1907, when Grace Nicholl was the Santuzza. Then again we had the hundredth time of 'Madame Butterfly' on November 29, 1919, when Jean Brola was the Butterfly and Webster Millar the Pinkerton. This opera of Puccini's was first produced in 1905, with Emmy Destinn and Caruso in the two chief rôles. Puccini was at Covent Garden for the first night, but he would not conduct. Afterwards he entertained the artists, conductor, and music critics to supper at the Savoy. Another 'hundredth' opera is the 'Ballo in Maschera' of Verdi.

The performances of Bizet's tuneful masterpiece 'Carmen' do not appear to have been recorded ; but its total must be well over the hundred. Like 'Faust,' it was first seen in England at the old Her Majesty's, in 1878, when Minnie Hauk created the title-rôle.

The recent revival of 'The Beggar's Opera'—a wonderful thing after its previous four years' 'innings'—recalls the fact that this was the second piece to be given at the 'Theatre in the Convent Garden' after Congreve's comedy 'The Way of the World.' The classic house was opened with this piece by Rich, a famous Harlequin, in 1732, and has been twice burnt to the ground, new buildings being erected in 1809 and 1858. The Royal Italian Opera, as it was originally called, was formed in 1847.

In the case of Paris, the particulars which the Administrator has kindly looked up for me are somewhat meagre, but nevertheless interesting. The ever-popular 'Faust' reached the high record of 1,717 performances on July 30, 1925. It was first produced at the Théâtre Lyrique in March, 1859, when the original exponents of the chief rôles were M. Barbot (Faust), Madame Carvalho (Marguerite), and M. Brebenqué (Mephisto). In 1869 it was played at the old Opera House in the Rue Lepelletier, when the principals were M. Colin (Faust), M. Faure (Mephisto) and the famous Nilsson as Marguerite.

On the occasion of its five-hundredth time at the Grand Opéra, on November 4, 1878, a memorable cast included the brothers de Reszke—Jean being the Faust and Edouard the Mephisto—with Madame Escolais as the Marguerite.

'Tannhäuser' reached its two-hundred-and-forty-third time on December 15, 1913, and has not been given since. On its first production at Paris, on November 13, 1861, Niemann sang the title-rôle, with Madame Sax as the Elisabeth and Madame Tedesco as the Venus. It will be recalled that for the Paris production Wagner altered the Overture, making it continue with the 'Venusberg' music until the rising of the curtain. The first scene was also altered and amplified. Also it is somewhat curious to recall that 'Lohengrin' did not reach Paris till forty-four years after its original production at Weimar in 1850.

Dresden has a State opera-house worthy of this fine city, and until recent years there was quite a considerable colony of English residents here. Incidentally, it was the place some few years ago of a particularly excellent photographic exhibition. From the courteous Intendent I have some particulars of the numbers of certain works in the répertoire, and, as may be expected, the Wagner dramas head the list.

It is interesting to note that 'Tristan and Isolda' was first produced, six years after it was written, at Dresden, under von Bülow, in 1865. 'Tannhäuser' heads the list with six hundred performances to June, 1925, when Hermann Kutzschbach conducted. The title-rôle was sung by Kurt Taucher and the Elisabeth was Meta Seinemeyer—artists whose names and achievements will not be very familiar over here. 'Lohengrin' comes next with five hundred performances, which were reached in October, 1923, the title-rôle on that occasion being sung by Fritz Vogelstrom to the Elsa of Elisa Stünzer. A hundred less is the record of 'The Flying Dutchman' in June, 1925, the Daland being Adolf Schoepflin, and the Senta, Meta Seinemeyer.

The next most popular work is 'Aïda,' which reached the total of two hundred in May, 1925 ; Meta Seinemeyer being the Slave-girl, with Pattiera as Radames, Robert Burg the Amonasro, and Robert Bussell the King.

I would here express my thanks to M. l'Administrateur of the Paris Opéra for his kindness in looking out the particulars as to the numbers of performances ; and also to my friend of the old days, Mr. Richard Northcott, who has kindly done the same for me in regard to the Covent Garden records. I am hoping to get the particulars of performances from New York, Milan, and Berlin, and these will form the subject of a second article.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON 'HORN CHORDS: AN ACOUSTICAL PROBLEM'

By W. F. H. Blandford

Prof. Percival Kirby's article* on this subject treats of an obscure matter that emerges into print once or twice in a generation without ever (so far as I know) having received so careful an analysis as that to which he subjects it. The trick of producing chords from the horn finds no place in serious music. None the less it is of historical interest, both in connection with the enigma set by Weber that Prof. Kirby discusses, and as having provided one musician with a reputation and a source of profit.

* Musical Times, September, 1925.

Moreover, it affords an excellent illustration of Helmholtz's theory of resultant tones, and bears, as the article indicates, some relationship to a rather subtle problem of musical acoustics and æsthetics — the influence on tone-colour of the combination tones of two or more horns or other instruments playing in just temperament. The warmth and fullness that result from the presence of these tones are ordinarily diminished when the transposing valve-horn is used for the performance of old music, for which the horns were, and should be, in just temperament ; in fact 'the pile is scraped off the velvet,' as the late Sir Charles Stanford said. The valve-horn, like the valve-trumpet and their congeners, cannot play a scale in equal temperament, owing to the nature of the harmonic series from which the notes are derived; but it can be induced, by a little properly applied knowledge, to play the diatonic scale in absolutely just temperament in many of the keys used in old music, without any correction by lip or hand, except as regards two or three low notes that involve the use of more than one valve. Thus the F horn can play the untempered diatonic scale from upwards without a single false interval in either the dominant or subdominant, though it cannot go from one to the other without an alteration to the valve-slides, which can be made empirically in a few seconds. In the tonic, one note must be incorrect in pitch—I leave it to the curious to discover which. A few minutes should suffice to teach a capable and willing quartet to play, say, the introduction to the Overture to 'Der Freischütz' in just temperament with all the colour that the combination tones of the old natural horn would have given. There is, in fact, no easier way of illustrating the harmonies of just intonation ; for a quartet of strings or trombones has more scope for error.

But to return to chord production—the trick is old, and may go back to the earliest days of the instrument. For how otherwise, unless by assuming some miraculous endowment, are we to explain the talent of Joachim Frederick Creta, who in 1729 was announced at a concert in London 'to blow the first and second treble on two French horns in the same manner as is usually done by two performers'? (Biog. Dic. Mus., London, 1824). If in fact his method were different, it died with him, to the great loss of those conductors who have to study economy.

Creta belonged to the dark ages, but there is evidence that chord-playing was employed by Punto and others before the close of the 18th century. Dauprat, in his 'Méthode,' says that Punto could perform this trick much better than all who had since attempted it, but that he ridiculed and made light of it. He adds that the practice is repugnant to serious artists and men of taste, and should be left to charlatans and the incompetent (obviously a hit at Vivier, whose star was in the ascendant).

In spite of his ridicule, Punto, whose ideals were not always of the highest, did not scruple to introduce chords at his public performances, and they are mentioned with admiration in a report of the concert he gave at Prague in 1801 and in other appreciations of his skill.

In 1806, three years after Punto's death, Weber composed his Concertino for performance by his friend C. Dautrevaux, who combined the offices of horn-player to, and clerk to the chancery of, the Duke of Würtemberg, at Carlsruhe. The work was then shelved until 1815, when Weber revised it completely (as he says in a foot-note on the MS.) for the benefit of Rauch, a young Munich player who had taken his fancy (F. W. Jähns, 'C. M. von Weber in seinen Werken,' Berlin, 1871, pp. 200-1). The earlier version is lost, and it is impossible to say whether the chords appeared in it or not.

No printed score existed when Jähns compiled his catalogue, nor have I ever seen one. The Concertino was published in orchestral parts only—first, by Peters, of Leipsic, and afterwards by Richault, of Paris, a set of whose parts I possess. It has also appeared with a pianoforte arrangement of the accompaniment by H. Kling (B. & H.). Althought praised by the critics on its appearance, it is purely a display piece, written to an obsolete formula, and hardly in accordance with modern taste. It is saved from oblivion by the fact that it affords for study an excellent specimen of bravura writing for the hand-horn, and is also the oyster containing the pearl that Prof. Kirby has displayed, to which I shall refer farther on.

Chord-playing is inseparably associated with the name of Eugène Léon Vivier (1821-1900), who, coming somewhat appropriately from Ajaccio, succeeded in a short time by a study of this accomplishment, a little horn-playing, boundless audacity and assurance, and a unique genius for mystification and practical joking, in conquering Paris, London, and other capitals as a lion of the first rank. He seems to have been at best but a mediocre player, although in his early days he managed to obtain posts at the Théâtre des Italiens and Opéra, which he failed to hold. An attempt made two years ago to extract from that mine of information, M. Brémond, some authentic information about his competence in legitimate horn-playing, elicited only the statement that he was le roi des bouffons, which precisely describes him. Perhaps his greatest feat of all was that of having dug himself into all the musical biographies and books of reference as a 'celebrated horn-player'; celebrated he certainly was, though hardly in the sense that usually qualifies for admission, and common fairness demands that a similar niche should be found therein for Grock.

The first practical directions for the production of these sounds are claimed by Henri Kling (1842-1918) —a French player, who for many years was professor at the Geneva Conservatoire—to be those given in his 'Méthode pour le Cor' (B. & H.) ; but there is no ready means of telling whether the first edition of this work or that of Franz's 'Waldhorn-Schule' (1880) is the earlier.

Kling also published an article, 'Le Cor de Chasse' (Riv. Mus. Ital., Turin, 1911, pp. 95-136), the fourth section of which is devoted to this subject. He repeats his instructions, and also discusses the Weber passage, quoting the observations thereon of Jähns (op. cit.) and E. d'Harcourt ('La Musique actuelle en Allemagne et Autriche-Hongrie,' Paris, c. 1908, pp. 64-65). His instructions throw no light on the acoustics and need not be set out. The following is a condensed list of the triads he gives, omitting duplicates and mere chromatic progressions :

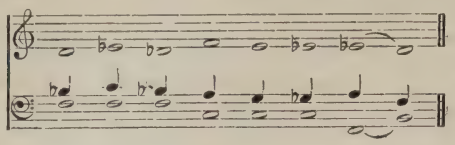
Ex. 1.



To facilitate comparison, the chords are transposed into real sounds, and Prof. Kirby's notation is used. The semibreves are the generators, the lower being the horn, the upper the voice notes ; the crotchets are the differential tones. Neither Kling nor Franz indicates the summational tones.

I can recall one work only, other than Weber's Concertino, in which horn-chords appear, namely, J. R. Lewy's 'Douze Etudes pour le Cor,' &c. (Musical Times, 1922, October, p. 694). The second of these portentously difficult Studies ends as follows :

Ex. 2. Horn in F.

I have no idea how this is intended to be played—possibly the high note is intended to be produced by a sort of falsetto 'jodel' ; but in that case the middle note ought not to be present.

The conclusion of the fourth Study is this :

Ex. 3. Horn in F.

These chords can be, and I have heard them, played. They do not, of course, represent every note which the generators evoke.

There is no connection between the power of producing chords and true skill in horn-playing. Dauprat says that beginners who are shown the trick pick it up almost at once ; and Mr. H. F. Thornton, professor of the horn at Kneller Hall, informs me that he has not at present a single chord-player among his pupils, one or two of whom are very good, and that anyone who acquires the knack is usually far from being the best player. But some excellent players can do it, and I understand that that distinguished artist, Mr. Aubrey Brain, is among their number.

The best exponent I have heard is a former pupil of Mr. Thornton's, Mr. J. Hitch, a remarkable horn-player with exceptional command of the highest register, who left Kneller Hall for India about two years ago. Given suitably resonant surroundings—for these chords are of small intensity—the effect he produced by passages of changing harmonies was very pleasing, somewhat resembling the chords produced by a variety of humming-top, well-known in nurseries, which change at any interruption to the uniformity of spin.

Another player who produces chords easily is Mr. A. J. Cursue, also a former Kneller Hall pupil, who has kindly helped me by demonstrations that have left me free to observe them unhampered by the trouble of production. Like many who have attempted them, I find that their production is liable to impose a disagreeable and presumably injurious strain on the laryngeal muscles ; and unless they can be easily obtained, they are best left alone.

Prof. Kirby's explanation, being based on physical laws confirmed by experiment, is conclusive. It must not, however, be thought that analysis can always be made by ear alone as readily as he would lead one to suppose. The ear receives many impressions that the mind is not accustomed, without special training, to resolve, but which, subconsciously perceived, produce tone-colour ; and this is as true of combination tones as of simple overtones. With these chords the summational tones are more elusive than the differential, and have usually been overlooked. Vivier is recorded to have produced chords of 'two, three, and even four notes' ; but most persons make no claim to have heard more than three, which is the largest number recorded of Punto. Kling, indeed, goes so far as to say that a four-note chord is impossible in any case—in which he is clearly wrong.

I have found, with chords produced by myself, that things do not always go according to plan. If I produce Prof. Kirby's first chord, singing middle C against the F below, I do not always hear the summational note with certainty, but I hear the differential and also the octave above the horn note. This is, of course, present in any case as an overtone, but it is distinctly strengthened by the addition of the voice note. But if I lower the pitch of the generators by two or three semitones, then I easily hear the summational tone.

Kling correctly gives the differentials in his list of triads except in the first two, where they are an octave too high, and the third, where it is a minor ninth too high ; Franz also gives the first of these in the same form as Kling. I find I sometimes produce this chord in the form he gives it, although the resultant has a ratio 4 to generators in the ratio 3 : 5. When this anomalous note is strong, the true combination tones are weak ; it may perhaps originate as the differential of the first overtone of the horn and voice notes and is, I think, associated with some forcing of the generators. While I am ready to be convinced, by the use of resonators or otherwise, that this note is not really existent and is merely the product of an auditory hallucination, it has also proved audible to others, and it brings Kling's incomplete version into line. In any case, writing a major sixth and its combination tones as a chord of the six-four, even if acoustically wrong, fairly represents its effect on most listeners, who do not as a rule trouble about analysis ; and that is probably all that Franz and Kling aimed at.

The question when or how combination tones manage to become so pronounced as to emerge from subconsciousness and become distinguishable without special attention is difficult, and I do not know whether it has been fully considered. Although it does not concern horn-playing, it may be of interest to mention the circumstances—before I had even heard of the existence of such tones—when they first thrust themselves on my attention. When a youth, I heard a drawing-room duet sung by sisters who possessed trained and powerful voices with the similarity of quality and style to be expected from their relationship—all conditions favourable to the production of combination tones. Suddenly I became aware that the vocalists were accompanied by a powerful and unearthly baritone voice which, articulating no words and following no recognised scale or melodic line, blended throughout in perfect accord. So overwhelming was the impression that the duet resolved itself into a Resultant solo, with accompaniment for two female voices. I have since heard many differential tones, but never with the disturbing effect of that first occasion.

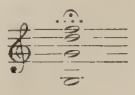
Lastly, to revert to the Weber Cadenza—Prof. Kirby's quotation of this is quite correct. In the fifth bar of the chord version in Richault's edition the lowest note appears as B in the bass instead of G in the treble clef, and has been so read by Kling. That this is due to faulty placing of the clefs is shown by its being succeeded by an F clef in the next bar.

The same edition gives the final bar as follows :



I do not understand the meaning of the four dots under the fermata, but hazard an explanation below in the light of Kling's suggested solution.

The hypothesis that Weber used an approximate notation seems to be new to print, though it was suggested to me a few years ago by Mr. T. S. Wotton, whom I have to thank for drawing my attention to Kling's paper. I am not quite convinced by it; the disposition of the bass in bars three to six does not appear haphazard, and the contra F and G are hardly suitable to serve as the foundation of horn chords.

Jähns is unhelpful, vaguely invoking acoustic laws. D'Harcourt, on the other hand, went carefully into the matter, taking the best professional advice. His suggested solution, which is impracticable, is that of playing the passage in a manner which the last bar of the cadenza, as he gives it, will indicate :

Ex. 4.

Kling, also recognising that the passage as written is impossible, puts forward an original suggestion that Weber had no intention of requiring the player to produce the chords, and that these are merely a concise indication of the harmonies to serve as the foundation of a series of arpeggios to be developed by him at pleasure. Kling follows this up by giving a page of cadenza, too long to quote, which he had expanded from the chord foundation. If he is right, may not the four dots (which he ignores) in the Richault edition be a condensed representation of four pauses over the separate notes of the chord, which are to be played in sequence and followed by appropriate ornament?

Having long viewed this perplexing passage from every possible angle, I have been gradually drawn to the conclusion that Kling's solution is the best that has been propounded. Of course, if it is correct, the whole bottom drops out of the puzzle.

Handel's 'Samson' will be performed at Westminster Central Hall on February 9, at 8.0, by the City of London Choral Union, conducted by Dr. Harold Darke.

THE RING OF WORDS

By Marjorie Gullan

It is only within the last few years that we have begun to realise that poetry is music, and that the meaning of poetry can only come through its music. That is the wonderful discovery we are making through the new art of verse-speaking, in which we boldly follow the lead of such poets as from time to time have read their own works. These men went so far as to chant their lines, holding, as they did, that the chief purpose of poetry was to delight the ear and to convey the sense by means of the sound. Any child could have told us long ago that by mere reading for 'expression' we were draining the very life-blood out of poetry. We have only to watch the movements which the infant instinctively makes to anything rhythmical, to understand why a mother croons to it in her speech as well as her song. Why is it that our nursery rhymes and jingles have such delightful associations for us to this day? It is because the words are always connected in our minds with a strong, rhythmical swing, and with movements to that rhythm :

> These enchanted words are a kind of incantation [says Mr. Greening Lamborn, speaking of poetry] and must be spoken like a charm. If you use them in an ordinary way of talking, as if you were asking the butcher about the meat, the spell will not work.

This sums up the situation. Our children when they reach school age, too often lose all the delight which formerly lay for them in 'the ring of words.' Only in their games they persistently return to the rhythmic law in spite of all suggestions, implicit or explicit, to the contrary.

But things are changing. In the last few years we have had a great awakening. We have begun to realise that in poetry, beautifully and sincerely spoken, there lies a whole field of hitherto unexplored delight and inspiration. He who reads poetry from the printed page knows it only as he who knows music merely from the printed score—in solitude—but a great art must be shared, and by as many people as possible, for its first appeal is to the emotions.

If we are to make an art of spoken poetry, if we are to set free all the music and the pattern and colour of the poet's words, we must achieve a technique worthy of such work. We must have teachers and speakers who can not only perceive these things but who can translate them through precision of speech, beauty of tone, perception of rhythm, and rich qualities of imagination and understanding. Speech must be studied, not as a science in and for itself, but as a means of capturing the magic of such words as—

> Monks of Rome, from their home,
> Where the blue sea breaks in foam.

Voice production must be learned, not merely as series of exercises for strengthening and improving the voice, but for the purpose of achieving tonal beauty in the great chapters of Job and Isaiah, and such speeches as those in 'Samson Agonistes.'

Above all, those of us who are to have a hand in the making of this art must at some time of our existence have fallen deeply in love with 'the ring of words.' We must be aware of the cunning and exquisite pattern of such lines as

> I bring fresh showers for the thirsting flowers,
> From the seas and the streams, with its mid-rhymes and end-rhymes and the rushing sound of wind and rain in those repeated s's and sh's, and the liquid flow of the long e's in 'seas' and 'streams.' We must be capable of being thrilled by the majestic proportions of the finely phrased first chapter of Genesis, and especially we must be able to pass on these delights to others.

This new study of verse-speaking, which is based upon the relation of poetry to music, will do much to help our national speech. We have for too long been cynically careless of our English language, and it is high time we began to be conscious of the need for improvement. A poetic inheritance such as ours, which includes our noble translation of the Bible and the works of Milton and Shakespeare, demands fine speech, melody of voice, and real understanding of the harmonies of sound, which lie in words fitly spoken, 'like apples of gold in pictures of silver.'

New Music

SONGS

The present batch, if we exclude some translations and a volume of parodies, contains only one song whose poem has not real literary quality. The song thus distinguished is 'Love in the woods,' lyric by Edward Teschemacher, music by Sir Landon Ronald, dedication to the author of 'If winter comes.' The song was originally published in a volume called 'Pastels,' by Enoch, and is written with skill and knowledge of effect, but it gives no impression of sincerity. Curiously, it is the same publishers who send 'Six Odd Songs' (Stanley C. West and Marjorie Broughton), a volume in which compositions of the 'Love in the woods' class are parodied. Various types of songs are dealt with (for instance, 'Reveille,' 'Remorse,' 'The Organ,' 'Dust of Egypt'), and the thing is done, if not very subtly, quite effectively. The volume can be recommended to concert-parties, for whom two or three of the songs would make a useful turn. When all six are together they become less effective, because the sudden dénouement, which is in each case reserved for the last line, ceases to be unexpected.

Alfred Hollins's 'My Mary' (Paxton) is a thoroughly old-fashioned song. The constant four-bar phrases, the stiff accentuation of the words, the harmonic style, the accompaniment of repeated chords, the top-note at the end—all are the fashions of 1890. Yet, in spite of them, the song speaks with such obvious sincerity, and such complete freedom from affectation, that it cannot fail of its effect. Like Cowper's words, the music is simple. But it has a tinge of sentimentality which Cowper avoided, and is without that distinction and sensitive, fine quality of beauty which genius gave to the poetry. But what a lot can be forgiven nowadays, when nothings are so elaborately proclaimed to music that is unaffected. Over-elaboration, perhaps, rather spoils Norman Peterkin's 'Never more, sailor' (Oxford University Press). One feels that de la Mare's atmosphere, if it had been caught at all, would have been reproduced by simpler means. No sense of vivid realisation reaches the listener, in spite of the music's efforts. Another setting of the same poet by Arthur Bliss shows that an atmosphere even more difficult can be keenly felt, and re-expressed with that certain handling that looks like complete effortlessness. 'The Hare,' a beautiful little song, ends with a suggestion of the still moonlit field which is as simply achieved as it is vivid. 'The Buckle,' attempting perhaps rather less, is equally successful. Time is showing that the impressionistic style of music requires firmer handling than any other, if it is not to be merely weak, and there is no mistaking Bliss's grip. These songs, published by Goodwin & Tabb in 1922, are now issued by Curwen, who also send Martin Shaw's 'Old Christmas,' a cheerful poem set to good, plain, unpretentious music, and 'The Toy Band,' by Sir Richard Paget. This last is a curious song, pretty clearly not the work of a trained composer, yet having verve, and realising the rhythms of Newbolt's poem. There is originality too in the idea of providing a refrain which is to be whistled, and will need a whistler of exceptional technique. The vitality of the rhythms may partly compensate for over-much repetition, and some commonplace harmony, which unfortunately creates a bad impression at the very beginning of the song.

A real 'find' is 'Yarmouth Fair,' collected by E. J. Moeran, arranged by Peter Warlock, and published by the Oxford University Press. The tune, which seems to have been composed by Mr. John Drinkwater, the singer from whom it was taken down, is a good one; and it is set with the greatest skill and humour, in a style sometimes reminiscent of Grainger, but full of Warlock's own touches. Quite exhilarating is the way the interest is kept growing until the very end, and it is no wonder that the 'birds they sang "Hooray," "Hooray,"' at the beginning of the last verse. Norman Peterkin is happy in his setting of 'The Fiddler,' a song in which the sense of sadness aroused in grown-ups by a children's dance-tune is well-conveyed, without sentimentality. Simplicity here gets its effect more certainly than the more elaborate methods adopted by this composer in a previous song. The Oxford University Press are the publishers. They also send Colin Taylor's 'The Hill,' a well-written song with a vocal line more grateful to the singer than that of many modern songs.

Three poems by Walt Whitman, set by Ralph Vaughan Williams, are the real thing at last, all the more welcome, and all the more clearly the real thing, when one compares them with the imitation. All three are built on ground basses: the first on a four-bar phrase which undergoes slight changes during the song, but is always present; the second on a five-bar phrase, reminiscent of the ground of Purcell's 'Evening Hymn'; and the last on a single bar. The second song, 'A Clear Midnight,' will appeal the most readily, for when technique reaches this point, thoughts about it no longer intrude, and the last barriers between composer and listener are down. Simple, short, easy, it is the natural impression of a fine emotion, coming from wider spaces than most of us inhabit. The first of the series, 'Nocturne,' is slower to yield its secret, for it is difficult to sing, and some of the harmonic effects are forbidding at first sight. But everything becomes plain, and the beauty rises clearly as one gets to know it better. Dissonances are the inevitable result of the meeting of two tendencies, neither of which can be sacrificed: and one can only recommend those who dislike them to see what happens if an alteration is attempted. There is no need to choose between two beautiful songs; each has its own message to give and its own means of giving it. But one cannot refrain from calling attention to the last phrase of 'Nocturne' with its beautiful F natural, achieving a world of meaning by a mere touch.

These songs, published by the Oxford University Press, are so thoroughly genuine, and though small, so plainly the work of a big mind, that they leave one little disposed to dwell on Daniel Ruyneman's 'Quatre Poèmes, extraits de Alcools, de G. Appolinaire,' or 'Con queste Parolini,' a not particularly distinguished bass aria of Pergolesi, gingered up by Stravinsky. These last items are published by Chester, who also send C. W. Orr's 'When I was one and twenty.'

From Schirmer's come six of 'Italy's most beautiful folk-songs, collected, elaborated, and arranged by Geni Sadero.' One or two of them, notably 'La donna Lombarda' and 'Serenata delle Alpi,' have good tunes, but the arrangements leave much to be desired, and one cannot help wondering whether the collector brings to her work the critical power which is as necessary as enthusiasm :

> I found this . . . in the countryside of Syracuse at dawn of a spring morning: this fragment was wafted to me on a breeze laden with a perfume of orange-blossoms.

This sort of thing does not inspire confidence. And the introduction to 'Tarantella Napoletana' is thoroughly commonplace; while 'La donna Lombarda,' as elaborated, becomes over-long and tedious, in spite of its beautiful tune, because the elaboration is so second-rate. Folk-songs can be either collected in a more or less scientific way and plainly arranged, or made the basis of more highly developed things by a composer. Cecil Sharp has shown what can be done in the one way, de Falla's seven Spanish songs reveal what can be done in the other. The present arranger seems hardly equal to either method, and it is perhaps not without significance that these Italian folk-songs should be published in the U.S.A.

Norman Peterkin's music is always sincere, and in his 'Rune of the burden of the tide' he has obviously felt keenly the atmosphere of Fiona Macleod's words. Effective use is made of a drone effect, which is never allowed to tyrannize, as short accompanimental figures sometimes do. In Vaughan Williams's 'Four poems by Fredegond Shove,' there is the absolute sureness of touch and technique which gives to the songs that look of inevitable simplicity which is the perfection of art. This certainty is no less marked in the pianoforte than in the voice part, and though Vaughan Williams has not hitherto been thought of as a pianistic composer, there is no doubt of his ability to get what effects he wants out of this as well as other instruments. If, like Brahms, he has to some extent invented a new style of pianoforte writing to suit his own needs, so much the more is his achievement. The style of the music itself is interesting. 'The New Ghost' is closely akin to 'Flos Campi.' Diatonic melodies are clothed with moving parts whose texture is varied in accordance with the demands of the poem, with cessations of movement for the purpose of underlining important moments : a method which is used with rare skill, and never fails of its effect. 'Four nights' is a striking example of the use of a single swaying figure, whose significance is doubly strong because of its first simple fitness, and its later equally apt, unforced developments. Those who dislike consecutive fifths, however, and consider the mixolydian mode an affectation, will not like this, or, indeed, any of the songs. The last number, 'The Water Mill,' carries us back to the atmosphere of 'Hugh the Drover.' Here again at the very beginning is a figure which at once perfectly sets the scene; here again the resourceful development, giving unity, but never congealing into mere cleverness, because so highly sensitive to the poem's demands, and so ready to give way to its moods. The music gives a perfect picture of the uneventful, unresting life of the English mill, with a hundred light-handed touches of detail which remind one of the loving care with which the Dutchmen painted the daily life of their people and times. The Coda, with its happy 'three-four' interpolation, and its gentle underlining of 'When the moon shines gold,' is most beautiful, and the song as a whole seems to me to stand quite clearly amongst the great songs. (Oxford Press.)

'Cryes of Olde London,' arranged for voice and pianoforte by Vincent Thomas, is published by Goodwin & Tabb. As some of the numbers are headed, 'Arranged and composed by Vincent Thomas' and one of them 'Words and music by V. T.', it is difficult to know exactly what the composer is claiming for himself. The settings are intended for the performer, rather than the student of old London, and are well adapted for their purpose, the tunes being simple and pleasant to sing, and the pianoforte parts interesting. The songs are published, so far as one can tell, in only one key, suitable for high voice, and are not always easy either for singer or pianist.

Jacques Durand's 'Serenade langoureuse' (Durand) has some charm and slight distinction on its first page, but in its middle section loses many points on account of a cheap and facile semitonal sequence-passage which is repeated and quite spoils the song as a whole. There are no lapses of this sort in Erich Anders's 'Drei Lieder' (Verlagsanstalt Deutscher Tonkünstler A.G., Berlin), but at the same time there is little of adventurousness in the music. The composer knows how to write the long, generously-curving phrases that are typical of the German song of about 1900; and the pianoforte parts with their luxurious texture admirably fit in with the general scheme, which is one of heavy colouring and opulent emotionalism. 'Standchen' obviously tries to avoid this, but its attempts to appear lighter only emphasise its essential heaviness; and the more abandoned 'Der himmel offnet' is probably the more genuinely effective. This song and 'Abend im Tal' have obvious beauty, but it is of an elaborate and heavy sort which seems out of date to musicians who want their textures clearer and less fleshy. The idiom gives the impression of having had its day: much that we all admire has been said in it, but it lacks vitality now, and compared with the living, sensitive style of Vaughan Williams, for instance, seems to have in it no possibilities of development. It is noticeable that Schönberg's early achievements in this sort of style left him unsatisfied, and probably this is what he felt about it. None of these songs are provided with English translations.

T. A.

'Schubert's Songs, translated by A. H. Fox-Strangways and Steuart Wilson' (School Edition; Oxford University Press). This little volume contains forty-one songs extracted from the set translated by these two editors. The melody only is given, and references to standard volumes for the accompaniments are supplied to each number. A capital prose synopsis is added for 'The Maid of the Mill' and 'Wintry Road' cycles. The collection should be of great service, not only to schools, but to soloists as well. There is no need to add to the praise already given to these translations. We are sorry to see, however, that in 'Hark, hark! the lark,' the editors have retained the corrupt reading 'With everything that pretty bin.' As is pointed out in Richmond Noble's 'Shakespeare's Use of Song,' the alteration of 'is' to 'bin' was an editorial 'improvement' by Hanmer, who failed to perceive that Shakespeare wrote the songs in lines double the length of those in which it appears in modern editions:

> And winking Mary-buds begin to ope their golden eyes
> With everything that pretty is, my lady sweet arise.

There is no need for a rhyme to 'begin.' It is high time that singers put this little matter right. But after all, is it a little matter? Read the lines over as Shakespeare wrote them, and compare the tripping ease of the original with the explosive 'improvement.'

H. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

The amount of chamber music that is written and published is very gratifying, and leads to the hope that sooner or later the genius of the future will be discovered in one of the countries which encourages its production. Amongst these America must certainly be reckoned. The Society for the Publication of American Music is responsible for three neatly printed Sonatas which have reached us—by composers unknown to us, and, if their names are an indication of their nationality, of different race. There is a Sonata for harp and pianoforte by Carlos Salzedo, a Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte (with alternate part for viola), by Aurelio Giorni, and a Trio for violin, 'cello, and pianoforte, by Frederick Ayres. A reading of these leaves us somewhat perplexed as to the criterion which guides the Society in its choice. Is it the modern tendency for unmitigated dissonance that prevails? If this is so, the choice of the Sonata for pianoforte and harp stands not in need of explanation. On the other hand, however, the Pianoforte and 'Cello Sonata could only obtain the approval of a commission whose tastes lean on the side of conservatism. Perhaps we have before us a trio of composers to match the Parisian half-dozen. However this may be, these American compositions have little to commend them besides industry and a certain honesty of purpose which disarms criticism.

The Sonata in G minor by Cyril Bradley Rootham (Oxford University Press) is certainly abler and more thoughtful, both in its ideas and in its technical aspects. It holds no severe problems of interpretation, nor does it ever express profound ideas, but its pleasant, picturesque atmosphere is distinctly captivating.

A philosopher proved recently that great artists are not really responsible for the things they say in a moment of lyrical exaltation. If we accept this dictum, it follows that a Lyric Sonata will exempt its composer from criticism. Ernest Austin's Lyric Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Augener) is not, however, so consistently lyrical as to discourage anyone from weighing up its qualities. It is lyrical rather than dramatic, with the friendly, unassuming ways of minor lyrical poetry, good of its kind, if unafraid to echo thoughts that have been expressed elsewhere. It consists of two movements only, and this brevity is much to be commended. Would it be pedantic, one wonders, to suggest that Mr. Austin should use in future the common form Tempo del tema in preference to Tempo della tema? Grammar, of course, is of little consequence (as long as the meaning is clear) in the directions to the performers. But this is a case where the meaning may be impaired, for della tema means something that we feel sure was not in the composer's mind.

B. V.

PIANOFORTE

Two biggish suites come from Curwen's: Norman Peterkin's 'Pagan' Suite (first award under the Publication Scheme of the Liverpool centre of the British Music Society), and Armstrong Gibbs's 'In the High Alps.' Both are difficult, but both contain numbers that are worth some hard work.

The first movement of the 'Pagan' Suite, 'Lament for Pan,' has beautiful moments, and makes good use of its material; the second, 'The Centaurs,' should be effective if its rhythms can be sufficiently enforced on the pianoforte. The last of the set is the least good, and there is a disappointing touch of the commonplace in its rather facile effects. Despite much that is good in it, the Suite as a whole leaves one with some sense of disappointment: perhaps because, with all its capability, its good ideas, and its obvious sincerity, the music somewhat lacks austerity. True that it is a 'Pagan' Suite; but this does not necessarily imply absence of austerity, and anyway, austerity is a quality that music, as such, must have, whatever its subject. One has only to look, for instance, at Debussy's 'La Soirée dans Granade' to realise this: nothing could be more sensuously beautiful; nothing more self-critical and almost self-denying in its use of effects.

With Armstrong Gibbs, on the other hand, the last movement seems to be in some ways the best. Though the composer's individuality comes out less in this pianoforte Suite than in some of his songs, yet we find here many of the qualities that have made the songs what they are. There is the same musicianly handling and craftsmanship, and the same fine sense of balance. The last movement of the Suite, 'Winter Sport,' is an effective number, in toccata style, with a middle section in waltz-rhythm, which is referred to again at the end, when it tops a well-prepared climax. The whole movement is finely modelled and interesting.

Gerrard Williams puts as sub-title to his 'Dejeuner Dansant,' also from Curwen's, the words 'Two Impertinences,' and thus rather disarms criticism. The first of the two pieces, 'Valsette brute,' however, hardly needs this, for it has real charm and is a model of clarity in arrangement and outlook. It is, moreover, one of the comparatively rare pieces of music to which one could have put the composer's name pretty certainly if it had been published anonymously. 'Raguette extra sec,' with its passages of major sevenths and its jazz rhythms, is quite amusing, but probably not amusing for very long. Whether it was worth doing or not, however, it is done well.

A similar doubt is felt in the case of Stravinsky's arrangement of Pergolesi's 'Pulcinella,' which, it will be remembered, was played by Sir Henry Wood some weeks ago. The Gavotte and Variations, and the Scherzino, arranged for pianoforte, come from Chester's. The effects are too purely orchestral to be successful in a pianoforte solo, but it is interesting to see how simply things are done, and how apt was the instrumentation that gave them such point. The method is to add pert little counterpoints, occasional 'wrong' notes, inverted pedals, and the like: the result is sometimes charming, sometimes amusing, sometimes merely annoying; never anything very considerable.

Two Valse-Intermezzi, by J. D. Davis, are effectively laid out for the instrument in a rather luxuriant and thick style; but there is little distinction in the actual music, while the too frequent use of sequential passages has its usual deadening effect. The Valses will probably be popular, however, if played with sufficient éclat. Maurice Besly's Waltz, No. 1 of Op. 26, two pieces, is much lighter in texture and less pretentious in manner; and its tunes are longer in flow. It is frankly light music, graceful and effective. 'River Gardens,' the second of the two pieces, is more ambitious, and perhaps less successful. But it shows similar melodic sense, and the same freedom from affectation. These pieces are all published singly by Winthrop Rogers.

The Verlagsanstalt Deutscher Tonkunstler A.G., Berlin, sends some interesting modern German pianoforte music. Arnold Ebel is represented by two sets of Impressionen, Opp. 33 and 34, and an earlier Fantasia Espansiva, and there is a big Passacaglia in A minor, by Kurt Schubert. There is something rather pretentious in the lay-out of some of Ebel's pieces, and here and there simpler, more attractive moments make it seem that the composer is not always unaffected in his manner. The Fantasia, Op. 21, suffers more than the smaller pieces from what looks like the influence of Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and in this, as well as the later works, one feels that the composer is really a good writer of light music who is trying to be profound. In the Op. 34, 'Spieldose' and 'Frohlicher Auskang,' the two lighter numbers, are easily the most satisfactory, for the more solemn 'Elegischer Gesang' is rather commonplace, and savours of affectation. 'Morgenlied,' from Op. 33, is attractive, but even here too great a strain is put upon material which, though quite good, is slender. Kurt Schubert's Passacaglia has some strong stuff in it, and might be made effective by a pianist who was able to bridge over the rather marked gaps which divide the variations, and are apt to cut up the movement into sections of eight bars' length The style of pianoforte writing is very heavy, and sometimes clumsy, reminiscent in manner of Brahms, but with some passages of noisy stuff that signify less than Brahms's heaviness generally does.

Ernest Walker's Prelude in E flat, published in the Oxford Pianoforte Series by the Oxford University Press, is a relief after this somewhat pretentious music It says its say very quietly, with unfailing musicianship and sincerity; and its chief subject, though not striking at a first glance, takes hold in the memory, and has a good deal of meaning to yield up. From a technical point of view the grading 'intermediate' is probably right, but only a more mature musician will be able to reach all that is to be got out of this Prelude.

John Foulds's 'Eddies' is a sort of concert study, lightly and effectively written; a useful encore piece for pianists with the required technique.

Messrs. Joseph Williams are the publishers of a long and difficult Polonaize in B flat, by Ivy Herbert.

T. A.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Two books of very easy pieces for beginners will be found useful by teachers. 'In Willow Wood,' by Graham Clarke (Joseph Williams), is a collection of very short and easy pieces intended as first pianoforte lessons. Technically, they are well devised, and the lay-out is admirably clear. Edith Rowland's 'First Tunes on the Pianoforte' (Joseph Williams) are all founded on well-known nursery rhymes. They are well written, and the treatment is generally less conventional than is often the case in pieces of this class.

A set of Miniature Sketches under the title 'Coral Cave,' by Olive Lloyd (Winthrop Rogers), will be found attractive by pupils of elementary grade. They are well varied and, technically, should prove useful. Rather more difficult is the little Suite of five pieces by Edgar Moy entitled 'Snapshots' (Winthrop Rogers). The last of the set is in $\frac{5}{8}$-time, and would make an admirable study. The treatment generally is modern in style.

From the Oxford University Press come six easy little pieces by Martin Shaw, under the general title 'In and Out.' They are issued separately, and are capital examples of two-part writing. In each piece the themes wind 'in and out,' being first played by the right hand and then by the left, thus forming excellent little studies in part-playing. They range in difficulty between Elementary and Lower Division standard. J. Stuart Archer's 'Short and Easy Pianoforte Duets' (Paxton) are in two books. Book 1 is very simple, with single notes only in each hand. Book 2 is more advanced. The well-written teacher's part adds to their attractiveness.

'Studies in Rhythmic Difficulties,' by Thomas F. Dunhill (Joseph Williams), deal with such things as syncopation, dotted notes and ties, rests, miscellaneous six-eight rhythms, groups of two, three, and four notes in proximity, and two notes against three. Each of these six studies is preceded by explanatory notes, and suggested preliminary work for overcoming the particular difficulty before the study itself is attempted. Mr. Dunhill's tastefully-written music is not easy, and one feels that some, at least, of these rhythmic problems would ordinarily be taken in hand before reaching the stage that these pieces suggest. However, there are only too many who, rhythmically, are far from strong long after they have passed out of the elementary stage in other respects, and for such these studies may be cordially recommended.

Attention may usefully be drawn here to the four books of 'Selected Studies for the Pianoforte' (Paterson's Publications), selected, edited, and fingered, respectively, by Désirée MacEwan, Nancy Gilford, Cuthbert Whitemore, and Felix Swinstead. They are graded Primary, Elementary, Higher Elementary, and Higher Grade. Mr. Whitemore in Book 3, and Miss Gilford in Book 2, both preface their sets by an interesting and helpful Foreword; and in all four books suggestions are given at the head of each study. Particularly helpful to teachers of beginners are the comments of Miss MacEwan in Book 1.

G. G.

A NEW EDITION OF BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS

At first sight there is something piquant in the association of Casella with Beethoven. But it must be remembered that Casella early distinguished himself as a pianist, and is now a no less distinguished teacher.

In the edition of Beethoven's Sonatas (three volumes, and separate numbers) just published by Ricordi, under Casella's editorship, he shows himself scholarly, thorough, and enterprising, and incidentally reveals an enthusiasm for the composer that is good to see to-day when so many of our young folk have decided that Beethoven is a back number. The edition opens with a lengthy Preface in Italian, French, and English, wherein the text, phrasing, dynamics, touch, the use of the pedal, &c., are fully discussed. There are also copious foot-notes in which occur many interesting and instructive comparisons of the readings of such authorities as Bülow, Czerny, Klindworth, &c. These notes, like the Preface, are tri-lingual. By the way, the English contains a good many misspellings and other errors. Most of the mistakes are obvious, but there are a few that ought to be noted and put right as soon as possible. For example, on p. 29 of vol. 3 (first movement of the 'Adieu' Sonata) a foot-note, speaking of bar 17 of the Allegro, says 'The great difficulty of this bar does not admit of any ritardando.' But reference to the Italian and French shows that for 'admit' we should read 'excuse.' The point is that the player must not allow the difficulty to lead to any retarding. On p. 55 of vol. 2 we read, 'To harmonize with the first line the A ought to be A flat.' For 'flat' we should read 'natural'; and 'harmonize' is not a good word for the original simmetria, as it has a definitely musical meaning. 'Agree' would be better. The note on p. 206 breaks off quaintly: 'By the suppression of the E a fine legato can easily.' A very racy translation occurs on p. 98, vol. 3, where 'Bülow formulò, colla sua abituale "verve" despotica e polemica' = 'Bülow, avec sa "verve" polemique et despotique habituelle' = 'Bülow, with his habitual despotical and polemical "ginger."' . . . Despite slips and oddnesses, however, the notes are invariably illuminating. Casella's pedalling marks are full of interest. Players who make the mistake of over-pedalling the early Sonatas should observe the care and reserve with which Casella indicates the use of that often fatal accessory. On the other hand he is daring enough to suggest its continuous use during fourteen bars in the first movement of the 'Waldstein,' on the ground that Beethoven probably wanted a muffled, confused, far-off sound—noise rather than music—from which the right hand gradually works up to the top of the keyboard, heralding the return of the first subject. Casella opines that this effect was the origin of the title 'Aurora' sometimes given to this Sonata. Full of interest and suggestion is Casella's fingering. Frequently he adds a note to the effect that it is for advanced players only, and in the Preface he explains that Beethoven presents special difficulties in this way because his keyboard writing is bad:

> In Chopin, the mechanism of the keyboard always guides the inspiration in accordance with the hand; in Beethoven the music disdainfully dictates its superhuman will to the humble fingers. One has to meet such extraordinary demands by abnormal means. Hence the necessity of fingering Beethoven sometimes in a rather 'barbaric' manner.

A good practical point is the frequent division of awkward passages between the hands. This is done to an extent that is probably without precedent. But, says Casella, > Superfluous difficulties—indeed, even perilous for the finished interpretation—must be removed without the smallest scruple when it is a question of works like the Sonatas of Beethoven.

On the various suggestions for modification of the text much could be written. It must suffice now to recommend this edition very warmly. A careful study of its Preface and foot-notes alone is sufficient to increase or revive one's old enthusiasm for these works. An Editor who can do that is to be thanked and followed. H. G.

STRING SOLOS

The most important publication of the month is the Violin Concerto in G minor, by J. S. Bach, arranged for violin and pianoforte solo by J. Bernard Jackson (Oxford University Press). This is an attempt to bring back to something like its original form the F minor Concerto for harpsichord which, it is said, Bach first conceived for the violin and in the key of G. The edition has been carefully prepared, and although we feel confident that this Concerto will never take the place of the two favourites in A and E, it should prove very useful to teachers anxious to pave the way for their pupils leading to the two great Concertos. If this is not Bach at his best, it is still Bach, and consequently the very best school of a sound violinistic style. All the essential technical features of the other Concertos are to be found here, and also, now and again, a tiny hint or two of their melodic ideas. Thus it provides the very best approach to the Concertos in E and A.

The very easiest piece of violin music ever written is contained in Book 1 of 'Violin Pieces' starting on the open strings,' by Léon J. Fontaine (Paxton); and the 'Chanson Bretonne,' by C. Chaminade (Enoch), is well up to the composer's standard.

Two Poems for 'cello and pianoforte—'Rawhit' and 'Nga Patu-Paiarehe,' by Hugo Anson (Oxford University Press)—provide just the kind of astringent such music as Chaminade's needs as a corrective.

The art of composition appears at times in the light of a competition; the competitors are many and the prizes are few. The first prize means nothing less than fame and wealth; the second, fame only; the third, an obscure but comfortable existence. There are also consolation prizes in the shape of an odd performance here and there, or publication. René Rabey, composer of two pieces for violin and pianoforte ('Poème Tzigane' and 'Sérénade Venitienne'), has drawn one of the consolation prizes, for his work is published by the famous Parisian firm of Durand, but it would be exceedingly difficult to say whether he is likely to be more fortunate in the future. His music is of great simplicity—so great, in fact, as to recall the Age of Innocence. But this is in itself no bar to excellence. On the contrary, those who can express their thoughts in the simplest terms should reach the public by the quickest way. If we have misgivings it is because the composer's thoughts never seem to rise above the commonplace. They are the honest, straightforward thoughts of the teacher anxious to provide a little relaxation for his pupils—not the thoughts of the artist struggling to express an individual conception. But perhaps René Rabey means to get into touch with the man in the street, and discuss the higher things only after he has made sure of his support and sympathy.

Also from Messrs. Durand comes an arrangement by S. Dusckin of the Pastourelle from Ravel's 'L'Enfant et les Sortilèges.' This is admirably done, and must rapidly establish itself in the violinist's repertory. The graceful, whimsical music suits the violin to perfection, and at the hands of a gifted interpreter should sound very effective. B. V.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Foundations of Practical Harmony and Counterpoint,' by R. O. Morris.

[Macmillan, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

The lot of the present-day teacher of harmony and counterpoint is by no means an enviable one. In the concluding chapter of his new work, Mr. Morris refers to the harmonic chaos prevalent to-day, and points out as a consequence the obvious impossibility as yet of writing a text-book of modern harmony, though people are clamouring for it. Meanwhile, however, the young student—whose primary concern is with sound beginnings—may be assured of safe guidance in the admirably sane and practical course of study provided in 'Foundations of Practical Harmony and Counterpoint.'

The book—except for certain chromatic passing-notes, changing notes, &c.—is limited to purely diatonic harmony. The chapters on harmony and counterpoint are grouped separately for purposes of convenience, but suggestions are given for the benefit of those who prefer to teach the two subjects concurrently. The actual order of harmonic study followed is based on the author's own work as professor of harmony and counterpoint at the Royal College of Music. This can, of course, be modified to some extent at the discretion of the teacher. Excellent reasons are given for placing the elementary harmonization of melodies very early in the book (chap. 3). Figured bass, as a method of teaching harmony is, in the author's view, 'an utter delusion, for which it is impossible to find printable words of sufficiently strong condemnation.' Figured bass, however, as a shorthand notation of harmony, is often useful, and its general method is accordingly explained in an Appendix. An adequate supply of exercises is provided, the text being reduced to a minimum consistent with reasonable thoroughness.

In the counterpoint section—under the heading 'The Harmonic Aspect'—Mr. Morris shows why the study of real strict counterpoint, 'quite apart from examination purposes and such-like irrelevant considerations, is indispensable to any musician who aspires to the most elementary comprehension of his art.' As regards the traditional method of teaching this subject by the so-called 'Five Species' or 'orders,' however, he considers that of these

> . . . the last is the only one that is worth considering on its own merits. No composer ever actually wrote for any length of time in the others: they are of value only in so far as they help towards the last. And in the experience of the present writer, and of many others whom he has consulted on the point, their value for this purpose is precisely nil.

They accordingly receive no further consideration.

Under the heading 'Melody and Rhythm,' the writer then proceeds to discuss the so-called 'Fifth Species,' in a most fresh and illuminating manner. Particularly helpful are the chapters on 'Combination of two parts in fifth species' and 'Counterpoint in Three Parts.' The treatment of strict counterpoint in a few chapters has necessarily been greatly condensed. Those who wish to go into the subject more fully are referred to the author's larger study on the same subject—'Contrapuntal Technique in the 16th Century' (Oxford: Clarendon Press). Most readers, however, will agree with the claim that:

> . . . what has been said here is true as far as it goes; if it leaves the student much to learn, at any rate it leaves him little or nothing to unlearn.

Free counterpoint is concisely treated in the last four chapters.

There are frequent timely reminders of the importance of testing written work at the pianoforte:

> . . . without the aid of the pianoforte the inner ear can never possess itself of new and unfamiliar combinations: it is limited to its original stock-in-trade of chords. . . . In the more adventurous kinds of contrapuntal writing, the student must rely more and more on his ear and less and less on rule—everything must be put to the test of actual sound.

There are also occasional warnings that a particular working might be unsafe for examination purposes, as in the example containing consecutive fifths on p. 53, concerning which (examiners, please note!) we read that:

> . . . it must be repeated that many examiners still judge these things by the eye, or by convention, rather than by the ear.

A number of misprints have been noted. In Ex. 10, on p. 18, two minims require dots. In Rule 3, p. 38, for 'if' read 'or.' In the example in D major, p. 67, the use of double bars would be an advantage. On p. 75, the tenor B in the first example requires a natural. Something is wrong in the first bar of Ex. 9, p. 122.

Altogether this is a most helpful and stimulating book, which will be warmly welcomed by many teachers and students. G. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Proceedings of the Musical Association.' Fifty-first season, 1924-25. Pp. 119. Leeds: Whitehead & Miller, £1 1*s.*

'The Journalist in the Making.' Pp. 186. Newspaper World Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Euterpe, or the Future of Art.' By Lionel R. McColvin. Pp. 75. Kegan Paul, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'The Choir Schools' Directory, 1925. Pp. 70. London: The Choir Schools' Association, 1*s.*

'Sight-reading and Ear-Training Primer.' Books 1 and 2. By D. C. Walker. McDougall, Sol-fa, 3*d.*, Staff, 4*d.*, Teachers' Book, 10*d.*

The Pioneer Music Group (hon. organizer, Miss Ethel Waddington) announces a series of chamber music concerts at The Studio, 16, St. John's Park Road, Blackheath. The opening programme (February 6, at 8.15) will include vocal duets by Whittaker and Dvorák, folk-songs, songs by Mozart, Strauss, de Falla, Moussorgsky, Cecil Dudley, and Dorothy Gandy; and pianoforte works by Cecil Dudley. Admission free, by cards, to be had on application to the secretary, at The Studio. (Stamped addressed envelope, please.)

Occasional Notes

The New Year's Honour List was unusually lavish so far as music was concerned. We congratulate heartily the four recipients: Dr. A. Herbert Brewer receives a knighthood; Sir Hugh Allen is made C.V.O.; and the Victorian Order has two new members in Mr. W. Barclay Squire and Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. We hope the next list will recognise the claims of several composers who have been too long overlooked.

The excellent work now being done in the matter of children's concerts is not confined to London and a few of the larger provincial cities. We have received the programme of such a concert given by the Exeter Chamber Music Club recently, at which a thousand elementary school children thoroughly enjoyed Beethoven's String Quartet in G, Op. 18 (first movement), the Scherzo from Brahms's F minor Pianoforte Quintet, Schumann's 'Papillons,' and songs and duets by Stanford, Vaughan Williams, Armstrong Gibbs, Martin Shaw, and Roger Quilter. During the interval the youngsters did their part in a group of folk-songs. Practically every largish town has its group of chamber music enthusiasts; here is a capital field for their energies. At present it seems to be too readily assumed that such valuable work can be done only where a large professional orchestra is available.

The mention of children's concerts reminds us that in some quarters there is a tendency to overdo the explanatory talk. We recently heard on the wireless a Schubert concert given to an audience of children. Here, surely, is a composer who needs the minimum of explanation, yet the performance of one of his chamber works was prefaced by about fifteen minutes of lecture, mainly irrelevant, poor in diction, and badly delivered. If the music for such concerts is wisely chosen it can almost invariably be depended on to speak for itself. If words are necessary, they should be few and to the point. It is a fatal blunder to give children the impression that good music cannot be enjoyed unless it is preceded by a lecture.

Another questionable feature at some children's concerts is the singing by the audience of the chief themes from classical orchestral works, the words used being nonsense or jingle. This handicaps a fine theme by saddling it with incongruous associations, and it also prevents the children from realising that many of the most beautiful things in music are independent of words and programme of any kind. Nor do we think much is to be said on behalf of the exposition of the various orchestral instruments and their possibilities. No doubt a little mild amusement is easily created by the appearance, sounds, and antics of certain members, but the tendency is to lead the children to think of details when they would be better occupied with the whole. The children's concert movement is big with possibilities, but it will miss its aim, and may even do harm, if the more fussy type of 'musical appreciation' enthusiast is allowed too big a part in its direction. The safest place for him is at the door, taking tickets.

We learn that George Gershwin has been dubbed 'the American Mozart.' The 'future' of Mozart, so often spoken of, is now more assured than ever.

The recent publication in ordinary letterpress of an authoritative work on Braille music notation is of great importance to the many teachers, friends, and relatives of blind musicians. The book in question, 'A Key to Braille Music Notation,' has been issued by the National Institute for the Blind through Messrs. Novello. It is a letterpress version of the Key published in Braille by the Institute in 1922. As the Key embodied the results of ten years' work of a representative committee of experts, it may be regarded as definitive. The Braille system of notation is now so comprehensive that into it may be translated any score, from the simplest to the most elaborate, whether in staff, tonic sol-fa, or even plain-song notation. This letterpress Key enables the sighted reader quickly to make himself conversant with the system, thanks to the numerous illustrations, the excellent paragraphing, and the copious synopsis and index. Mr. H. C. Warrilow, the Institute's Organist and Musical Director, contributes an interesting Preface, and from Sir Landon Ronald comes a sympathetic Foreword. Readers who wish to know something of the history and development of Braille signs as applied to music will find the matter fully dealt with in the September (1925) number of the Beacon, in a long article by Mr. Edward Watson, a member of the Committee mentioned above. The Beacon is published by the National Institute for the Blind, Great Portland Street, W.1.

The current issue of Music and Letters is even more than usually interesting. The prize essay on opera has been won by Mr. Dyneley Hussey, with a well-written and commonsensible paper on 'Nationalism and Opera.' Mr. Plunket Greene writes on Leonard Borwick in a delightfully intimate manner. Among the other articles we have been specially attracted by that of Cecil Gray on Bellini. Here is a composer apparently outside the pale. Champions are easily found for all sorts of pioneers, ancient and modern, and the more ancient or modern the more numerous and warm the champions. But Bellini . . .

Mr. Gray makes a capital job of his task, though we do not suppose he expects anybody to be converted—for the fatal obstacle to a revival of Bellini's operas is obvious, though it is merely touched on by Mr. Gray:

> Bellini is at his best when the dramatic situation is most intense; where the dramatic or human interest wanes in his operas, the musical interest similarly diminishes. Consequently the weakest parts are always in those places where a composer like Rossini excels—where an opportunity is afforded by the libretto for purely musical development unimpeded by dramatic exigencies. At such moments he simply writes the first thing that enters his head; anything will do. He entirely lacks purely musical invention, and it is in this dependence upon a dramatic and emotional stimulus that both his virtues and his defects reside.

As it is no longer possible to feel much interest in the dramatic and human side of Bellini's operas an audience is thrown back more and more on the purely musical side. Operatic audiences are still the least critical of all, so far as music is concerned, but they have long since left the stage when 'anything will do' as a musical background during a flagging of the dramatic interest. Hence Bellini's stock is low beyond recovery. But, as Mr. Gray shows, he holds an important place in musical history, both for the influence he had on the melodic style of far greater men, and also because, but for his early death, he would almost certainly have affected profoundly the future of Italian opera:

> The manifest imperfections of his operas [says Mr. Gray] are the result of his immaturity, not of his æsthetic principles, which were fundamentally sound and in accordance with the unalterable nature and the highest traditions of Italian art. The neglect of them has led modern Italian music into a morass from which it will probably never extricate itself.

The discussion of the vocal wobble (euphemistically known as vibrato) is being vigorously pursued elsewhere than in the columns of this journal. Among other daily papers The Times has lately included many letters on the subject, and one of its excellent Saturday musical articles also dealt with the vice. The various writers all agree in condemning it, but there is wide difference of opinion as to its cause. It is variously ascribed to bad training, poor breath control, nervousness, and affectation; and there is of course similar disagreement as to the cure. We suggest that after all the remedy is a simple matter—at all events in the majority of cases. In the most literal of senses, it lies in the hands of concert audiences: they have but to withhold applause from the wobblers. So long as they continue their traditional soft-hearted policy of applauding anything and everything in the shape of a vocal performance, so long will solo singing in general be the most backward department of public music-making. Let audiences steel themselves, and maintain a frigid and eloquent silence at the close of a performance that they know is bad, either in regard to choice of song or vocal method. A singer who found herself walking back to the artists' room in silence instead of to the customary accompaniment of hand-clapping would soon discover the cause, and would never risk a second experience of the kind. (We say 'herself,' because as a rule women are the chief offenders.)

It is significant that most of the correspondence in the daily press has come from wireless listeners, and as a result the B.B.C. will no doubt gradually shed the culprits. If so, there is irony in the fact that an audience hearing a performance thus at second-hand, so to speak, has been able to do more in the way of practical criticism in a few months than the ordinary concert audience has ever been able to manage. And the reason is that the wireless listener hears without seeing the performer—the very feature that was at first held to be a fatal defect in broadcasting solo performances. We were told that nothing could make up for the absence of direct personal expression. The real fact is that broadcasting does away with the doping influence of the pretty face and frock and the fascinating platform manner; only the musical performance is left, and for the first time in the history of the art has a chance of being judged strictly on its merits. We saw and heard a good example of this recently at an amateur operatic show, wherein the heroine was a young woman of great personal charm but with a voice and method that were lamentable. So well did she take the eye, however, that before she had released a dozen thin and trembling phrases she had captured the audience, and we heard a rapt hearer say, 'Hasn't she a lovely voice?' We longed to turn to the speaker and reply, 'On the contrary, she has a very ugly voice, and if you heard her by wireless you would switch off after a brief sample and refuse to waste the current on such a travesty of singing.' Perhaps in the near future, when as a result of wireless concerts all the world and his wife will have learned to listen, they will be competent to attend an ordinary concert and concentrate on the things that matter. But probably by that time the ordinary concert will have been killed by the gramophone, wireless, and player-piano.

Several correspondents have written asking our views on free scholarship schemes run by private teachers. Judging from such information as is available, we imagine they are very profitable speculations on the part of the teacher. Usually a substantial entrance fee is required, and as the applicants frequently roll up in large numbers a very little knowledge of arithmetic enables us to see that the teacher gets handsomely paid for a year's 'free' tuition of the chosen candidate. No doubt there are genuine scholarships of the kind, but we are bound to say that all the evidence we have been able to gather makes us advise readers to scrutinise the teacher's credentials. We are supported in this view by observing that American musical journals have lately contained some outspoken denunciations of such scholarships.

The need of a central club-house and headquarters for the musical profession is generally recognised. Such a building will soon be on the way if the rank-and-file musician will give prompt support to the London Musicians' Club. Good progress was reported by the hon. secretary, Mr. Joseph Ivimey, at a Club dinner held recently. The membership is now about eight hundred, and when the thousand mark is reached the question of building will at once be considered. The annual subscription is a mere half-guinea, and membership is open to British and Dominion members of the profession, the term being used in its widest sense, and including concert-agents, musical journalists, music traders, administrators, &c. Sir Edward Elgar is the President, and the Committee includes Sir Landon Ronald, Mr. Claude Aveling, and Mr. Herbert Hughes. Nomination forms and full particulars will be sent on application to Mr. Ivimey, at 36, Upper Gloucester Place, N.W.1. What a power the profession would be able to exert on behalf of its art if that power were focussed in one central organization instead of being spread thinly over dozens, as it is now! Why should not music have its equivalent of Burlington House? There are five thousand eligible musicians in London alone; they have but to put their heads and half-guineas together, and things will begin to move.

Large scale performances of 'The Messiah' are so frequent in this country, especially at Christmas and Easter, that very few can be reported. In America they are comparatively rare, if we may judge from some yards of press cuttings that have reached us concerning a performance at Cincinnati during Christmas week. There was an audience of three thousand, and as this was the first time the work had been heard there in a big public hall for twelve years, it was something of a novelty to a large proportion of those present. Some details of the production were sufficiently novel to attract more than usual attention to the occasion. Thus it was claimed to be the first American performance in which the original instrumentation was used, the only departures being new parts for organ and two cembali, written by the conductor, Frank van der Stucken. Mr. van der Stucken also made use of a novel disposition of the chorus, dividing it into three bodies: (1) a 'solo' chorus of thirty professional singers to whom were entrusted such florid numbers as 'His yoke is easy,' 'For He shall purify,' and the opening of 'For unto us' (these singers were also used for certain quiet sections of the larger choruses, thus providing contrast in colour as well as in power); (2) the main choir of two hundred and twenty-five; (3) a body of thirty men and three hundred and seventy-five children, who sang the angelic choruses and certain tutti passages, such as 'Wonderful, Counsellor,' in 'For unto us.' This departure from custom seems to have been entirely justified by results, the effect of the children's voices being especially striking. 'The Messiah' undoubtedly suffers in this country from many under-rehearsed and perfunctory performances. Occasional treatment of the choral portions on lines similar to those adopted by Mr. van der Stucken would probably quicken the interest of both singers and audiences, and tend to a higher standard.

We have received the first number of a new musical periodical, the Midland Musician, founded by Adrian Boult, and edited by Sydney Grew. In addition to dealing with musical happenings in the district, the journal will serve as the official organ of the Birmingham Orchestra. In the latter capacity it will contain annotations of works performed by the Orchestra—a capital move, for it is a long-standing complaint on the part of audiences that such annotations are, as a rule, not available until the actual time of the concert, when nobody has time to give them more than a hasty glance. In this first number of the Midland Musician no fewer than thirteen pages are devoted to such analytical notes. The first of a series of articles headed 'Musicians' deals with Vaughan Williams (with an excellent portrait), and Gustav Holst writes an article entitled 'My Favourite Tudor Composer'—who happens to be Weelkes. The journal is well produced, and Mr. Grew's name is a guarantee as to musico-literary quality. (A slip occurs in the date of Brahms's death: it is given as 1897 on p. 11, and 1896 on p. 22.) The subscription is 7*s.* 6*d.* per annum, post free, but single copies by post cost 9*d.*—a disproportionate sum, surely. We hope the Midland musical public will give the journal the hearty support that, on the form of its No. 1, it will deserve.

A fund has been opened to provide a memorial to the late Herbert Sharpe, who was for over forty years a distinguished Professor at the Royal College of Music. The memorial will probably take the form of an annual prize for pianoforte playing at the R.C.M., to be called the Herbert Sharpe Memorial Prize. As the Committee are anxious that the tribute shall be as representative as possible, they point out that no contribution should be considered too small. The hon. treasurer is Mrs. Underwood, Hill Top Cottage, Peel Street, Campden Hill, W.8.

THE GRAMOPHONE AND THE CHORALIST

By 'Discus'

Last month I expressed some dissatisfaction with the rate of progress in the matter of choral recording, basing my view on a comparison of some recent examples with the 'Messiah' records issued by H.M.V. a year or so ago. As I pointed out, the department is one of great importance in this country, where choral music is the staple fare of an enormous section of the public. To many thousands it is the only kind of first-rate music for which they have a pronounced taste, and this taste is formed in the best of all ways, i.e., by practical acquaintance as members of choirs. I believe that as soon as this huge choral public can count on a steady supply of really good records of standard choral works the gramophone will make a host of new friends. Fortunately this is the one branch of music in which popular taste is good. You will find the best of choral works, old and new, enjoyed by many people who, so far as songs are concerned, are still in the commercial ballad stage, and, in regard to pianoforte music, very little beyond the 'Maiden's Prayer' and the 'Home, sweet home' type of variation. The gramophone is thus able to go ahead in choral recording without the slightest concession in the matter of musical quality. There is, however, one respect in which the choral public should be humoured: for a time the recording should, I think, run on familiar—even hackneyed—lines.

When choral recording has reached the stage when good results can be practically guaranteed, the gramophone may well take a hand in the competitive festival movement. Syllabuses are issued a good many months in advance, and a whole stack of those concerned with the spring festivals are ready in the autumn. A collation of these would yield a list of a few dozen part-songs, glees, madrigals, &c., that are to be used in numerous centres. (The way a few works crop up at festival after festival during a season seems odd until one remembers that many selection committees base their choice on that of certain prominent meetings.) As two or three of these works could be reproduced on one side of a 12-in. disc, it would be very easy to issue a really representative set of test-pieces on a half-dozen records. If the pieces were chosen with due regard to their attractive qualities, the records would appeal to many besides those directly interested in the festival movement. There need be no fear of such a step leading to stereotyped performance. Choirs vary so widely in material and training that different readings are inevitable. For example, in contests organized by the G.F.S., Y.M.C.A., and similar bodies, I have often heard in one day as many as four choirs conducted by the same trainer, and have been astonished at the wide differences, not only in technique (where such inequality is to be expected), but also in interpretation. Moreover, conductors as a body rightly like to hold and express their own views as to expression. The chief value of the records would be in such fundamentals as choice of pace (a very frequent stumbling-block, especially in madrigals and old music generally), blend, grading of power, management of pauses, rallentandos, &c. I am sure that choral trainers in small centres especially would welcome the aid of the gramophone in this way. The choir chosen to make the records should be about thirty strong, picked from some non-competitive body that specialises in the smaller choral forms. Such choirs as the Glasgow Orpheus, the Newcastle Bach, and the Oriana come to mind at once. Here is an enterprise that, with due forethought, could be made both educative and popular.

The above remarks are due to the immense improvement in choral recording shown in some records just received. The Columbia Company send one of the Sheffield Choir, conducted by Dr. Coward, singing a couple of 'Messiah' choruses—'Hallelujah' and 'Worthy is the Lamb'; and from H.M.V. come records of the Leeds Festival Choir in Bax's 'Mater ora Filium' and Purcell's 'Soul of the World,' conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. The main point about both efforts is that the effect is really that of a large choir. Hitherto the gramophone has been able to deal successfully with no more than a kind of semi-chorus; a big choral force has usually come out not only on the foggy side, but sometimes actually less powerful in effect than a group of soloists such as the English Singers. The new records of the Sheffield Choir are exceptionally sonorous, the parts are all clearly defined, and the words distinct. I don't know how far the recording is responsible for a slight flattening at times (usually in the soprano top notes); and one hesitates to ascribe to the singers some occasional harshness of tone. But when all is said as to a few obvious blemishes, the records remain genuinely thrilling, and a hopeful augury for future triumphs. In the matter of interpretation, however, some of us will regret that Dr. Coward sees fit to slacken the time at the soft passage, 'The kingdom of our God,' quickening up very markedly at the loud phrase that follows. This is the kind of cheap effect the inexperienced choir-trainer is all out for, acting on the widespread delusion that soft = slow and loud = quick. Choral adjudicators spend a large part of their time trying to convince performers of all kinds that a decrease of power does not necessarily imply a slackening of tempo, and one is sorry to find so famous a choral conductor as Dr. Coward lending his great weight to an interpretative heresy. All the contrast the music and text require in this case is got by the reduction of power. (I have just looked up the point in the Doctor's fine book, 'Choral Technique and Interpretation,' and find the rallentando recommended there, so no doubt the effect is long since stereotyped in the area where Dr. Coward's influence is great. So much the worse!)

The H.M.V. records of the Leeds Festival Choir are in some respects even more remarkable. True, the success achieved in clearness of texture is less, but the appalling difficulty and complexity of the Bax work makes a comparative failure in this respect inevitable. Another factor is the great resonance of the church in which the recording took place. It lends extraordinary vividness to some of the broader climaxes; but the echo is against clearness at other times. It is impossible to say how far the actual performance is adequate. Without a copy of the score, or great familiarity with the work, one misses many details. Still, as in the case of the 'Messiah' record discussed above, the result is both impressive and exciting. The vocal tone is almost uniformly good—far better than that of the Sheffield Choir record. A special bouquet should go to the few picked sopranos for their achievements in the matter of taking and sustaining some dizzily high notes, which come through without a flaw or sense of effort. This Bax record, then, is a magnificent partial success. I hope, however, that H.M.V. will for a time confine its big choir recording to works of a broad, straightforward character. I have my doubts about that church too. A building with less echo should be tried. Eventually, no doubt, the various problems of choral-recording will be solved, so that a specially-designed recording chamber can be built.

The Purcell chorus, being comparatively simple, comes off better than the Bax, but the organ (which sounds as if its only manual stops were a few rather milk-and-watery flutes) appears to be responsible for some out-of-tune effects: a queer kind of undertone is heard hanging round the vocal bass. Evidently the pedals set up some acoustic phenomena. More trouble for the research department!

[Mention of the organ leads one to express a hope that something will soon be done in the recording of this instrument. A record of some Christmas hymns played on an organ came from H.M.V. last month too late for review. They were sent out and hailed with a flourish of trumpets, but I confess they left me depressed. The reproduction of the organ tone showed an advance, it is true, but the playing of the hymns was so unrhythmical, and the connecting interludes so sugary and so much like the kind of extemporisation that musical church-goers already groan under, that I, for one, could not take the record seriously. The need is for fine playing of real organ music, not a string of hymn-tunes in bad time linked up with trembling inanities. I recently heard some Polydor organ records of Bach that showed promise, the only serious defect being a want of sonority in the bass. At present the organ pedal eludes the recorder, just as the string bass in chamber music did until recently. But it will be captured eventually, though probably not until an organ specially suitable for recording purposes is designed. When that happens there will be yet another large and profitable field for the gramophone.]

P.S.—Since the above was set up there has arrived what is in some respects the most surprising record of all—that of the Royal Choral Society in 'Lift up your heads' and 'Worthy is the Lamb' (H.M.V.). It was made at an actual performance of 'The Messiah' on January 2, and is extraordinarily successful. The tone is always musical; the balance between orchestra and choir is perfect; the orchestra itself comes through brilliantly at times, especially the trumpets and drums; and there are one or two impressive bursts of real organ tone.

One hesitates to criticise the performance, for reasons given above, but it is difficult to avoid an impression that the attack and definition might have been a good deal better. (And 'Lift up your heads' is surely taken too fast. There is no time for due breadth, and often the effect is that of mere hustle.) Not the least impressive point about the record is the uncanny fidelity with which the atmosphere of the Albert Hall is reproduced. It is not merely a question of echo; one gets rather a sense of space. It may perhaps be apparent only to those who are familiar with the Hall. Be that as it may, and in spite of the apparent defects in performance, it is difficult to hear this record unmoved. The success of the experiment is likely to lead to far-reaching results. We may now expect fine records of actual concert performance of big choral works, and obviously such records are likely to be better than those made in studios or churches by choirs singing under unfamiliar conditions. There is an air of reality about an actual public performance, especially of choral and orchestral music, that is not without its psychological effect on those to whom it is transmitted by wireless or gramophone.

Gramophone Notes

COLUMBIA

What the label calls 'Suite No. 6, Bach,' is a set of six movements chosen from widely different parts of Bach's output and orchestrated by Sir Henry Wood, and played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under his direction. It is a pity that in cases of this kind no guidance is given on the label or in the list as to the source of the movements. For the benefit of the uninitiated here are the particulars: (a) The C sharp major Prelude from Book 1 of the '48'; (b) the Lament from the 'Capriccio on the Departure of a dearly-loved Brother'; (c) the Scherzo from the A minor Partita; (d) the Gavotte and Musette from the 'English' Suite in D minor; (e) the B flat minor Prelude from Book 2 of the '48' (here labelled 'Andante Mistico'); (f) the instrumental introduction to the Cantata 'Wir danken dir, Gott.' Inevitably there is loss as well as gain in arrangements of this sort—e.g., the C sharp major Prelude is pure keyboard music, and its combination of grace, delicacy, and incisiveness can be got through no other medium. The Lament is a youthful work, but in its expressive treatment of a short ground bass already gives us a glimpse of the composer of the mighty Passacaglia and Chaconne. The Scherzo from the Partita comes off well, being given mainly to the wood-wind. The Gavotte and Musette are too slow, I think, and the style rather lumbering. The 'Andante Mistico' is one of the finest of the '48' Preludes. It is effective in this version, but hardly so expressive as a good pianist would make it. The Finale is a wonderful example of Bach's power of making much out of little. From a slight thematic germ he spins out a splendidly jubilant movement that never flags. This introduction was an expansion by Bach of a movement from the Violin Sonata in E, and it is of interest to note that the Cantata to which it belongs was composed for a 'Rathswahl,' or election of councillor—not a very inspiring occasion, one would think, yet it led to one of Bach's finest cantatas (L1684-5*).

Beethoven's early Concerto in C minor, with William Murdoch as soloist and Sir Hamilton Harty conducting, suffers from too dead a level of power—it comes out mf practically all through. As the music itself is not Beethoven at his best, it can ill afford the loss of interest that results. The playing all round is capital, the pianoforte tone being clear (L1686-9).

Far more successful in the matter of variety is the Brahms Quartet in A minor, played by the Léner party. This fine work has full justice done to it in every way, and the music, as is usual with Brahms, gains on fuller acquaintance. This is where the gramophone scores. One may wait many months for an opportunity to hear the Quartet in a concert room, and perhaps not live long enough for the repeated hearings that such music needs. Here you may sit and turn it on till you know it inside out (L1691-4).

* A reader tells me that these notes would be more helpful if they gave the catalogue number of the records instead of the size.

A capital military band record is that of the Grenadier Guards in Winter's medley of march tunes 'Martial Moments' (9065).

Of the Cherniavsky Trio's arrangement and performance of the 'Peer Gynt' Suite little that is good can be said. The violinist takes too many liberties with the time in 'Morning'—indeed, the little ornamental passages are unrecognisable. Even worse is the treatment of 'Ase's Death'; for some reason best known to themselves (or probably not known at all) the final section that begins with the descending phrase of three semitones is played at about double the pace of the remainder. 'In the Hall of the Mountain King,' transcribed for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, reminds one of the famous arrangement of the 'Hallelujah Chorus' for two flutes. The three brothers do their strenuous best, but . . . (3735-6).

Those fine singers, the Kedroff Quartet, are heard in 'Church Bells of Novgorod' and an excerpt from 'A Life for the Czar'—less interesting material than is usual with them. Bells are imitated in the first, but the frequent use of the word 'Bom' hardly meets the case (D1530).

Vocal records are of Stracciari in a couple of songs from Verdi's 'Otello' (X 332); William Hesketine in di Capua's 'O Sole mio' and Toselli's 'Come back' (3831); Arthur Jordan in Schubert's 'Who is Sylvia?' and Holbrooke's 'Come not when I am dead'; (he makes good use of the fine opportunities presented by the latter) (3832); and J. Dale Smith in 'Since first I saw your face' and Keel's 'Helen of Kirkconnell'; (a fine manly voice, but why are all our singers so woebegone in singing this simple old ditty of Ford's?) (3833).

H.M.V.

Apart from the Choral records noticed elsewhere, this month's list contains little of note. True, there is a Suggia record—a Boccherini Sonata—but the music is not of red-hot interest (DB 856).

Far more exciting, and legitimately so, is the record of Renée Chemet playing Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso, accompanied by Harold Craxton. This is fiddling of the most brilliant and finished kind, and one forgets the superficiality of the music in admiration of the composer's unerring eye for effect, and the player's realisation of it (DB 887).

Elena Gerhardt is recorded in Brahms's 'Von ewiger Liebe' and 'Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer.' She sings with moving effect, especially in the latter, but there is a good deal of forced and unsteady tone in 'Von ewiger Liebe' (DB 848).

A duet by Galli-Curci and Tita Schipa ought to be a brilliant success, but in the record of their singing of two extracts from 'Traviata,' the palm goes to the lady in a very unequal bit of work, Schipa committing (or being made to appear to commit) some very elementary vocal faults. And the music! If you want an awful example of the orchestra treated as a big guitar, with an almost unbroken series of bass thumps followed by tum-tum, get this record. What a waste of material! As I lay it aside, never to be taken up again till it is cast out by the ruthless hand of the spring-cleaner, I remember that Mr. Compton Mackenzie declares that he is ready to defend 'Traviata' against all comers, and I find myself wondering what even that eloquent pleader can say on behalf of No. DA 711.

Eva Scotney sings a couple of poor but probably popular songs: Taubert's 'The bird in the wood' and Ponce's 'Little Star' (E 406).

Another feeble bird song is delivered by Mavis Bennett—Bishop's 'Lo, here the gentle lark.' In this competition between a flute and a soprano voice the former, as usual, comes off with the honours, though the soprano gets the glory. The flautist is always dead in tune and clear-cut in the florid passages, whereas the singer is so only at times. It is risky work competing with a flute on ground so peculiarly its own. Yet these coloraturas will do it, and presumably many people enjoy the unequal combat—and fail to see which is the more bird-like of the two performers. Miss Bennett is better employed on the other side with Solveig's Song (C 1229).

A good second to 'The Beggar's Opera' records are those of the Hammersmith Lyric success 'Lionel and Clarissa.' The tunes are generally excellent, and Alfred Reynolds's treatment of them has the right deft and musicianly touch. The singing, however, is a good way below that of Gay's opera, and the diction is poor. But the records are enjoyable as mere tuneful music (D1048-50).

A selection from the Sullivan-German opera 'The Emerald Isle,' played by the Coldstream Guards Band, is well recorded (C1224).

VOCALION

Last month we had some new Vaughan Williams in the 'Old King Cole' Suite. This month comes one of his first works, the 'Wasps' Overture, written about twenty years ago. It shows the composer already the captive of folk-song, but happily not yet obsessed with Hucbaldism. The capital little work, played by the Æolian Orchestra under the composer, makes a very attractive record (A 0249).

Of all the records of Lionel Tertis and his viola I have heard none so immediately beguiling as the latest—Rebikov's 'Dreams,' arranged by Tertis, and his own 'Sunset.' Rarely do we get so much melting sweetness to the square inch (X 9696).

Other string records are of Phyllis Allan playing Easthope Martin's violin solos 'From the Rialto' and 'Morning Song' (K 05209); and 'cellist Howard Bliss in Goltermann's Berceuse and Gillet's Madrigal (X 9695).

The best of the vocal records are of Horace Stevens in Vaughan Williams's 'The Vagabond' and 'The Roadside Fire' (X 9693); and Roy Henderson in a long extract from Verdi's 'Falstaff.' This is something of a 'stunt,' as Mr. Henderson represents three characters—Falstaff, Ford, and Ford in his assumed character of Brook. It is a very skilful bit of vocal characterisation, but the hearer is apt to be more interested in this than in anything else, which is a pity. On the whole, then, the 'stunt' is a mistake, and does little more than tell us what we knew before about Mr. Henderson's undoubted vocal and operatic endowments. But the records will be prized, above all, for the sample they give us of the delightful music of a neglected masterpiece (K 05205-6).

Armand Tokatyan sings 'Amor ti vieta di non amar' from Giordano's 'Fedora,' and the Siciliana from 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' very expressively (B 3121); and Luella Paikin is recorded in 'Non so più cosa son' from 'Figaro' and the Waltz Song from 'Romeo and Juliet,' without, however, showing that ease of execution without which such music is of little account (A 0251).

I do not often mention dance music in this column, but an exception is made in favour of a fox-trot, 'The Kinky Kids' Parade,' played by Ben Selvin and his orchestra. It contains some excellent side-drumming and brilliant xylophone playing. I have heard many a performance of better music that pleased me far less, and the children, as in the case of a successful curative syrup, ask for more (X 9706).

The Secretary of the S.E London Recorded Music Society tells me that my note last month brought inquiries from all parts. He asks me to say that the Lending Library is available only to members who attend personally. He adds that it is merely one of the branches of the Society's activities, the most important being the monthly lectures with gramophone illustration.

Music in the Foreign Press

ERNEST CHAUSSON AND HIS CIRCLE

The December Revue Musicale is a special Chausson number, containing articles by Du Bos, Samazeuilh, Maurice Boucher, Arthur Hoerée, J. Gaillard, and excerpts from Chausson's correspondence with d'Indy, Debussy, Duparc, Ysaye, and others.

Debussy's letters are particularly interesting considering the scarcity of letters from him that so far are known. They date from 1893—the period when he had completed the 'Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune' and started composing 'Pelléas et Mélisande.'

> Henri de Régnier was speaking of certain French words which, through moving in bad society, had fallen from their high estate. It occurred to me that the same might be said of certain chords whose sonority had become hackneyed thanks to the music written in view of the export trade. . . . Indeed, music ought to be a hermetic science, kept secure in texts so long and so difficult to interpret, as to discourage the herd of the people who go using music in as free and easy a way as a pocket-handkerchief is used.
>
> September 6, 1893.

> When I told you that a scene of 'Pelléas et Mélisande' was ready, I was exulting too soon. After a sleepless night, I was compelled to realise that I had not hit the mark. What I wrote resembles a duet by Mr. So-and-So, by anyone you please; and especially the ghost of M. Klingsor (alias R. Wagner) was peeping round the corner of a bar. So I tore the whole thing up, and started afresh in quest of a more individual modus operandi. I strove to become as thoroughly as possible Pelléas and Mélisande, and sought to discover music behind all the veils under which she hides even from her most devoted wooers. The result is something that perhaps will please you—whether it may please others, I don't care. I used (quite spontaneously) a resource which is, I believe, uncommon; silence (please do not laugh!) as a means of expression and possibly the only real way of bringing out the emotion of a given sentence. Wagner has resorted to this method, but, I think, in a purely dramatic spirit.
>
> October 2, 1893.

I went to Brussels; Ysaye welcomed me with yells of delight. . . A memorable party took place, at which I played Five Poems, 'La Damoiselle Elue,' 'Pelléas et Mélisande'—I was as hoarse as if I had been crying newspapers on the boulevard. 'Pelléas' had the honour of touching the heart of certain young ladies—English, I understand—and Ysaye grew frantic over it. I spent a day with Maeterlinck at Ghent. At first he behaved like a maiden to whom a likely suitor is being introduced. Then he thawed and became delightful. He gave me a free hand as regards cuts in 'Pelléas.' . . . He says he is incapable of understanding music; he confronts a Beethoven Symphony very much as a blind man might confront a display of paintings.

(Date not given.)

For a few days, I felt really pained by what you said to me concerning my String Quartet. I felt that what this work of mine had done was to make you fonder of certain things, when I hoped that it might make you forget those very things. Well, I shall write another, which will be for you, really for you, and I shall try to achieve greater nobility in my form. I wish I had enough influence on you to give you a good wigging, and tell you that you are wrong as regards yourself. You exercise so great a pressure on your own ideas, that the poor things no longer dare show themselves to you, fearing lest their raiment might strike you as unsuitable. You do not relax and yield, you do not seem to allow a free hand to the mysterious promptings which lead us to find the true expression of a feeling when industrious study and heart searchings will for sure merely weaken it. I feel so certain that you are endowed with all the needful power of expression that I grieve to see you waste your vitality in useless struggles. We must realise that as compared with art, all of us are absolutely nothing; we are just instruments of a destiny, and so it behoves us to allow this destiny to be fulfilled.

(Date not given.)

THE REVISION OF BORODIN'S FIRST SYMPHONY

In the Warsaw Muzyka (December), Andréï Rimsky-Korsakov writes:

The differences between the original version of Borodin's first Symphony (published in pianoforte duet form only) and the revised version (the first and only version published in full score form) are the work of Borodin himself; and Mr. Calvocoressi's supposition that Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazounov are responsible for them is altogether unfounded.

[NOTE.—Andréï Rimsky-Korsakov has prepared for publication a fuller article on this point, of which he has kindly communicated the text to me. I shall refer to it as soon as it appears.—M.-D. C.]

OLD HUNGARIAN MUSIC

In the December Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft appears the second instalment of Benedict Szabolcsi's most useful studies in old Hungarian music. This article is devoted to Hymns and Psalms of the 17th and 18th centuries.

RICHARD STRAUSS'S CADENCES

In the same issue is an essay by Roland Tenschert in which the various kinds of cadences used by Strauss are very thoroughly studied.

A SCHUBERT NUMBER

The December issue of the Moderne Welt (Vienna) is devoted to Schubert. It contains articles by a dozen authors, among whom are Richard Benz, Furtwängler, and Romain Rolland, four short unpublished works by Schubert, and many illustrations.

FRANCK'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The November Revue Musicale contains the first instalment of an important essay on César Franck's pianoforte music, by Alfred Cortôt. It will be continued in the January number, the special Chausson number mentioned above coming in between.

ROMANTIC EFFECTS DRAGGED INTO CLASSICAL MUSIC

In the November Zeitschrift für Musik, Jón Leifs calls for more sober methods than are usual in the interpretation of classical masterpieces:

As a case in point, the first movement of the 'Eroica' is selected. Beethoven prescribed the tempo thus: 'Allegro con brio, ♩. = 60,' which implies a brisk, lively character. To-day one often hears this movement taken far slower, with many changes in tempo, but without the pace prescribed by Beethoven ever being reached. Among other liberties taken should be mentioned the exaggeration of nuances indicated by the composer, and even the introduction of nuances where none are prescribed by him, or the overlooking of nuances which he does prescribe.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Player-Piano Notes

By WILLIAM DELASAIRE

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—I have not had to wait long for the completed joy of Schumann's 'Etudes Symphoniques.' The second roll, containing Nos. 8-13, is issued this month (6868), and is, I think, finer than the first. Perhaps this is because it includes the triumphant Finale, in which many sforzando effects, rarely satisfactory on the reproducing piano, are well brought out. As a whole, the dynamic variation between the different sections is well contrasted, although the tone occasionally errs on the heavy side—notably, it seems to me, in Variation No. 10. Both rolls are full of interest to all types of music-lover, and I cordially recommend them far and wide. They cost 24*s.*, but are indeed solid joy and lasting treasure.

At the time of writing I have only the second and third movements of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 81 (6909). The complete work is played by Guiomar Novaes, and, judging by this, she provides an admirable performance thereof. Under the title of 'L'adieu, l'absence, et le retour,' it is, I suppose, one of the best known of the later Beethoven works, and is an important addition to the Duo-Art library.

Friedman plays the Schubert-Liszt 'Erl-King' (6407) with great power and verve. The utmost dramatic intensity is evoked from the music, and the lyrical section is played in a way that impresses me anew with its beauty. A very fine roll indeed.

Salon music is represented by Moszkowski's 'En Automne,' Op. 36, No. 4 (6174), brilliantly played by Hans Ebell; it reveals the composer in his most characteristic mood. And there is yet another tribute to the wind ('whispering,' this time) in 'Mazurka Caprice,' by Wollenhaupt (6914). It is full of 'runs'—is, in fact, one long 'run' from start to finish.

Hand-played.—Brahms's Rhapsody in B minor, Op. 79, No. 1 (A847), tops the list easily. Arthur Rubinstein plays it with remarkable vigour. He

(Continued on p. 149.)

O Lord, Who didst in olden time

ANTHEM

Words Anonymous

Music by Eric H. Thiman

London: Novello and Company, Limited; New York: The H. W. Gray Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Con moto. ♩ = 120
Organ
p rall.
Ped.
mp
O Lord, Who didst in old - - en time . . send Thy be -
mp
O Lord, Who didst in old - en time . . send Thy be -
mp
O Lord, Who didst in old - en . . time . . send Thy be -
mp
O Lord, Who didst in old - - en time . . send Thy be -
a tempo
Voices alone
- lov - ed Son . . . in - to the world to re - d em us,
- lov - ed Son . . . in - to the world to re - deem us,
- lov - ed Son in - to the world to re - deem us,
- lov - ed Son in - to the world to re - deem us,
Ory.
p Ch.

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

p
Grant, Lord, . . our hearts may be filled, may be Grant, Lord, . . our hearts may be filled, may be
Grant, Lord, . . our hearts may be filled, may be Grant, Lord, . . our hearts may be filled, may be
Sw.
Voices alone
senza Ped.
filled with Thy won - drous love,
filled . . with Thy won - drous love,
filled with Thy won - drous love,
filled with Thy won - drous love,
Org.
mp
Ped.
mp
cres.
that we may walk be -
mp
cres.
that we may walk . . be -
mp
that we may walk, may mp
cres.
that we may walk, that we may Voices alone
cres.

dim.
- fore Thee . . . in right - eous - ness and truth, . . . now and dim.
- fore . . . . . Thee in right - eous - ness and truth, now and ev - -
dim.
walk be - fore . . Thee in right - eous - ness and truth, . . . now and dim.
walk be - fore Thee in right - eous - ness and truth, now and ev - -
dim.
f ev - - er - - more; through Je - sus
f
- - - er - - more; . . . through Je - sus
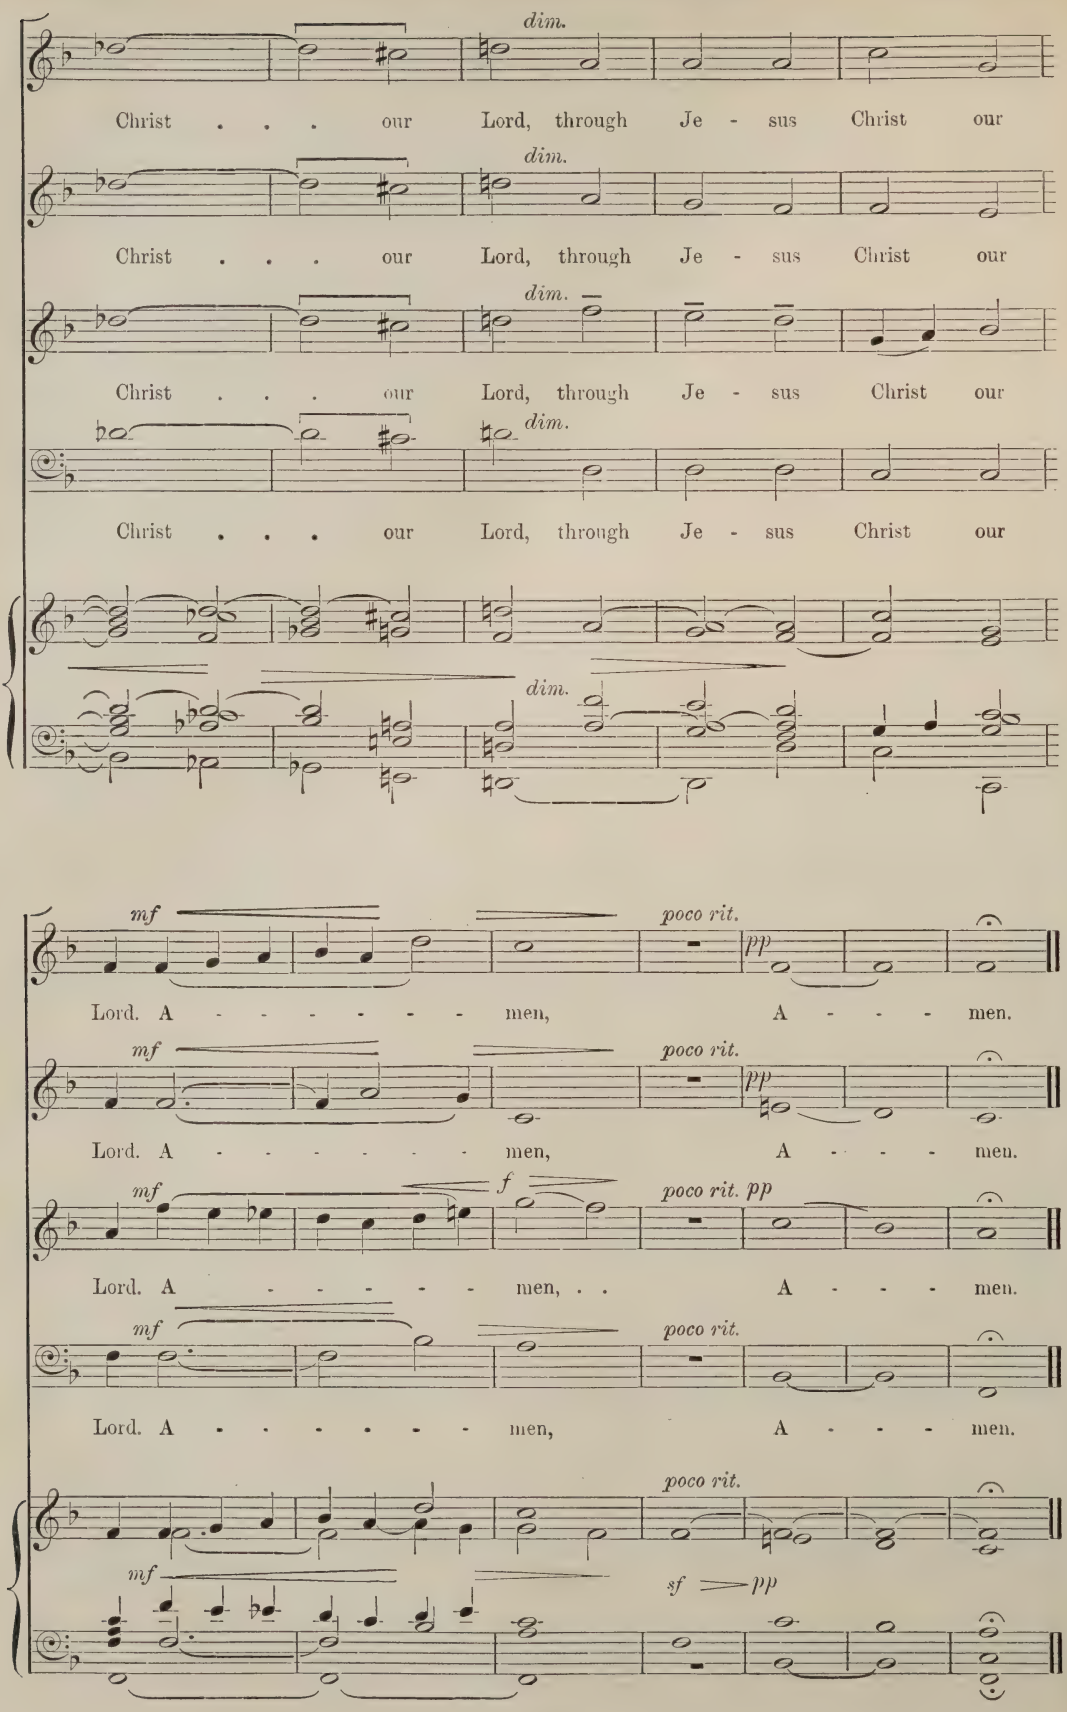
f ev - - - er - more; . . . through Je - sus
f
- - - er - more; through Je - sus
Org.
f
Ped.



dim.
Christ . . . our Lord, through Je - sus Christ our
dim.
Christ . . . our Lord, through Je - sus Christ our
dim.
Christ . . . our Lord, through Je - sus Christ our
dim.
Christ . . . our Lord, through Je - sus Christ our dim.
mf
poco rit.
pp
Lord. A - - - - - - men, A - - - men.
mf
poco rit.
pp
Lord. A - - - - - - men, A - - - men.
mf
f poco rit. pp
Lord. A - - - - - - men, . . A - - - men.
mf
poco rit.
Lord. A - - - - - - men, A - - - men.
poco rit.
mf
sf
pp

(Continued from p. 144.)

brings out the rhythmic urge unmistakably, thereby helping the player-pianist over the difficulties of the cross-rhythms, or at least plainly indicating them. The lovely lyrical section is extraordinarily well played, with touches of rubato here and there which fit into the picture perfectly. The work unquestionably displays the composer at the height of his powers. All Brahms lovers should keep it for 'conversion' purposes.

Chopin's Mazurka in A minor, Op. 17, No. 4, played by Paderewski (A853), I commented upon when issued as a Duo-Art roll. I am here reminded, however, of its quiet, introspective beauty, both creative and interpretative.

A selection from Leoncavallo's 'I Pagliacci' (A855) in the capable hands of Robert Armbruster should deservedly enjoy a ready sale. The ever-popular themes are well chosen and excellently played.

Ordinary.—Strauss (the great one) gives us a beautifully wrought fragment in 'Traumerei,' Op. 9, No. 4 (T24664), which makes an excellent companion to the Intermezzo from the same Opus, already issued in roll form. The hall-mark of the musician is apparent in every bar, and it calls for greater skill on the part of the performer than hundreds of larger and more pretentious works—emphatically it does not play itself.

Two other charming little pieces of a light, delicate character are Purcell's Minuet in G, arranged by Herbert Fryer (T24666), and Quilter's 'Fairy Frolic,' from 'Where the Rainbow Ends' (T24663). Both call for neat accentual pedalling and careful control. The Purcell is especially charming Songs.—None is specially distinguished this month, but the best are: 'Mary' (26584); 'Old Barty' (26483); and 'Ships that pass in the night' (26591). They are no more than ballads, of course, but are quite inoffensive.

HUPFELD

Tri-phonola.—I recently had the pleasure of an extended hearing of the 'Tri-phonola,' a reproducing instrument manufactured by Messrs. Hupfeld. Its name scarcely does it justice, as it serves a four-fold purpose. It may be used as an ordinary pianoforte (a very fine 'Rönisch' in this case); as an ordinary player-piano, combining all the distinctive 'Hupfeld' features; as a player-piano with electric motive power, but with personal control; and, lastly, as an electrically-operated reproducing piano. It was with this last function that I was most concerned, and my considered opinion is that it is one of the finest reproducing actions I have ever experienced. Both in theory and practice it is superlatively good, and its performances at all times supremely refined. It is designed and made with characteristic attention to detail, and until some absolutely new principle is introduced I cannot conceive of anything finer on the present lines.

Among so much that is beautiful I find it difficult to make a choice, but the following rolls are certainly worth noting: 'Paganini Etude,' No. 6, in A minor, played most wonderfully by Busoni (T52175). The theme of this, of course, is the one made famous by Brahms, but Liszt certainly seems to have had a good go at it, if I may be pardoned the vulgarism. The power and attack of the Finale are thrilling. The same pianist provides a distinctive performance of the Chopin G minor Ballade (T50081). Parts of his interpretation do not appeal to me personally, but it is an unusually fine roll, full of the greatest interest: not much imagination is needed to visualise the master himself at the keyboard. Two rolls illustrating very well a point which sometimes eludes reproducing pianos—crisp, delicate accent—are the Schubert 'Moment Musical,' Op. 94, No. 3 (T52101), most delightfully played by Alfred Grünfeld; and Debussy's first 'Arabesque,' in E (T51802), played by Michael Zadora. Both are distinguished—as, indeed, are all these rolls—by a constantly varying dynamic line. For a single melody phrased in this way, Chopin's Etude in E, Op. 10, No. 3 (T50084), provides an excellent example. The accompaniment is beautifully subdued, yet not monotonously so, and the tune sings out in a way that would surely have pleased Chopin himself. The whole performance—by Sofie Menter—is most refined. I was also struck by the fine tonal variation on a larger scale in MacDowell's 'Waldesfreide,' No. 5 of the 'New England Idylls' (T58399). The climax is built up in a wonderfully controlled crescendo, which covers by subtle degrees almost the entire range of the pianoforte. It is an admirable piece of programme music, and the rendering on the 'Tri-phonola' leaves nothing to be desired. Dirk Schafer gives us an original little Etude in E (T51906), played by Wijsman, and Grünfeld's 'Romance,' Op. 45, No. 1 (T53733), has its charming melody happily treated by the composer. Among light pieces these last two deserve special commendation.

Animatic.—(Hand-played.) The best this month are among the smaller numbers—two of Grieg's 'Lyrical Pieces': 'Album-Leaf,' Op. 47, No. 2 (55291), and Scherzo, Op. 54, No. 5 (55294), both played by Sverre Jordan. They are what Mr. Scholes would call 'good simple music,' and as such have a universal appeal. The playing is an object-lesson in the merits of the hand-played roll. A similar sort of piece is Palmgren's 'Slumber-Song' (Old Finnish Lullaby) (59632); also Tri-phonola (T59632), played by Hans Klinger. The harmony has a Wagnerian flavour, and a pleasant monotony is induced by a tonic pedal in every bar.

Backhaus plays Carl Reinecke's Concerto in F sharp (55580/2) brilliantly, but I am afraid it is a work more academic than inspired. What inspiration it has comes pretty plainly from Mendelssohn—it is pleasantly flowing, melodious, and well constructed. But in any case I have no love for concertos on the player piano—so frequently one cannot hear the music for the notes.

The other two rolls I find not very interesting—Six Variations in G, by Beethoven (52700), and Tchaikovsky's Nocturne, Op. 10, No. 1 (57551), obviously an immature work.

The Borough of Kingston keeps up the reputation that it has made (chiefly owing to the energies of Mr. Leslie Regan) as a centre of musical affairs. On January 5 the Kingston, Surbiton, and District Musical Society, conducted by Mr. Regan, gave a performance of 'The Kingdom' that far outdid the standard expected of local resources on the outskirts of London. Solo parts were sung by Miss Ida Cooper, Miss Millicent Russell, Mr. Ben Morgan, and Mr. John Andrews. The performance took place at Surbiton.

Wireless Notes

By 'Ariel'

Undoubtedly one of the greatest wireless successes of recent months has been the broadcasting of Sir Harry Lauder. It provided a convincing answer to those who hold that an artist cannot fully express his personality by means of radio. I have heard Lauder at first-hand, and his performance by wireless gave me no less pleasure than that on the stage. He himself has since declared that he had no difficulty in visualising his vast audience, and it is easy to understand that an artist who can do so has a stimulus at least as powerful as that exerted by a visible audience in a hall. Indeed, to an imaginative performer it may well be far greater. Personally, I could have spared a few of Sir Harry's jokes, but his singing was a delight. I found myself speculating as to the effect on the national standard of solo singing if we were blessed with a dozen baritones as richly endowed as is Lauder on the purely vocal side. To thousands of wireless listeners who heard him for the first time on December 23, his voice must have come as a revelation. I doubt if a more beautiful male voice is to be heard in this country. It was well used, too, and not until the end of his long spell was there a hint of fatigue or out-of-tuneness. His songs, both in text and music, were generally poor, but one rarely remembered the fact, thanks to the appeal of the voice. Expression without wobbling, perfectly clear enunciation without a hint of the stilted or unnatural —the whole performance was a lesson that one hopes was taken to heart by all the budding vocalists who heard it. Incidentally the occasion was a big score for the B.B.C. Not many months ago Sir Harry publicly declared that he would never broadcast; if people wanted to hear him, let them pay at the door. Yet hundreds of thousands have now heard him at no greater cost than a tiny fraction of their annual half-guinea license fee, and they will hear him again in March. In like manner the wireless will eventually rope in everybody worth hearing, and agents and others concerned who talk of banning broadcasting artists will be better employed in seeing how their business can be adapted to the new era that has begun.

A capital new feature is the short pianoforte recital given nightly at 7.25. It was easy to imagine hosts of players and teachers listening to the '48,' the Chopin Studies, and the Mozart Sonatas, with the music before them. Perhaps the B.B.C. might see its way to extending the recital by five minutes. Transmission of the pianoforte, however, still leaves a good deal to be desired, owing to the poorness of the bass, and certain of the Chopin Studies suffered accordingly. Bach and Mozart, with their simpler texture, as a rule came through extremely well. Apparently a specially constructed pianoforte will have to be devised before we can get perfect results in purity of tone and clearness of bass.

The only one of Sir Walford Davies's 10 p.m. talks on 'Music and the Ordinary Listener' that I have so far been able to hear, struck me as being a model of its kind—simple, genial, and full of that sense of the common enjoyment of music that such things too often lack. Sir Walford always seems to have just made the discovery of some magical beauty or significance, and if one wished to sum up in a phrase his work as a guide, whether in conducting a hymn festival or sing-song, a hall full of children at a competition festival, or a wireless talk, it would be in some such colloquialism as 'Hullo! look what I've found!' Lucky man, to retain after all his busy musical life the freshness and wonder that too many of us shed with our pupilage! One of his illustrations was not only extraordinarily happy and amusing, but also fascinating in its combining of two modern miracles. He turned on one of his own gramophone records on 'Melody Making,' varying the pace to illustrate the importance of energy. So perfect was the transmission, that when the record was played at the right pace, and so gave us his normal voice, it was difficult to realise that he was not actually speaking. No surface noises were heard, though it was possible to detect the slight sound made by the impact of the needle. Is it going too far to call such an operation the combination of two miracles? And so near and intimate was the effect that when the slow pace was adopted, and the record gave us pompous gruntings, I badly wanted to tell him that I had played the same trick with that very record on its appearance two or three years ago.

Many listeners no doubt had a grumble at the bad timing of the programme on January 13. We had a capital selection of new and unfamiliar orchestral music, but the one most of us wished above all to hear—Vaughan Williams's 'The lark ascending'—had to be omitted for want of a few minutes. Such a contretemps is not difficult to avoid, surely. It was the more annoying in that the next item was the feeble farce of Bernard Shaw, for which nobody said a good word—not even G. B. S. himself. It is a pity that in all such cases it seems to be taken for granted that the only way out of the difficulty is to cut the music—especially if it be good.

Apropos of the Walford Davies talk, a long letter headed 'Tired Listeners' appeared in The Times of January 19, complaining of the severe mental strain caused by such items in the programmes. The writer held that 'the time and place were unsuitable for any form of forcible feeding of unmusical and wearied souls,' overlooking the fact that many thousands of us manage to be quite bright even at so late an hour as 10 p.m. He went on:

> My point is that the B.B.C. audience, taken en masse, from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m. is a tired audience resting after its day's work, made up in the main of people of middle age and over, and who seek during the evening hours some relaxation and amusement after their day's labours. The younger generation does not listen—it is too busy turning knobs and experimenting generally. That vast audience of tired people does not desire to be talked to upon abstruse and difficult subjects, and does not wish its armchair to be turned into a school form. The mind of that audience is not receptive during the evening hours for lectures that demand concentration, or music that is beyond its comprehension, and I suggest the popularity of wireless is not likely to be increased by turning an evening concert into an evening class, whether the subject be music, literature, or any of the fine arts, ancient or modern.

If the B.B.C. entirely filled the period from 8 to 11 with such talks and concerts there would be cause for complaint. But they don't. On the evening in question, from 8 to 10 the time was occupied by 'Milestones of Dancing and Romance,' and at 10.30 the Kit Cat Club Dance Bands came on. Sir Walford's talk occupied just twenty minutes, and the music that seems to have been beyond the grumbler's comprehension was a Mozart Allegro, a Handel Minuet, the Seherzo from Beethoven's Sonata No. 3, and a well-known hymn-tune! On the occasion of his next talk (January 19) there were variety items and a dramatic monologue from 8.5 to 9, and from 9 to 10 music by Plunket Greene and others, with the Ciro Club Dance Band to follow the exhausting ordeal of listening to Sir Walford for twenty minutes. The letter is an example of the kind of selfishness I have discussed before in this column. We musicians don't grudge our non-musical friends their Radio Radiance, Roosters, Dance Bands, John Henry, relayings of musical comedy and revue, and the dozens of similar light items. If we don't want them, we leave them to those who do. Moreover, the writer of the letter forgets that to many of us who probably do as hard a day's work as he does, rest does not necessarily mean torpor, mental or physical. Often it takes the far better shape of new interests and change of occupation. I hope the writer observed that side by side with his letter in The Times appeared some Continental programmes. If he was not too fatigued to glance at these, he probably saw that features of the kind to which he objects are a regular part of the evening's arrangements abroad. I hope the B.B.C. will not be influenced by grumblers, who, because they themselves are incapable of mental effort after 8 p.m., too readily assume that nobody else is.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The Choir-Training Examinations will be held as follows :

CHM. Diploma Examination on Tuesday, May 11 ; and the Certificate Examination on Wednesday, May 12.

Full particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

Free Lectures on Choir-Training will be given at Exeter and York. Dates, &c., will be announced in our March issue.

H. A. Harding, Hon. Secretary.

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JANUARY, 1926

Andrew, N., Ashton-under-Lyne.
Baggarley, L. H., London.
Harland, A. G., London.
Mendham, G. L., Bristol.
Smith, E. A., Harpenden. (Lafontaine Prize.)

No award was made of the Fellowship Turpin Prize.

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, 1926.

Bennett, J. R., Barry, Glam.
Brown, H. P. D., Musselburgh.
Burdett, S. J., Nottingham.
Chapman, E. T., Blisworth.
Cooke, Miss J. P. H., Chesham Bois. (Lafontaine Prize.)
Curtis, W. E., London.
Davies, G. I., Cardiff.
Farmer, W., Barnsley.
Hart, H., Rugby.
Heron, T. E., Ecclesall.
Hobden, C. J., Brighton.
Hollinrake, H., Cambridge.
Hopkins, E. C., Portsmouth.
Hurst, W. H. E., Bicester.
Ingall, E. W. G., Birmingham.
Lewis, Miss E. M., Newport.
Lush, J. H., Cambridge.
McCready, G. S., Hillsborough, Co. Down.
Osmond, C. E., Salisbury.
Reid, Miss A. D., Glasgow.
Richards, J. D. Y., London.
Rimmer, A., Bryn, near Wigan.
Roberts, R. H., Penmaenmaur.
Snowdon, W. L., Carlisle.
Sproson, E. J., Congleton.
Stapylton, R. H., Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Surplice, R. A., Windsor.
Wadsworth, H. L., Walkden.
West, L., Huddersfield.
Williams, D. S., London. (Sawyer Prize.)

Alan W. Shindler, Registrar.

[The President's Address at the Diploma Distribution, Examiners' Reports, &c., will appear in our next issue.—Editor.]

A HYMN-TUNE BLACK LIST

In the current issue of the quarterly Record of the National Union of Organists' Associations appears a Black List of hymn-tunes drawn up by the Bournemouth Branch of the society. Like all such lists it is provocative, and includes some tunes that many musicians of good taste would be sorry to see scrapped. For example, we have always regarded 'London New' as a fine tune, especially in its original form ; and the same may be said of 'York' and 'St. David.' Nor do we think such tunes as Gauntlett's 'St. Albinus' or Turton's 'Ely' can be called bad. Perhaps it needs some courage to put in a good word for Dykes and Barnby, but we can screw up enough to say that we do not object to the former's 'Hollingside' or the latter's 'Laudes Domini.' Even Dykes's 'Melita,' so far from being a bad tune, only just misses being a very good one : the rising of the melody by semitones in the seventh line just weakens it, and there are too many dominant sevenths in the harmony. But if congregations never sang worse tunes than the three last-named there would be little cause for complaint on the score of quality. There are dozens of worse tunes in the 'English Hymnal,' and we have even found them chosen and praised by organists to whom the names of Dykes and Barnby are anathema. The fact is, there is a good deal of snobbishness in this matter, as in other departments of music, and hymn-tunes, like larger works, are blessed or damned not on their merits, but according to the vogue of their composers. However, we agree with the Bournemouth Black List save in regard to the above exceptions and one other—Shrubsole's 'Miles Lane.' Tunes of this type have their place, and if we had to choose between Shrubsole's tune and many a German Chorale whose age and ancestry were a poor substitute for melodic enterprise, our hand would go up for 'Miles Lane.' The Bournemouth committee added a shorter list of tunes 'retained by majority vote,' from which it appears that Dykes's 'St. Oswald' survived attack, though it is surely a less good tune than 'Hollingside.' The list will no doubt be keenly scrutinised by readers of the Record, and should lead to profitable discussion. We suggest that branches might spend a useful (and lively) evening going over it, with arguments pro and con, the disputants being compelled to give solid, musical reasons for their opinion. For example, an opponent of Joseph Parry's 'Aberystwyth' (which has of late superseded 'Hollingside' for 193 A. & M.) might truly say that it is not a good tune because of the deadly stagnation of its first half : lines 1 to 4 are poor melodically because they hang too much round the tonic and its third ; lines 1, 3, and 4 all end with a full close in the tonic, and even employ exactly the same form of cadence ; the tune then wakes up for lines 5, 6, and 7, returning to the overworked opening phrase for line 8. The general impression is of dullness and monotony. It is not bad enough for a Black List, but if a Grey or Piebald List were compiled it would qualify. Its faults would have been unsparingly pointed out long ago had it been written by a Victorian Englishman instead of by a Welshman.

A discussion on such lines as this would be valuable in many ways. For one thing it would prove that, contrary to general opinion, one can as a rule distinguish between a good and bad tune as easily as between a good and bad egg, although the evidence in the latter case is of course more powerful and convincing.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson played the organ at St. Mary's, South Benfleet, on January 6, at a service celebrating the completion of the repairing and refurnishing of a portion of the Church, and the rebuilding of the organ and its removal to the West Gallery. The work has been carried out under the direction of Sir Charles Nicholson and his two brothers as a memorial to their father and mother, who formerly resided in the parish. Choristers from Westminster Abbey took part in the service, and Mr. Nicholson played the Overture to 'Samson,' Bach's Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake,' and the 'St. Anne' Prelude and Fugue.

A successful hymn festival was held at Trowbridge Parish Church on December 19, under the auspices of Trowbridge, Devizes, and District Branch of the Salisbury Diocesan Organists' Association. The Festival was conducted by Mr. A. S. Warrell, of Bristol, who brought a small choir with him; Mr. A. E. Howell was at the organ. Subsequently Mr. Warrell gave a lecture on 'The Musical Interest and Congregational Singing.'

At St. Alban's Abbey, on December 15, the St. Alban's Bach Choir, conducted by Mr. W. L. Luttman, gave an excellent performance of Bach's 'Hundredth Psalm,' Handel's sixth 'Chandos' Anthem, and Holst's Two Psalms. There was a small but efficient orchestra; and Dr. Harold Darke was at the organ, playing before and after the service Mozart's Fantasia in F minor, Bach's 'In dulci Jubilo,' and the Toccata from Rheinberger's C major Sonata.

The second number of the Rotunda, published by Messrs. Henry Willis, is to be greatly enlarged, and will appear towards the end of February. It will include articles by Mr. G. D. Cunningham, M. Marcel Dupré, Mr. H. F. Ellingford, and Mr. Harvey Grace, and a complete and revised specification of Liverpool Cathedral organ.

At the musical service at Southwark Cathedral on February 20 (3 p.m.) the programme will consist of Parry's 'Job' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Walford Davies's 'Men and Angels,' and the first movement of Brahms's Symphony in F. Admission is free, but a limited number of seats are reserved, tickets for which may be had from the Precentor, The Rectory, Sumner Street, S.E.1. (Stamped addressed envelope.)

At St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, on November 28 (St. Cecilia's Day), Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' was sung by the choir of thirty-five boys and twenty-five men, conducted by Dr. Albert Ham. It is intended to make this St. Cecilia's Day service an annual event.

'Judas Maccabæus' was sung at Trinity Wesleyan Church, Macclesfield, on December 13. Mr. Ryley, organist of Trinity Church, had trained the choir, and accompanied the performance, the conducting being in the hands of Mr. Mitchell, of Manchester.

A fine record of service is that of Mr. John Greenwood, of Seamer, near Scarborough, who has just completed his sixty-eighth year as a member of the choir of St. Martin's Church, Seamer. Nine other members of his family are in the choir, and his grandson is organist.

The dedication of the new organ at Gateshead Parish Church took place on December 17, Mr. J. M. Preston giving the opening recital. His programme included Jongen's 'Prayer,' Lemare's Variations on 'Hanover,' and the Finale from Vierne's first Symphony.

At Horsell Parish Church, on December 14, the Musical Society sang Dale's 'Before the Paling of the Stars' and Mozart's twelfth Mass. Mr. H. Scott Baker conducted, and Mr. Ivor Jones was at the organ.

On December 23 the Banbury Choral Union sang in the Parish Church, Parts 1, 2, and 3 of the 'Christmas' Oratorio. Mr. C. R. Palmer conducted, and Mr. Eric Gritton did fine work as organist.

At Mutley Baptist Church, Plymouth, on December 27, 'Judas Maccabæus' was sung by the Oratorio Choir under the conductorship of Mr. Percy E. Butchers, with Mr. Harold Dyer-Smith accompanying on the organ.

'Judas Maccabæus' was sung at Hinton Baptist Church on January 14 by the Chesham (Bucks) Oratorio Choir, over a hundred strong, with orchestra. Mr. R. B. Green conducted. There was a crowded audience.

C. W. Pearce's Christmas Cantata was recently sung at St. Peter's Wesleyan Church, Norwich. Mr. Leonard G. Allen conducted, and Mr. William J. Martin accompanied.

Parts 1 and 2 of the Christmas Oratorio were sung at Truro Cathedral, by the Cathedral Choir, on December 14, under the direction of Mr. Hubert S. Middleton.

'Elijah' was recently sung by the Potteries Choral Society at St. Paul's, Burslem. Mr. A. E. Green directed an excellent performance from the organ.

Organ recitals will be given at Battersea Polytechnic on February 10 and 17 at 8 p.m., the players being Mr. E. T. Cook and Dr. Herbert Hickox.

We regret that space does not permit of our making use of the numerous reports of carol services and 'Messiah' performances that readers have kindly sent.

RECITALS

Mr. A. E. Howell, Parish Church, Trowbridge—Scherzetto, Vierne; Sonata No. 10 (Fantasie and Finale), Rheinberger; Postlude in C, Alcock; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; 'Noon,' Martin Shaw; Scherzo in F minor, Sandiford Turner; Cantilène in A flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Stephen's Walbrook—March in B flat, Silas; Sonate Pascale, Lemmens; Overture, 'Athaliah,' Handel; Grand Chœur Dialogué, Gigout.

Master Godfrey Hewitt, Castleford Road Primitive Methodist Church, Normanton — Fantasia-Sonata in A flat, Rheinberger; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Preludes on 'Darwall's 148th' and 'St. Peter,' Darke; Postlude in D minor, Stanford.

Miss Doris Fenner, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—Visione, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Adagio, Frank Bridge; Postlude in G, Stanford.

Mr. Allan Fortune, Ingrow Parish Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Chorale Preludes by Bach and Parry; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. Owen Franklin, St. Lawrence Jewry—Postlude and Fugue in C, Bach; Adagio, Mozart; Choral No. 1, Franck; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Martin-at-Ludgate—Introduction and Allegro in C minor, Greene; Concerto No. 4, Stanley; Concerto No. 3 (Con spirito), Arne; Concerto No. 4 (Allegro), Dupuis.

Mr. F. Dalrymple, Tredegarville Baptist Church, Cardiff—Introduction and Passacaglia, Reger; Andante (Sonata No. 4), Trio in C minor, and Toccata in F, Bach; Rhapsody No. 2, Howells; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Wretham Road New Church, Handsworth—Fugue in D, Bach; Liebstraume No. 3, Liszt; Epinikion, Rootham.

Mr. W. J. Comley, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—Sonata No. 8 (Introduction and Passacaglia), Rheinberger; Chorale Preludes by Bach and Parry; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Finale (Symphony No. 4), Vierne.

Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Mary-le-Bow—Sonata No. 18, Rheinberger; Cradle Song, Grace; Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor.

Rev. L. G. Bark, Christ Church, Penrith—Fantasia-Sonata in A flat, Rheinberger; Concerto No. 10, Handel; Rhapsodie, Saint-Saëns.

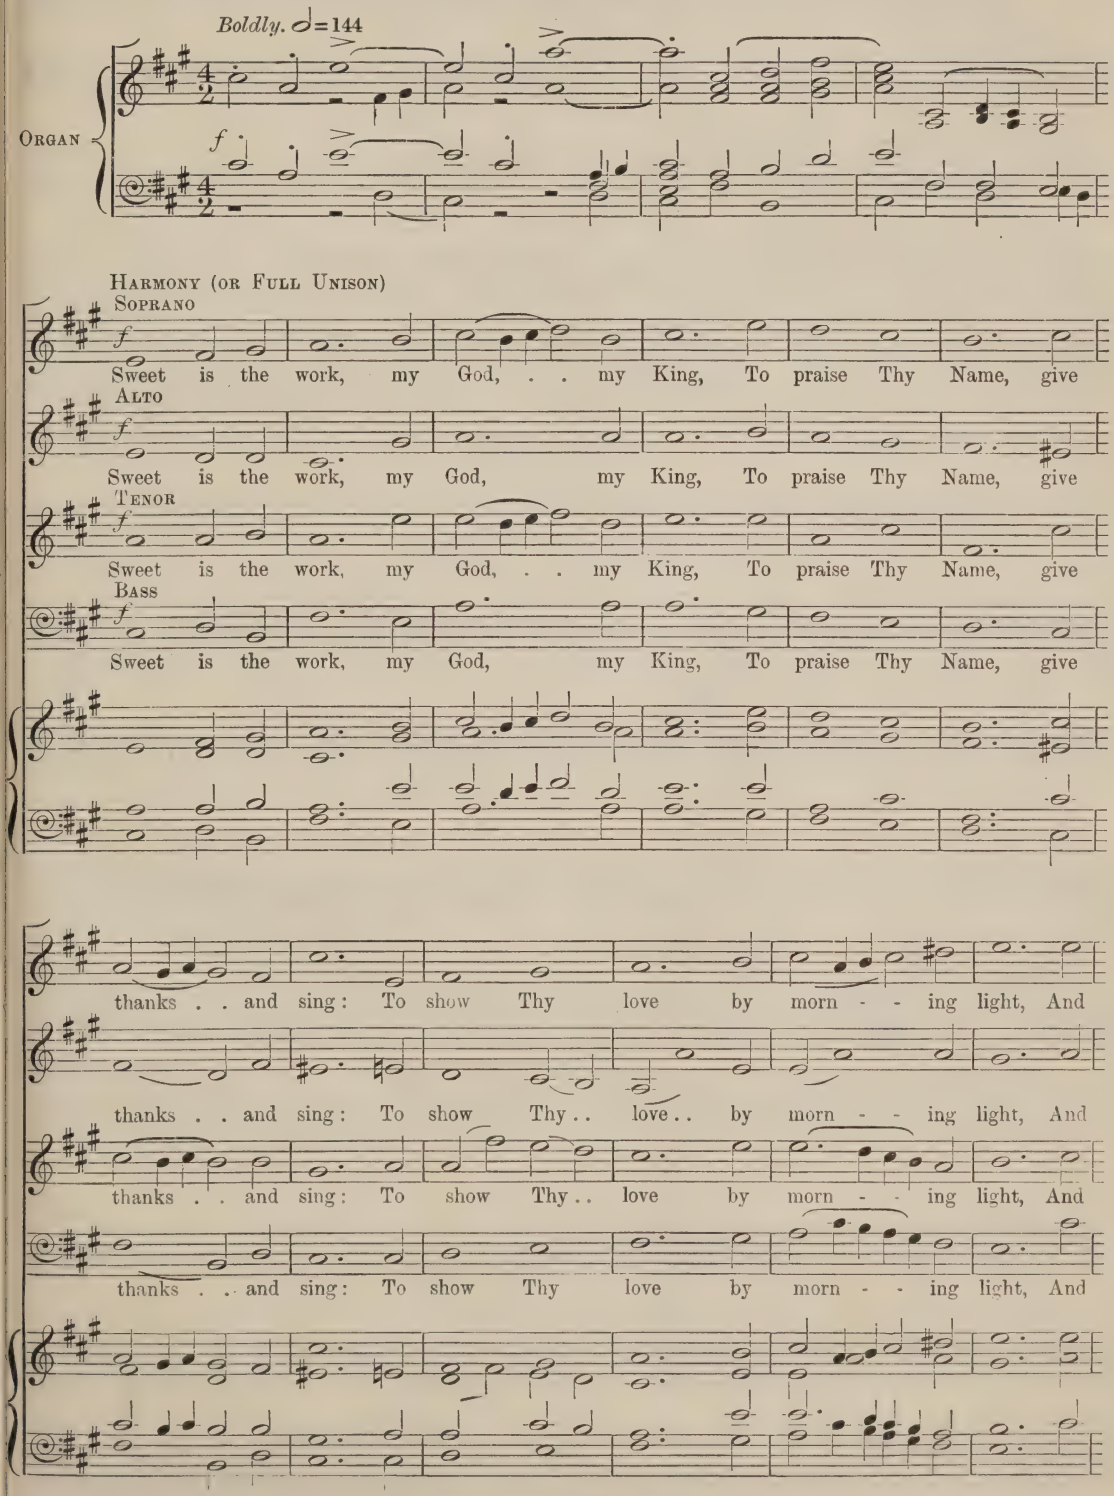
Miss Emmie Bowman, Christ Church, Penrith—Sonata No. 3, Rheinberger; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; 'From Hebrid Seas,' Julian Nesbitt; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Sweet is the work

HYMN-ANTHEM

Words by ISAAC WATTS Music by R. WALKER ROBSON

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Boldly. ♩=144
ORGAN
HARMONY (OR FULL UNISON)
SOPRANO
Sweet is the work, my God, . . my King, To praise Thy Name, give
ALTO
Sweet is the work, my God, my King, To praise Thy Name, give
TENOR
Sweet is the work, my God, . . my King, To praise Thy Name, give
BASS
Sweet is the work, my God, my King, To praise Thy Name, give thanks . . and sing: To show Thy love by morn - - ing light, And thanks . . and sing: To show Thy . . love . . by morn - - ing light, And thanks . . and sing: To show Thy . . love by morn - - ing light, And thanks . . and sing: To show Thy love by morn - - ing light, And

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

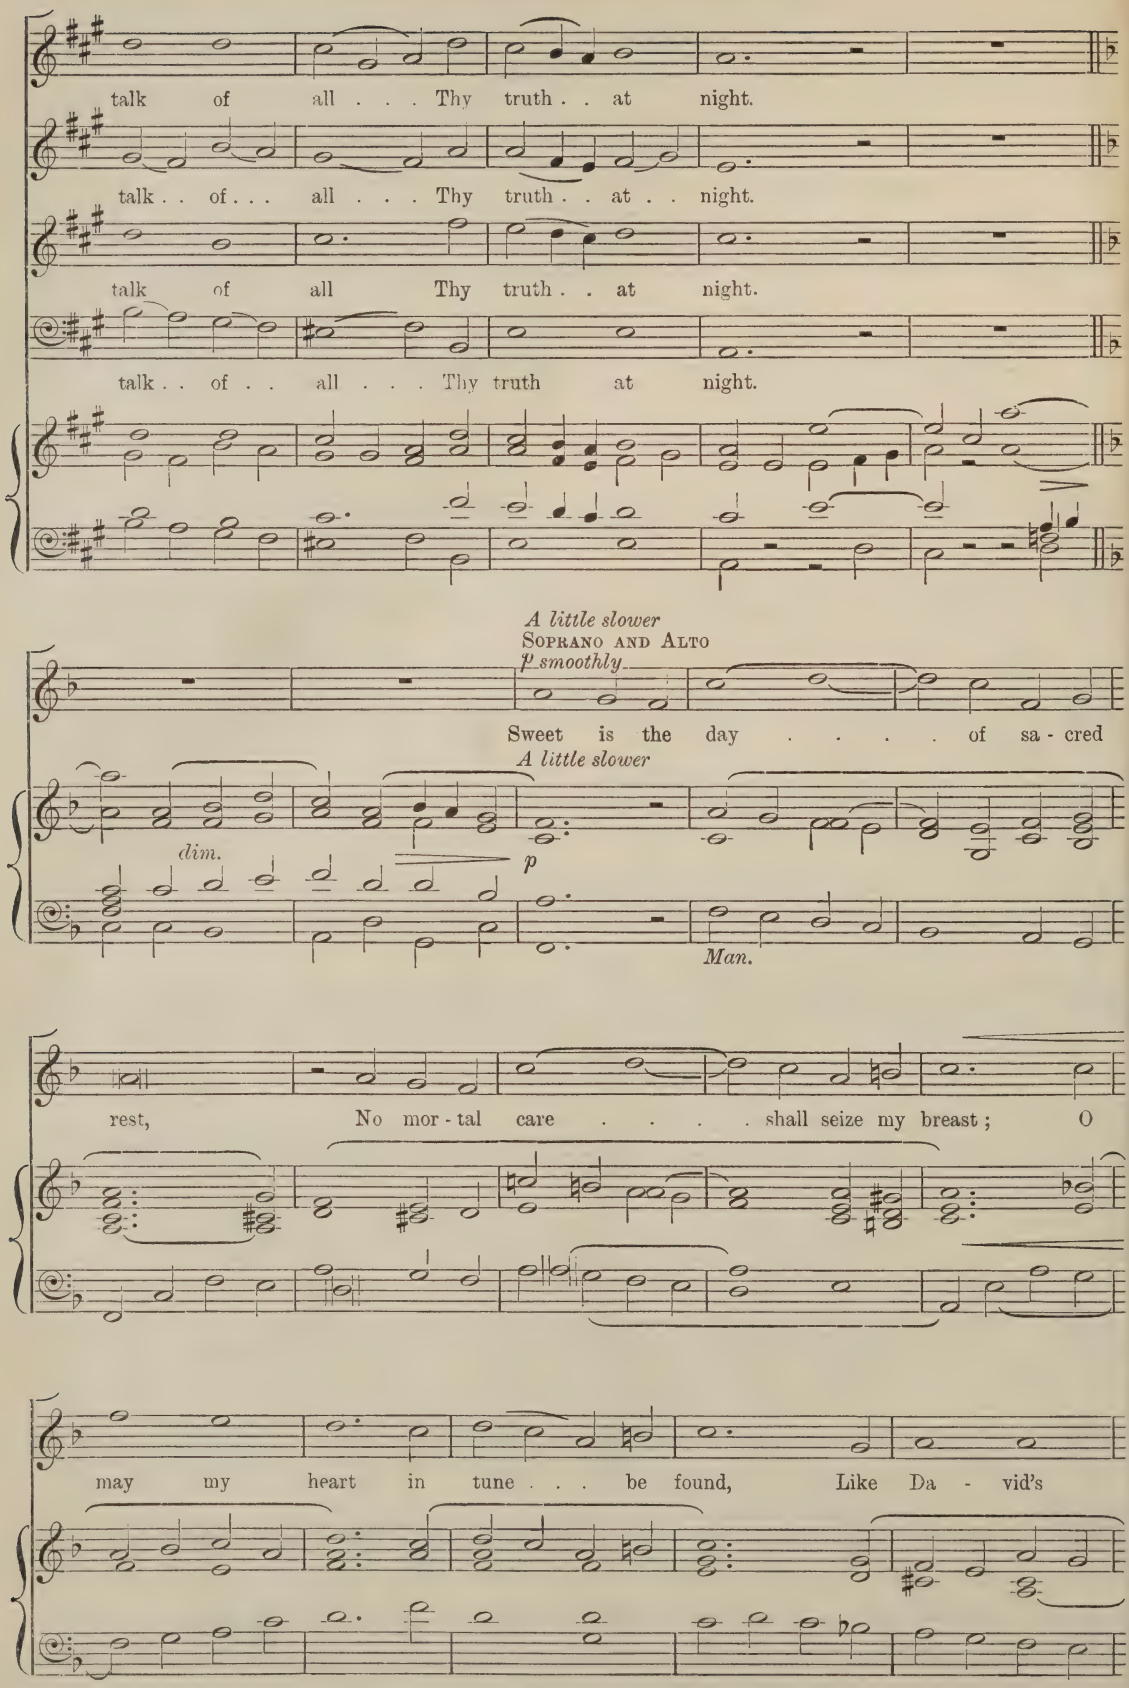
MADE IN ENGLAND



talk of all . . . Thy truth . . at night.
talk . . of . . . all . . . Thy truth . . at . . night.
talk of all Thy truth . . at night.
talk . . of . . all . . . Thy truth at night.
A little slower
Soprano and Alto
p smoothly
Sweet is the day . . . . of sa - cred
A little slower
dim.
p
Man.
rest, No mor - tal care . . . . shall seize my breast; O may my heart in tune . . . be found, Like Da - vid's

cres.
harp of sol - emn sound. And I shall share a glo - - rious
Ped.
p part When grace hath well . . re - fined my heart, And
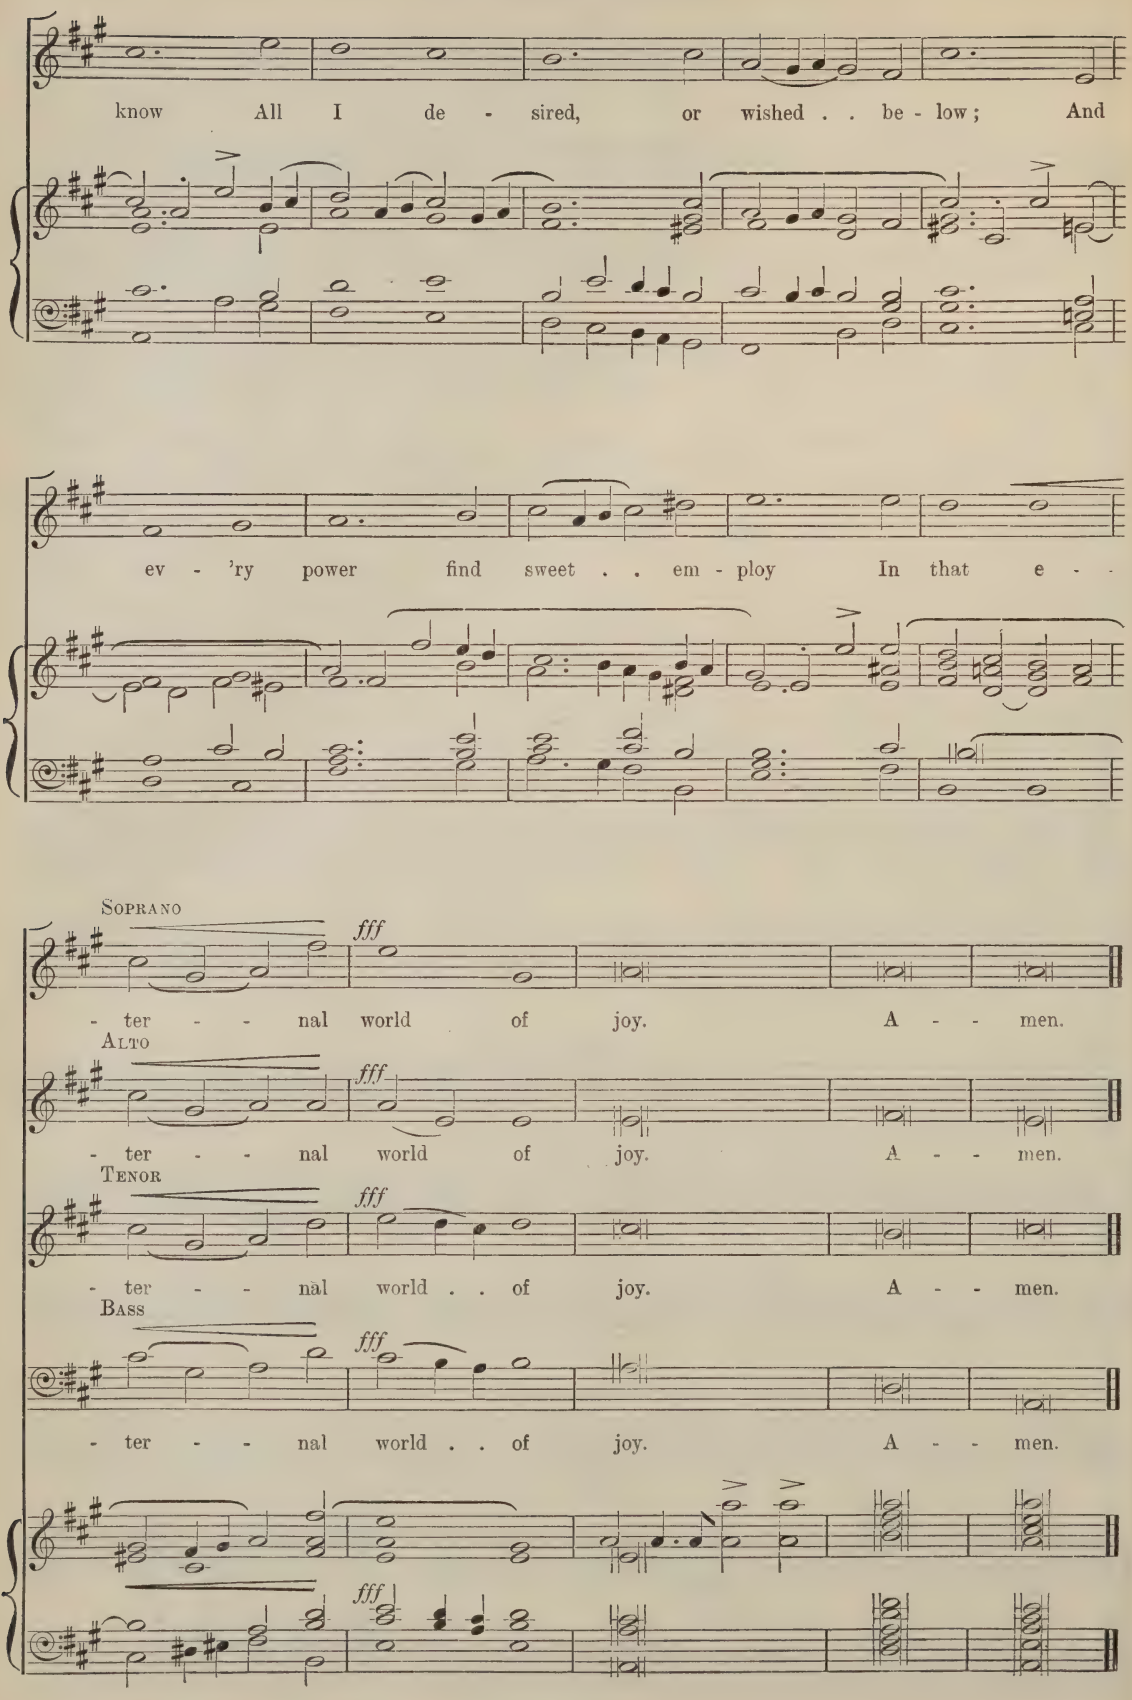
p sweet . . sup - plies . . . . of joy are shed
Like ho - ly oil . . . . to cheer my head.
f
Full. Unison
ff
Then shall I see, and hear . . and
ff



know All I de - sired, or wished . . be - low; And ev - 'ry power find sweet . . em - ploy In that e - -
Soprano
fff
- ter - - nal world of joy. A - - men.
Alto
fff
- ter - - nal world of joy. A - - men.
Tenor
fff
- ter - - nal world . . of joy. A - - men.
Bass
fff
- ter - - nal world . . of joy. A - - men.
fff

Mr. Allan Brown, City Temple—Elegy, Bairstow; Schiller March, Meyerbeer; Prelude on the Old 104th, Parry; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Adagio and Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Concerto No. 8 (Finale), Handel; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Allegro non troppo and Benedictus, Stanford; Funeral March, Guilmant.

Miss Edna C. Howard, Christ Church, Bootle—Andante Espressivo, Elgar; Allegro, Widor; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue on the name B A C H, Liszt; Prelude on 'Hanover,' Parry.

Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Saviour's, Ealing—Prelude and Fugue in C, Saint-Saëns; Variations on 'Heartsease,' Geoffrey Shaw; Choral, Boëllmann; Passacaglia in E flat minor, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Oliver H. Edwards, Princes Road Welsh Presbyterian Church, Liverpool—Symphony in D, Haydn; Christmas Pastorale, Luard-Selby; Fantasy on two Christmas Carols, John E. West; Prelude on 'In Dulci Jubilo,' Bach.

Mr. Archibald Farmer, St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church—Prelude on 'Old 104th,' Parry; Vivace (Sonata No. 2), Bach; Lamento, Barié; Scherzoso (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger.

Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, Church of the Holy Communion, New York—Rhapsody in D flat, Howells; 'Symphonie de la Passion,' Maleingreau; 'The Sea,' Herbert Arnold Smith; Symphony No. 5, Vierne; Christmas Postlude, Grace; 'Adeste Fideles' ('Cathedral Windows'), Karg-Elert.

Mr. Stanley W. Hart, Cricklewood Congregational Church—The 'Great' G minor, Bach; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Fantasie in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Stanley Hemery, Camden Church, Peckham—Marche Solennelle, Lemare; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Chaconne, Purcell.

Mr. L. M. Jones, St. Lawrence Jewry—Introduction and Fugue in C minor, Benjamin Cooke; Rhapsody on Breton Noëls, Ropartz; Dithyramb, Harwood.

Mr. Stanley Lucas, South Croydon Congregational Church—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Homage Hymn, Alec Rowley; Impromptu, Alcock; Andante in D, Hollins; Elegy, Bairstow; and Chorale Preludes by Bach.

Mr. Ernest F. Mather, St. Mary-le-Bow—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Preludes on 'Old 136th,' Charles Wood, and 'Eventide,' Parry; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. Montague Matthews, Luton Parish Church—Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach; Rhapsody, Grace; Lament, Sowerbutts; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson.

Points from Lectures

Leaders of opinion are apt to overlook their silent listeners who may have fresher views than their own. Dr. W. G. Whittaker is not of this class. As he had a lecture in prospect on 'The Place of Music in Education,' he asked some of his Armstrong College students what they thought about it. At the Educational Conference, University College, London, he read extracts from the short essays received. One girl was attracted to music because of its enjoyableness, and for that reason she found many people discredited its value. Why, they asked, should anyone enjoy education? No subject, said another student, was better worth following up after leaving college than music. Another girl did not think of the future; she only knew she was having a good time. She found that the music student was at an advantage during the social functions at college, and, as to the music lectures, 'all sorts and conditions of students, even engineers, are found there.' Again, the study of musical history created an interest in all other forms of history. One student confessed that she had always been specially interested in poetry. More and more she had been led to study poetry when she took part in choral works, such as Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and Holst's 'Ode to a Grecian Urn.' The mating of words and music made both media more impressive.

The need for proper English diction, and not, e.g., waltzing through the Psalms, was one of the 'Needs of the Universities' urged by Dr. Cyril B. Rootham in his address to the Music-Masters' Association, which is the new title adopted by the Union of Directors of Music in Secondary Schools. Dr. Rootham would also like to see greater use made of the corps bands when boys came up to Oxford and Cambridge from the public schools. It was better to have even frightful noises at first, than to be without wind instruments. Besides listening to fine performances of first-rate music, old and new, undergraduates should make first-rate music for themselves, however poor their technique might be. First-rate music inspired them to give out their best. Above all, the Universities wanted undergraduates who, when they came up, knew the difference, at any rate, between good and bad music. When they realised this difference, they usually chose the good.

'The Music Teacher' was too simple a title to represent the thoughtful paper given by Mr. J. B. McEwen, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, at the Educational Conference. Speaking of the fine arts, he placed architecture, painting, and sculpture in one group; literature and music in another. Music, in its short course of, say, three hundred years, went in a contrary direction to literature. The fact that the mediæval musician never conveyed emotional significance was not fully realised. The centre of gravity had since developed from form to content. Economising the imparting of knowledge, the teacher started with experience, and the peculiar value of the teacher was that he systematised the corpus of this experience. The abstract principles of psychology, helpful as they were, must be supplemented by something derived from the fundamentals of our art. The music teacher's special problem was the stimulation of the impulses.

Sibelius was limned faithfully to a crowded hall of students and friends of Trinity College of Music, at the inauguration of the term, by Prof. Granville Bantock, in a reminiscent address. Sibelius we saw tall, erect, self-assertive, dreamy, looking far over the waters of the lake near his forest home in the neighbourhood of Helsingfors. His music was like the man, iron-willed, original, indeed stern, and drawing directly from nature, he reflected the mood of the country, the rolling mists and fogs which remained over a land of lakes, islands, and forests. Yet Sibelius never used folk-song definitely, although some of his music, e.g., the well-known melody in 'Finlandia,' had been accepted as folk-song. Prof. Bantock was the first Englishman to greet Sibelius on his visit to this country, and a mixture of German and French eked out their conversation. At the Liverpool Philharmonic, on Prof. Bantock's invitation, Sibelius conducted his first Symphony, also 'Finlandia' and the 'Tevastefest.' Three other visits to this country were described. His six Symphonies were of a high order, and these and other works mentioned ought to be as well known in this country as they were on the Continent and in America.

With the new men experimenting in tonality, Mr. Percival Garrett has little patience. Such men, he said in a lecture at Palmers Green, grunted their way through music as a pig through a flower garden. This lecture had the advantage of association with M. Louis Godowsky in an illustrative programme. Mr. Garrett drew attention to the strong vein of parody running through some of the pieces played, especially in the selections from Ravel, Poulenc, and Milhaud. The modern mind was reaching out into undiscovered spheres of sound, and it could be understood that some of the prophets of to-day were inclined to poke fun at certain of the old stock types of musical expression. Thus, in 'Tzigane,' Ravel parodied the chief features of the over-familiar Hungarian Rhapsodies and Fantasias. Milhaud in his 'Rag Caprice' parodied the sentimental romance of the 19th century. Poulenc, in a very impudent and amusing Waltz, caricatured the commonplace bass part of the average waltz.

In Beethoven's music we found three essentials, said Sir Walford Davies in a lecture at Carlisle on 'Music and Human Nature'—rhythm turned into disciplined action, fine form, and an air of something akin to mystery. Beethoven commenced a new era in music at a time when things had become pompous and formal. Beethoven broke that down, and Vaughan Williams and Holst were doing very much the same to-day.

If certain things quickened our pulse, we might as well own up to it. In such fashion Prof. T. H. Pear, of Manchester University, illuminated his remarks at Liverpool on 'The Psychology of Music Appreciation.' The person who never experienced bodily thrills must be a rather miserable creature. People who talked about swooning with excitement, or feeling ten years' younger when they heard certain music, were regarded with a certain amount of contempt by the highest critics; but after all, they were the people for whom music was originally invented. Not long ago, said Prof. Pear, he had a train conversation with a Norfolk farmer, who told him that the possession of a wireless set for about six months had introduced him to Beethoven, Bach, and Debussy. That farmer spoke of those composers with bated breath, although he knew practically nothing about music technically. There was nothing in painting, sculpture, or literature that made such an extremely direct appeal to the young child as rhythm in music.

'What is the use of Music?' was the intriguing title of a delightful address given at Wigan by Mr. Arthur Hirst, an experienced lecturer. Brief answers were: music's pure pleasure, its utilitarian side in the teaching of music, the financial gain commanded by a musical genius, but, more important, music was actually a healing agent. Touching examples were given of the lecturer's experiences. The superintendent of a mental hospital said that the therapeutic value of music was beyond measure. Restless as mental patients were, Mr. Hirst found them very attentive. One man he noticed was sitting apart, gloomily dark and frowning, but at the end of the lecture there was not a furrow on his brow. He looked like a man who had had a great weight lifted from his mind, and he stepped forward to shake hands, saying that he had never had such an enjoyable evening in his life. The expression on his face showed an entire change, as if a completely new spirit had entered into him. The stimulus of music Mr. Hirst also illustrated by a little girl, listless in all her studies. Her teacher tried playing to her, and thus was a latent talent discovered, with the result that the girl improved also in every other subject. Music was a noble agent; it reached the heart, and taught us that hearts were the same all over the world. The Swedes were a great music-loving people. Some time ago, when lecturing at Stockholm, Mr. Hirst had said that music was an impressive international language, and would play a large part in time to come in the affairs of the world. Following upon this remark, his audience stood up and cheered.

Spanish customs and music were subjects of personal knowledge on the part of Dr. William Starkie, and owing to this known fact many persons were unable to gain admittance to his lecture at Rathmines Town Hall. One of his points confirmed a prevalent opinion regarding Bizet's music:

> Carmen was really a libel on the southern Spanish woman. The gipsy woman was not the slightest bit like Carmen. Carmen had a French touch of light opera about her; she was passionate and fiery, but the gitana was rather reserved and was altogether a Moorish type. In a way Spain was the most dance-mad country in the world. Melody or accompaniment did not count in the dance, rhythm being the chief thing.

Memory training is a strong feature of that stimulating lecturer, Mr. H. Ernest Hunt. At Liverpool he said that bodily health was necessary in all mental work. Many people linked work with boredom; if they linked it with pleasure, they would be stimulated. Efforts to memorise music often failed because the pupil had no knowledge of harmony and form, but simply tried to remember the notes. Too much routine keyboard practice tended to make one stale, and should be relieved by mental practice, which exercised the imagination, kept one alive, and in the end produced better technique than exclusive reliance upon the old method.

Singleness of purpose in music, Dr. Bairstow told a meeting of women at York, should be sought by people who wished to appreciate the art. Most listeners missed the best in music—the wonderful moments of intense inspiration and the flashes of genius of the great masters. Their minds were distracted by selfish or material thoughts; they had lost the child-heart. Some composers, too, were distracted by the motive of trying to startle and to be modern. Others wanted to be conventional in music, and the deepest and biggest things of all were taken away by their smooth politeness. Personality was necessary in music. The worst distraction was the fear of technique or of making a mistake, as if a mistake were a crime. People went to a concert to hear the performer rather than the music, and by riveting their attention on the singer's voice they did not get to know what the music was about.

Unlike Sir Walford Davies, who was unappreciative of the pianola in a recent lecture, Mr. C. H. Gore used two pianolas (one having the Duo-Art rolls) in the course of his lecture on 'Rhythm and Design,' at Hull Royal Institution. He remarked that to play the instrument properly required continuous and intelligent application of both hands and feet. He was once informed by a young lady that she could play the pianola and knit at the same time. To illustrate the counterpoint of two tunes of the same rhythm and metre, the audience sang 'The Old Folks at Home,' while a choir vocalised Dvorák's 'Humoreske.'

J. G.

At Battersea Polytechnic, on February 24, at 8.0, Prof. P. C. Buck will give a lecture-recital on 'Listening to Music.'

London Concerts

THE L.S.O.

The L.S.O. began the new year in great style. Sir Thomas Beecham was the conductor at the concert on January 18, and Arthur Catterall the soloist. Both gave performances which will be remembered. Sir Thomas began with a little-known Overture of Mozart written for the comic-opera 'L'Impresario'—not perhaps Mozart at his greatest, but unquestionably Mozart. Of this the conductor gave a reading full of colour and vitality, but also wonderfully clear. There was only one passage in which the first violins led the rest of the strings by rather less than half a semiquaver. But this was the exception. The unanimity, generally speaking, was impeccable here as in Delius's finely-wrought symphonic poem 'In a Summer Garden.' Then came Mr. Arthur Catterall, who had chosen for the occasion one of the most trying of all Violin Concertos—that of Brahms. It still provides the final test of violin playing and interpretation, and Catterall came through with flying colours. The exquisite charm of his phrasing in the Adagio and in all the tender episodes of the first movement told with extraordinary effect, and the audience was roused to such enthusiasm as is seldom seen, except in the case of favourites of long standing. This, however, is only the most obvious feature of his performance. More important, perhaps, was the revelation of an exceedingly fine, sensitive temperament allied to technical skill of the very highest order. It was a delight to watch Catterall take the hurdles one after another—and they are pretty stiff—with the confidence of consummate mastery and perfect understanding. And the delight was enhanced by a modesty of demeanour one could not praise too highly. Up till now the absence of anything like pose may have been mistaken for want of a personal style; this wonderful performance must kill that legend conclusively. Incidentally it may be noted that the ensemble and the understanding between the soloist and the orchestra conducted by Sir Thomas were flawless—which was far from being the case a little while ago when the Brahms Concerto was accompanied by the orchestra under Bruno Walter.

After the interval came the second Symphony of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini.' Sir Thomas Beecham showed how easily a strong individual style can enliven and bring out the many excellences of this seldom-played Symphony. Indeed, it was such a performance as may be described as a re-discovery, for there must have been many in that packed hall who enjoyed it for the first time. It brought to the conductor and his orchestra the most hearty acknowledgment, as did also the fine frenzy of Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca.' Altogether one of the few concerts in which the expectations aroused by a well-arranged programme are surpassed by a wholly admirable performance. B. V.

NEW SUNDAY CONCERTS

The last person in the world to be suspected of unrealised ambitions is Sir Landon Ronald. The head of an important school of music, composer of 'Down in the forest,' applauded after-dinner speaker, creditably remembered by Madame Melba in her 'Memoirs'—such a man would surely seem an object of envy to the many who, unknown to fame and to Madame Melba, desire 'this man's art and that man's scope.' Well, it is never safe to envy anybody, and Sir Landon Ronald, it appears, has been nursing a secret grievance for some years against fate (or was it the committee?) which put an end to his orchestral concerts at the Albert Hall. Fortunately, for him and for us, the National Sunday League consists of men who can grasp their opportunity, and with their collaboration a new series of popular orchestral concerts has been started at the Palladium which gives Sir Landon his coveted wish. Evidently these Sunday afternoon concerts were wanted, and the Palladium was packed both on January 10 and 17, when Sir Landon conducted the kind of programme which is popular enough to appeal to the masses, yet so distinguished and unhackneyed as to attract the most discriminating amateur. The first concert began with the 'Mastersingers' Overture (the whole programme was devoted to Wagner), and the interpretation given by the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra and its conductor was typical of the rest. It was competent and confident, devoid alike of gross error and the frills of virtuosity. A couple of Arias from the early operas provided the necessary relief from the orchestral music. Equally well chosen was the second programme, in which also the soloist played a more important part, for Schumann's Concerto outweighs by far any early Wagnerian Aria. The interpreter of the solo part was Miss Irene Scharrer. She seemed a little uneasy in the first movement, but in the second, and still more in the third, her easy command of the keyboard was as evident as her understanding of this most intimate music. The most brilliant orchestral performance on this occasion was in Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier'—all the effective, if not particularly subtle points, were well realised. At the third concert the Secretary of the Sunday League announced, as was to be expected, that the series will be continued—much to the delight of the audience. These concerts seem destined to become the winter counterpart to the 'Proms.' B. V.

SAMUEL KUTCHER

The recital of Mr. Samuel Kutcher at Wigmore Hall, on January 11, was robbed of some of its interest owing to the withdrawal, at the last moment, of Mr. Josef Holbrooke's new Pianoforte and Violin Sonata. No reasons were given for this action, and we are left to surmise as to its possible or probable cause. Was it caprice, or some last-hour artistic scruple—or merely the determination to surprise the audience at all cost? No doubt when Mr. Holbrooke comes to write his memoirs we shall be told all about it.

Failing Holbrooke, the place of honour fell to a Trio by Pierné at the very end of the programme, which was well-played by Mr. Kutcher, Miss May Mukle, and Mr. Adolphe Hallis. As a composition, however, it was more interesting than convincing, since Pierné knows far better how to whip up our interest than to satisfy it. The rest consisted entirely of violin pieces, apart from a very early Sonatensatz of Brahms, which the recitalist had to substitute for the novelty. How far these performances will enhance Mr. Kutcher's reputation is a debatable point. He is known as a quartet leader of some ability, and we did not require the evidence of such tests as Kreisler's arrangements offer, to guess that his technique is equal to any reasonable demand. In Vitali's Chaconne, however, Mr. Kutcher laid himself open to criticism. His too frequent use of the upper part of the bow, the abuse of portamento and vibrato, gave to the music a touch of effeminacy which is the very last thing it can stand. It was a performance which repeated to perfection the least admirable qualities in the playing of Kreisler. Mr. Kutcher can do, and will do, better than this as soon as he realises the value of simplicity and directness of expression.

B. V.

Railway Clearing House Musical Society

The male-voice choir of the Railway Clearing House Musical Society, conducted by Mr. John E. West, sang at King George's Hall (Central Y.M.C.A.), on January 6. A complete programme by such a choir offers an obvious difficulty—the repertory is limited, and if the music is not interesting the dark colour of unrelieved men's voices becomes monotonous. The conductor found a good way out. He re-arranged a number of first-class pieces composed for mixed voices, and did so effectively. Thus the first group consisted of madrigals by Festa, Wilbye, and Weelkes, and later the choir sang an arrangement of Pearsall's 'In Dulci Jubilo,' in which the beautiful piano tone of the voices captivated the audience. Care for good tone is indeed a characteristic of this choir, and they concentrated on it even at the expense of rhythmical vigour in Elgar's 'Zut! Zut!' (which was taken a little too quickly for the words to tell) and Bax's 'Boar's Head' Carol. Two of Vaughan Williams's folk-songs were good to hear, and a glee, 'Some of my heroes,' by R. J. Stevens (1753-1837), was a pleasant echo of the past. Several good soloists added to the evening's entertainment.

K.

Some Singers of the Month

Miss Dorothy Silk's Bach concert on January 14 drew a full audience in spite of snow and slush, and we were rewarded with two hours of high pleasure. Miss Silk is certainly one of the singers of the day whose name will live. There must be many listeners, both aspiring students and amateurs, who are taking to heart the lessons of her style—so purely musical a style, so loyal to the composer. Her influence will be all in favour of unforced tone, deep-felt but modest expression, elegant phrasing, and unselfish devotion to the music in hand. Her art is to-day at its best, and is only slighted by those whose one musical pleasure is to listen-in, so to speak, to the remembered singing of a long distant past. Miss Silk began her concert with the Cantata No. 52 (solo), sung in English as 'Hateful world, no more of thee.' She also sang 'Comfort sweet, my Jesus comes,' and, with Mr. Frederick Ranalow, the 'Peasant' Cantata, in which we get Bach for once in definitely mundane vein. In several of the Peasant songs there was a chance for the peculiarly genial turn of expression in Mr. Ranalow's art. He also sang the great D major air from the 'Christmas' Oratorio, and sang it right well, though he published his cautiousness concerning the top E's. This delightful evening was helped by Mr. Harold Samuel's pianoforte playing, and the accompanying of Dr. Darke and the 'Hermitage' Quartet.

Mr. Yosié Fuji-Wara, a Japanese tenor, who sang on January 6, showed us that Eastern notions of pleasant singing are much like Western ones, that is, if his style is to be taken as at all national. If we had heard without seeing him we should never have guessed his ever having been farther East than Brindisi. He sang with a typically Italian lyric voice of the order which delights in the spinning of tones and in tendril-like decorations. Mr. McCormack is the supreme model of the sort. Mr. Fuji-Wara's singing was of a beauty that satisfied well for twenty minutes or half-an-hour. After that, the listener felt he knew all that this suave, glib voice could tell him, and the effect became cloying. In English songs the singer was struggling with an unknown language, but he was at ease in some Japanese ditties. These were charmingly pretty, but had surely been much Westernised. The ear was too little surprised to be convinced of their genuine Orientalism.

Madame Selma d'Arco and Mr. Maurice d'Oisly sang together at the Albert Hall. The former, a new-comer, began with 'Depuis le jour,' from 'Louise,' and proved herself no tyro. The performance was even a shade too 'precious,' but she must have good marks for her careful detail. Many another singer with as attractive a voice would not have troubled to raise another interest save beauty of tone. She deserves to be heard in better conditions. The hall was nearly empty, and the echo struck one aggressively. Mr. d'Oisly sang some Handel in a rather stiff and toneless way, but in French songs he interested us much more. His diction was quite exemplary.

Miss Megan Foster, at the New Chenil Galleries, sang a charming programme of songs for children and all 'who are merry at heart.' This dainty person matched manner and matter to a T. She is a fairy, a charmer, a rogue in porcelain.

'The Bohemian Girl,' at the Old Vic., was the dullest opera of the season there, and it was uninterestingly sung, but 'Carmen,' the next week, made up. Miss Constance Willis's performance of the termagant was one of the very best achievements of prèsent-day English opera. It was vividly animated and dramatic, and finely sung, ever though the voice was hardly of the proper darkness. The high notes rang out sonorously, the middle ones were equal, and if the lower were not particularly voluptuous they had real operatic power.

A correspondent has challenged me to declare in detail what English operatic singers I would choose, given carte blanche, for 'Aïda' and 'Rigoletto.' My answer is as follows:

Aïda	Florence Austral
Amneris	Muriel Brunskill or Edith Furmedge
Radames	Walter Widdop
Amonasro	Percy Heming
Ramfis	Norman Allin
The King	William Anderson
Priestess	Florence Parry
Gilda	Luella Paikin
Maddalena	Constance Willis
Rigoletto	Mostyn Thomas
Sparafucile	Norman Allin
The Duke	Heddle Nash
Monterone...	Frank Sale

H. J. K.

ENGLISH FOLK-DANCE FESTIVAL

The All-England Festival of Folk-Song and Dance at the Great Hall, London University (Imperial Institute), on January 1 and 2, assuredly marked a new and very encouraging stage in the recognition and vogue of Cecil Sharp's interesting movement. The only sad reflection was that the founder was not there to enjoy the enjoyment he had so happily bequeathed to all these young dancing men and maidens.

Dancing is, of all, a happy art, and none of its sorts is happier than these merry measures of old England, the revival of which has defied all the scoffers and all the sneers at the 'parish pump,' and is clearly going to count more and more towards the gaiety of the nation.

It was not a competitive festival, and it was hardly an exhibition in the way of the summer performances at King's Theatre, Hammersmith, by the London branch. The object was 'to give to folk-dancers from different parts of England an opportunity to meet and show their dancing to one another.' Accessorily, as many non-dancing spectators as could squeeze their way in were there, and, so far from wearying of so many hours of dancing, seemed never to have had enough. In truth, the folk-dances make a captivating spectacle, as the audiences of the Oriana Madrigal Society know well.

The strange thing is that it is still a half-secret pleasure. Not one in fifty men in the street could tell you what a Morris is. Yet, well danced by a team of sturdy, lissom young fellows, it makes a show that easily eclipses most conventional theatrical dancing, not to speak of the dreary ball-room measures of to-day. It is extraordinary that a theatre like the London Coliseum has not demonstrated to the millions what Morris dancing is, and how delightful. There were a dozen or more teams at the Festival worthy the attention of a Stoll or of a Diaghilev. Then the Morris-jigs (solo dances), as performed by Mr. William Kimber or Mr. Cameron (of the British Museum), were enough to bring down any house.

Mr. William Kimber, of Headington, Oxford, is a traditional dancer whose relations with Cecil Sharp are known to all interested in the story of the folk-dance revival. He is a substantial, middle-aged man, and it would not at a casual encounter be guessed that his dancing would have a spectacular interest. But the Morris is a virile measure, and, indeed, is definitely man's province. At the Festival a number of teams of girls attempted it (as country dances were given now and then wholly by girls, coming from districts where the youths must be extraordinarily few, shy, and unenterprising), but, strangely enough, it became a tame affair in their hands. (The one exception was the lively show of a London group, called 'Lumps of Plum Pudding,' in the Oxfordshire Morris, 'Getting Upstairs.')

No; the Morris was meant by nature for men—and not for sluggish men, but as a contributory exercise for the village cricket and football clubs. The Staff Demonstration Team gave us faultless performances, and among the country teams Cambridge, Letchworth, and Reading took a high place. But it was peculiarly jolly to see the dance done by out-and-out 'lads of the village,' such as one of the Hampshire teams, East Harptree (Somerset), and Sapperton (Gloucester). On the second day the Morris team of the Oxford City Police turned up, and of course had an especially hearty greeting. These performers proved to be comparatively new to the game, dancing with too much bending of the knee. But when the police force takes to folk-dances, who will be left to talk of 'faddists'?

The processional dances were the Cornish 'Furry Dance,' the 'Horn Dance of Abbots Bromley' (Staffs), and the Derbyshire 'Winster.' The Society was able to assemble a good number of traditional north-country Sword Dance teams. One cannot say that the Sword Dance makes as good a spectacle as the Morris, but it has a special interest in that it has survived in the North very hale with no need of revivalists. The tunes seem to have become somewhat affected by music-hall music, and the comic assistants which some of the teams brought along with them savoured, too, of the modern music-hall. North Skelton, Newbiggin, Kirkby Malzeard, and Grenoside were excellent teams.

The country dances were an endless variety. How great is the range was proved by so few teams making the same choice as another. The country dance is meant to be danced, not looked at; yet the onlooker was very glad to be there (probably saying to himself, 'Ah, if I were twenty years younger, and hadn't so much else to do, I couldn't help being in the thick of it!'). If you think that the country dance stands for rough-and-tumble sport, or any sort of 'Kitchen lancers,' you are mistaken. It is a school of gracefulness and keen-witted movement. Dozens of branches of the Society up and down the country are cultivating it, and there are few more pleasant signs of the times. It can hardly rival the negroid dances now in fashion in our ball-rooms, for these can be merely drifted into, whereas the country dances quite definitely need to be learnt. It is encouraging that so many young folk are prepared to do so much learning. Quite apart from the charming measures, the music by itself is enough to win one over to the movement. So many shapely, sensible, stimulating tunes! Repetition they can stand fearlessly, because they have honest stuff in them. Comparisons are unfair, but one could not resist a sniff at the limping and base-natured fox-trot in the light of such tunes as 'Lillibulero,' 'Constant Billy,' 'The Bonny, Bonny Broom,' 'The Round,' 'Dargason,' and a score of others.

The Festival was capitally organized. Miss Elsie Avril (violin) led the musicians; Dr. Vaughan Williams conducted the singing of folk-songs in the intervals. The men's cricketing flannels looked so well that one wondered how our grotesque conventional 'evening dress' ever came into vogue for dancing. Several of the girls' teams turned up in some sort of uniform, but the girls in mixed dresses looked prettier, for surely it is not natural for girls to dress uniformly when they go to a dance? On the evening of the second day there was a 'country dance ball,' with the Coldstream Guards playing.

C.

A wonderful record is that of Mr. W. Mann Dyson, who on Christmas Day completed sixty years' service as lay-clerk at Worcester Cathedral. Though in the nineties, Mr. Dyson remains active and energetic, and a living testimony to the healthful effects of constant work—especially when that work is singing. It is worth noting that one of his former colleagues, Mr. J. A. Smith, who retired about eighteen months ago, had also served at the Cathedral for sixty years.

Letters to the Editor

THE LEEDS FESTIVAL CHORUS AT QUEEN'S HALL

SIR,—The statements appearing in the January Musical Times concerning the visit of the Leeds Festival Chorus to London seem likely to cause some misapprehension as to the arrangements made with the Chorus and Mr. Albert Coates by the Royal Philharmonic Society.

The original scheme for rehearsals was as follows:

Wednesday, October 28, 10 a.m. Orchestra only, Queen's Hall.

Thursday, October 29, 2 p.m. Orchestra and chorus, Royal Academy of Music.

Nine days before the concert, the Honorary Committee of Management was asked by Mr. Coates to change Thursday afternoon's rehearsal to ten in the morning, and to make it for orchestra only, as he considered it unnecessary to rehearse with orchestra and chorus, and that it would be better for the Leeds singers to rest in the afternoon after their journey.

The members of the chorus were consequently asked to attend at Queen's Hall for half-an-hour as soon as they arrived in London, solely for the purpose of testing, for Mr. Coates's satisfaction, the seating arrangements, of which a plan had been supplied to the authorities at Leeds some time earlier. Notices were therefore sent to members, associates, fellows, and orchestra of the Royal Philharmonic Society, advising them of the alteration in time and place. When the Committee was asked to make this change, it had no knowledge whatever of any projected gramophone recording on the part of the chorus or of Mr. Coates. The facts were brought to the Committee's notice only when it was too late to take any effective action, had it, indeed, been in its power to do so, nor had the Committee any part or interest then or later in the recording that took place. The two orchestral rehearsals were duly held on the Wednesday and Thursday mornings.—Yours, &c.,

January 8, 1926. J. MEWBURN LEVIEN

(Hon. Secretary, Royal Philharmonic Society.)

THE VIBRATO AND OTHER VOCAL MATTERS

SIR,—If you can really see your way to permitting me to continue a discussion which makes so great a demand on your space, I have no objection to replying to your contributors. I am sorry that Dr. Bell-Porter should assume such an attitude. Though it is that of a certain school, it is little short of fanatical, and some of his statements are positively inaccurate. He writes: 'There is a certain production demanded for the portrayal of the effect required in grand opera.' He had better have written that there is a certain degree of development required for the proper production. The class of production defined by him is not the only kind required in grand opera. In the grand opera 'Faust,' the beautiful serenade, 'Salve dimora,' imperatively demands that 'dreamy, dark, and extremely sentimental tone' which Dr. Bell-Porter takes upon himself to declare that modern audiences are not interested in. This last statement is quite inaccurate.

The kind of production required for 'Salve dimora' is the exact opposite to that required for the brilliant, rousing tenor solo in 'Maritana'—'Yes, let me like a soldier fall.' What I, however, object to is that the production suitable only to this latter kind of expression is often applied without modification to the former kind. But besides this, there are parts of grand opera which are called 'declamatory.' The kind of production required for the proper performance of such parts is that kind defined so unequivocally by Dr. Bell-Porter. It is not suitable for love-singing, however passionate or forceful that may be. A certain degree of roundness and smoothness must be introduced. In a highly-cultivated, perfectly-developed voice, this will not diminish the penetration, and the effect is as open as can possibly be required.

In your November issue, Dr. Bell-Porter wrote, 'Modern modes of expression imperatively demand modern methods of voice-production.' If the 'modern methods of voice production' are the noisy, shouting, super-'open' methods, I most emphatically deny their necessity. The fact is that the demands made by modern modes of expression have not been met by a proportionate development of parts of the human voice mechanism. Let me explain clearly and simply. Take, e.g., the case of a mechanical instrument—the pianoforte. In the days of the ancient spinet there was comparatively little reinforcement to the sound generated by the strings. Almost all structural development was connected with the resonating mechanism. That had to be developed up to the increasing demands of artistic expression. But the building-up, special development, seasoning, and strengthening of the human voice mechanism (except in a few singers) have utterly failed to keep up to the demands of expression in grand opera. There is no instrument treated so badly as that of the human voice. In the case of the mechanical instrument, builders have spent years in perfecting the structure and the mechanism, and virtuosi cheerfully give up eight to ten hours a day for six or seven years to the technique. Yet in the case of the human voice instrument, which is potentially far the most beautiful, there is nothing like this amount of work expended. It is a standing disgrace to the vocal profession.

It is little wonder that your musical critic should write so resentfully (November, 1925, p. 1024, 'Some Singers of the Month'). If the leading singers will not expend enough work, and they certainly do not, how can the lesser be expected to do so? In thousands of cases among the lesser public singers to-day there is seemingly no attempt made at proper placing of the voice. The timbre might be compared to that of the ancient spinet—a mere thin tinkle, devoid of richness, breadth, depth, or solidity. If these remarks fail to satisfy Dr. Bell-Porter and his modern school of thought, then it is out of my power to convince him.

I am sorry for Mr. Mills. I will do my best, later, to write another book which will be specially simple. I look on his remarks as of value.

With respect to Mr. Dutton (a proof of whose letter I have been permitted to see), I well know the passage he alludes to. He has raised a very big question. The words he quotes prove only that some old Italian teachers were as fanatical with respect to one kind of production as are many of our modern teachers. There were certain people in Italy, as now, who looked coldly on any class of vocal music, except that of a bright, forceful, rousing, or 'open' description. Another class cared only for the exactly opposite kind—rich, mellow, round, legato, or 'closed' (dark) tone. This latter was specially adapted for church singing. The greatest composers of the day wrote for the church the most yearning, soul-stirring melody. Masters catering for the former taste would make the vowel ah the basis of their teaching, looking on oo as a necessary evil, only valuable because, according to experience, it caused the larynx to descend on the high notes, and encouraged mellowness and roundness, which were necessary to the beautiful kind of 'open' singing they taught. But on the other hand this brilliant class of tone was distasteful to sincere worshippers, and certain teachers who catered for such would have to make the vowel oo the basis of practice. There is no other method of obtaining the exceedingly mellow, rounded, legato kind of production demanded. Exactly the same class of production is used in churches to-day, as regards both speaking and singing voices. There is, of course, a great deal of the most beautiful secular vocal music which necessitates very dark timbre. A greater proportion of practice on the vowel oo is the surest way of gaining this quality. To confine practice to only one of these voices, or the class of vocal music suited to each, spells disaster. Each is absolutely necessary to the development of the other. But as I have said, the subject is a vast one, and I must consider spatial limitations.—Yours, &c.,

16, Warwick Avenue, W.2. H. TRAVERS ADAMS.

December, 1925.

SIR,—I have been much interested in Mr. Travers Adams's letters.

I have read a great deal about voice production in my time, and think I can claim some experience as a vocalist I am in consequence somewhat perplexed at one statemen in Mr. Adams's last letter. He strongly recommends practice on the vowel oo, and appeals to the method of the old Italian school in support of his tenets. It can hardly have escaped Mr. Adams's attention that in a certain standard work of an old Italian maestro the following words occur: 'The basis of practice must be the vowel ah. We leave the vowels oo and e to those who wish to imitate wolves and tigers.'

Is it not rightly due to vocal teachers who take in the Musical Times that Mr. Adams should at least write a few words on this matter?—Yours, &c.,

44, Cambridge Mansions, Battersea Park. E. C. DUTTON.

SIR,—Having followed with interest the correspondence between your readers on the above subject, culminating in the letter of Mr. Sylvester Mills in the December issue, I feel that in justice to Mr. Travers Adams, another opinion should be expressed in particular reference to the latest aspect of the case, as brought forward by Mr. Mills.

Mr. Mills, speaking as an amateur, states that for the last fifteen years he has devoted his spare time to the study of voice production. From the fact that he has bought almost every book he has heard of on the subject, he leaves us to infer that he has been studying the intricate and elusive art of singing without other aid than that which can be obtained through books. He then proceeds to blame the authors of the books for his inability to understand the contents!

I should like to ask Mr. Mills if he would expect to become an accomplished pianist or violinist in the same period of time without the aid of a competent master to guide him over the inevitable difficulties which beset the path of the student, amateur or professional.

Singing is an art no less elusive and subtle than these others; in fact, the difficulties of teaching it successfully are greater than in the case of either violin or pianoforte, as the latter instruments, in matters of technique, deal chiefly with concrete, visible accessories or tools, such as fingers, wrists, bow, strings, keys, &c., whose capabilities are at least tolerably well known to every one, whereas the singer's tools include such intangible, invisible parts as the diaphragm, larynx, vocal cords, abdominal muscles, resonance cavities of chest, throat, and head (the various shapings of which play such an important part in the production of varying tones), whose little-known powers take years to understand and develop.

Is it surprising that even the best books on the subject should be inadequate to supply all the needs of the average serious student? This art, more perhaps than any other, needs a teacher (who must also be a master of the subject) for the purpose of making clear, above all, the physical sensations experienced in using the parts described. In the case of most students, the written statement is not sufficient; it requires supplementing by the exercise of the parts, under the master's supervision, so that he can say: 'When you do that it is wrong'; or, 'Now you are right.' The value of this must be obvious.

On the other hand, the student who, in addition to the requisite mental capacity, possesses the necessary qualifications of perseverance and enthusiasm, as well as time to devote to study, should be able to make appreciable progress in the art by the study of Mr. Adams's book alone. That Mr. Adams is a master of his subject cannot, I think, be doubted by anyone who has thoroughly studied and practised his method as set forth in his book.

At the same time I agree it is wise to consult as many authorities as possible in connection with any subject worth studying: a remark of one writer will often throw unexpected light on that of another.

I should like to add a few words before closing in regard to another aspect of the discussion, in which there seems to be some confusion as to the point at issue. Dr. Bell-Porter's remarks in defence of his own particular field of activity appear to be based partly on a misunderstanding of one of Mr. Travers Adams's statements. May I be allowed to give as shortly as possible my own interpretation of the case? The 'grand opera' style of production as generally, but not exclusively, practised at the present day certainly sacrifices at times pure beauty of tone to dramatic considerations, and in doing so is quite within its province, unless the habit is pushed to excess, when it becomes a fault. This I believe to be the defect complained of by Mr. King in his first letter, which opened the discussion. This, to my knowledge, is generally referred to as the tremolo, and serves its proper function in illustrating great, overpowering emotion. Its very nature shows that it should be sparingly used, for it is in fact an example of 'loss of control' by the muscles which support and control tone. This is obviously quite applicable to the portrayal of deep emotion, but is applicable to little else.

Mr. Adams—if I read his meaning correctly—besides deploring the constant use of this excessive vibrato or tremolo, is of the opinion that modern quick methods of training result in a too general use of the declamatory method of production, which, as he says, is entirely unsuitable for 'purely beautiful effect,' i.e., for sustained, flowing melody, or music which depends for its appeal on beauty of tone and musical perfection of utterance alone, and not on any dramatic effect. In fairness, I must say that I agree with this opinion.

In grand opera there is scope for declamatory and cantabile production, but the present-day tendency is to use declamatory style indiscriminately, substituting it for the true cantabile open production required by passages of lyrical form, with a resulting great loss of dramatic effect by lack of contrast.

Again, I cannot see that Mr. Adams advocates the use of 'dreamy, dark, ultra-sentimental tone' as suitable fare to put before any audience, ancient or modern. If Dr. Bell-Porter had quoted Mr. Adams's statement exactly, and with due regard to its context, it would have been seen that the latter's advice, 'Sing gentle, dreamy kinds of songs,' was intended solely for the use of the beginner in the art, as an indication of the style of song to adopt for early training. Therein he is undoubtedly right, as such practice induces a correct use of the mechanism for ensuring a gentle attack, which is all-important in the right production of even the largest volume of tone in true cantabile singing.

The foregoing is written not in any spirit of argument, but with a sincere desire to give both sides a fair hearing.—Yours, &c., (Mrs.) MARIE L. RIVERS.

SIR,—With reference to the discussion under the heading 'The Lure of the Vibrato,' I think it would interest many people if Mr. Travers Adams would explain by reference to sensation and science (vocal) the difference between the voices he defines as 'declamatory open' and 'cantabile open' respectively. I have explained this to many people, but there must be others anxious to know.

As Mr. Travers Adams wisely says, 'the greatest point is to lift the pressure off the vocal cords as much as possible,' which preserves the voice and enables one to sing for a much longer period without fatigue. It also gives greater carrying power and colour to the voice.—Yours, &c.,

15, Aberdeen Road, Bristol. REGINALD BUSSELL.
December, 1925.

SIR,—After reading the correspondence on the 'Lure of the Vibrato,' permit me to observe that the vibrato referred to is in reality the tremolo, an exaggerated vibrato resorted to by the pseudo-artist for cheap effect.

Artistry in singing is not to be acquired, as the tyro would believe, by a few ungainly tricks, but by long study.

I cannot see eye to eye with one correspondent, who speaks of exaggerated clear pronunciation. In view of the fact that singing is glorified speech, clearness of diction cannot be overdone, as pure vowels and neat consonants add beauty to, rather than detract from, purity of tone.

The size of the auditorium is no excuse for coarse singing, for pure tone, unadulterated by tremolo, &c., will carry any distance, however soft the tone may be. Artistic vibrato, which has its source in the emotions, may assist, but tremolo never.

Some of the strident singing of which your correspondent complains is due to the teaching of one—and, I am afraid to say, the most extensive—of the Italian schools, which almost dispenses with the u vowel (as pronounced in Italian), which par excellence gives mellowness when combined with the other vowels. On the other hand, the English school, in churches particularly, errs on the side of an excess of u quality to the exclusion of the i (Italian), or vowel colour of brilliance, which gives brightness or ring.

Tone must not drown diction if opera is to hold its own, and I believe that the music-loving public would willingly go to the trouble of learning the different languages if there were any chance of hearing the words. Then, as should be the case, the opera could always be sung with the original words.—Yours, &c.,

Muswell Hill, N.10. CECIL HAMILTON.

CLASSICAL MELODIES IN THE BALL-ROOM

SIR,—In a review of my new magazine the Dance Musician (which by the way I greatly appreciate) I have been accused of publishing the works of Liszt and Chopin, the title-pages of such publications bearing my name as the composer. In other words, it is suggested that I have taken a mean advantage of the death of these gentlemen. This is not so, for I have introduced the works of great composers under their own names, and instead of purloining their melodies and passing them off as my own on the title-page, I have given the names of the composers with a statement that the works have been arranged for the ball-room by an individual bearing the initials 'E. J. B.' and, in a later edition, E. J. Bennet. As evidence of this I enclose copies.

I do not blame the reviewer for labelling me as an unwashed canine, for owing to a carelessly corrected proof, it is a fact that the arrangement he quotes was coupled with compositions of my own in an advertisement.

The reviewer further gives it as his opinion that the best way to improve dance music is to make dance writers realise that it is the business of dance music composers to compose dance music; but, later on, unfortunately, he sets forth another great truth, in which he says that if my skill in harmony is no better than most of my colleagues (i.e., composers of dance music) I have done well in leaving the original harmonies alone.

Now, it is clearly evident that if a way out of the difficulty lies in the composition of original dance music, and at the present day dance composers do not possess the necessary skill, it is high time that those who are in possession of these very necessary arts should 'get a move on,' and on behalf of my magazine, I suggest that if such a composition be produced and submitted to performance before a representative body of the dancing public, my magazine will produce the work and publish it, devoting the entire profits to the benefit of the composer.

If I might make a suggestion, let me add that the secret might be found in adopting the folk-song idea, whether American Negro or European matters little.

A successful fox-trot produces many thousands of pounds, and although I do not conjecture that musicians are mercenary, I should like to see English people dancing to English music, and English composers in Rolls Royce cars instead of in London General omnibuses.

I will go one step further, and say it is the duty of the English musician who can compose to turn his attention to this important branch of the art.

Finally, I have never been associated with the pilfering of musical ideas and I have never approved of it. Your reviewer suggests that a morally unwashed person such as myself must not be asked to use the influence of a magazine he controls for the stamping out of such a loathsome practice. I can assure him, however, and all those who will read his clever, not to say cutting, criticism that the magazine will be used for that very purpose and for the encouragement of original dance music.

May I ask your kindly co-operation in making known the offer set forth above to serious composers?—Yours, &c.,

72, Wells Street, W.1. EMILE J. BENNET.

[The copies Mr. Bennet sends are of Liszt's 'Liebestraume' and Chopin's C minor Prelude. The 'arrangement' of which he speaks consists in merely turning the pieces into waltzes. (In the Chopin piece the crotchets are changed to dotted minims.) We are glad to find that he gives the composers a show on the title-page, but we still think that if he wishes to publish a waltz he should write one off his own bat, instead of perverting classical works that were not conceived as dance-music.—EDITOR.]

THE SYMPHONIES OF MUZIO CLEMENTI

SIR,—I notice that two contributors to your journal, Dr. Orlando Mansfield and Mr. Herbert Westerby, have recently referred to the Symphonies of Muzio Clementi as being lost, or as having mysteriously disappeared.

The greater portion of at least four Symphonies by Clementi, and a great many sketches of other orchestral compositions, all in the handwriting of Clementi, have been in the Library of Congress at Washington since 1917, when they were bought at an auction sale at Sotheby's. With the help of some information concerning these manuscripts which I furnished to M. Georges de St. Foix, the latter wrote an article on 'Les Symphonies de Clementi' for the March, 1924, number of the Revista Musicale Italiana.—Yours, &c.,

Library of Congress, Washington. CARL ENGEL (Chief, Music Division).

VAN DIEREN CONCERT

SIR,—I am sorry about that cryptic sentence. I fear it may have been responsible for a certain note of peevishness in your critic P. H.'s notice. Having this evidence that it has been as much an offence to others as it was to myself, I am moved to ask you to allow me to correct it. Change 'another' into 'and then,' and the sentence does elucidate its context. The art of melody, like every other art, has grown by substituting one symbol for another. Van Dieren's substitutions stand at the extreme end of a scale which began with suspensions and anticipations, continued with accented passing-notes, and came later to the peculiar chromaticism of César Franck. But it is an extreme use, and produces melodies which, like sentences in cipher, are not intelligible to the general ear. In describing this characteristic for the benefit of those who were not at the concert I perhaps condensed my meaning unduly (influenced, I dare say, by the music to which I had been listening), and then the printer changed two letters and made chaos of it.—Yours, &c.,

THE AUTHOR OF THE PILLORIED QUOTATION.

SDBJECTIVE CRITICISM

SIR,—In your December issue I see that Mr. Newman has seen fit to bring me forward as a more than usually abandoned specimen of the class of 'subjective critics' who 'lay down the law' and 'bellow cocksure affirmations at each other without giving any reasons why the personal taste of the one should be accepted more than that of the other.'

In view of Mr. Newman's loudly proclaimed indignation at anything in the way of misrepresentation, this is a very curious statement, seeing that in the Preface to my book I expressly disclaimed any pretensions to infallibility or to laying down the law—a remark which your own reviewer, if I remember rightly, declared to be totally unnecessary. Well, it seems that it was not, and that your reviewer owes me an apology. Permit me to repeat that in spite of my unfortunately somewhat pontifical style, I do not suffer, as Mr. Newman says I do, and never have suffered, as he says he has, from the delusion that those who disagree with me are necessarily wrong; for the simple reason that I do not believe that there is such a thing as absolute right or wrong in matters musical, or indeed in any other matters. I would rather say with Pirandello, 'This is the truth—if you think it is.' Mr. Newman, on the contrary, seems to believe that an absolute truth is attainable, and in so believing is being very much more dogmatic than I.

'When two people allege diametrically opposite things they cannot both be right,' says Mr. Newman authoritatively. Why not? Suppose that two men try to make accurate drawings of the same object from different angles of the room. They will naturally produce two entirely different representations of it, but it would be impossible to say that the one was correct and the other was not. Again, two philosophic systems may be entirely opposed to each other in both premises and conclusions, and yet both so closely and logically reasoned that it is impossible to say that the one was true and the other false.

Similarly, in criticism there is no absolute standard of values. We can only see the work of art from one angle, from one point of view. If I say that one man is a better draughtsman or a better philosopher than another, it does not mean that we see or believe alike, but only that he gives me the impression of having a finer sense of line, or of having reasoned more clearly and logically than the other. And if I say that one man is a better critic than another, I do not necessarily mean that I agree with him. For example, I consider Wagner to be a great composer, but at the same time I consider Nietzsche's 'Der Fall Wagner' to be one of the best pieces of musical criticism in existence. Again, I have never been able to derive any pleasure from the plays of Racine; at the same time I have so much respect for and confidence in the judgment of many critics who admire them, such as Mr. Lytton Strachey, that I am compelled to admit that they must be right. But it does not follow that I believe myself to be wrong. We are simply looking at this same thing from two entirely different points of view—the classic and the romantic, if you like—both of which are right in their way. No doubt there is an ultimate in which all points of view are reconciled and all contradictions resolved, but it is unattainable in practice, in the same way that I cannot see all round the table at once. And this is what the objective critic is always trying to do, with the result that he sees nothing at all.

In confronting my opinions with the very different ones of M. Cœuroy, Mr. Newman would seem to be taking his argument one step further, implying that if two people hold diametrically opposite opinions they must both be wrong. In other words, he cancels us out with each other. This is merely fatuous. It would be just as reasonable to suggest that because he and Mr. Evans disagree with each other, they are both of them equally negligible. I am sure he does not mean to suggest that. Yet what else does he mean?

If I am unable to take M. Cœuroy's criticism of my book seriously it is not because he disagrees with me, but because he has no point of view of his own, and is only a mouthpiece for current clichés, the representative of an attitude of mind which happens to be fashionable at the moment. Secondly, he does not appear to understand English—a somewhat grave disadvantage in reviewing a book written in that language. For example, he quotes me as saying that I consider 'Petrouchka' to be a better work than the 'Sacre du Printemps,' whereas actually I say precisely the opposite. In translating a sentence of mine into French in order to show what a fool I am, he renders the word 'beggar' as 'brigand,' adding [sic] after it. On second thoughts, these errors may be the result of malice rather than of ignorance, revealing a state of mind and temper which are exceedingly gratifying to me. If I had failed to arouse the hostility of M. Cœuroy I should have felt that my book had been written in vain.

Finally, is it necessary to state, after all that I have already said, that my remark to the effect that Mr. Newman's opinions are always wrong was merely a joke? That he should seem to take it seriously shows only a momentary, and, I hope, only temporary, lapse on the part of his usually alert sense of humour.—Yours, &c.,

CECIL GRAY.

A DEBUSSYIAN QUOTATION

SIR,—I should be most grateful to Mr. Whitaker-Wilson if he would indicate the source of his quotation from Debussy on p. 38 of the January Musical Times. The aspect of Debussy which it reveals is one which other writers have overlooked so far; and the reference to 'sound-combinations worked out mathematically' is surprising indeed.—Yours, &c., M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

6, Paulton's Square, S.W.3.

E

A Belfast correspondent writes defending the Vatican Choir against the strictures of 'Feste': 'It is as far ahead of our choirs as Bach, Beethoven, and Wagner are better than any English composers that ever lived. . . . The average English Cathedral choir is innocuous, hooting, and expressionless.' So now we know! In regard to the Vatican Choir, 'Feste' pointed out certain features—the shrill, forced tone of the trebles, and the shouting of the tenors, both faults resulting in a lack of blend. He might have alluded also to such ad captandum tricks as the prolonged decrescendos at the cadences where no such effect was called for either by text or music, and to exaggerated dynamics in general. Everybody agreed on these points, but many critics excused them on the ground of nationality and temperament. In common with a few other writers, 'Feste' held and still holds that the virtuosity of the Choir and its fine choice of music do not alter the fact that such methods as those detailed above are bad, and he dislikes them accordingly. Our Belfast friend thinks they are good and likes them, so there's nothing more to be said.

Mr. Herbert H. Wardle writes pointing out, in reference to the review of the gramophone records of Vaughan Williams's 'Old King Cole,' that the work was first performed not at Oxford, as 'Discus' stated, but at Cambridge (June, 1923).

[Several letters are unavoidably held over.—EDITOR.]

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Pianist wishes to meet good violinist or 'cellist for mutual practice.—A. B. BLYTH, 38, Elsinore Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

Tenor vocalist (well trained) wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Any part of London.—T., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist (advanced) wishes to meet advanced violinists and/or 'cellist for mutual practice. Bradford district.—G. C. H., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur pianoforte quintet has vacancy for good, capable second violin. Rehearsals, Tuesday evenings.—D. MUNRO, 90, Brudenell Road, S.W.17.

Lady pianist (A.R.C.M.), good reader and accompanist, wishes to join amateur concert party or orchestra.—P. H., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman violinist wishes to meet advanced pianist for practice of classical music, on Sundays.—204, Abingdon Road, Oxford.

Young flautist requires experience in amateur orchestra. S.E. district preferred.—S. C., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur 'cello student (early stage) wishes to meet another, and/or accompanist for mutual practice. Would also accompany 'cellist.—C. P. COCKS, 158, Morland Road, Croydon.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist or vocalist for mutual practice. Classical works only. Croydon or Purley districts.—E. P., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur instrumentalist wishes to meet pianist (gentleman) for occasional practice.—A., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wanted to join amateur string quartet practising weekly in N. London.—QUATUOR, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady, L.T.C.L.) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for practice of chamber music. Kensington, S.W.7, district.—T. H. G., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wanted to complete amateur quartet. West London.—M. R. C., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady), moderate player, wishes to meet vocalist for mutual practice. West district.—K. E. C., c/o Musical Times.

Oboist (gentleman) wishes to meet keen young gentlemen —flautist, clarinettist, and bassoonist—residing in the Eastern suburbs (Leyton, Leytonstone, and Wanstead districts preferred). Elementary players (provided enthusiastic) welcomed.—E. V. E., 58, Newport Road, Leyton, E.10.

The Tudor Singers have a vacancy for a bass. Good reading necessary. Rehearsals, Fridays, at 6.30, at Victoria.—C. J. BATES, 16, Arterberry Road, Wimbledon, S.W.20.

Pianist wishes to meet advanced violinist or 'cellist for practice of sonatas, &c. Evenings.—F. G., 94, Ewart Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

Sharps and Flats

The doctors say that nicotine is bad for you. Well, I still smoke eight cigars a day. The doctors say you must have exercise, walk in the air or play with the ball. Well, I have never taken exercise in my life. . . . All the fresh air I want comes through the window. . . . But I do not exhort everyone to follow my example, for, after all, I am Pachmann, the unique. I laugh at your doctors.—Pachmann.

The British public always sing best on a full stomach . . . my own plan prior to singing is to have as hearty a meal as can be found for miles round, and a pint tankard of the best beer available.—Gibson Young.

I have never posed in my life.—Pachmann.

Jazz is dying. To-day there are few variety bills without their jazz bands. But when they come to trial on the stage it is easy to see that they get their verdict on little more than their clever buffoonery. Paper hats and comedy 'business' are the last props of a dying craze.—De Groot.

What is a piccolo?—Mr. Justice Eve.

In the wireless sense I fear I am not what is called a good listener. 'What are the wild waves saying?' is a question I seldom ask, and when I do it is ten to one they are saying, 'It ain't gonna rain no mo' or 'Good-night, everybody, good-night,' or something else equally unexciting.—A. B. Walkley.

Finale from Quartet Noll ... ... Schumann
Valve Triste ... ... Sibelius
—Wireless Programme.

In my opinion, English does not lend itself to singing very well. I think most modern English songs are trash, and I do not yet know any English songs I would care to sing.—Luella Paikin.

What is a Saxophone?—Mr. Justice Eve.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of February, 1866:

TO LADIES and GENTLEMEN having a taste for Vocal Music.—A PRIVATE SOCIETY is being FORMED, consisting solely of Amateurs, occupying good social positions. There will be none of the elements of the ordinary Choral Society. Ladies and gentlemen willing to co-operate will please address (in confidence) M., care of Mr. Cox, Stationer, 102, Chancery Lane.

DEDICATED, BY PERMISSION, TO ROSSINI. Now ready, price 3*s.* 6*d.*, bound in cloth, Second Edition of LITTLE BY LITTLE. A Series of Graduated Lessons in the Art of Reading Music. Especially intended for the use of Young Mothers and Teachers.
London: Griffith & Farran, St. Paul's Churchyard.

JERUSALEM THE GOLDEN. Music by J. TILLEARD. With illustrated title-page by Walter Severn. Price 2*s.* 6*d.* Cheap edition, 6*d.*

'A tune of much more artistic character than that of disastrous lustre, the one selected in the dark by our contemporary, the Musical Standard.'—Orchestra, April 29, 1865.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Lent term, which began on January 11, will be marked by an exceptionally interesting musical event. Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion will be sung for the first time in London in its entirety at Queen's Hall, on March 31. The performance will be conducted by Sir Henry Wood, and will begin at 2 o'clock.

On January 4 a dinner was given at the Great Central Hotel, by the Music Teachers' Association, to Mr. Stewart Macpherson, the founder of the Society. Mr. Percy Scholes was in the chair, and a presentation of a silver rose-bowl and an illuminated address was made to Mr. Macpherson, to mark his relinquishing the post of Chairman of the Association, which he has held since its inception in 1908. Mr. Ernest Read, who made the presentation, referred to the great work Mr. Macpherson had done in furthering the cause of musical education in this country. Mr. Macpherson made appropriate acknowledgment, and declared that the joy he had had in carrying on his work was a sufficient reward for any efforts he had made in a cause of such importance, both to musicians and to education generally. Many delegates from country branches of the Association were present.

Mr. Lionel Tertis and Mr. Harold Craxton are on tour with Dame Nellie Melba. During Mr. Tertis's absence, Mr. Herbert Withers is taking the ensemble classes.

On February 3 there will be a recital for two pianofortes by Miss Dorothy Folkard and Miss Muriel Warne, at 2.30 p.m.

There will be a lecture by Mr. Royle Shore on 'Chamber Music,' on February 24, and dramatic performances will take place on February 26 and 27.

The usual weekly concerts are held on Saturday afternoons in the Duke's Hall, at 3 o'clock.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Christmas term opened on January 11, when the Director, Sir Hugh Allen, gave his usual address to a very large assembly of students in the College Hall. To say that the address dealt with New Year's resolutions and fallibility is perhaps to put it unfairly, for although serious issues were dealt with there was a light touch and a charm of phrase that happily relieved the address of anything approaching dullness, and made it appear more like a jolly, informal talk between friends than an official oration. Besides enumerating features of the past term, the Director outlined many interesting projects which he had in his mind for the coming period, and made it plain that it will not fall behind its predecessors in variety and excitement.

The Folk-Dancing Class, which was instituted about a year ago, has proved a valuable as well as attractive addition to the Teachers' Training Course. In fact, so rapid has been the progress of the class under Mrs. Kennedy, of the English Folk-Dance Society, that it was judged worthy, after passing successfully through the preliminary heats, to appear as one of the representative London teams in the Folk-Dance Festival held at London University on January 1 and 2. As a sequel to this success, the class was honoured by an invitation to give a special display at the annual general meeting of the Royal College Students' Union on January 14. Under Mrs. Kennedy's direction, and with the kind help of Mr. Kennedy, a fine selection of dances were given to the inspiriting violin accompaniment of Miss Elsie Avril. The audience was enabled to appreciate the value of the class for teachers (for it was instituted to teach students how to teach the dances, rather than merely to dance them) and to see for themselves how much can be accomplished in a short time by a really enthusiastic teacher and class, for some of the performers had enjoyed but a few weeks' experience.

The demonstration at the College was conspicuously privileged. Dr. Vaughan Williams, whose name in connection with folk dance and song is a household word, gave a short preliminary discourse on the nature and origin of the dances, and illuminated many of the particular items with allusions and comments in which erudition and humour ran a dead heat.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The opening week of the current term was inaugurated with an address from Prof. Granville Bantock, who chose for his subject 'Reminiscences of Sibelius' (see page 153). As usual at such functions, there was a crowded attendance of students.

The occasion was chosen to present their diplomas to those students who had been successful at the recent examinations, and others with medals and prizes awarded for proficiency in their studies, &c. ; also to introduce to the members of the College Board the successful candidates in the open competition for scholarships held in December last. The following is the complete list of names:

Fellowship: Eleanor W. Baillie, Wilfrid H. Parry, Dorothea R. Sharman, Roberta G. Spencer, Florence Roper.

Licentiate: Marguerite A. Caseau, Edith Dornford, Kathleen E. R. Drew, Winifred A. Schooley, Emily Daisy Scott.

Associate: Eleanor L. H. Greville, Sadie Irwin, Estelle M. Keall, Katy A. C. Palmer, Edith F. Sutherland, Gerald Trendell.

Prizes under the 'Grosvenor Gooch Bequest' to Emily Dasy Scott, L.T.C.L., and Julia E. F. Cave, A.T.C.L.

The Dando-Mesham silver medal to May Roberts, the David Nasmith silver medal to Roberta Genevieve Spencer, the gold medal for 1925 to Elga V. Collins, and the Chappell gold medal to Vera Snare, F.T.C.L.

Open Scholarships (one year): Violet Annear, George Edwin Ansell, Harry Blech, Albert Bregman, Phyllis Mary Burgess, Eric Cecil Coleridge, Constance Edinborough, Dorothy Nellie Fox, Leslie Noel Fumasoli, Reginald Horace Gibbs, Dora Gilson, Joshua Goldstein, Max Kossovsky, May Leim, Gastone Marinari, Margaret Mercia Morgan, Clement P. Peters, Vera Alice Blanche Rees, May Roberts, Winifred Alice Saunders, Mary Thomas, Israel Treger, Ted Warburton, Yetta Waxman. (One Term on Probation): Hetty Rosenbaum and Benny Watman.

A College scholar, Morris Jacobson, has just passed the Inter. Mus.B. London examination, and George S. A. Bone was successful at Oxford for the first Mus.B. examination.

It is with regret that we have to announce the very sudden death of Mr. H. Duxbury, a teacher of elocution. Mr. Alexander Watson has been appointed to fill the vacancy on the staff.

Dr. E. F. Horner, Director of Examinations of the College, has just returned from a very successful examining tour in South America, British Guiana, &c., where he found the work of the College is progressing most satisfactorily.

In reviewing the activities of the College during the past year we observe a considerable increase in the number of students taking lessons, in the number of entries for the examinations, and in the successes of the students.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD: AWARD OF MEDALS

The following candidates gained the gold and silver medals offered by the Board for the highest and second highest honours marks, respectively, in the final, advanced, and intermediate grades of the Local Centre Examinations in November-December last, the competition being open to all candidates in the British Isles: Final Grade gold medal, Martha B. Erwin, Belfast centre (pianoforte); Final Grade silver medal, Cyril J. Smith, Middlesbrough centre (pianoforte); Advanced Grade gold medal, Freda Firth, Great Malvern centre (pianoforte); Advanced Grade silver medal, Margaret Harris, Bristol centre (pianoforte), and Mary Chandler, Torquay centre (pianoforte) (these two candidates gained an equal number of marks); Intermediate Grade gold medal, Margaret S. D. Lyell, Perth centre (pianoforte), and Joan R. I. Manning, Yeovil centre (pianoforte) (these two candidates gained an equal number of marks); Intermediate Grade silver medal, William D. Rees, Newport (Mon.) centre (pianoforte).

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

It is intended to give, three times a year—in February, May, and September—brief summaries of the musical activities at public schools during the preceding term. Details received for the Michaelmas term, 1925, show a high standard of work and programmes.

BEDFORD School, on November 26, under Dr. Harding, gave a performance of 'Hervé Riel' (Walford Davies), Symphony in B flat (first movement), (Schubert), Pianoforte Concerto in C minor (first movement), (Beethoven), pianoforte and violin solo, songs, and part-songs.

At BERKHAMSTED, on November 7, a concert was given to the school by the Berkhamsted and District Festival Choir and Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Forbes Milne. The programme consisted of items ranging from Benet and Bach to Parry and Elgar, and included the 'Hundredth Psalm,' an adaptation from Bach's Cantatas. The annual house singing and instrumental competitions were held on December 11, Prof. Percy C. Buck adjudicating. The annual school concert was given on December 12, when the Glee Club sang W. H. Speer's setting of 'The Jackdaw of Rheims' and Colin Taylor's Christmas song 'The Three Ships,' with orchestral accompaniment. Three pianoforte solos were played by boys in the Upper School—Grieg's Sonata in E minor (first movement), Chopin's Polonaise in C sharp minor, and Scharwenka's Polish Dance in E flat minor. Another boy played the last movement of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor. The orchestral items were Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture, Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 (first movement), and Gounod's 'Funeral March of a Marionette.'

CANFORD SCHOOL, on December 16, gave a concert which included Morley's 'Now is the Month of Maying,' the sea chanty 'Shenandoah,' Minuet and Hornpipe (Sullivan) and Minuet (Moszkowski), by the orchestra, songs, and pianoforte solos.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL, Hertford, on December 10, gave a concert of carols, part-songs by Ireland, Nicholson, Alcock, and Elgar, pianoforte and violin solos, and trios.

CRANLEIGH, on December 2, had an ambitious programme consisting of Orlando Gibbons's 'The Cryes of London,' P. E. Bach's Concerto in C minor, played by F. O. F. le Grand; three 17th-century songs, sung by Miss Mabel Ritchie; and Bach's 'Peasant' Cantata, the soloists being Miss Ritchie and Mr. J. S. Purvis, a master at the School.

DAUNTSEY COLLEGE, Wilts, a small school of a hundred and twenty boys, under the enthusiastic direction of the music-master, Mr. J. A. Davison, is fast building up a tradition for the best music. The Musical Society, comprising about three-quarters of the School, assisted by the masters, gave at the end-of-term concert a capital performance of part of 'Elijah,' a Psalm by Holst, and madrigals by Byrd, Vaughan Williams, and Holst.

ETON COLLEGE Musical Society's concert, on December 19, consisted of a selection from 'L'Allegro ed Il Pensieroso' (Handel), the chorus 'Gipsy Life' (Schumann), 'The Silver Swan' (Gibbons), 'I saw lovely Phyllis' (Pearsall), the first movement of Bach's Concerto in C, for two pianofortes and strings, the first movement of Beethoven's second Symphony, songs, and pianoforte and violin solos. On December 20, in the Chapel, there was a service of carols and Christmas hymns.

LEYS SCHOOL Musical Society gave its sixth annual Bach recital on November 29, the programme containing Church Cantatas No. 56, 'I will my burden gladly carry,' and No. 6, 'Bide with us,' the Sinfonia introductory to Church Cantata No. 42, the Organ Prelude and hymn, 'All glory be to God on high,' and an excerpt from Church Cantata No. 113. A carol service was held in the Chapel on December 13, and included the carols, 'A Babe is born in Bethlehem' ('Piæ Cantiones'), 'Shepherds in the field abiding' (French), 'In Dulci Jubilo,' 'There is no rose of such virtue' (Arnold Bax), and 'Descend from Heav'n, ye angels, come' (1588). The Orpheus Club met weekly on Sunday evenings, when pianoforte and song recitals were given and papers read.

At Loretto School, selections from Bach's Christmas Oratorio and German's 'Merrie England' were sung (with orchestra) by a choir consisting of the whole school with the exception of about thirty 'non-singers.' The choir, under the conductorship of Capt. C. H. Stuart Duncan, sang with great precision and attack, and the treble tone was particularly good. A good selection of carols were also sung without accompaniment. In Chapel during the last two Sundays of term the anthems were all selected from 'The Messiah,' the opening tenor solos of that work being sung by the Rev. C. W. Wordsworth.

The Malvern College Christmas concert on December 21 consisted of the Cantata, 'The Forsaken Merman' (Arthur Somervell), march and chorus, 'Hail, bright abode' from 'Tannhäuser,' the Finale of the Grieg Concerto in A minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, played by J. L. Battersby, part-songs by Pearsall, Elgar, and Brahms, sung by the successful house-choirs at the musical competition, pianoforte and violin solos, and songs. The house musical competition was held on December 14, Dr. R. S. Thatcher adjudicating. The pieces chosen were very representative and of high standard, and many of no little difficulty. Malvern Musical Society holds fortnightly concerts, and also runs a small musical sheet, The Concert-Goer.

Oundle School gave its second performance of 'The Messiah' on December 13. The choir, numbering two hundred and eighty-seven, consisted of a hundred and four trebles, thirty-eight altos, thirty-one tenors, and a hundred and fourteen basses, the additional unison chorus of two hundred and forty-four being also used with telling effect in six items. There was an orchestra of fifty-seven players, eleven of these being professionals from London, including Mr. Charles Woodhouse and Mr. Léon Goossens, and the principals were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Topliss Green. Mr. C. M. Spurling conducted. Bach's B minor Mass is to be given by the whole School for the third time next December, in the Chapel.

The Rugby School concert on December 19 consisted of the ballad, 'News from Whydah' (Balfour Gardiner), the chorus 'Haste thee, Nymph,' from 'L'Allegro' (Handel), the final movement of Beethoven's first Symphony, 'Danse des Mirlitons' (Tchaikovsky), 'Waltz and Galop' from 'La Boutique Fantasque' (Rossini-Respighi), carols, violin and pianoforte solos.——The Officers' Training Corps, on December 21, gave a concert which included a March on Folk-Songs from Somerset (Vaughan Williams), No. 3 of 'Hungarian Dances' for flute solo (Brahms), Intermezzo from Suite in E flat (Holst), Octet in E flat (fourth movement) (Mozart), 'Slavonic Dance' (Dvorák), Scherzo from Suite for clarinet and pianoforte (Hurlstone), and a selection from the 'Yeomen of the Guard' (Sullivan). Surely a unique programme for an O.T.C. concert!

St. Paul's School Musical Society gave at its concert on Decembe 18, 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and an excellent miscellaneous first part, including Harwood's 'Pæan' for organ, Schumann's Études Symphoniques (Finale), Brahms's Violin Sonata in G (first movement), Bach's aria, 'My heart ever faithful,' Chopin's Study in G flat and Scherzo in E, and Liszt's Study in D flat.

Shebbear College Choir (North Devon) gave two concerts of Christmas music on December 14 and 15, under the direction of Mr. G. A. Armstrong.

Wellington College music, under the direction of Mr. Stanton, shows much activity. There have been two concerts, on November 8 (choral) and November 22 (orchestral). The programme at the first consisted of unison, two-, three-, and four-part songs and songs for trebles, ranging from Arne to Walford Davies; and at the second, of the 'Magic Flute' Overture, third movement of Symphony in C minor (Brahms), first movement of Symphony in C minor (Beethoven), Serenade for strings (Elgar), Introduction to Act 3 of 'Lohengrin,' Symphony in G minor (Mozart), 'Valse Triste' (Sibelius), and 'Rakoczy March' (Berlioz). There was a glee singing competition on October 31; Miss Myra Hess gave a pianoforte recital on September 27; Dr. Ley and Mr. Stanton gave organ recitals on November 5 and 12; and there was a chamber music concert on November 1.

Winchester College music has included—Choral works: 'Acis and Galatea'; Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' and 'Christmas 'Oratorio (Parts 1 and 2); S. Wesley's 'In Exitu Israel.' Orchestral (mainly professional): Overtures: 'Figaro,' 'Egmont,' the 'Unfinished' Symphony; Siegfried Idyll; 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' music; Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 1; Bach's Concerto in D major. Chamber music: Four historical recitals of Sonatas for violin and pianoforte (Bach to César Franck); one lecture-recital—'Cello Sonatas; two lecture-recitals—Trios for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello. Competitions: (1) House, unaccompanied madrigal; (2) House, instrumental.

J. F. S.

Competition Festival Record

MARKS

Apropos of the recent discussion concerning methods of marking, it is of interest to note the following in the syllabus of the 1926 North of England Tournament at Newcastle:

> The scheme of detailed marks has been abandoned. Details needing attention will be underlined by the judge, or doubly underlined if needing special attention. A maximum of a hundred marks will be given, fifty for technique and fifty for interpretation.

We believe this to be a move in the right direction. Some use of figures seems unfortunately to be necessary, but they should be reduced to a minimum. Detailed marking is an attempt to express qualitative values in quantitative terms, and the thing cannot be done. Far more practical and important is the liberal use of headings for underlining by the judge. By this means a detailed criticism of a performance can be given in a way easy to understand, and it can be done expeditiously—an important point in a busy session. The underlinings, the judge's written comments, and a fifty-fifty marking arrangement to show how a performance stands in regard to the spirit and the letter, make up a system that is both simple and comprehensive.

MARKS FOR MEMORY AND SIGHT-SINGING

The question is sometimes raised as to how far performance from memory should be compulsory. Judges usually recommend solo singers especially to be independent of the copy, but they do not take the point into consideration in making their award—rightly, of course, seeing that the syllabus gives them no power to do so. But memory performance should be encouraged, and the following rule from the Newcastle syllabus seems to be as good a method as can be devised:

> In all vocal and instrumental solo classes extra marks to a maximum of five per cent. will be added for memory performances.

The exceptions are certain vocal aria classes, the Quick Study class, and singing to one's own pianoforte accompaniment.

In regard to sight-singing Newcastle grasped the nettle firmly some years ago. The subject is compulsory in all school classes, a maximum of ten marks being added to the total gained by the songs. This plan has intimidated no one, if we may judge from the very large entry in the classes affected; and it has led to a remarkably high standard of sight-reading without making a fetish of the subject.

COMPETITION PLUS REPERTORY

A frequent and reasonable objection to the competition festival is that it leads choirs to spend an undue amount of time on one or at most two pieces instead of building up a good repertory. The plan adopted at the recent competition held by the London Labour Choral Union is worth noting. The competing choirs had to prepare eight pieces for massed performance at the evening concert. From this list one piece was drawn by ballot just before the competition. The plan has much to recommend it, and although in most festivals the cost of eight songs would be prohibitive, a group of three ought not to be regarded as an unreasonable demand.

CONDUCTORS' CLASSES

We are glad to be able to announce that the classes for conductors recently organized by the Federation were so successful that a further series will be held at the Royal Academy of Music, on February 4, 12, 18, and 26. Mr. Ernest Read will again be director, and aspirants need ask for no better guide. Full particulars and tickets may be had from the Secretary, British Federation of Music Competition Festivals, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1.

MORE DOMINION FESTIVALS

Fourteen new Dominion Festivals have applied for affiliation to the Federation during the past few months, among them being Durban, Subiaco (Western Australia), and Saskatchewan. The letter from the Secretary telling us this adds, 'I wish we could get more general members.' Do festivalites as a body realise that the future of the Federation, and therefore, to a considerable extent, of the movement itself, will soon depend largely on this democratic form of support? If even one or two per cent. of festival-goers and competitors became general members (10*s.* 6*d.* per annum) the Federation would be independent of grants, and its usefulness, already great, would be much increased. If there is one form of musical activity that, above all, should rest on a self-supporting, democratic basis, it is surely the Competition Festival.

Music in the Provinces

BANSTEAD.—'Blest Pair of Sirens' and 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' were sung and played, on December 19, by the Banstead Music Society, a choir and orchestra whose ambitions are well guided by Mr. Graham Rider.

BATH.—At the Pump Room the following works have appeared in the programmes: Overture to 'Phèdre,' Bach's Concerto for two violins, Beethoven's sixth Symphony (December 30); Bach's B minor Suite for flute and strings, Brahms's 'Academic' Festival Overture, and the 'Pathetic' Symphony (January 6).

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The first concert of the newly-formed Birmingham Music Society, which has Mr. Appleby Matthews as director, was given on Sunday, December 27. The 'Christmas' Oratorio of Bach is a difficult and not especially popular work, and the members of the Society deserve special praise for attempting it on their first public appearance. Only the parts of the work dealing with the Birth of Christ were of course given. Mr. Alex Cohen led a small orchestra of strings which did sincere if not always very inspired work, and Mr. Lindsey Silver filled in several of the wind and brass parts on the organ. Mr. Steuart Wilson was the principal, and incidentally the best singer in the solo parts. His phrasing and the reverent spirit of most of his arias were admirable, Mr. William Hayle, Miss Elsie Napier, and Miss Doris Watkins were the other soloists. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted a capable little choir.——The Festival Choral Society gave its annual performance of 'The Messiah' on December 26. The choir was rather smaller than usual, only about a hundred and sixty singers taking part, and some forty players from the City Orchestra shouldered the orchestral music. A good balance was obtained nevertheless. Miss Stiles-Allen and Mr. Norman Allin were the principal soloists.——The City of Birmingham Choir, in combination with the 5IT Symphony Orchestra, was heard in 'Hiawatha' on December 21. Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. Harold Williams were the soloists.——A performance of one of Dibdin's best-known operas, 'The Waterman,' was given by members of the Midland Institute on January 7. ——A night of Wagner music drew a large audience to the Sunday concert of the City Orchestra on December 27. The 'Parsifal' Prelude, excerpts from the 'Mastersingers' and the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' were included in the programme. Mr. Karl Melene sang Wotan's 'Farewell,' and some songs from Schumann's 'Dichterliebe.' Mr. Geoffrey Dams sang Vaughan Williams's Four Hymns for tenor solo at another Sunday concert. Some Variations on a Theme for oboe solo by Mr. Guy Warrack seemed pleasant music enough, but in other ways undistinguished. ——A Glazounov Violin Concerto, played by Miss Katie Goldsmith, with the City Orchestra, on January 10, proved a disappointment. Somewhat disconnected in form, and comprising material always ordinary and sometimes merely cheap in feeling, it was given by the player with a zest and brilliance worthy of better music. Brahms's Symphony in D and Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' Overture were also included in the programme.——Assisted by Mr. Arthur Cockerill, the Philharmonic Pianoforte Quartet gave a performance of Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet on January 8, at a Mid-day concert.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Besides 'The Messiah,' choral music for Christmas week included 'The Creation,' sung by the Municipal Choir, under Sir Dan Godfrey, on Sunday, December 20.——At the Winter Gardens orchestral concerts Franck's Symphony, the 'Enigma' Variations, the 'Italian' Symphony, and Cowen's 'Language of Flowers' Suite were played before Christmas, Tchaikovsky's fourth and Brahms's second Symphony early in the new year.

BRADFORD.—A new symphonic poem, 'Oxford,' by Keith Douglas was played by the Bradford Permanent Orchestra at the concert conducted by Mr. Julius Harrison on December 19. On January 9 the programme included Brahms's C minor Symphony and Wolf's 'Italian Serenade.' ——The Hallé Orchestra played at the subscription concert on January 8. Sir Hamilton Harty conducted an excerpt from 'Les Troyens,' Haydn's 'Clock' Symphony, and the two shorter tone-poems of Delius.

BRISTOL.—At the ninetieth annual ladies' night of the Madrigal Society the programme was up to the Society's own mark. Among the old madrigals were Ward's 'Die not, fond lover,' Pilkington's 'Rest, sweet nymphs,' and Vautor's 'Sweet Suffolk Owl.' The modern music included Parry's setting of 'La belle dame sans merci,' 'Tune thy music to thy heart,' and 'Fair and fair,' by Sir Walford Davies, and 'Rose-cheeked Laura,' by P. Napier Miles.

CHESTER.—The Chamber Concert series, given at the Town Hall, ended shortly before Christmas with a programme of Purcell (two Fantasias), Gibbons (three Fantasias), Mozart, and Dohnányi. The players were the Music Society Quartet from London.

CHICHESTER.—The Musical Society closed its 1925 season with its ninety-ninth and hundredth concerts on the afternoon and evening of December 17. The choral programme, given under the late Dr. Read's popular successor, Dr. Conway, consisted of 'Acis and Galatea' and Vaughan Williams's 'Fantasia on Christmas Carols.'

DERBY.—The Choral Union gave 'Israel in Egypt' instead of 'The Messiah' at its Christmas concert. The extra numbers by the band and the soloists were all by Handel. Dr. Henry Coward conducted.

FELIXSTOWE.—So excellent a programme as that chosen for its Christmas concert by the Felixstowe Madrigal Society is a rarity. It included the following: Palestrina's (eight-part) 'Hodie Christus natus est,' a six-part 'Cradle song' by Calvisius, Sweelinck's 'Gaudete Omnes,' Vaughan Williams's 'Wassail Song,' Holst's female-voice 'Ave Maria,' and works by Howells, Warlock, Pearsall, Sandys, Martin Shaw, and Parry. The conductor is Mr. Maurice Vinden.

GUILDFORD.—The Choral Society, assisted by the Guildford Symphony Orchestra, distinguished itself on December 16 by giving afternoon and evening performances of Walford Davies's 'Song of St. Francis,' a work that had been heard only once since its initial production at the Birmingham Festival of 1912. Mr. Claud Powell conducted.

LEEDS.—The Leeds New Choral Society specialises in Bach, and appropriately gave the Christmas Oratorio at its December concert, instead of competing with the performances of 'The Messiah' given by other societies. The singing of the choir, under Dr. C. H. Moody, was of a high standard. Mr. Maude led the small string orchestra that assisted the organ in the accompaniments.

LIVERPOOL.—Weingartner's own choral work, 'The Re-awakening,' stood high among the music performed at the last Philharmonic concert of the year, even though this included the 'Fantastic' Symphony of Berlioz and Mozart's in G minor. The music was splendidly played, and altogether it was a memorable concert.——A Quartet by Casella, minus its last movement, was given at a Rodewald concert. A programme by the Contemporary Music Centre consisted of Honegger's Sonata for two violins, part of Ravel's Sonata for violin and violoncello, Fauré's Quartet in E, and that of Vaughan Williams.——Pizzetti's Violin Sonata in A minor was heard at a British Music Society concert.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.—Dr. Whittaker's Bach Choir gave the most interesting of recent concerts on December 19. The choral works performed were Holst's 'Ode to Death' and three of Bach's Cantatas, Nos. 64, 122, and 154. The orchestra played the 'Brandenburg' Concerto in D.

NORWICH.—A performance of 'Caractacus' was given under festival conditions at St. Andrew's Hall on December 17, with full orchestral accompaniment. The choir was formed of the Norwich Philharmonic Society and the Norwich Choral Society, and Dr. Bates conducted.

PLYMOUTH.—The programme of old and modern choral music recently given by the Madrigal Society under Dr. Harold Lake included Gibbons's 'What is our life?—a play of passion,' in celebration of the Tercentenary.

PORTSMOUTH.—The North End Choral Society, a choir of unusual capacity conducted by Mr. Ernest Birch, recently opened its seventh season with the performance of Sullivan's 'The Martyr of Antioch.'

ST. AUSTELL.—The Philharmonic Society opened its present season with a performance of 'A Tale of Old Japan' on January 13. There was a full orchestra, which also played the first movement of the 'Unfinished' Symphony. Mr. W. Brennand Smith conducted.

STOCKPORT.—A fine performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' was given by the Vocal Union on December 21, under the direction of Dr. Keighley.

STOKE-ON-TRENT.—The Choral Society made a departure from routine on December 17 by giving Rutland Boughton's 'Bethlehem.' A performance of exemplary completeness was brought to an end prematurely by the failure of the electric light. The 'Comrades' song of hope,' the 'Hallelujah' Chorus, and the Soldiers' Chorus from 'Faust' made an impromptu ending.

TORQUAY.—At the first Symphony concert of the year, on January 7, Mr. Ernest W. Goss conducted a Suite in C, arranged by W. Y. Hurlstone from Purcell's harpsichord music. The soloist of the occasion was Mr. Lionel Tertis.——Elgar's 'Daughter of Ancient Kings' and Cornelius's 'Surrender of the Soul' were sung under Dr. Harold Rhodes at the last concert of the Philharmonic Society.

WORCESTER.—The Choral Society, under Sir Ivor Atkins, gave 'The Dream of Jubal' at its last concert before Christmas.——Three orchestral pieces by Mr. J. W. Austin were played by the Symphony Orchestra, of which the composer is conductor, on December 13. The Symphony was Beethoven's first.

YARMOUTH.—The Musical Society opened its sixtieth season on December 16 with 'Caractacus,' of which a creditable performance was given under Dr. Haydon Hare.

YORK.—The all-English programme of the York Madrigal Singers on January 9 included Wilbye's 'Draw on, sweet night' (for six voices), Byrd's 'This day Christ was born,' part-songs by Parry and Bainton, and arrangements by Holst and Vaughan Williams—sixteen unaccompanied numbers in all,

Music in Scotland

EDINBURGH.—The Paterson Orchestral concerts, with the Scottish Orchestra under Mlynarski and Talich, followed the same general lines as the Glasgow concerts (see page 167), but special features were (a) the appearance as guest-conductor of Dr. Malcolm Sargent, who made a very favourable impression in a programme which included Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony and shorter works by Stravinsky, Delius, Mendelssohn, and Rossini; and (b) a Christmas concert for children, at which M. Mlynarski presented a series of national dances of European nations.——Prof. Tovey's Sunday evening concerts at the Synod Hall included a chamber concert, the programme of which contained Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet, Mozart's Pianoforte Trio in G major, and the rarely-heard Saint-Saëns Septet for pianoforte, trumpet, and strings; an orchestral concert by the Reid Orchestra, with a Beethoven programme comprising the fifth Symphony, the 'Coriolanus' Overture, and the Violin Concerto (soloist, M. Angel Grande, the Spanish violinist); and a recital of sonatas for violin and pianoforte, at which M. Lidus van Giltay and Prof. Tovey played examples by Mozart, Brahms, and César Franck.——At its first concert of the season the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society, now in its fifty-fourth year, played two movements of Brahms's third Symphony, the 'Leonora' No. 3 Overture, the 'Pastoral' Symphony from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, Tchaikovsky's 'Sleeping Beauty' Suite, and Peter Warlock's Serenade for strings. Mr. Ralph T. Langley made his début as the Society's conductor, and did some good work, but the programme proved an over-ambitious one for the resources available.——At the last, and best, of the three chamber concerts given by the Falconer String Quartet, the combination played the Ravel Quartet, and were joined by Prof. Tovey in the Brahms Pianoforte Quintet and a Pianoforte Quartet by Prof. Tovey himself.——The Edinburgh Royal Choral Union (Mr. Greenhouse Allt) sang 'The Messiah' on New Year's Day, and its Scottish Choir gave a Scottish concert of part-songs and solos the same evening. Mr. Moonie's Choir (Mr. W. B. Moonie) gave a performance of 'The Creation,' the accompaniments being played by the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society, and later in the month sang 'The Messiah.' Edinburgh Male-Voice Choir (Mr. A. Russell), at its annual concert sang a varied selection of part-songs, and collaborated with Mr. Robert Burnett in Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea.' The North British Railway Musical Association (Mr. A. Russell) gave a choral concert of which the most interesting items were Stanford's 'Blue Bird' and Bantock's wonderful setting of the Hebridean 'Sea Sorrow.' A choral concert was given by the recently-formed Edinburgh William Morris Choir (Mr. G. W. Crawford).

GLASGOW.—Emil Mlynarski, following Hermann Abendroth and Felix Weingartner as visiting conductor of the Scottish Orchestra, directed four concerts, of which one devoted to Wagner was both musically and in point of audience the most successful. In Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, and other highly-coloured work, M. Mlynarski's old tendency to over-emphasise the emotional side of the music at the expense of form, balance, and line seemed more pronounced than ever, but he gave us a stirring performance of Strauss's 'Zarathustra.' Mr. Philip Halstead, the doyen of Glasgow pianists, made a welcome and long-overdue appearance as pianoforte soloist, playing the D minor Concerto of Mozart with charming delicacy and lucidity, and joining the wood-wind leaders in a performance of two movements of Beethoven's Wind Quainet. A young Polish violinist, Mlle. Irene Dobiska, introduced by M. Mlynarski and new to this country, was heard in the Beethoven Violin Concerto and in solos, but despite some quite creditable playing, fell definitely below the requirements of the Concerto and the general standard of the Tuesday concerts. The Glasgow Choral Union and the Scottish Orchestra joined forces in a programme which included Brahms's 'Requiem,' Debussy's 'Blessed Damozel,' for women's voices, the Coronation Scene from 'Boris,' and vocal solos by Mozart and Schubert—rather a mixed banquet. In the regrettable absence, owing to a serious illness, of Mr. Wilfrid Senior, Mr. Hutton Malcolm conducted, and gave us some good solid choral singing, but the general effect was level to the point of dullness, and the orchestra was not under effective control. The choir did its best work in the 'Boris' excerpt. Better work was done by choir and orchestra at the New Year's Day performance of 'The Messiah,' Mr. Hutton Malcolm again conducting, but the standard was not maintained at a repeat performance a fortnight later. Talich succeeded Mlynarski as conductor of the Scottish Orchestra on New Year's evening, and at once re-established himself as the best all-round conductor the Orchestra has had since Kussewitzky. At his second concert, an inspiring reading of the César Franck Symphony swept the audience off its feet, and at later concerts the 'New World' Symphony of Dvorák and Vaughan Williams's Suite, 'The Wasps,' had notable performances. In the Schubert 'Unfinished' Symphony an unduly slow tempo and some superfluous point-making robbed the music of some of its lyrical charm, and the D major Suite (No. 3) of Bach was not entirely free from similar interruption. For his Saturday evenings Talich has adopted a 'national' basis, giving us in turn a French, a Russian, and a Czecho-Slovakian programme. This scheme cannot be described as a great success, and is probably intrinsically unsound. It has certainly introduced quite a lot of music played 'for the first time in Scotland,' some of it for the first time in Britain, but much has failed to justify itself on any other than 'national' grounds, and we agreed heartily with the very distinguished British composer who, after listening impatiently with us to one of these 'national' programmes, ejaculated, 'Give them a decent British programme, and it will simply obliterate all that.' An honourable exception was Tanéïèv's interesting 'Orestes' Overture. M. Lidus van Giltay, the Dutch violinist, appeared at one of these concerts, and played the A major Violin Concerto of Mozart with impeccable technique, great purity of style, and almost a complete absence of vibrato.——The Glasgow Bach Choir, Mr. J. Michael Diack conducting, sang the Christmas Oratorio (abridged), in Glasgow Cathedral, and a strikingly fine choral pastiche comprising choruses selected from some of Bach's lesser-known Church cantatas, skilfully and appropriately fitted to the words of Psalm 21 by Ivor Atkins and J. Michael Diack. This is an item well worth the attention of choirs on the look out for an attractive and not too difficult short choral work.——The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, an old-established musical body which has had some vicissitudes during its history, is doing excellent work under the direction of Mr. J. Peebles Conn, and made a capital appearance in a programme which included as pièce de résistance Schumann's second Symphony.——The Glasgow Orpheus Junior Choir (Mrs. Catherine Armstrong), at its annual concert presented an ambitious programme of unison and one-, two-, three-, and four-part songs, and sang throughout with that fine musical intelligence and insight which one naturally associates with its name. But the tone did not seem too soundly based, and the intonation was frequently far from secure. The Glasgow Orpheus 'Sangspiel' for young children, directed by Miss Ella Voysey, did some really fine work in folk-dances, classical dances, and action-songs. The outstanding things here were two classical dances, 'The Timbrel' and 'The Gleaners,' and 'mime and dance' presentations of two scenes—'Morning' and 'In the Gnome King's Hall'—from 'Peer Gynt.'——Other concerts included a performance of 'The Messiah' by the large Y.M.C.A. Choir (Mr. Hugh Hunter), and a choral concert by the Glasgow Tramways Choir (Mr. Wilfrid Phillips).

KILWINNING.—Under the auspices of the Kilwinning Musical Society, the Perth Madrigal Choir (Mr. D. T. Yacamini) gave a choral concert of high quality.

GENERAL.—Dame Nellie Melba gave farewell concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee. At Glasgow the audience overflowed the limits of St. Andrew's Hall, at Edinburgh Usher Hall was comfortably full, at Dundee Caird Hall was a wilderness. It was interesting to note how much the singer's old qualities (and limitations) remained. Certainly it will not be said of Melba that she 'lagged superfluous.' A promising new-comer, introduced by Melba, was Mr. John Brownlee, a young Scoto-Australian baritone. ——The Glasgow Orpheus Choir paid a New Year visit to Sheffield, Manchester, and Burnley, and had a royal reception.

Music in Wales

ABERCYNON. — The annual Eisteddfod in connection with Tabernacle C.M. Church was held on Christmas Day.

ABERDARE.—On Christmas Day and Boxing Day, the fifth annual concerts were held at Bethel Welsh Congregational Chapel, when the works performed were Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and 'As the hart pants' (Mendelssohn). The singers were the Misses Marion Elmart and Gwen Lewis, and Messrs. Spencer Thomas and Frank Phillips. The conductor was Mr. Dan Edwards, and the accompanists Mr. Tom Jones (organ) and Mr. C. E. Edwards (pianoforte).

ABERTRIDWR. — On Christmas Day, at the Welsh Methodist Chapel, a singing festival, that reached a very high standard, was held under the conductorship of Mr. Ivor Owen, of Swansea.

ABERYSTWYTH.—On December 15 a Children's concert was given by the pupils of the violin classes organized by the National Council of Music (which include all strings except the double-bass). The young players were assisted by some wind instruments from the junior section of the Town Band. Among the items performed were Schubert's 'Marche Militaire,' the Minuet and Finale from Haydn's 'Clock' Symphony, and Edward German's 'Shepherds' Dance' and 'Morris Dance.' The second movement from Mendelssohn's Trio in B flat was played by Idris Thomas (pianoforte), Hubert Pearce (violin), and Haydn Lewis ('cello), and a Bach 'Sarabande' was played as a duet for two violins by Bernard and Leonard White. A very satisfactory level of attainment was achieved throughout the programme. The conductors were Miss Mason, Mr. Bumford Griffiths, and Mr. Ronald Harding. Miss Violet Davies accompanied at the pianoforte.——On New Year's Day the annual Eisteddfod, an affair of some importance, took place at St. Paul's Wesleyan Chapel. Mr. Aneurin Rees and Mr. Norman McLeod were the musical adjudicators.——On January 14 the first College concert of the new term (the hundred and eighty-ninth) took place in University Hall, when Haydn's String Quartet in G (Op. 64) and Brahms's Sextet for strings (Op. 36) were beautifully played. Miss Dilys Wynne Jones and Miss Nellie Jones sang.

Bangor.—In place of the usual College weekly concert on December 10, a highly interesting lecture-recital was given at the College by Mr. Léon Goossens. Mr. Goossens traced the evolution of the oboe, and explained its structure and technique. Some delightful illustrations included Sonatas by Handel and Loeillet, and shorter excerpts from Bach and Mendelssohn. Mr. Goossens was joined by Miss Kathleen Westbourne, Miss Pauline Taylor, and Mrs. W. M. Tipping in a brilliant performance of Mozart's Quartet in F. Later in the evening, along with the College Instrumental Trio and Mr. Steuart Wilson, he took part in a varied programme organized by the Musical Club. At the hundred and third College weekly concert, on January 14, the following programme was presented: The 'Golden' Sonata for two violins, Purcell; String Quartet in F, Mozart; Arioso (for 'cello), Bach; and Trio in C minor, Orifice (a work which gave great pleasure). The fourth School lecture-concert took place at the College on January 15. Mr. E. T. Davies delivered a short preliminary lecture on the 'Art of Listening'; the programme that followed is subjoined: Allegretto from Trio in E flat, Op. 70, No. 1, and Scherzo from Trio in C minor, Mendelssohn; two movements from a String Quartet, Mozart; and String Quartets, (a) 'The Nightingale,' E. T. Davies, (b) 'Molly on the Shore,' Percy Grainger. The programme also included a group of songs, and Debussy's 'Jardins sous la pluie.'——An ex-student, a native of Bangor, Mr. Reginald Hall, has been appointed acting-professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Bridgend. — On Boxing Day the ninth annual Eisteddfod was held at the Town Hall, when Messrs. Haydn Morris, Carmarthen, and T. J. Harries, Rhymney, were the musical adjudicators.

Cardiff.—On December 27, Mr. Herbert Ware's orchestra gave Beethoven's eighth Symphony, in continuation of the series which was commenced about two years ago. The vocalist was Mr. John Perry. It is believed that the forthcoming performance of the ninth Symphony is the first to be heard in Wales.

Cwmparc, Rhondda.—At Bethel English Baptist Church, on Christmas Day, the choir performed Dr. Challinor's 'The Green Light' to an excellent audience. The conductor was Mr. Tom Jones.

Ferndale.—The eighth annual concert, under the direction of Mr. W. T. Lewis, was devoted to Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' the soloists being Miss Ceinwen Rowlands, Miss Muriel Hughes, Mr. Herbert Cornfield, and Mr. Ceredig Jones. The accompanist was Miss Eunice Davies.

Ferryside.—An Eisteddfod was held at Salem Chapel, on Christmas Day, the musical adjudicator being Mr. T. Harris, of Narberth.

Gelli.—On Christmas Day the noted Rhymney Ladies' Choir gave a concert under the conductorship of Miss Mary Richards.

Morriston.—At Tabernacle Chapel, on Boxing Day, the fifty-sixth annual Eisteddfod was held, the musical adjudicators being Mr. Dan Price and Mr. J. Morgan Lloyd. In the evening a concert was given, when Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' were performed under the conductorship of Mr. C. H. Hughson.

Mountain Ash.—The annual Children's Eisteddfod was held at Rhos Baptist Chapel on Boxing Day. On Christmas Day a united singing festival of the Welsh Churches was held at Ffrwd Baptist Chapel, the morning session being devoted to the children, conducted by Mr. Meurig Williams, the adult meetings in the afternoon and evening being conducted by Mr. T. Emrys Jones. Mr. Emlyn Griffiths accompanied at the organ.

Newport (Pem.).—A performance of 'The Messiah' was given on Christmas Day, assisted by the Ammanford and District Orchestral Society.

Pontypridd.—The annual concerts in connection with the Tabernacle Baptist Church took place on Christmas and Boxing Days, when 'Elijah,' Holst's 'Two Psalms,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' were performed, the soloists being Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Ethel Barker, Mr. W. Heseltine, and Mr. W. Watcyn Watcyns. Mr. F. Dalrymple was at the organ, and Mr. Alun Dunmer conducted.

Senghenydd.—At Noddfa Chapel, a singing festival was held, conducted by the Rev. Peter Lewis.

Tongwynlais.—At Salem Baptist Church, on Christmas Day, the 'Nativity Cantata' was given under the conductorship of Mr. Gomer Morgan, assisted by Miss Margaret Chislit and Mr. E. J. Lewis. The accompanist was Mr. Stone Morgan.

Ton Pentre.—At Jerusalem Chapel, on Boxing Day, a concert was given by Miss Leila Megane, assisted by her husband (Mr. Osborne Roberts) and others.

Tonyrefail.—A singing festival was held on Christmas Day, conducted by Mr. J. Singleton, of Port Talbot.

Treharris.—On Christmas Day the annual Eisteddfod was held.

Treorchy.—The Noddfa Baptist Choral Society (conductor, Mr. John Hughes) gave a performance of 'The Messiah' on Christmas Day, and of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on the afternoon and evening of Boxing Day. The soloists were Miss Gladys Naish, Miss Rose Myrtle, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Kenneth Ellis. Mr. Idris Jones accompanied at the organ, and Mr. Gomer Jones led the orchestra.

Music in Ireland

Belfast.—On December 18 and 19, 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah' were respectively given by the Belfast Philharmonic Society, at Ulster Hall, the soloists being Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Ethel Barker, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Joseph Farrington. The performances were under the capable direction of Mr. Godfrey Brown, with Mr. J. H. MacBratney as an efficient organist, and went off with great éclat—though on the second night the audience might well have been larger.——'Messiah' selections were given in various Ulster churches during the Christmas season.——The Queen's Island Band, under Mr. G. Dean, presented a fine programme on December 28. ——On January 8, the British Music Society (Belfast branch) gave an enjoyable concert in Rosemary Hall, under the presidency of Mr. R. S. Noble.——Mr. G. O'Connor Morris, the well-known Irish composer and accompanist, who has lived for many years in London, has joined the staff of 2BE, and will present many of his works on January 20.

Dublin.—The No. 1 Army Band, under Col. Fritz Brase, gave two performances—one at La Scala on December 20, and the second on January 10, at the Theatre Royal. A provincial tour, including Athy, Carlow, Enniscorthy, and New Ross, is in progress.—— The special carol service at Christ Church Cathedral on Christmas Eve attracted a large audience. The carols were beautifully sung by the choir, with Mr. T. H. Weaving at the organ.——Dublin Broadcasting Station (2RN) was officially opened on New Year's Day, the inaugural speech, by Dr. Douglas Hyde, being relayed to all British stations. Greetings were received from London (2LO) and Belfast (2BE). Naturally, an all-Irish programme was presented, the most satisfactory items being the No. 1 Army Band, the Palestrina Choir, some violin and harp selections, and songs by Joseph O'Mara, J. C. Doyle, and Seamus Claudillon.——On January 8, an interesting organ and violin recital (broadcast from St. Mary's Church, Donnybrook) was given by Mr. W. E. Hopkins and Prof. Walter Starkie.——The permanent orchestra of the Dublin Broadcasting Station is now complete, and the performances up to date have been tolerably successful, especially considering that 2RN is only commencing its career.——The Royal Dublin Society's chamber music recitals were resumed on January 11, when two delightful programmes were given by Jelly d'Aranyi (violin), with Ethel Hobday at the pianoforte. At the afternoon performance upwards of two thousand were present, and some eighteen hundred attended in the evening.——On January 9, Dr. and Mrs. Larchet were entertained at the monthly dinner of the United Arts Club. The hope was expressed that Dublin would soon have a permanent orchestra.——A Dowland celebration is being arranged for January 21, being the Tercentenary of the death of John Dowland, a native of Dublin.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BERLIN

BUSONI'S OPERA, 'DIE BRAUTWAHL,' PERFORMED AT THE BERLIN MUNICIPAL OPERA HOUSE

With Bruno Walter as general-musical-director of the Municipal Opera House, devoting all his efforts to the task of laying sure foundations and forming a repertory, it is more than natural that the duty of producing novelties is left to other Kapellmeisters. Thus it fell to the young conductor, Fritz Zweig, to make the public acquainted with Busoni's 'Brautwahl,' an opera performed in 1912 at the Hamburg Stadttheater. 'Brautwahl' had since been produced, in a shortened form, at the Mannheim Opera House. In the meantime the composer's 'Faust' had revealed him on a higher plane. He had put off the cloke of conventionalism, and found his own manner of expression.

All this may be true, but the later Busoni is easily to be recognised in the former, for in 'Brautwahl' may be seen the same reluctance to develop sentimental ideas. This might seem only a negative asset, were not the outlines of what we may call the true Busonian style latent in it.

It was a true Berlinese story, told by the world-famous poet, novelist, and musician, E. T. A. Hoffmann, that prompted in Busoni the idea of composing an opera. The philistine spirit of the bourgeois as viewed through the spectacles of a great romanticist arrested the creative mind of the man who has chosen Berlin as his residence, and sees in Hoffmann one of his predecessors in the field of art in general and music in particular. Of course there is a difference between the two, for Busoni's personality lacks even the least trace of romanticism. He may be said to abhor anything like impassioned feeling. But a point where Hoffmann and Busoni meet is found in a certain independence of mind and a kind of critical superiority to common things and common humanity. This novel, which tells the story of a young girl destined to be married to a dry and dull functionary, but who has fallen in love with a young painter, has not appealed to the composer on account of its love story, but because of the magician's art displayed by Hoffmann in making play with his puppets. All these Berlin bourgeoisie are dealt with in grotesque fashion, and it is just in his subtle penetration and expression of the grotesque and the ironical that we find Busoni at his best. Some Wagnerisms are easily to be found in the score, although Busoni had never a great predilection for Wagner, whose music, in his opinion, too openly explored the erotic. But in composing his 'Brautwahl,' Busoni had not yet reached the point where he could completely divest himself of Wagnerian influences. Nevertheless, his score has a decidedly individual colour, and reflects the intellectual side of this man of genius, who is able so strongly to infuse his personality into his orchestral writing. It cannot be denied that this opera is more, and at the same time less, than a common opera. It will be for the few connoisseurs to recognise its intimate moments; the great public will not easily enjoy them.

The performance gave a sufficient idea of the work, but no more than a succès d'estime can be recorded.

STRAVINSKY FESTIVAL AT FRANKFORT

Among the provincial towns of Germany, Frankfort conserves a musical life of its own. Also it possesses some wealthy music-lovers who are ready to make sacrifices on behalf of musical culture, and who are not averse from furthering new ideas, however problematical these may be. A Stravinsky Festival held at Frankfort on two consecutive evenings afforded new evidence of the untiring activity of this city. It is here that Hermann Scherchen, once a fervent adherent of Schönberg, now does his best to bring the composer of the 'Fire Bird' to general public notice and acknowledgment. On his recent tour through Germany, Stravinsky gave the Berlin public some older works in their original form, or in new arrangements, a course into which he was apparently led more by commercial than by artistic motives. The 'Pulcinella' Suite, arranged for violin and pianoforte, affords an example which might have seemed strange were not the answer forthcoming. It may be added that Alma Moodie, the excellent violinist, enjoys the privilege of concert performance of this piece for one year. After this period it will be free. Of course, the arrangement will never be equal in effect to the original orchestral score, although the composer has contrived a clever adaptation which makes a favourite number in a concert programme. But is it worthy of a master at the meridian of his powers, thus to arrange his own creations? There is too much métier and too little originality in this remodelling of the same things.

A feature of Stravinsky's present music is its marked tendency towards the concert room. Even those works which had been composed for the ballet have been placed on the concert platform. Among these 'Les Noces,' performed at Frankfort, cannot but make a strange impression on the hearer. Belonging to the Russian period of his career, 'Les Noces' may no doubt be placed among his best works, for, in their original orchestral form, they are the expression of his very personality. But the hearer never forgets that this work, written for ballet, has no symphonic character. Despite all objections, however, the concert performance proved more impressive than, e.g., the Pianoforte Sonata, which we have heard so many times during recent months, but which was performed for the first time at Frankfort. It has been surpassed by the Serenata for pianoforte, which the composer played on this occasion. Though the new Stravinsky style, as represented by his pianoforte works, suffers from the keyboard's lack of colour, yet this new Serenata, written very slowly and carefully, has the great virtue of more convincingly combining Bachian style and Stravinskian manner than was the case in precedent works. Even the opera 'Mavra' has found its way to the concert-platform. Stravinsky counts it among his favourites. 'Mavra' has not had the good fortune of winning public favour as yet. The score represents a conbination of the Russian element and the fox-trot, though with more naive simplicity than ever. There may be some interesting moments in Stravinsky's handling of the wind instruments, but this is not enough for real success.

Hermann Scherchen shared the performance of these works with Stravinsky himself. On the whole, the two concerts constituted a great musical event for Frankfort, and, thanks to some first performances of works in their original and in concert form, also for the musical world in general.

PAUL HINDEMITH'S CONCERTO FOR ORCHESTRA

Paul Hindemith's output exceeds that of any among the young composers of our time. There is, perhaps, only Milhaud who, as improvisator, may be compared with him. This overflowing imaginative power, while in itself a virtue, causes a great number of his works to be rather superficial. But though the quality of some compositions may be discussed, his enormous talent remains uncontested.

For one who, like Hindemith, creates in Dionysian mood, it seemed strange that chamber music should continue to be satisfying. Its sonority is very limited. The sensual, the passionate, and the emotional have little chance of being expressed in this kind of writing.

In his early career Hindemith had written some operettas, but at that time he had not yet acquired his facility in chamber music, and his orchestral output was full of Wagner and Strauss. It is now, at a period of relative maturity, that he again takes up the task of writing an orchestral score. His Concerto for orchestra, which is the first example of his new artistic achievement, has been performed by Furtwängler at one of the Philharmonic concerts. It is extremely difficult for a composer of our time to find an orchestral style of his own. Certainly it would be too much to say that Hindemith has found it, but he has no doubt begun to solve the problem. His new work, in four movements, varies between a sort of chamber-music translated into the language of the orchestra, and the massive opposition of some groups of the whole body of instruments. It need hardly be said that polyphonic texture forms the foundationof the score. In this Hindemith proves, as always, very enterprising. More striking, however, is the rhythmic power that flows from his never-tiring vitality. Then the unisono of certain parts of the orchestra has something sweeping and startling. The rhythm is strongly emphasised by an original use of the instruments of percussion. The whole piece, as performed by Furtwängler, obtained a great success, due primarily to its passionate character. The future of Hindemith depends, however, on his capacity for developing other, more lyrical, qualities. On this side of his work we find some shortcomings.

Not long before this event took place, Prokofiev's Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 3, provided an instance of vitality in rhythm, expressed by a composer of a quite different race. This Concerto, one of the best written in our time, met with such unanimous public favour that the name of Prokofiev, which hitherto had been overshadowed by that of Stravinsky, will henceforward be welcomed by the broader mass of music-lovers. The soloist in this Concerto was Heinz Jolles, a pianist who had seemed a rather meditative player, but who on this occasion gave proof of rare temperament and virtuosity. He may be considered as one of the outstanding personalities among the younger pianists.

THE LONDON STRING QUARTET

The recent and first visit of the London String Quartet to Berlin did not fail to stir the curiosity of music-lovers, though it took place at Christmas time—which, of course, is not the most favourable period for new-comers. Another unfavourable circumstance was the programme. The L.S.Q. proved too respectful for the chronological order of the Beethoven Quartets. We have lost the habit of holding such a divine Beethoven service. Even a Beethoven festival such as was announced by the London players ought not to present too many works of the same character on the same evening. It is, for instance, very doubtful if all the items belonging to No. 18 have a just claim to our attention. They may, without any detriment to the general impression, be overlooked. But in spite of all that could militate against the success of the tour, this chamber music association won the hearty applause of the musical public. It was the first time that England—which, in the German view, had hitherto lagged behind other European nations in this field of executive art—had sent missionaries of chamber music to Germany. It is, of course, not a matter for wonder that Germany should think she possessed the true Beethoven style. Thus the audience was at once appreciative of the perfect sonority of the ensemble, which was expressed with a certain aristocratic austerity that implied reserves of feeling. But as the players advanced in the Beethoven work, the warmer became their interpretation; indeed they proved not only highly representative of English chamber music, but one of the best chamber music organizations in the world.

When, after a fortnight, the Léner Quartet made its second appearance at Berlin, the racial difference between the two groups became evident. This Quartet, coming from the South, has preserved all its southern temperamental qualities, but exhibits them in so refined a style that once more we were under the spell of first-rate chamber music.

Adolf Weissmann.

HOLLAND

Christmas, and the week or two before and after it, is not the time to expect much in the way of novelties, especially in a country which seems to enjoy a reputation for being ultra-conservative. Yet we have had a number of examples, some of quite considerable interest. Prokofiev's third Pianoforte Concerto, played by the composer, with Monteux conducting, puzzled the critics and pleased not a few of the public. One of the critics compared its style with that of the conferenciers of the 'Blue Bird' and 'Chauve Souris' companies. My own impression is that such comparison is favourable to neither side, and that if the esteemed and amusing conferenciers mentioned produce anything like the same effect as does Prokofiev's quite serious though very brilliant music, they mave mistaken their calling. It made a deeper impression, and aroused infinitely more discussion, than did the 'Scherzo Sinfonico' of Rudolf Mengelberg. A nephew of the conductor, he is for some reason by no means persona grata among the musical public here, and so sometimes gets less than his deserts when he exercises his faculties as a composer. Yet it must be said that such faculties are not of a strength to entitle him to more than a medium status. He is scholarly, often pleasant, and much influenced by the Amsterdam idols, Mahler and Strauss. The 'Scherzo' won a succès d'estime, but nothing more. Ernest Mulder, the conductor of the local branch of Toonkunst at Bussum, a former pupil of the conservative Bernard Zweers, evinces thoroughly modernist predilections—an outlook which he shares with other pupils of the master's. His 'Symphonia Sacra,' produced by his own Society, shows this modernism struggling with a natural tendency to follow the leaders of his youth, Wagner and Brahms. The orchestration owes much to the latter, and perhaps failed of its effect owing to the fact that it was not particularly well played, the choral work being much better done. In any case, Mulder is a composer who may do much when he has found himself; at present he is not sure where he stands, so that at its best his work is lacking in unity. Mozart's 'Davidde Penitente' followed in the same programme. Another curious mixture of works in a single programme was that of the Hague Society known as 'Excelsior,' in which Honegger's 'Le Roi David' was followed by selections from Bach's Christmas Oratorio and one of the Church Cantatas. Honegger is just now getting a large share of attention here, though his work does not always win the appreciation which his admirers could wish. British music has not had much hearing during the last few weeks, which made the inclusion of Arnold Bax's Quintet for harp and strings in the programme of Rosa Spier's harp concerts at The Hague and Rotterdam more than usually welcome. It is a pity that Bax has not written for this combination since he attained a fuller maturity, for, delightful as the work is and was acknowledged to be by public and critics, it was impossible to avoid the idea that it lacked both unity and spontaneity. To correct the impression that British composers are amateurs at their job, it would be well if such a work could be followed by later examples of the same composer, some of which, happily, are available for study in the fine public music library at The Hague. Madame Spier, who is not only a fine harpist but an all-round musician, had the assistance of The Hague String Quartet in this work, and in Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for harp, strings, flute, and clarinet, the two last instruments being played by Messrs. Jan Prins and A. Witt. Debussy's Sonata for harp, flute, and viola, and a Sonata of Bach for flute and harp, were also in the programme. Amongst the harp solos were Gabriel Fauré's 'Impromptu' and Sigtenhorst Meyer's 'Twickel,' the last-named I believe originally written for the pianoforte, but making a perfect number for the classic stringed instrument. Altogether a delectable concert!

Since he became known abroad, Sigtenhorst Meyer is rapidly winning his proper position in his own country, and his name, which a year or two ago was heard only in the inner circles, is now on the lips of all who wish to learn something about the music of Holland. His five 'Spiritual Songs' are sung everywhere, though they seldom renew the impression they made when they were interpreted with perfect understanding and sympathy by Rient van Santen at the second concert of the Dutch Chamber Orchestra, under Anthony Bernard. They are of that intimate kind of music which demands an unusual degree of earnestness of purpose, though so far as technical difficulties are concerned they are within the capacity of most singers. The same composer's Suite for string orchestra (originally written as a String Quartet), dealing with five events in the Life of Christ, played at the same concert, deserves to be heard much more frequently than it is. Written some years ago, its inspiration is unequal, yet never falls below a definitely good level, and at its best affords music of rare beauty and expressiveness. The orchestra played the work well, but exceeded anything it had yet done in Corelli's Concerto Grosso 'Fatto per la Notte di Natale,' achieving a fine mysticism and a delightful pastoral style.

As in England, the Norse composer, Hjalmar Borgstrom, is here scarcely more than a name, so that the production of his tone-poem, 'Hamlet,' for pianoforte and orchestra, by the Utrecht Town Orchestra, introduced a new element into our programmes. Given under the young conductor, J. L. Mowinkel, jun., the work is, I believe, a comparatively early example, and has less of the national element than his 'Borkman' Symphony, after Ibsen, or the psychological 'Mind of Man' poem. However, one got the impression that here was a composer of some power and imagination. The conductor has also real ability, but is yet somewhat immature in his methods and ideas.

A new combination designated 'The Dutch Trio,' and consisting of a pianist, Madame F. Tabakspinder-Roeper, a violinist, Madame B. van Breemen-Schrik, and a 'cellist, Henk van Wezel, has made a very promising début at Amsterdam with a programme consisting of works by Mozart, Beethoven, and Fauré. The players have not yet achieved a perfect ensemble either in ideas or execution, but the seriousness with which they apply themselves to their work, and their real ability as individual artists, suggests that this will come.

A hopeful sigh that prejudice is being removed occurs in a criticism by the musical editor of the Amsterdam Handelsblad, Herman Rutters, of the singing in German of Handel's oratorios by Dutch choruses:

> 'Against the singing of the—original—English text [he says] there may possibly be many objections, though I do not know why for educated Hollanders, who have no objection to French and Italian, English should be insuperable, and I constantly have the impression that this is more laxity than lack of goodwill. In any case, if not in the original language, why in a German translation and not a Dutch one? The "Deutschtum" of Handel has nothing to do with his English oratorios.' HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

NEW YORK

The Symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms, and Tchaikovsky are imperishably great, yet too many repetitions of them during one season sometimes weary the jaded concert-goer, and it was a welcome relief and delight when Nicolai Sokoloff presented a Sibelius Symphony as the principal feature of a concert he gave recently when he brought his Cleveland Orchestra to New York. We have heard Sibelius before, principally by Monteux and Stransky, and occasionally by Stokowski, whose Philadelphia Orchestra play the No. 5 at one of his New York concerts this winter. Sokoloff chose the first, and even if it shows some immaturity compared with the later examples, it is still a marvellous composition abounding in musical ideas and their energetic expression. In the performance the talent of the leader as an interpreter and also as a drill-master was constantly in evidence. When Sokoloff appeared as a guest-conductor at the Stadium last summer, his work with the Philharmonic Orchestra was received with high favour, which was greatly enhanced by hearing his own men this winter respond so clearly to his ideas, and with such technical perfection. Reports reach us of the straitened conditions of Sibelius's life at Helsingfors, and a fund has already been started at New York by some of the most prominent musicians for his relief, our chief conductors heading the list—a testimony that they, at least, admire the work of the Finnish composer. This success of the Cleveland Orchestra has led us to wish that the two other guest-conductors who appeared at the Stadium (Mr. Ganz, of St. Louis, and Mr. Reiner, of Cincinnati) would also bring their own orchestras to play for us—not to change the opinion we already have of their capabilities, but to confirm that we now have of their value as exponents of the conductor's art. Mr. Reiner directed a small orchestra at a concert of the International Composers' Guild, but the programme was either trivial or ugly, with the exception of Casella's 'Pupuzzetti.' This music for a puppet show is real music, simple and poetic, full of vitality and yet modern. It was the only item worth Mr. Reiner's attention, and only his name and that of Casella are worth mentioning. The aim of the Society is a good one, for many modern composers deserve a hearing, but a line should be drawn between works that indicate some talent or a possible future, and such futile things as the Guild often serves up. The American League of Composers offered us recently a first performance in America of 'El Retablo de Maese Pedro,' by Manuel de Falla, thought by some to be the greatest living Spanish composer. This marionette opera was performed by puppets large and small, but it might have been better done and better sung. Gabrilowitsch does not bring his Detroit Orchestra to this city, but he frequently appears in pianoforte recitals or as soloist with our own orchestras. His recent performance in the Beethoven E flat with the Philharmonic Orchestra produced one of the most beautiful readings of the 'Emperor' ever heard, though it was a little disturbing to see the use he made of his right hand when it was not employed on the keys. It was apparent that he was accustomed to playing the Concerto and conducting his own orchestra at the same time. We hope Mengelberg didn't mind having his duties thus interfered with!

We certainly have the world's greatest pianists with us this winter, for it would be hard to dispute the supremacy of Messrs. Hofmann, Rachmaninov, and Paderewski, added to that of Gabrilowitsch. The two Russians and the two Poles seem to defy rivalry. Some prefer one, some prefer another of the four, and it would seem fair to say that Hofmann is the most even of all pianists. But owing to his political fame, added to his great musicianship, Paderewski occupies a unique position. The fingers may not be quite so nimble as they were twenty years ago—sometimes passages are blurred—yet none could surpass his recent performance of a Chopin Mazurka; and his big heart goes out all the time to his political allies. Last year European soldiers received every penny he made with his instrument, this season it all goes to the American Legion, and while it was estimated beforehand that the receipts for these concerts would not be less than twenty-five thousand dollars, it is already on record that three recitals have yielded twenty-two thousand, and one more of the series is yet to be given.

Kurt Schindler, the indefatigable conductor of the Schola Cantorum, offered his subscribers a whole programme of Russian music at his first concert of the season, the Moussorgsky selections being sung by his choir in the Russian language, a thing hitherto unknown at New York. Schindler proved himself an expert in programme making, for Rimsky-Korsakov was the only other composer presented after Moussorgsky. The opening number, the 'Destruction of Sennacherib,' showed the rugged strength and dramatic energy that continues to enthral us in countless repetitions of 'Boris Godunov.' Battle and death are here portrayed with grim grandeur in the three verses of Byron's poem that Moussorgsky used. The short choral work is seldom heard, even in Russia, and its previous appearance elsewhere seems to have been one performance at Paris. The opera of 'Khovantchina' has been given in London, apparently as a vehicle for Chaliapin's genius. The excerpts chosen by Schindler were not those in which Chaliapin appeared; they were choral scenes from Acts 1 and 3, so full of dramatic intensity that the listener did not need a stage setting to increase the power of the music. Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sadko' is in six tableaux. The fourth ('The Market Fair of Novgorod') was a repetition of the performance of the Schola last year. The sixth ('The Palace of the Ocean King') was a novelty. This fascinating music deals with fantasy, and has nothing to do with the stern realities of life. We have melody, rhythm, invention, and wonderful colour. 'Sadko' was sung in English, and the full Philharmonic Orchestra rendered valuable assistance.

Respighi has appeared this season in the dual rôle of creator and performer, playing his own Concerto from manuscript with the Philharmonic Society. While it is always interesting to hear composers produce their own works, it can very seldom be claimed for them that they are great solo artists, and the Italian is no exception to the general rule. In these days when the number of those who have reached a high position as soloists is legion, Respighi cannot be considered a great pianist, nor was he at his best as a composer for the instrument. He had little that was important to say, and did not show much originality. His ideas need amplification by the full resources of the orchestra to be made interesting. Respighi is distinctly an orchestral composer, and does not increase his reputation by venturing outside that field.

Morris Gest brought the Moscow Art Theatre Musical Studio here for a period of seven weeks, appropriating a full week for each production. The tickets were sent to the musical critics, but the company excels only histrionically, and not in its singing. Moreover the music presented is not Russian, and in spite of the dramatic merit of the company, it is not good art thus to represent French opera from a Russian point of view. Offenbach's 'La Périchole' and Lecocq's 'La Fille de Madame Angot' savour too much of Moscow and too little of Paris. This Russian company needs a Stravinsky to write for it instead of filching from the work of other nations, for its members are really clever—in their way.

Mr. Gatti has been prodigal in his Italian revival from novelties this season. 'The Jewels of the Madonna' has an absurd plot and undoubtedly poor music, but Marie Jeritza's impersonation of 'Mariella' is quite the best we have ever seen of that character. She acts every minute, but does not over-act. Even the vulgarity is not overdrawn, and the passionate love scene cannot be praised too highly. Where is Elsa, where is Elizabeth? Not a trace of them is left in this wild Mariella, while her singing deserved as much applause as her acting, and applause she received such as is almost never given in the Opera House.

In 'The Jest' there is no great star, though Titta Ruffo might claim he had the leading part; but Gigli might dispute this, for he is on the stage nearly all the time, and never impersonated any rôle better than that of Giannetto. The plot is too complicated to unravel here, but many theatre-goers have seen the Barrymore brothers in Sam Benelli's play. Giordani's music is far better than that of Wolf-Ferrari, even if we hear in it echoes of other composers. Both operas were sumptuously mounted, and 'The Jest' received its American première.

M. H. Flint.

TORONTO

Since my last letter there has taken place what was to many the most deeply inspiring event of the musical season—a recital by Rachmaninov. To criticise his playing would be to doubt a gift of the gods. His interpretations may not appeal to all alike, yet an evening spent under his spell cannot fail to impress even the most steadfast taste. In point of technique, and also range of style, his programme speaks for itself, viz.: Partita No. 4, in D major (Bach); Impromptu and 'The Brooklet' (Schubert—transcribed by Rachmaninov); Sonata in B minor (Chopin); Consolation, in E major, 'Dance of the Gnomes,' 'Heroica' (Liszt); Fairy Tale, in E minor (Medtner); Etude Tableau and Prelude (Rachmaninov); Liebesfreud (Kreisler—transcribed by Rachmaninov). And how refreshing to be able to say that Rachmaninov is not a specialist!

The New Symphony Orchestra, at its forty-third Twilight concert, enjoyed many happy moments in Smetana's 'Bartered Bride' Overture, found rather uncertain and much too obvious sweetness in two movements, Rêverie and Scherzo, from Foerster's Suite, Op. 47, and supported with fair judgment some brilliant though often stereotyped playing by Jean Wood in the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto, Op. 16. Despite the unfortunate hour, between five and six, the attendance seems to be settling down to a comfortably filled hall. It is a great pity that the evenings cannot be utilised by our orchestra, but as most of the men are playing regularly in the smaller orchestras of the various theatres, this is impossible. Great credit is due, therefore, to the committee and to the conductor, Luigi von Kunits, for the reputation that, against great odds, this courageous organization has built up.

Our string quartet, the Hart House, which is steadily accumulating Continental fame, found solid food after its own heart in the three Quartets chosen for the second home concert—Bartók's No. 1, Op. 7, Debussy's G minor, Op. 10, and Malipiero's 'Rispetti e Strambotti.' The playing throughout the whole evening was of the highest standard, being marked with that atmosphere of keen musicianship which gives to one of a series of performances the glamour of a première. The utmost praise may be accorded to Geza de Kresz for his untiring work in perfecting this organization, and mention must be made of the influence which is being derived from his violin recitals, the second of which dealt soundly with such works as the E major Partita (Bach); Concerto in D major, Op. 77 (Brahms); Hungarian Dances, third and fourth books (Brahms-Joachim); 'Scènes de la Czarda,' No. 9, 'Szinka Punna' (Hubay); Old Hungarian Themes of the 18th century (Tzigane); Rapsodie de concert (Ravel).

The Metropolitan Church Choir, under Dr. H. A. Fricker, recently launched a special series of Sunday evening performances with chamber orchestra, commencing with 'He shall feed His flock' and 'Come unto Him' from 'The Messiah,' 'Ever onward, ever upward' (Bach), 'In confidence and trust' (Bach), Psalm 148 (Holst), 'Come and thank Him' (Bach), 'Après l'Eté' (Schmitt), for strings, Minuet (Boccherini), Minuet (Handel), for organ and strings. Later performances were given of Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' and the first half of 'The Messiah.'

H. C. F.

VIENNA

THE NEW OPERATIC SITUATION

The last few weeks have brought a strange reversion of things at the Staatsoper and Volksoper. The former house, commanding perhaps the best operatic orchestra of Europe, a large number of world-famous stars, a big and luxurious apparatus, and a vast financial subsidy from the government, is labouring under great artistic and economic difficulties to combat public apathy. The Volksoper, on the other hand, which has been the skeleton in Vienna's operatic cupboard for many seasons past, and was lately closed for a long time owing to lack of public support, is thriving and doing rather good work to overflowing houses. While the receipts of the Staatsoper have averaged only fifty pounds and less on many occasions, the small and modest Volksoper records nightly receipts of a hundred and fifty pounds and over. This peculiar state of things should not be taken to indicate that the Staatsoper has deteriorated artistically, or that the productions of the Volksoper are striking achievements. The actual reason lies in the fact that the Volksoper is working with low admission prices accessible to the great populace, and staging rarely-heard works of wide appeal, not with stars, but with a well-rounded, if mediocre, ensemble. The lesson to be deduced from the great following which the Volksoper has thus gained, is that the broad masses—in Central Europe at least—consider opera a vital necessity, but care little for star casts. With them 'the play is the thing.' The extraordinary feature of the Volksoper's success, moreover, rests in the fact that the members are playing on their own responsibility, without any financial backing whatever, and doing well. Thus the Vienna Volksoper is to-day probably the only opera-house in all Europe which is self-supporting and, moreover, a lucrative enterprise.

The directorate acted wisely in reviving one of the finest classics of Viennese operetta, Carl Millöcker's comic-opera 'Poor Jonathan.' This venture into the realms of older Viennese operetta was particularly gladly embraced by the public, the control which publishing firms and composers exercise over the local operetta market having virtually excluded the classic operas from the first-class operetta houses. The successes of the day reign there, and Johann Strauss and Millöcker are relegated to makeshift matinée performances. The Volksoper's production of Millöcker's opera was not, according to present standards, first-class in the staging, but it bespoke ample rehearsals and painstaking work on the musical side of the performance. The libretto, slightly modernized, proved still fresh and humorous, and the music as delightful as ever. It was with this work that Millöcker joined hands with his greater colleague, Strauss, in an effort to establish a Viennese antidote to the then commanding popularity of Offenbach's frivolous wit. Waltzes and marches predominate in it, and Millöcker's occasional slips into the spiced rhythms of his great French competitor are particularly piquant.

The Volksoper's first novelty of the season was 'Doppo' ('Afterwards'), by Edoardo Granelli. This composer is an Italian conductor for some time resident at Vienna, and such cosmopolitan influences react on his music. He has learned to dip his brush into the ink-bottle of Richard Strauss, but has not forgotten his Puccini, nor the verismo of his countrymen, Mascagni and Leoncavallo. The book is crude in its effects, and of the 'realistic' type. The music shows some real stage temperament, and has its best moments in the lyrical portions, but Granelli will do much better work if he will learn to shake off the traditional Italian idiom of the late 'nineties.

NOVELTIES AND 'NOVELTIES'

Of the late 'nineties, too, is the language which Richard Strauss speaks in his widely famous and by now 'popular' symphonic poems. The recent output of this one-time modernist is such as to confirm the general belief that his creative powers came to a standstill at least fifteen years ago. His latest work, a Pianoforte Concerto somewhat lengthily termed 'Parergon to the Sinfonia Domestica,' has been previously reviewed in these columns. The first Viennese performance strengthened the conviction that the sole justification of this piece consists in the fact that it furnished the one-armed pianist, Paul Wittgenstein's, talent and ambition with a brilliant medium for his gifts. It is effective enough to serve this end, and misses its purpose (and its effectiveness) only in the opening passages, which savour of a laboured modernism. Less pretentious but more sincere is another Concerto written for Wittgenstein, by Rudolf Braun, the blind Viennese composer. Braun does not disavow his predominantly classicistic orientation, and writes good, legitimate music of more sincerity than originality. In the last movement he too draws upon Lanner's famous old 'Schönbrunner' Waltz which inspired Stravinsky for one of the humorous sidelights of his 'Petrouchka.'

In the measure in which Strauss's creative capacities have waned, he has ceased to influence the modern German composers of modern tendencies. Emil Bohnke, however, in his new Pianoforte Concerto, still sails in Straussian waters—not, be it said, of the 'Till Eulenspiegel' type, but of 'Elektra' (which is, and remains, Strauss's supreme spiritual effort). Bohnke's Violin Concerto, recently heard here, is an older work, less interesting, and palpably entangled in classical idioms arbitrarily 'modernized' by occasional melodic and harmonic complications. The Pianoforte Concerto, which Richard Buhlig played in big style, with the composer conducting, is, as I have said, Straussian in some of its melodics and in its instrumental opulence; but it has also some of the Straussian fire that we used to know, and, though occasionally operatic, is gripping and earnest music.

If Bohnke conceives the pianoforte less as a solo instrument than as a link in the dramatic ensemble of his orchestra, the Double Concerto by Max Bruch (a posthumous work first produced here by two American sisters named Sutro) is more conventional and far from exciting. Bruch did not, happily, live to see the downfall of his once over-rated musical production; he will survive, perhaps, as composer of the G minor Violin Concerto, but his posthumous work was heard too late by thirty or more years.

Rudolf Mengelberg, a relative of the famous conductor, has tried his hand at a symphonic poem called 'Symphonic Elegy,' which Dirk Foch presented at the Konzertverein. Mengelberg also succumbs to Straussian influences, which is not surprising in a composer of moderately modern tendencies, but he seasons his score with a bit of Mahlerian lyricism at the end. The composition seems designed along the lines of 'Death and Transfiguration,' but the Transfiguration is tempered into a mild resignation reminiscent of the closing passage of Mahler's 'Song of the Earth.'

Next to Strauss, Franz Schreker is one of the composers who seem to exert very little influence upon the present generation of young creative musicians. Schreker's former pupils have for the most wended their way to the more radical camp of Schönberg, and others have remained unknown and unproductive. Felix Petyrek belongs to the former variety, and his 'Symphonietta,' which Rudolf Nilius produced here lately, hardly affords an insight into his present artistic status. It is an earlier composition, and tainted by his one-time master Schreker's predilection for vivid orchestral colouring. Yet even here Petyrek asserts some individual traits which point the way of his later development.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

The Rosé Quartet, at its latest concert, awakened memories of the time when, twenty-four years ago, this master organization blazed the trail for Schönberg. Schönberg's 'Verklärte Nacht,' first produced by the Rosés in 1902 amid vociferous demonstrations, was respectfully and enthusiastically received at a recent re-hearing. It seems incredible now that this music should have sounded cacophonous a score of years ago, since to our taste it seems rather to need a strong and harsh element to relieve its lyrical exuberance and romanticism, which strike us now as well-nigh obsolete. Another historical item at the same concert was Puccini's String Quartet, 'Crisantemi,' a short and unassuming movement dedicated to the memory of Duke Amadeo di Savoia. This is one of Puccini's few chamber music compositions, and is virtually unknown. It is not likely to add many laurels to his fame. Operatic diction prevails, though subdued and made to suit the occasion.

Robert Heger, the conductor from the Staatsoper, and hitherto unknown here as a composer of a successful opera and a choral work with orchestra, 'Song of Peace,' does not betray his theatrical past in his Trio in F minor. Rather he cultivates a romantic mood reminiscent of Mendelssohn, and writes gratefully for the instruments. To let the instruments 'sing' to their hearts' content is the aim, too, of a String Quintet by Egon Kornauth, a young Austrian composer. His music is well-constructed rather than strikingly novel, and achieves a clever grouping of the high strings against the lower voices—two violas and 'cello. The fault of this Quintet is Kornauth's weakness for frequent reiteration of his themes. A lady composer, concealed behind the pseudonym of E. Geyring, and who has recently had several hearings here in her Quintet for strings and clarinet, is more ambitious for the paraphernalia of modernism. In the first movement she contrives this idiom by rather desultory and arbitrary part-writing, and by ventures into free tonality. Later she seeks refuge in Wagnerian reminiscences of a more melodious nature. On the whole, her Quintet lacks concision, notwithstanding some glimpses of talent.

The first concert of the season given by the Austrian section of the International Society for Contemporary Music brought the first performance of Schönberg's Pianoforte Suite, Op. 25, among such heterogeneous compositions as Louis Gruenberg's 'Poème' for 'cello and pianoforte; Max Butting's Quintet, Op. 22, for oboe, clarinet, violin, viola, and 'cello; Karl Horwitz's lyric songs, Op. 9; and Felix Petyrek's 'Two Fugues' for pianoforte, first heard at Donaueschingen. Schönberg's interpreter was again that marvellous modernistic pianist, Eduard Steuermann, who commands both musical insight and technical ability to play from memory what is a masterly combination of classic forms with a rigid application of the composer's new twelve-tone theory. At an immediate repetition, even the most scrutinizing hearer grasped only certain formal and constructive elements of this infinitely complicated work, which demands extensive study. To term it, as some do, 'destructive' music, is ludicrous. It is infinitely constructive, indeed re-constructive; but the edifice is built on new and untrodden ground.

Butting's Quintet shows more imagination and invention than the capacity to develop either. Gruenberg's 'cello piece formed a strange comparison with Schönberg's Suite. The composer, who evinced his preference for '100 per cent. Americanism' in his fresh and amusing 'Daniel Jazz' at Venice, in his 'Poème' reveals that other side of his talent which reflects the atmosphere of the French drawing-room. It is in the first variety that he is decidedly more attractive and edifying, and surely more sincere.

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

EUGÈNE GIGOUT, at Paris, on December 9. He was born at Nancy on March 23, 1844, and studied at the Ecole Niedermayer, being a pupil of Saint-Saëns in organ playing; was appointed organist at St. Augustin, Paris, in 1862; and, aided by State subsidy, founded an organ school in 1886. His organ compositions are numerous, and are distinguished by a blend of attractive quality, fine scholarship, and a taste always good and at times severe. Among the best of his work must be placed his collection of short pieces, mainly modal, for use as voluntaries and as interludes for playing in connection with plainsong. These pieces number some hundreds, and include many striking examples of the free use of modal harmony, and of the possibilities of the miniature in organ music.

FREDERICK WATT, suddenly, on December 21, in his eightieth year. Mr. Watt was born at Plymouth, and fifty-five years ago joined Mr. Amos Weekes as partner in the well-known publishing house of Weekes & Co. He took an active part in the business until the end, being at his office for several hours on the day of his death.

Miscellaneous

Miss Beatrice Horsbrugh (violin) and Miss Olga Sapio (pianoforte), daughter of the Director of the Conservatoire of Music, New York, gave a recital recently at Leighton House, both displaying a high degree of talent in the César Franck Sonata.

The East Devon Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Billingsley, gave its first concert of the year at the Town Hall, Seaton, on January 19. The most important items were Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony and Sterndale Bennett's fourth Pianoforte Concerto, played by Miss Ella Ewens.

Answers to Correspondents

LATE IN LIFE.—'A few nice real pianistic pieces suitable for adults in the elementary grade'—not an easy request, for the 'pianistic' almost contradicts the 'elementary'; and there are degrees, even in elementariness. Are the two sets of little pieces by Schumann beyond you? Look at the 'Album for the Young' (Novello) containing fifty-five pieces, the majority of which are not to be despised by the late in life. If you have a taste for Bach, try the Short Preludes and Pieces (Novello). Heller and Gurlitt wrote many sets of charming pieces and studies of very moderate difficulty (Augener). Novello's Pianoforte Albums include some that would probably meet your needs—e.g., Nos. 4, 5, and 6 (Handel). Ernest Austin's 'Borrowed Melodies' and other simple works for pianoforte are delightful (Larway), and there are also good things in this vein by Alec Rowley and several present-day British composers. The Sonatas of Haydn and Mozart contain many movements that you might be able to tackle. If you had told us what pieces you can play comfortably, and had also given a hint as to your tastes, we might be more helpful. Take counsel with your music-dealer or a local teacher. If you have a fellow enthusiast, don't overlook the possibilities of duet-playing. Among Schumann's duets are many quite simple and excellent. If you have back numbers of the Musical Times, study the reviews headed 'Easy Pianoforte Music.' Write to us again a little later, and be more definite.

NOTATION.—(We have mislaid your covering letter containing nom de plume.) (1.) The grouping of notes should enable the eye to see the time-scheme and rhythm as clearly and quickly as possible. Your suggestion as to breaking the group in order to show the secondary beat is good. There is, unfortunately, no uniform practice in such matters, and only a day or two ago we ourselves came to grief in reading a passage that was apparently in 6-8 time, with six quavers in the right hand and two dotted crotchets in the left. After the disaster we found, too late, that the time was really 3-4. A book that will help you in this matter is Elliot Button's 'System in Musical Notation' (Novello). (2.) The absence of pedal marks in a pianoforte piece or song accompaniment does not necessarily mean that the pedal is not to be used. Cyril Scott's 'Lullaby,' which you mention as an example, should certainly be pedalled. The absence of such marks is not 'a sign of incomplete technique on the part of the composer.' It merely means that he did not feel disposed to spend time over an obvious matter that he ought to be able to leave safely to the discretion of the player.

OLD READER.—(Constant as well as old, we trust!) For your paper on the history of Church music you should consult, in addition to the works you name, the Historical Edition of Hymns A. & M. (Clowes), Curwen's 'Studies in Worship Music' (out of print, but a copy may perhaps be borrowed or picked up second-hand); Bumpus's 'History of English Cathedral Music' (Werner Laurie); Myles B. Foster's 'Anthems and Anthem Composers' (Novello); John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists Past and Present' (Novello); Ernest Walker's 'History of Music in England' (Oxford University Press); Grattan Flood's 'Early Tudor Composers' (Oxford University Press); Lightwood's 'Hymn-Tunes and their Story' (Epworth Press); Bridge's 'A Westminster Pilgrim' (Novello); and biographical and other articles in 'Grove,' not forgetting that on 'Plainsong.' We have included in this list certain books that are of value on the anecdotal rather than the historical side, in order that your lecture may have light relief.

M. D. D.—(1.) Most books on form contain a good deal of reference to the sonata form as used by Mozart and Beethoven. Consult Hadow's 'Sonata Form' (Novello), and Harding's 'Analysis of Beethoven's Sonatas' (Novello). A book dealing specially with Mozart is 'The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning as exemplified in the Pianoforte Sonatas of Mozart,' by Helena Marks (William Reeves). (2.) We have never heard of any orchestral transcriptions of Mozart's Sonatas, nor do we think such are ever likely to be made. They are too slight, and essentially keyboard music. (3.) Your question as to the low price of certain musical journals compared with those dealing with literature cannot be discussed here. The main point is that you regard the Musical Times as a wonderful sixpennyworth. So do we, though we say it as shouldn't. (4.) We agree with you as to the high standard of the best English musical critics, but we cannot make comparisons.

F. E. H.—Vaughan Williams's 'Sine Nomine' is published in leaflet form, as are also a good many other tunes from 'The English Hymnal.' Write to the publisher for a list. We sympathise with you in your difficulty; the tunes you send touch rock-bottom in vulgarity and futility.

Thankful.—We do not like to give an opinion on your teacher's methods, especially as he holds one of the best diplomas a pianist can obtain. But it certainly seems odd to give you scales and arpeggi to study and never to hear you play them. And we should have expected him to tell you something about the position of your hands. Why not tackle him on these points? We know little about the standard of the diploma you aim at. The progress you are likely to make with your hour-and-three-quarters a day at the keyboard depends so much on your methods of practice that we cannot give an opinion. The time is not great, but wonderful things may be done by really thoughtful, intensive practice. Nor can we grade the pieces you name. What is difficult to one player is easy to another. We can, however, advise you to cut out from your list 'The Maiden's Prayer' and the Brinley Richards piece. We thought they had been dead long ago!

G. K.—(1.) The London College of Music, Great Marlborough Street, W.1. (2.) The term 'classical' is often used as the antithesis of 'romantic,' but it cannot be applied strictly, as the two types overlap. Beethoven, for example, is a classical composer; but he may also be regarded as the first of the great romantics. A better use of the label is to distinguish the great mass of music that has passed its probation and is, by a consensus of critical opinion, held to be of permanent value. That is why the word is not often applied to contemporary or even recent works: however excellent they may seem to be, time alone can decide their all-round value.

Organum.—The passage on page 22, line 4, and again later, in Rheinberger's G sharp minor Sonata is difficult rhythmically unless one regards it as an alternation of 6-8 and 2-4 time, and resolutely counts two in a bar. The synchronisation of the parts should be exactly as noted. We have always regarded this Brahmsian passage as an effective little rhythmical adventure.

B. G.—We hesitate to advise anyone to enter a profession so overcrowded as that of music. If you are bent on doing so, and have ability, but no money for fees, you had better write to the various colleges for particulars as to exhibitions and scholarships. So far as we know, there is no institution that aims specially at helping such cases as yours.

J. D. M. H.—Fernand de la Tombelle is a French composer known in this country chiefly by his organ works. He was born at Paris in 1854, and studied at the Conservatoire—probably under Franck, if we may judge from the influence of that composer apparent in his organ music.

Village Organist.—(1.) For simple accompaniments to the monotoned Creeds and Lord's Prayer see those by J. F. Bridge and J. Varley Roberts (Novello). They may be had in G or F. (2.) Handel wrote little real organ music in the proper sense of the term. Novello's issue the Concertos, and many arrangements of his choruses and other works.

R. J. C.—Short Passiontide cantatas that we think would suit you are Handel's 'Passion' and Harold Moore's 'The Darkest Hour,' both moderately difficult (Novello). A fine but more exacting work is Charles Wood's 'Passion' (Faith Press).

Inquisitor.—Any music in the foreign editions you name can be obtained through Novello.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Gresham Essays.—III. The Perfect Fourth (from Hucbald to Holst). By Walford Davies	113
Personalities among Musical Critics.—I. A. H. Fox-Strangways. By Basil Maine	119
Variations on various Verbal Themes. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	120
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	122
Ravel's Harmony. By Alfredo Casella	124
Opera Records.—I. London, Paris, and Dresden. By Wakeling W. Dry	127
Some Observations on 'Horn Chords: an Acoustical Problem.' By W. F. H. Blandford	128
The Ring of Words. By Marjorie Gullan	131
New Music	132
The Musician's Bookshelf	137
Occasional Notes	138
The Gramophone and the Choralist. By 'Discus'	140
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	142
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	143
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	144
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	150
Church and Organ Music	151
Royal College of Organists	151
Points from Lectures	153
London Concerts	155
English Folk-Dance Festival	157
Letters to the Editor	158
The Amateurs' Exchange	161
Sharps and Flats	162
Sixty Years Ago	162
Royal Academy of Music	162
Royal College of Music	162
Trinity College of Music	163
The Associated Board: Award of Medals	163
Music in Public Schools	163
Competition Festival Record	164
Music in the Provinces	165
Music in Scotland	166
Music in Wales	167
Music in Ireland	168
Musical Notes from Abroad	169
Obituary	174
Miscellaneous	174
Answers to Correspondents	174

Music.

'O Lord, Who didst in olden time.' Anthem. By Eric H. Thiman	145

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:
'Sweet is the work.' Hymn-Anthem. By R. Walker Robson.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.
Published by NOVELLO & CO., Limited.

Coulderv, C. H.—Concert Rêverie, in D minor, for Pianoforte. 2s.

Cowen, F. H.—"November," from "The Months." Wind Parts 7s. 8d.

Fletcher, Percy E.—Four Tennyson Lyrics:—(1) "A Lullaby." (2) "The City Child." (3) "The Reign of the Roses." (4) "The Throstle." For Soprano. 3s. 0d.

Pennington-Bickford, Rev. W.—Christmas Carol, "The Mistletoe and the Holly." 1d. each, or 2s. 6d. per 50.

Robson, R. Walker.—"Sweet is the work." Hymn-Anthem. (No. 252, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

School Music Review, No. 404, contains the following music in both notations.—"About the sweet bag of a bee," by H. A. Chambers. "Bubbling and splashing," Round for three voices, Henry Purcell. "A Ground in Gamut," for Pianoforte, Henry Purcell. 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
No. 1407.	"Blackbirds and Thrushes."
1408.	"Dabbling in the Dew" (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1409.	"The Bonny Lighter-Boy." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
	(Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1410.	"The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1411.	"The Tree in the Wood." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1412.	"The Bold Fisherman." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1413.	"My Boy Willie." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1414.	"Scarborough Fair." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1415.	"Searching for Lambs." (Arr. by CECIL J. SHARP)	2d.	—
1428.	"Come, Lasses and Lads." English Air (Arr. as a Two-part Song)	—	2d.
1429.	"Twinkle, twinkle, little star" (Two-part canon for equal voices). GEORGE RATHBONE	—	2d
Book 275.	National Songs with Descants. Set 2	8d.	—

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY Hymns and Tunes. Set 7. 6d. (For contents, see p. 183.)

THIMAN, ERIC H.—"O Lord, Who didst in olden time." Anthem. (No. 996, The Musical Times.) 2d. —— "O Strength and Stay." Anthem. (No. 1139, Novello's 8vo Anthems.) 3d.

THOMSON, D. C.—"The Knight of Bethlehem," in D flat. Song. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:
BACH, J. S.—Magnificat in D. 1s. 6d.
GOETZ, H.—"By the waters of Babylon." 1s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
No. 2501. "Now is the month of Maying." S.S.A.A. THOMAS MORLEY 2d.
2506. "A Solemn Prayer." A. HERBERT BREWER 2d.

WALKER, M. L.—"Papillons Noirs." A Summer Idyll for Pianoforte and Orchestra. Pianoforte Arrangement. 2s.

WHITE, MARY L.—"The Snow-Flake." Unison Song. 3d.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—"Break, Break, Break." Part-Song for A.T.B.B. 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR
THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BISHOP J. J.—"If doughty deeds." Part-Song. T.T.B.B. 15 cents (8d.).

COX, P. N.—"Save us, O Lord." Short Anthem. Mixed voices. 10 cents (6d.).

DICKINSON, C.—"If I were as tall as a tall brown tree." Part-Song. T.T.B.B. 15 cents (8d.). —— "The Quest Eternal." Christmas. Soli and Chorus. 12 cents (6d.). —— "Still there is Bethlehem." Song for middle voice. 50 cents (2s. 6d.).

MACKINNON, H. A.—"I hear along our street." Carol. Mixed Voices. 12 cents. (6d.).

MATTHEWS, J. S.—"The shepherd's content." Carol. Mixed Voices. 12 cents. (6d.).

NORDEN, N. L.—Arietta Graziosa. Harp and Violin.

WEBBE, W. Y.—"To-day the Christ is born." Anthem. Mixed Voices. 15 cents. (8d.).

WORTH, J. W.—"Three Kings." Sacred Song for High Voice. (Organ, Violin, and 'Cello accompaniment.)

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS
SET TO MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BY THE WATERS OF BABYLON
(PSALM 137)
FOR
SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
COMPOSED BY HERMANN GOETZ.

TONIC SOL-FA.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JAMES LYON, MUS. BAC.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY
3*s.* 6*d.*

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.
2*s.* 6*d.*

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

COMPOSITIONS FOR ORGAN.
"IN MEMORIAM MARCH"
BY C. G. HERBERT YOUNG.
Published by Paxton, 22, High Street, New Oxford Street, W.C.1.
2*s.* net.
Reports "Very effective—original."

TENOR REQUIRED for West-End Church. Experienced choir work; good reader and capable soloist. £25 per annum. Write, "M. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TRIO (ladies) wanted for first-class country hotel. Permanent position. Write "T. A. C.," Spiers & Pond, Ltd., 35, New Bridge Street, London, E.C.4.

TENOR WANTED immediately, for St. Luke's, Redcliffe Square, South Kensington. Good reader essential. Apply, James N. Bell, 53, Redcliffe Gardens, S.W.10.

BRISTOL CATHEDRAL.— Alto Lay-Clerk required from April 1st. Sundays and 4 afternoons (1 hour) weekly. Commencing, £80. Particulars from The Precentor.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS GIVEN. Postal or Personal. Write for terms and testimonials. Cawson, Piano Tuner, Bankfield House, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

VUILLAUME VIOLIN FOR SALE, Guarnerius model. Perfect condition. Formerly the property of Arthur Beckwith. First offer over £70. Geoffrey H. Crump, Steep, Petersfield, Hants.

ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, JERUSALEM.
The position of Organist and Choirmaster is vacant. Applicants must be unmarried and not more than 30 years of age. Annual salary, £150, with furnished rooms. The salary will be raised to £200 if the Organist is prepared and able to do part-time teaching (other than music) in St. George's Boys' School. Applications, with testimonials and full details of qualifications, together with three references, to be sent to the Rev. E. M. Bickersteth, 12, Warwick Square, London, S.W.1, not later than February 15, 1926. Female applicants are not excluded. The chosen candidate will be expected to undertake the work as soon as possible after Easter.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 4s.; paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s. 6d. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

*THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Words only, 16s. per 100. Abridged edition for Church use, 1s. 6d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 1s. 6d.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 1s. 6d.

*PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). JULIUS BENEDICT. 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 4s.

*OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 1s. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonized by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A Simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment. 2d.

*Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS

ADLAM, F. (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in E flat)	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in G)	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in D, Unison)	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 2d.)	4d.
BLAIR, H. (in G)	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES	2d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in E, Chant Form)	3d
BUNNETT, ED. (in F, Chant Form)	3d.
BUTTON, H. E. (in D)	2d.
BUTTON, H. E. (Shortened Form)	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G)	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G)	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G)	2d.
EYRE, A. J. (in E flat)	3d.
EYRE, A. J. (No. 2, in F)	2d.
FOSTER, M. B. (in F, Chant Form)	6d.
FROST, P. H. (in D)	3d.
GADSBY, H. (in G, Chant Form)	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison)	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C)	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G)	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants)	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D)	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat)	2d.
ILIFFE, F. (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form)	2d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat)	4d.
LLOYD, C. H. (in E flat, Chant Form)	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, Shortened Form)	2d.
MACPHERSON, C. (in F, rhythmic setting)	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat)	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN)	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form)	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants)	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (in E flat)	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat)	1½d.
ROBERTS, J. V. (in B flat)	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F)	2d.
SMITH, B. (in A flat)	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B.	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words) (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	2d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
STEWART, C. H. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BARNBY J.	1½d
FOSTER, J.
SMITH, M. (two settings)
TURLE, J. (two settings)
WICKES, C. A. (two settings)
TOZER, F. (in G)	3d.
TOZER, F. (in A). Short and simple	3d.
WEST, J. E. (in G)	6d.
WEST, J. E. (in C)	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C)	2d.
WILLAN, H. (in D) (Shortened Form)	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D)	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant)	2d.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, J. B.	4d.
GOUNOD, CH.	3d.
HOYTE, W. S.	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale)	6d.
SPENCE, H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied)	4d.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

THE WORDS BY E. MONRO.

SET TO MUSIC BY

BUNNETT, ED.	3d
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 2d.)	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 2d.)	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 2d.)	4d.
STAINER, JOHN (Sol-fa, 2d.)	4d.

Words only, 2s. per 100.
Large Type Edition, 3s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK

(OP. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Vocal parts, 1s. each.
An Edition with Latin words (Stabat Mater) may also be had.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, With Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.
THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.
ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR
TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
aper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 10
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE

(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY
E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
An Edition with Latin words may also be had, price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS

TOGETHER WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE
SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s 6d. per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY
FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

FAITH HOUSE THE STAMP OF EFFICIENCY. FAITH HOUSE

FIFTH THOUSAND.

THE SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD

A DEVOTION ON THE PASSION

The words arranged by the REV. C. E. DOUGLAS, S.F., and set to music for Treble, Tenor, and Baritone Solos, Choir, and Organ (with a part for a Reader)

BY SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON,

Organist and Master of the Choristers, Westminster Abbey.

PRICE COMPLETE (Words and Music), 2s. 6d. Words only, 1d. each; 8s. per 100.

Musical Times:—"Mr. Nicholson has produced a work which should have no small share in influencing for good the standard of present-day Church Music—particularly music dealing with the subject of the Passion. Not the least successful feature are the numerous hymns . . . . in the singing of which the congregation takes a share."

Church Times:—"The thoughts of parish priests and choirmasters will be turning to the question of providing suitable music for Passiontide. We commend to their unhesitating choice this remarkably beautiful devotion. The music, in our opinion, is of the very finest kind. At times tender, at other times it soars to a great height of praise. . . . The whole work is a model of a devotion on the Passion, and we believe that its wide adoption will tend greatly to edification and to the improvement of musical taste."

TENTH THOUSAND.

The Passion of our Lord according to St. Mark

Arranged as a Liturgical Devotion by the REV. E. MILNER-WHITE, Dean of King's College, Cambridge, and set to music for choir and organ.

BY CHARLES WOOD, MUS. DOC.,

Professor of Music in Cambridge University.

PRICE COMPLETE (Words and Music), 2s. 6d. Words only, 1d. each; 8s. per 100.

Church Times:—"A unique and precious gift to Church Music."

Musical Times:—"On a plane far above much of the Church Music of the day. A deeply devotional spirit pervades the whole, and the music maintains a lofty standard throughout."

THE EASTER CAROL SERVICE

Containing Nine Easter Carols with full harmony of the Gospel Record and devotions from the Eastern Orthodox Services.

PRICE (Words and Music), 1s. Words only, 1d. each; 8s. per 100.

THE CHURCH ORGAN. BY N. A. BONAVIA-HUNT.
No. 2 of the Church Music Monographs. 4s. 6d. each.

THE TENOR TUNE BOOK. Third Edition, 1s. 6d.
Descants, old and new to well-known hymn-tunes, by HARVEY GRACE, H. V. HUGHES, H. R. NORTON, GEOFFREY SHAW, MARTIN SHAW, and BECKET WILLIAMS.

THE KYRIE BOOK. Containing 22 Settings of the Ninefold Kyries, arranged from the Works of composers of the 16th to 18th Centuries. 1s. 6d.

UNISON CHANTS. Compiled by SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON. 1s.
Organ Accompaniment. 5s.

SOME NEW SETTINGS OF THE HOLY COMMUNION SERVICE.

MISSA AVE JESU. By GEORGE OLDROYD. Price 8d.

MISSA SANCTI ANDREAE. By ARTHUR J. BULL. Price 8d.

MISSA SANCTI MICHAELIS. By HUBERT MIDDLETON. Price 8d.

For all Church Music—HAVE YOU TRIED THE FAITH HOUSE?

THE FAITH PRESS, Ltd., 22, Buckingham Street, Charing Cross, W.C.2.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."
Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."
Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."
Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing.'"
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well written work."
Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."
Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

G. J. BENNETT

EASTER HYMN

(ON THE MORN OF EASTER DAY)

(S.T. SOLI).

Full Score and Wind Parts. MS.
String Parts, 6s. 9d. Vocal Score, 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ALAN GRAY

A SONG OF REDEMPTION

(THE FOE BEHIND, THE DEEP BEFORE)

(S. SOLO).

WORDS BY J. M. NEALE.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts, MS.
Vocal Score, 2s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

E. H. LEMARE

'TIS THE SPRING OF SOULS TO-DAY

(OP. 30).

CANTATA FOR EASTER. (T.T.BAR.B. SOLI.) WORDS FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES AND HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

Full Score, and Orchestral Parts, MS.
Vocal Score, 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEARLY EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW EASTER ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*HE DIETH NO MORE. HALLELUJAH! New 1926 ... ... 4d.
Beautiful Sop. or Tenor Solo. Also fine attractive Choruses.
*JESUS LIVES. New 1925 ... ... Already 9th Edit. 4d.
Exceedingly interesting and full of melody.
*SHOUT ALLELUIA! ... ... 15th Edit. 4d.
*TO HIM ALL POWER ... ... 10th Edit. 4d.
*HALLELUJAH! THE LORD IS RISEN ... ... 9th Edit. 5d.
"Fairly captivated my Choir." "A huge success."
*NEW BENEDICITE. No. 9, shortened ... ... 3d.
Already widely used, and much appreciated.
*HIM HATH GOD EXALTED ... ... 8th Edit. 4d.
*REJOICE AND BE GLAD ... ... 6th Edit. 4d.
*THE VICTORY. *AWAKE! ARISE ... ... 11th Edit. ea 4d.
GOD IS OUR REFUGE. Short Work ... ... 5th Edit. 8d.
Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
A Vicar writes: "Very much enjoyed."

NEW VOLUNTARY BOOKS, Nos. 11 and 12. Price 2s. each.
Wonderfully popular. Each Book contains Seventeen pieces written on Two Staves with Pedal-part indicated. (11th Edition.)

*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

POPULAR EASTER ANTHEMS.

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

Highly effective without being difficult. World-wide popularity.

*HALLELUJAH! KING OF KINGS ... ... 34th 1000 4d.
*HE IS RISEN. A great favourite ... ... 40th 1000 4d.
*CHRIST SHALL GIVE THEE LIGHT ... ... 32nd 1000 4d.
*THANKS BE TO GOD (with a fine Bass Solo) ... 27th 1000 6d.
*WHY SEEK YE THE LIVING AMONG THE DEAD? ... 32nd 1000 4d.
*NOW IS CHRIST RISEN ... ... 19th 1000 4d.
*HALLELUJAH! CHRIST IS RISEN ... ... 31st 1000 4d.
*THE LORD REIGNETH (Festival) ... ... 22nd 1000 4d.
PRAISE THE LORD, O JERUSALEM (Festival) ... 50th 1000 4d.
*THE BLESSINGS OF PEACE (I WILL EXTOL THEE) 5th 1000 4d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D 31st 1000 6d.
Full of flowing melody. Sung at a Choral Festival.
BENEDICITE IN D. Quadruple Chant ... ... 8th 1000 3d.
Varied Acc. for Boys' verses and Men's or Unison Verses.
*NEW BENEDICITE IN B FLAT ... ... 5th 1000 3d.
Very effective changes. No monotony.

*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST

BOOK 44. MUSIC FOR LENT.

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

1. Prelude in C minor ... ... Chopin
2. If with all your hearts ... ... Mendelssohn
3. Variations on the Tune "Heinlein" ... ... H. M. Higgs
4. Behold the Lamb of God ("Messiah") ... ... Handel
5. He was despised ("Messiah") ... ... Handel
6. Processional to Calvary ("The Crucifixion") ... John Stainer

BOOK 45. MUSIC FOR EASTER.

1. Prelude in F major ... ...G. Merkel
2. Fantasia upon the Easter Office Hymn "Ad Cœnam Agni" Healey Willan
3. Meditation (Easter Morn) ... ... John E. West
4. "All glory to the Lamb that died" ("Last Judgment") L. Spohr
5. Triumphal March ... ... B. Luard-Selby
6. Easter Chorale ("Christ lag in Todesbanden") Har. by J. S. Bach

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each Book.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS.

HYMNS AND TUNES

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

Price Three-Halfpence each.

		Words by	Music by
1.	COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD	F. Bevan	G. C. Martin
2.*	FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING	W. St. Hill Bourne	Lady Euan-Smith
3.	I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY	Emily H. Miller	F. Clay
4.	COME, O COME, IN PIOUS LAYS	G. Wither	J. Stainer
5.	THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE	Mary F. Maude	W. C. Harvey
	NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY	F. R. Havergal	J. Adcock
6	JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE	J. F. Wheeler	H. E. Button
7.*	SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR	F. A. Challinor	F. A. Challinor
8.	WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE	H. R. Palmer	C. J. May
9.	ON OUR WAY REJOICING	J. S. B. Monsell	W. B. Gilbert
10.	AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS	J. Ellerton	J. Stainer
11.	THE ANGEL'S SONG	F. R. Havergal	A. Randegger
12.	FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN	Helen W. Selby	A. Moffat
13.	THE GOLDEN SHORE	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
14.	SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR	G. Thring	John E. West
15.	ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING	W. St. Hill Bourne	F. H. Cowen
16.	MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE	W. H. Draper	J. V. Roberts
17.	STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY	J. Bogue	J. Stainer
18.	THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER	J. M. Neale	J. Barnby
19.	WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY	G. Moultrie	J. Barnby
20.	HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN LOUDLY PEALS	G. Thring	G. J. Bennett
21.	O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO	G. W. Hinsdale	H. E. Button
22.	THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN	C. F. Alexander	A. Sullivan
23.	LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE AND KEEP	W. W. How	A. S. Cooper
24.	THE BEAUTIFUL LAND	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
	JESU, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME	M. L. Duncan	H. Parker
25.	THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND	J. Compston	J. Stainer
26.	THE CITY OF LIGHT	F. Alder	E. J. Troup
27.	GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR	A. Gilbert	H. E. Button
	GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD	C. Wesley	J. Stainer
28.*	HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES	W. St. Hill Bourne	Lady Euan-Smith
29.	THE CROWN IS WAITING	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
30.	RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS	G. Spiller	E. J. Troup
31.*	FLOWERS	F. R. Havergal	A. Randegger
32.	THE GOOD SHEPHERD	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
33.	ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY	M. Bourdillon	H. E. Crimp
34.	WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR	L. Whitehead	E. J. Troup
35.	COME, SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS	J. J. Daniell	G. W. Torrance
36.	WE WILL PRAISE THEE	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
37.*	WHAT CAN I GIVE JESUS	A. C. Benson	A. M. Goodhart
38.	COME, PRAISE OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR	W. W. How	H. A. Chambers
39.	NOW THE DAY IS OVER	S. Baring-Gould	F. W. Blunt
40.*	WE THANK THEE, LORD, FOR THIS FAIR EARTH	G. E. L. Cotton	W. C. Harvey
41.	THE LESSON OF LOVE		J. Barnby
42.	COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING		E. J. Troup
43.	CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD	Mary Bradford Whiting	J. H. Maunder
44.*	O GOD, WE COME BEFORE THEE	J. Gibson	Tune—"Ellacombe"
45.	WHAT IS THE GIFT THAT I CAN BRING	Mary Bradford Whiting	H. A. Chambers
	HOSANNA WE SING	G. S. Hodges	H. A. Chambers
46.	HEAVENLY FATHER, SEND THY BLESSING	Christopher Wordsworth	W. C. Harvey
47.	THE DAYS OF OLD	Ethel Boyce	Ethel Boyce
48.*	BLESSED JESU, WE CAN SEE THEE	Doris Rowley	Alec Rowley
	THE EARTH IS FAIR AND SWEET	Doris Rowley	Alec Rowley
49.*	WHILE OUR LORD WAS PASSING BY	Ethel Boyce	Ethel Boyce
50.	PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT	F. W. Faber	Oliver King
51.*	THE HOLY LIGHT	W. M. W. Call	C. H. Lloyd
52.*	NOW SINKS THE SUN THAT LIT OUR FESTAL MORN	Mary Bradford Whiting	C. J. May
53.	LIFE'S GLAD MORNING	Kate Hopkins	G. C. Martin
54.	JESUS, BLESSED SAVIOUR	F. R. Havergal	A. Herbert Brewer
55.	COME, CHRISTIAN YOUTHS AND MAIDENS	T. A. Stowell	Harvey Grace
56.*	THY WORD IS LIKE A GARDEN, LORD	E. Hodder	Eric H. Thiman
*	WHEN THE LORD OF LOVE WAS HERE	Stopford A. Brooke	Eric H. Thiman
57.	GOD OF OUR FATHERS	Mary Rowles Jarvis	E. J. Hopkins
58.	CHILDREN OF GOD	F. G. Russell	F. G. Russell
	GOD OF MERCY, THRONED ON HIGH	H. Neele	Harvey Grace
59.	THE CHILDREN'S PRAYER	Robert McLeod	Robert McLeod
60.	THE LORD BE WITH US	J. Ellerton	C. J. May

* These Hymns are suitable for Flower Services.

The above are also published in Seven Sets, containing Ten Hymns and Tunes, price 6d. per Set.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

SET VII.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Price 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

May also be had in separate numbers, Price 1½d. each.

CONTENTS.

1. Life's glad morning ... ... GEORGE C. MARTIN
2. Jesus, blessèd Saviour ... ... A. HERBERT BREWER
3. Come, Christian youths and maidens ... ... HARVEY GRACE
4. Thy Word is like a garden ... ... E. H. THIMAN
5. God of mercy, throned on high ... ... HARVEY GRACE
6. God of our fathers ... ... E. J. HOPKINS
7. When the Lord of love ... ... E. H. THIMAN
8. Children of God ... ... F. G. RUSSELL
9. The Children's Prayer ... ... R. MCLEOD
10. The Lord be with us ... ...C. J. MAY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, ETC.

Sacred Unison Songs for Soprano Voices (or Solos).

Children's Angel, The (both Notations)	CH. GOUNOD	2d.
Come, let us all this day (both Notations)	... J. S. BACH	2d.
Lord, at all times I will bless Thee (both Notations)	MENDELSSOHN	3d.
Lord of our being (both Notations)	G. F. HANDEL	1½d.
O for the wings of a dove (both Notations)	MENDELSSOHN	2d.

Sacred Two-part Songs and Anthems for Soprano Voices.

Except the Lord build the House (both Notations)	M. J. MONK	3d.
Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard (both Notations)	... MYLES B. FOSTER	4d.
Faint not, fear not, God is near thee (both Notations)	HENRY SMART	4d.
God sends the night (both Notations)	G. RATHBONE	4d.
Like as the hart (both Notations)	V. NOVELLO, arr. by H. ELLIOT BUTTON	2d.
Lord is my Shepherd, The (S. & C., both Notations)	HENRY SMART	3d.
O for the wings of a dove (Staff Notation only)	MENDELSSOHN, arr. by J. E. WEST	4d.
O how amiable are Thy dwellings (Staff Notation only)	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.
Songs of Praise the Angels sang (Staff Notation only)	ATTWOOD	2d.
Within the fold (both Notations)	ROLAND ROGERS	4d.

Hymn-Anthems for Children and Choir.

		O.N.	Tonic Sol-Fa.
Happy Day! Festal Day!	H. A. CHAMBERS	4d.	3d.
Hosanna be the children's song	E. M. BARBER	3d.	1½d.
Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST	4d.	2d.
I love to hear the Story	MYLES B. FOSTER	4d.	2d.
Lord, Thy children	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.	2d.
Sweet is the work	R. WALKER ROBSON	2d.	1½d.
Sweet is Thy mercy	... J. BARNBY	2d.	1½d.
Thine for ever	...H. ELLIOT BUTTON	4d.	2d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EASTER ANTHEMS.

*Above all praise and all majesty ... ... Mendelssohn 2d.
*Alleluia! now is Christ risen ... ... T. Adams 4d.
*Alleluia! the Lord liveth ... ... C. Harris 4d.
*All hail, dear Conqueror ... ... T. Adams 2d.
As Christ was raised ... ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.
*As Christ was raised ... ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
*As it began to dawn ... G. C. Martin, 4d.; M. B. Foster 2d.
As it began to dawn ... ... G. Vincent 4d.
*As Moses lifted up the serpent ... ... F. Gostelow 4d.
As we have borne ... ... J. Barnby 2d.
*At the Lamb's high feast ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
At the Sepulchre ... ... H. W. Wareing 6d.
*Awake, awake, with holy rapture sing ... John E. West 4d.
Awake, glad soul, awake ... ... M. B. Foster 4d.
Awake, thou that sleepest Redhead, 4d.; Maker, 4d.; *J. Stainer 8d.
Awake up, my glory ... *J. Barnby and B. Haynes, ea. 2d.
Awake up, my glory ... ... F. Iliffe 3d.
Awake up, my glory ... *F. C. Maker and M. Wise, each 4d.
*Be glad, O ye righteous... ... ... H. Smart 6d.
*Be glad then, ye children ... ... A. Hollins 4d.
Behold, God is my Salvation ... ... W. Smallwood 4d.
*Behold, the Angel of the Lord ... ... B. Tours 2d.
*Blessed be the God and Father ... ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
*Blessed be Thou ... ... Kent 6d.
Blessing and glory ... ... Boyce 2d.
*Blessing, glory ... ... B. Tours 6d.
*Break forth into joy ... ... J. Barnby 2d.
*Break forth into joy ... ... T. R. Prentice 8d.
*Break forth into joy ... ... B. Steane 4d.
But Mary stood ... ... G. H. Parker 4d.
*Christ being raised from the dead ... ... G. J. Elvey 2d.
Christ being raised from the dead ... ... S. Webbe 2d.
Christ both died and rose ... ... E. W. Naylor 4d.
Christ is risen ... J. M. Crament and G. B. J. Aitken, ea. 4d.
*Christ is risen ... ... E. H. Thorne and G. J. Elvey, ea. 2d.
Christ is risen ... ... J. C. Bridge, 4d.; W. Jordan 6d.
*Christ is risen ... J. V. Roberts and E. A. Sydenham, ea. 4d.
*Christ our Passover ... ... J. Goss and O. King, ea. 2d.
*Christ our Passover ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
Christ our Passover ... ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.
Christ our Passover A. Carnall, 4d.; *Ed. Bunnett, 4d.; *B. Tours 2d.
*Christ the Lord is risen again ... ... E. V. Hall 6d.
Christ the Lord is risen to-day J. F. Barnett and *E. V. Hall, ea. 4d.
*Christ was delivered for our offences ... ... C. H. Lloyd 2d.
*Come, let us join our cheerful songs ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
*Come with high and holy gladness ... ... H. Blair 4d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the strain ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
*Come, ye Saints (S.A.T.B.) ... ... H. E. Button 2d.
*Come, ye Saints (Unison) ... ... H. E. Button 4d.
Day draws on with golden light, The ... ... G. Shaw 4d.
*Day of Resurrection, The ... ... E. Vine Hall 4d.
*Death is swallowed up in victory ... ... A. Hollins 4d.
*End of the Sabbath, The ... ... A. Carnall 2d.
*Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
*First day of the week, The ... ... B. Steane 4d.
For it became Him ... ... O. King 2d.
For us the Christ... ... ... Ch. Gounod 3d.
*From Thy love as a Father ... ...Ch. Gounod 2d.
Give thanks unto God ... ...Spohr 6d.
*God hath appointed a day ... ... B. Tours 2d.
*God, Who is rich in mercy ... ... G. M. Garrett 2d.
Good Shepherd has arisen, The ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
*Great is the Lord ... ... Hayes 6d.
*Hallelujah! ... ... Handel 3d.
Hallelujah! Christ is risen *R. O. Morgan and B. Steane, ea. 4d.
Hearken unto Me ... ... M. B. Foster 2d.
*He is risen... ... ... H. Gadsby 2d.
*He shall swallow up death in Victory ... F. F. Greenish 4d.
He that spared not His own Son ... ... F. E. Gladstone 4d.
*He that spared not His Son ... ... W. G. Alcock 2d.
He will swallow up death in Victory ... ... Wesley 2d.
I am He that liveth ... ... O. King 4d.; T. Adams 6d.
*I am the Resurrection ... ... R. Rogers 6d.
I declare to you the Gospel ... ... W. A. C. Cruickshank 6d.
*I have set God always before me ... ... W. Smallwood 4d.
*I heard a great voice ... ... G. F. Cobb 4d.
*I will alway give thanks ... ... J. B. Calkin 2d.
*I will alway give thanks ... ... J. Clarke-Whitfeld 4d.
I will extol Thee ... ... C. M. Hudson 6d.
*I will go unto the Altar of God ... ... C. Harris 4d.
I will greatly rejoice ... ... W. A. C. Cruickshank 6d.
I will love Thee, O Lord ... ... M. Kingston 6d.
I will magnify Thee ... *J. B. Calkin and W. H. Bell, ea. 6d.
I will magnify Thee ... *Ed. Bunnett and E. M. Lee, ea. 4d.
I will magnify Thee ... ... B. Luard-Selby 2d.
*I will mention ... ... A. Sullivan 8d.
I will sing of Thy power ... ... M. Greene 6d.
*I will sing of Thy power ... ... A. Sullivan 2d.
If Christ be not raised ... ... C. Macpherson 6d.
*If we believe that Jesus died B. Luard-Selby and J. Goss, ea. 2d.
If we believe that Jesus died ... ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.
If we believe that Jesus died *Ed. Bunnett, 6d.; M. Vinden 4d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ F. O. Carr, 4d.; Ivor Atkins 6d.
If ye then be risen with Christ (Two-part) ... M. B. Foster 4d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ ... ... H. M. Higgs 2d.
If ye then be risen with Christ ... ... J. Naylor 4d.
If ye then be risen (Two-part) ... ... F. W. Wadely 2d.
*Jesus Christ is risen to-day ... A. R. Gaul and O. King, ea. 6d.
Jesus Christ is risen to-day ... ... C. V. Stanford 4d.
*Jesus lives ... ... M. B. Foster 4d.
*Know ye not ... ... E. C. Bairstow 2d.
Let God arise ... ... M. Greene 8d.
Let them give thanks ... ... W. J. Westbrook 4d.
Light's glittering morn ... ... John E. West 6d.
Lo! the winter is past ... *B. Farebrother and H. Gadsby, ea. 4d.
*Lo! the winter is past ... ... B. Luard-Selby 2d.
Lord Christ! when Thou hadst overcome... ... Haydn 2d.
*Lord hath brought us, The ... ... E. H. Thorne 2d.
*Lord hath done great things, The ... ... H. Smart 6d.
*Lord is King, The ... T. T. Trimnell, 6d.; J. Pittman 2d.
*Lord is my strength, The W. H. Monk and V. Novello, ea. 2d.
*Lord is my strength, The H. Smart, 2d.; S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
*Lord is risen, The ... B. L.-Selby, 4d.; G. M. Garrett 6d.
*Lord liveth, The ... ... A. W. Marchant 4d.
*Lord omnipotent reigneth, The ... ... T. Adams 4d.
Magnify His Name ... ... G. C. Martin 6d.
Morn's roseate hues ... ... G. W. Chadwick 4d.
*Most glorious Lord of Life ... ... John E. West 2d.
*My beloved is mine ... ... R. W. Robson 4d.
My beloved spake ... ... H. Purcell 8d.
My heart is fixed, O God ... ... W. A. C. Cruickshank 6d.
My heart was glad ... ... A. Carnall 6d.
Not unto us, O Lord ... ... *S. Smith, 4d.; H. Gadsby 8d.
Not unto us, O Lord ... John E. West, 6d.; *Walmisley 2d.
*Now dawning glows the day of days ... ... D. S. Smith 2d.
*Now Christ is risen ... G. B. Allen and John E. West, ea. 2d.
Now if Christ be preached ... ... W. Wolstenholme 2d.
*Now is Christ risen ... ... H. E. Nichol 4d.
*Now is come Salvation ... ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
*Now late on the Sabbath Day... ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
*Now on the first day of the week ... ... H. Lahee 2d.
O clap your hands ... ... *J. Stainer, 8d.; M. Greene 6d.
O clap your hands (S.S.A.) ... ... E. H. Thorne 8d.
O clap your hands ... ... T. T. Trimnell 4d.
*O come, let us sing ... ... M. B. Foster 4d.
*O death, where is thy sting? ... A. Hollins, 6d.; A. H. Brewer 2d.
O give thanks ... ... S. S. Wesley, 6d.; *J. Goss 4d.
O give thanks to the Lord ... ... H. J. King 4d.
O give thanks unto the Lord ... Watson, 4d.; *Wolstenholme 2d.
O Lord, from Whom all good things do come John E. West 3d.
*O sing unto the Lord ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
*O Sons and Daughters, let us sing ... ... H. A. Chambers 2d.
*O voice of the Beloved ... ... H. J. King 4d.
*On the first day of the week ... ... E. M. Lott 2d.
*Open me the gates of righteousness ... M. B. Foster 2d.
*Open to me the gates ... ... F. Adlam 6d.
*Praise His awful Name ... ...Spohr 3d.
Praise Jehovah ... ... Mendelssohn 6d.
Praise the Lord, ye servants ... ... B. Steane 4d.
Promise which was made, The ... ... E. C. Bairstow 6d.
*Rejoice in the Lord ... *J. B. Calkin and G. J. Elvey, ea. 2d.
Rejoice in the Lord ... E. M. Barber. 4d.; G. C. Martin 8d.
Since by man ... ... H. E. Nichol 4d.
*Sing praises unto the Lord ... ... W. A. C. Cruickshank 2d.
*Sing praises unto the Lord A. W. Marchant, 4d.; Gounod 8d.
Sing to the Lord ... ... Mendelssohn 1s.
*Sing ye to the Lord ... E. C. Bairstow and C. H. Lloyd, ea. 4d.
*Strife is o'er, The ... B. Steane and B. L.-Selby, ea. 2d.
Strife is o'er, The A. W. Marchant and G. Rathbone, ea. 4d.
*Ten thousand times ten thousand ... ... E. Vine Hall 4d
Ten thousand times ten thousand ... ... F. Tozer 6d
Thanks be to God ... Smallwood, Gritton, and King, ea. 4d.
*They have taken away my Lord ... ... J. Stainer 2d.
*This is the day S. C. Cooke, B. Harwood, and J. H. Maunder, ea. 4d.
*This is the day ... ... E. H. Lemare and E. V. Hall, ea. 6d.
This is the day ... ... G. A. Macfarren and *J. Sewell, ea. 3d.
This is the day ... ... A. R. Gaul, 2d.; A. W. Marchant 4d.
This is the day ... ... *G. M. Garrett, 6d.; J. Turle 4d.
*Unto the Paschal Victim bring ... ... John E. West 2d.
*Upon the first day of the week ... ... M. B. Foster 2d.
When Christ, Who is our life, shall appear J. V. Roberts 3d.
When my soul fainted within me ... ... J. F. Bridge 2d.
*When the Sabbath was past ... ... M. B. Foster 2d.
Who is like unto Thee? ... F. Tozer, 4d.; *A. Sullivan 8d.
*Who shall roll us away the stone? ... ... G. W. Torrance 2d.
*Why rage fiercely the heathen? ... ... Mendelssohn 8d.
Why seek ye the living? *A. Hollins and A. Alexander, ea. 4d.
Why seek ye the living? (Two-part)... ... M. B. Foster 4d.
*Why seek ye the living? ... ... E. J. Hopkins 2d.
Why seek ye the living? ... ... F. Peel 6d.
Witnessing Thy Resurrection... ... ... Button 4d.
Worthy the Lamb—Hallelujah! ... ... Crotch 4d.
*Worthy is the Lamb ... ... Handel, 3d.; J. F. Barnett 2d.
Worthy is the Lamb ... W. Crotch and E. H. Thorne, ea. 4d.
*Ye humble souls that seek the Lord... ... H. A. Chambers 2d.

*Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d., 2d., and 3d. each.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL)

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... ... Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SOLOS FROM THE CHURCH CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

Air — WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
Air — OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
Air — MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
Air — O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
Air — SIGHING, WEEPING ("My spirit was in heaviness").

ALTO.

Air — THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
Recit. — THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
Air — MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIES ("God goeth up").
Air — INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
Air — REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

TENOR.

Air — LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
Recit. — WHY HAST THOU THEN ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
Air — FAST MY BITTER TEARS ,, ,, ,,
Air — REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
Air — HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD ,, ,, ,,
Air — AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL ("When will God recall").

BASS.

Recit. — HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
Air — 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
Recit. — IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
Air — ON MY BEHALF ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
Air — WHOM JESUS DEIGNS ,, ,,
Air — YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

Air — OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
Air — I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

ALTO.

Air — GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
Recit. — INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

TENOR.

Recit. — THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
Air — TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
Air — THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

BASS.

Air — THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
Air — DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
Recit. — AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye")
Air — BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY ,, ,,

THIRD SET.

SOPRANO.

Recit. — O LORD, HEAR ME WHEN I CALL ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — HOW LONG, O LORD ,, ,,
Air — O PRAISE THE LORD ("O Praise the Lord").
Recit. — O JESU, OUR REDEEMER ("There is nought of soundness").
Air — HEARKEN WHEN WITH TREMBLING ACCENTS ,, ,,
Air — THOUGH REVILING TONGUES ASSAIL ME ("Watch ye, pray ye").

ALTO.

Air — BE WELCOME, THOU GREAT ANGEL ("O teach me, Lord").
Air — AH, TARRY YET ("Praise our God").
Air — GOD IS EVER SUN AND SHIELD ("The Lord is a sun and shield").
Recit. — BE STEADFAST IN AFFLICTION ("Wailing, crying").
Air — PAIN AND SORROW WORK SALVATION ,, ,,

TENOR.

Recit. — LORD, WHY SO FAR AWAY ("Jesus sleeps").
Air — IN BILLOWS THE RIVERS OF BELIAL ("Jesus sleeps").
Recit. — O HAPPY TOWN, O FAVOURED LAND ("Praise thou the Lord").
Air — O BLEST ARE ALL THAT FEAR HIM ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — REJECT IT NOT ("Sages of Sheba").
Air — SAVIOUR, TAKE ME FOR THINE OWN ("Sages of Sheba").
Air — UPLIFT YOUR HEADS ON HIGH ("Watch ye, pray ye").

BASS.

Air — GOD, WHOSE POWER ("Let songs of rejoicing").
Recit. — ALTHOUGH AN HOST ENCAMP ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — O LORD, THY MERCY ,, ,,
Air — FARE YE WELL ("O teach me, Lord").
Recit. — THESE THINGS THAT ISAIAH OF OLD ("The Sages of Sheba").
Air — GOLD OF OPHIR IS BUT VAIN ,, ,,
Air — AH, WHERE SHALL I SUCCOUR ("There is nought of soundness").

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED

CONCERT VERSION
OF BIZET'S CARMEN
ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES
WITH
PIANO OR ORCHESTRAL ACCOMPANIMENT
BY MAURICE BESLY.

VOCAL SCORE, 2/6 NET.

CHORAL conductors throughout the country will, we believe, welcome the announcement that "Carmen," one of the most popular operas of all time, is at last available for choral societies in a practicable, singable form. The fact that Maurice Besly, the well-known composer and conductor, has made the arrangement, ensures that the work is musicianly and carried out with due regard to the capabilities of choral performers. All the popular choruses and arias are included, and arranged in such a way that soloists may be entirely dispensed with, if desired. The translation is new, and thoroughly singable. Time of performance is about thirty minutes; the orchestral accompaniment is artfully "cued-in" to permit of performance by whatever size orchestra is available. It can also be done with piano only if necessary. It has just the proper length to form one-half of the average programme. Your audiences and chorus will surely enjoy this work.

Conductor's copy will be sent on receipt of 6d. List price of score, 2s. 6d. Cost of hire of orchestral material quoted on request.

Reserve a place for it in your next Programme.

PUBLISHED BY
WINTHROP ROGERS, LTD., LONDON
Sole Agents: HAWKES & SON, DENMAN STREET, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

OVERTURE IN D MINOR

COMPOSED BY

HANDEL.

ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN

BY

H. F. ELLINGFORD.

FROM THE ORCHESTRAL TRANSCRIPTION

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

ORGAN WORKS

OF

RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE

Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,
Paper Boards 7s.
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4s
Music only, 3s.

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Rewritten and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

PART I.

CHANTEYS AND SEA SONGS

FOR FOUR-PART MALE CHORUS WITH SOLOS FOR TENOR AND BASS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

HOWARD CARR.

CONTENTS:

No. 1.	PRELUDE AND CHANTEY -	"A-roving."
2.	CHANTEY - - - -	"Rio Grande."
3.	SEA SONG - - - -	"Come, loose every sail."
4.	CHANTEY - - - -	"Whiskey!"
5.	CHANTEY - - - -	"Blow, boys, blow!"
6.	CHANTEY - - - -	"Hanging Johnny."
7.	CHANTEY - - - -	"Blow the man down."
8.	CHANTEY - - - -	"Sally Brown."
9.	SEA SONG - - - -	"Sling the flowing bowl."
10.	SEA SONG - - - -	"A jug of this."
11.	SEA SONG - - - -	"Blow, ye winds."

Optional bridges and endings are given so that the work can be performed as a whole or each number separately.

PRICE 1/6 NET.

PUBLISHED SEPARATELY.

Sung by HARRY DEARTH, WALTER HYDE, FREDERICK RANALOW, and NORMAN WILLIAMS, and recorded on H.M.V.

"A JUG OF THIS." "DOROTHY'S A BUXOM LASS."
"BEN BACKSTAY." "HIGH BARBAREE."

PRICE 2/- EACH.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval to Teachers, Conductors, Festival Committees, &c.

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS, OR—

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Vocal and Choral Catalogue, C. 201, gratis.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY
F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY
A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
STRING PARTS, Price 8*s*.

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.
Price 3*s*. 6*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LOVE INCARNATE

A SETTING OF LINES
BY ROBERT BROWNING.
With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"
BY
ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.
Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.
Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ
BY BASIL HARWOOD.
(Op. 37.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST
AND
THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY
S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BY
JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Lording's Daughter

BALLAD.

WORDS
ELIZABETHAN.

MUSIC BY EDWARD GERMAN.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY
HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."
—Musical Times.

ANTHEMS: The Desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... 3d.

PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 274.

FOLK-SONGS

FOR SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SET IX.

No.
1407	BLACKBIRDS AND THRUSHES
1408	DABBLING IN THE DEW
1409	THE BONNY LIGHTER-BOY
1410	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON
1411	THE TREE IN THE WOOD
1412	THE BOLD FISHERMAN
1413	MY BOY WILLIE
1414	SCARBOROUGH FAIR
1415	SEARCHING FOR LAMBS

Price Twopence each number.

Price One Shilling.

Voice Parts only, 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Leeds Musical Festival, 1925

FIRST CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(OP. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

FULL SCORE (in the Press) PRICE £3 3*s.*

Separately from the above:

Ode on a Grecian Urn

FOR CHORUS AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Band Parts of the Complete Work and of the

SCHERZO

which may be played as an Orchestral Piece without Chorus may be had on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken. ALFRED MOFFAT.

			s.	d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major	JAMES LATES	3	0
,, 2.	SONATA in D minor	HENRY ECCLES	3	0
,, 3.	SONATA in B flat major ...	WILLIAM BABELL	3	0
,, 4.	SONATA in G minor	JOHN STANLEY	3	0
,, 5.	SONATA in A major	JOHN COLLETT	3	0
,, 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4	6
,, 7.	SONATA in D major	RICHARD JONES	3	0
,, 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor ...	WILLIAM BOYCE	4	6
,, 9.	THREE PIECES	WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
,, 10.	SONATA in E major ...	CHARLES MACKLEAN	3	0
,, 11.	SONATA in G minor	WILLIAM CROFT	3	0
,, 12.	SONATA in D minor	JOSEPH GIBBS	3	0
,, 13.	SONATA in D minor	JOHN HUMPHRIES	3	0
,, 14.	SONATA in A minor	THOMAS VINCENT	3	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST SONG SUCCESSES

GUY D'HARDELOT.
"The Quiet Country Places"
"Wings"
"Love's Ecstasy"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.
"The Fairy Laundry"
"The Dawn has a Song"
"A Dream Garden"
"Fiddler, come and play for me"

TERESA DEL RIEGO.
"If any little Song of Mine"
"The little Blue Bay"

RICHARD KOUNTZ.
"Sleepy Hollow Tune"

RAYMOND LOUGHBOROUGH.
"High on the Sleepy Hills"

CECIL BAUMER.
"Spring, the Fiddler"
"Follow the Fairies"

WOLSELEY CHARLES.
"Do you believe in Fairies"

HERMANN LÖHR.
"The Hills of Heaven"
"Friendships"
"Immortality"

HAYDN WOOD.
"I Look into your Garden"
"Dearest, I Love the Morning"
"Sometimes at Dawn"

ERIC COATES.
"Song of the Little Folk"
"The Gates of If-Ever"
"Little Snoozy Coon"

MOLLY CAREW.
"Advice"
"Canterbury Bells"

REGINALD BENYON.
"Gossamer Wings"
"If you were in my Garden"

H. LYALL PHILLIPS.
"Good Fellows"

ERNEST LONGSTAFFE.
"When the Sergeant-Major's on Parade."

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, New Bond Street, London, W.1. and may be obtained from all Music Sellers. NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

MINIATURE ESSAYS ON IMPORTANT CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS.

Each "MINIATURE ESSAY" contains a short biographical sketch and an appreciation of the Composer in English and French, a carefully reproduced camera portrait, a facsimile MS. page from one of the composer's works, and a list of his compositions.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK, ARNOLD BAX, LORD BERNERS, ALFREDO CASELLA, MANUEL DE FALLA, EUGENE GOOSSENS, GABRIEL GROVLEZ, JOSEF HOLBROOKE, GUSTAV HOLST, ARTHUR HONEGGER, JOHN IRELAND, JOSEPH JONGEN, G. FRANCESCO MALIPIERO, SELIM PALMGREN, POLDOWSKI, FRANCIS POULENC, FRANCESCO SANTOLIQUIDO, JEAN SIBELIUS, IGOR STRAWINSKY.

PRICE EACH, SIXPENCE NET.

IN PREPARATION:
PETER WARLOCK, E. J. MOERAN, LOUIS DUREY.

These attractive and beautifully produced little booklets should be in the possession of all those who desire to make closer acquaintance with the personality and the work of the leading composers of the present day.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Monday, February 1, 1926.

No. 997

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

MARCH 1, 1926

Rec'd MAR 19 1926 R.C.M. P.L.

SPENCER PIANOS

Over 80,000 already sold!

World-famous for glorious Tone, responsive Touch, distinctive Design, and thorough All-British Construction. Write to-day for the beautifully Illustrated Spencer Art Catalogue.

MURDOCHS

The Great Piano House

461/3 OXFORD STREET

LONDON W 1

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, LTD.

Pianoforte Merchants.

Established 1864.

SCHIEDMAYER PIANOS.

Sole IMPORTERS of the

BEULHOFF PIANOS

also the horizontal Grand Pianos, manufactured by

BORD

PARIS.

65, Wigmore Street, London. 12, Park Row, Leeds.

Branch Establishments at Scarborough, Doncaster, Darlington, and Middlesbrough.

The Great English Piano.

ALLISON PIANOS LIMITED

LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.5.

Telephone: NORTH 1660.

— AND —

60, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Telephone: LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.
Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317. Telegrams: "ESTEY WESTCENT, LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.
- 12 -
RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

METZLER'S
OPERATIC TWO-PART SONGS
SIMPLY ARRANGED FOR
BOYS' OR GIRLS' VOICES.
(OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA).

1. THE SPINNING CHORUS - - - Wagner
("The Flying Dutchman.")
2. GIPSY AIR (Carmen) - - - - - - Bizet
3. MARCH and TOREADOR SONG (Carmen) - Bizet
4. THE BOYS' CHORUS (Carmen) - - - Bizet

Price, 6d. each net.

SPECIMEN COPIES FREE.

METZLER & CO. (1920), Ltd., 142, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 997—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

MARCH 1 1926

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 2, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS STILES-ALLEN.
MISS EDITH FURMEDGE.
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN B MINOR - - - - BACH

MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. ARCHIBALD WINTER.
MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

Conductor: DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, March 13 and 27, at 3 p.m.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Wednesday, March 3, at 3 p.m.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Duke's Hall, Wednesday, March 24, at 3 p.m.

On Wednesday, March 31st, a performance of the

"ST. MATTHEW" PASSION

by BACH, in its entirety, will be given in the QUEEN'S HALL, under the direction of SIR HENRY WOOD, Mus. D., F.R.A.M.

The performance will start at 2 p.m., and will finish about 6.45 p.m. There will be an interval of about three-quarters of an hour at 4.30 p.m. Tickets at 5s. 9d., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 4d. (including tax), can be obtained on and after March 1, from the Box Office, Queen's Hall, or from the Secretary of the R.A.M.

THE STERNDALE BENNETT SCHOLARSHIP, for male candidates in any branch of music, will be competed for in April. Last day of entry, April 12. Particulars and entry forms on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,897th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on March 2nd, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
{ HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

Candidates for Fellowship are requested to note that in the first few copies of the current Regulations, the requirement for question 3 (C.) of the morning paper was left blank; it is Septett in E flat, Op. 20, Beethoven, Miniature Score. (Goodwin & Tabb.)

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION, are:

Prelude (without Fugue) in E flat, "St. Ann," J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 6, page 28; Augener, p. 133; Peters, Vol. 3, No. 1.)

Choral Prelude on Newtoun, Charles Wood. (No. 6 of 16 Preludes, Vol. 1, Stainer & Bell.)

Fantasia in F minor, Mozart. (Best's arrangements, No. 76, p. 1000; Novello.) This arrangement only.

The selected pieces set for the July, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1926.

The Choir-Training Diploma and Certificate Examinations will both be held between Monday, May 10th, and Saturday, May 15th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Wednesday, April 14th. Application for election or re-election to Membership must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before April 14th.

Two lectures will be given on Choir Training: On March 13th, at the Royal Albert Museum, Exeter, at 3.30 p.m., by Dr. E. Bullock—Chairman, The Lord Bishop of the Diocese; and at the Parochial Room, Leeds Parish Church, at 3 p.m., by Dr. E. C. Bairstow—Chairman, Dr. A. C. Tysoe.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LICENTIATESHIP EXAMINATION.

CHRISTMAS, 1925.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.—As TEACHER and PERFORMER: Margaret Eleanor Dilks

As TEACHERS: Winifred Marion Boyce, Florence Julie Fitch, Ernest Francis, Rachel M. Green, Marjorie Maud Hobbs, Alice E. Jefferson, Dorothy Mullally, Caroline Edith Segrave, Florence Wilson.

As PERFORMERS: Gladys Aird-Briscoe, Louie Akroyd, Frank Martin Attwater, Mai Babidge, Eleanora Judith Badenhorst, Phyllis Browning-Turner, Kathleen Violet Cameron, Ronald Joseph Cliff, Helen Mary Deacon, Kathleen Maude Deverill, Ethel Blanche Douthwaite, Lesley Keitley Duff, Annie Flook, Edith May Frankland, Barbara Frewing, Ena Katharine George, Amy Elfrida Hansard, Edith Annie Hockley, Irene Horniblow (September, 1925), Leva Leach, John Kilburn Pescod, Annie Glen Sidwell, Dorothy Lilian Tagg, F. Dora Warner, Helen Dickson Whitelaw.

EXAMINERS: Henry Beauchamp, Maurice d'Oisly, Edward Iles, Frederic King, Evelyn Langston, Agnes Larkcom, Marcus Thomson, Mary T. Wilson.

PIANOFORTE.—As TEACHERS: Perry Aarons, Mary D. Adams, Elinor Catherine Alcock, Marion Dunlop Cunningham Alexander, Robert Armstrong, Dorothy Ashley, Gwenyth Ethel Ball, Dorothy Jane Barnard, Marjorie Annie Binns, Gertrude Muriel Bostock, Dora Elena Bowering, Christina M. M. Buchanan, Hilda Alice Burch, Ruth Burkitt, Gwendoline May Byrt, Helen Mary Caiger, Ida Gertrude Carroll, Annie B. Carswell, Dorothy Jean Cator, Alice Jean Church, Gladys Eva Cole, Helen Margaret Conacher, George Arthur Costain, Marguerite J. Cran, Violet Louise Crawfurd, Eleanor Marjorie Curwen, Hilda Evelyn Dalton, Hazel Gertrude Dickinson, Marjorie Campbell Donaldson, Winifred Doreen Douglas, Alice M. Blair Dunlop, Marjorie Eileen Durose, Catharine Jarvis Eyles, Elsie Fallas, Doris Faraday, Marjorie Fielden, Elizabeth Patrick Findlay, Ivor Reginald Foster, Marjory Fry, Jeanne Adrienne Georgette Gale, Guendolen Chalders Garbutt, Mary Graham, Amy Clare Green, Alice Greenhill, Jessie Greenwood, Hilda Habbeshaw, Hilda Elizabeth Harries, Sarah Lilian Harris, William Frederick Hartley, Georgina Henderson, Kathleen Henson, Maggie Herald, Emily Lilian Hewitt, Thomas Arnold Hickmore, Marjorie Hillman, Robert Bruce Hindmarch, Mary Hodgetts, Eveline Gertrude Ireland, Vera Jenkins, Elizabeth T. Johnston, Doris Eleanor Jones, Eleanor Doreen Gill Jones, Kathleen Jones, Theodora F. Jones, Irene M. Keates, Philip Augustine Leonard, Hilda Marjorie Lewis, Gwendoline Audrey Lidington, Mabel Linton, Euphemia McCallum Macbride, Ellen Marie MacMahon, Doris Frances Malpass, Margarita McInnerney, Margery Melling, Emily Ruth Joan Messenger, Donald Brown Miller, Mary Edith Miller, Mildred Eileen Mills, Winnie Olive Mitchell, Phyllis Molyneux, Joan Christine Moran, Miriam Morgan, Sarah Florence Morgan, Sally Nugent, Evelyn May Nuttall, Kathleen Ransom Oldfield, Eleanor Angel O'Rorke, Frances Evelyn Margaret Parker, Gertrude Parker, Marion Sharpe Paterson, Joyce Pawley, Mignon Pearce, Honor Price, Gladys Maude Prince, Agnes Pulley, Alfred Cecil Reid, Evelyn Reid, John Denis Yelland Richards, Sybil Maria Ringwood, Ethel Hope Robertson, Phyllis Anne Rowbotham, Mary Sandbach, Muriel Margaret Sauer, Kathleen May Saunders, Florence Susannah West Sauvary, Dorothy Violet Scoley, Ada Mary Scull, Kathleen Vara Sharp, Laura Copley Shaw, Elsie May Shearing, Margaret Aston Shrewsbury, Bertha Skill, Constance Mary Slater, Albert Leonard Tanner, Ernest Albert Tanner, Edith Ellen Tatlock, George Taylor, Elsie Winnifred Townsend, Margaret Olive Travers, Mary Turner, Winifred May Tyler, Beatrice Helen Vickers, Henry Davison Wade, Enid Walton, Marjorie Florence Ward, Jean Ross Buchanan Watt, Cecil John Whear, Elizabeth Wishart, Mary Winifred Woodhead, Annie Millicent Cowley Woodman, Lilian Edithe Emily Woods, Helen Wilson Yuill.

As PERFORMERS: Adele Marie Louise de Backer, Marjorie Blackburn, Margaret Gertrude Bradbury, Isabel Elizabeth Clifford, Nancy Dickinson, Eric Arthur Saunders, Winifred Grace Taylor, Jessie Louisa Wray.

EXAMINERS: Carlo Albanesi, Victor G. Booth, York Bowen, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, Isabel Gray, W. J. Kipps, Thomas B. Knott, Vivian Langrish, Dora Matthay, Frederick Moore, Brian Nash, John Pauer, Claude F. Pollard, Charles F. Reddie, Felix Swinstead, Lawrance Taylor, Percy Waller, Septimus Webbe, Cuthbert Whitemore.

ORGAN.—Frederick Frank Coaker, Stanley Charles Curtis.

EXAMINERS: G. D. Cunningham (September, 1925), Stanley Marchant, Mus. D. Oxon., Ernest Read, Reginald Steggall, Walter S. Vale.

ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS.—VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: John MacLean Fraser, Sheila Turner Mackendrick, Nora Kathleen Samways.

As PERFORMER: (Lucy) Maud Freeman.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC—continued.

VIOLONCELLO.—As TEACHERS: Marion Bowlby, Elsie Mabel Wheeley.

As PERFORMERS: Kathleen Peers Coetmore Jones, Joan Mulholland.

EXAMINERS: Spencer Dyke, Marjorie Hayward, James T. Lockyer, M. Lorenzi, Herbert Walenn, H. Wessely, W. E. Whitehouse, E. Rowsby Woof.

BANDMASTERSHIP.—Charles James Lewis Hamilton, Herbert Wright.

EXAMINERS: B. J. Dale, Neville Flux, B. Walton O'Donnell.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.—Clement Wilfred Courtney, Maurice George Taylor.

EXAMINERS: Welton Hickin, Montague Phillips, Vivian Langrish, Cuthbert Whitemore.

AURAL TRAINING and SIGHT-SINGING.—Beatrice Mary Victoria Adams, Phyllis Marjorie Banfield, M. A. Hogan, Kathleen Hilda Theobald.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Ernest Read, Frederick G. Shinn, Mus. D. Dunelm.

VOICE CULTURE and CLASS-SINGING.—Herbert Barnaby, Hilda Charlotte Barnard, M. A. Hogan, Eva Marion Knight.

EXAMINERS: Arthur J. Greenish, Mus. D. Cantab., Stewart Macpherson, Stanley Marchant, Mus. D. Oxon. (September, 1925), Ernest Read.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Mildred Joyce Adam (September, 1925), Grace Allardyce, Inez Bliss, Edith Clinch, Jessie Angela Doubleday, Christian McDowall Gall, Mabel Gibson, Haidée Gunn, Gilbert Matthers, Saidie Caroline Stewart, Winifred Annie Taylor.

As PERFORMER: Gladys Edna London.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton-Bond, Wilton Cole, Cairns James, Constance Newell.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 12th (Irish Entries, May 5th), 1926.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. CLAUD BIGGS.

New Professor of Singing, Miss MARGUERITE SWALE.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.
All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.
New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMPETITIVE CHOIRS.

PRESIDENT:
JOHN E. TURNER, ESQ., HALIFAX MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

The objects are for the binding together for mutual help of all the Competitive Choirs in the Country, to deal with all matters affecting the interests of the choirs, and to be the channel of communication between the choirs and the various Musical Festival committees in the Country.

Further particulars from the Hon. Secretary,
H. STEVENSON, 6, Laneside Street, Todmorden.

Can You Play from Memory with Confidence?

or do you experience that most unhappy sensation at the end of your performance—that of "regrets" . . . . "What a pity I made that silly mistake." . . . . "I do wish I had not bungled that one passage." . . . . "Why do things never come off at a Concert as well as they do when I am practising"?

If you do not memorise the right way, you feel that your memory is not absolutely safe, which makes you just sufficiently nervous to take the edge off your enjoyment in playing.

You can be sure of attaining that sense of certainty, that knowing that there is no risk of forgetting or breaking down, if you

MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC BY THE

Master-Method

OF

Memory-Playing

Take the first step by sending for my FREE BOOK "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing," which is sent free and post free, and learn how YOU can play from memory with ease, certainty, and confidence. It discusses fully the whole problem of reliable memory playing; gives full details of my Memorising Courses for the PIANO, VIOLIN, 'CELLO, ORGAN; contains many signed and addressed testimonials, including one from A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. Oxon, F.R.C.O., together with MY PERSONAL GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

Send a P.C. to-day, stating which intrument you play to

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT,
F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.6.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.
FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1926 · WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, MUS. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

PIANOFORTE
RECITAL-LECTURES
DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
(Mus. Doc., Lond.).

Subjects of Recital-Lectures already given include:

1. "LISZT'S PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
2. "MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
3. "THE STORY OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
4. "ROMANTIC PIANOFORTE MUSIC."
5. "THE STORY OF THE PIANOFORTE SONATA."

For vacant dates, &c., apply,
46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.
Telephone: Bristol 3033.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Papers.
2. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Papers.
3. Short comprehensive Course for L.R.A.M. "Form and Teaching" Paper.
4. Touch and Technique (Matthay Method) for L.R.A.M., vivâ voce.
5. Fingering and Pedalling.
6. Rudiments, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, as separate subjects.
7. Courses on Mr. Stewart Macpherson's "Melody and Harmony."

Over 90% Postal Successes at Diploma Examinations.

MR. GILBERT THOMAS,
M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A. Mus. T.C.L.
Private Pupil of STEWART MACPHERSON, BACKHAUS, OSCAR BERINGER.
Formerly Student at Matthay Pianoforte School, London.
Terms, Appreciations, on application:
ASHCROFT, 42 BURTON ROAD, S.W.9.

VOCAL QUARTET CONCERT PARTIES.
MR. EWART DARTREY Coaches in the art of Vocal Ensemble and Interpretation. Write, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O.
L.R.A.M.

Candidates for these examinations cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard" System, to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."
"Worth twenty times the fee charged."
"I have passed my examination with honours."
"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."
"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."
"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."
"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."
"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"
Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Musical News describes my system as "the most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."

20,000 Successful Pupils of all ages.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2*s.* 6*d.* per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),
undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.
2, HILL SIDE, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.

Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.

Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.

Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.).

MATRIC. - - - SUCCESSES - - - - - - 133

		Passes.	M.C.C.
1ST M.B. - - -	September, 1922	6	 2
	,, 1923	9	 4
	March, 1925	4	 2
	September, 1925	Two	Both at 1st Attempt.

MUS. BAC. - - - For ONE FEE, which can be paid by easy Instalments, Tuition is given until you GAIN THE DEGREE.

A.R.C.O. - - - A student FAILS 4 TIMES (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES.
RECENT SUCCESSES 23

F.R.C.O. - - - A student FAILS 6 TIMES (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES, January, 1926.
RECENT SUCCESSES 9

A. MUS. T.C.L. - - Marks gained by M.C.C. Students :—
ART OF TEACHING 88%
COUNTERPOINT 93%

L. MUS. T.C.L. - - July, 1925: Two Candidates PASSED. BOTH were Students of the M.C.C.
Marks gained: ORCHESTRATION... ... ... 95%
HARMONY 84%
RUDIMENTS 100%

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte) - (Pianoforte Teaching). A Candidate gains 66% (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and gains 81%. Form and Teaching.

A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte) - (Pianoforte Teaching). A successful Student gains 112 marks for Paper Work.

L.R.A.M. (Singing) - - (Teaching of Singing). A successful Student was complimented by the Examiners for his Paper on VOCAL PHYSIOLOGY.

A.R.C.M. (Singing) - - A successful Student writes: "Your Course may be summed up in one word—MODERN."

A.T.C.L. - - - A Student gains 87% ART OF TEACHING, January, 1926.

A.R.C.M. (Musical Appreciation) (Musical Appreciation). 3 SUCCESSES.
ALL at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

L.R.A.M. (IX.) - - (Voice Culture and Class Singing). A successful Student, January, 1926, writes:
"I am sure YOU HAVE BEEN the means of helping me through."

GUARANTEE COURSES. ALL EXAMS. ANY SUBJECT.

Tuition in Single Subjects - HARMONY, COMPOSITION, ORCHESTRATION, FORM, ART OF TEACHING, TOUCH, ETC.

— SUCCESS IN 1926. —

JOIN THE MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE.

FREE - GUIDE TO DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS IN MUSIC.

PLEASE STATE EXAM.

20. SHERWIN ROAD. NOTTINGHAM.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

There are two REASONS WHY Dr. Sprankling's method of Correspondence tuition is so successful:

(1) Because students are shown exactly the STYLE of work needed for success in the various examinations;

(2) Because the lessons are entirely INDIVIDUAL.

Thus each pupil receives exactly the help that he or she specially needs.

"SUCCESS IS THE GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS."

THIS MONTH'S COURSES - -
(1) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. for Easter Examinations.
(2) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. for July.
(3) First and Final Mus. B. and Mus. D.

Candidates for any of the above examinations should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

ALBERT GARCIA'S
VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.
PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"
revised from the original edition by
ALBERT GARCIA.

Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland St., W.1. Price 6s.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS, THREE GUINEAS.

Personal Lessons if desired.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON: AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

THE SEVENTH ABERYSTWYTH AND THIRD CARDIGANSHIRE

MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

DIRECTOR: SIR WALFORD DAVIES.

JUNE 25, 26, 27, 28, 1926.

For particulars apply to—

MUSIC HOUSE, ABERYSTWYTH.

Free Festival Guide ready shortly.

SCARBOROUGH
Competitive Musical Festival.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE
SCARBOROUGH TOWNSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

MAY 13th, 14th, 15th, 1926.
GRAND HALL, THE SPA.

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL, SCHOOL CHOIR, ETC., COMPETITIONS.

Syllabus may be obtained from
MR. F. CROMACK, Secretary,
Scarborough Townsmen's Association,
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough.

STRATFORD AND EAST LONDON
MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OPEN COMPETITIONS.

Mixed-Voice and Ladies' Choirs, Saturday evening, April 24th. Male-Voice and more Ladies' Choirs, Saturday evening, May 1st. Open Solos, Voice and Pianoforte also. Local Contests, 105 Classes in all Musical branches. The oldest and one of the largest Festivals.

PRESIDENT: H.R.H. PRINCESS LOUISE.

SYLLABUS by post (2d.), from
JOHN GRAHAM, 74, Park Hall Road, London, N.2.

Aberdeen and North-East of Scotland
MUSIC FESTIVAL.

MUSIC HALLS AND Y.M.C.A. HALL, ABERDEEN.
26th to 29th MAY, 1926.

COMPETITIONS IN 100 CLASSES.

FOR CHOIRS: Vocal and Instrumental Quartets, Trios, Duets, and Solos; Orchestras; Song Composing; Elocution; and Scottish Folk-Dancing.

Adjudicators: MR. PERCY SCHOLES, MR. PLUNKET GREENE, PROF. A. A. JACK, REV. WALTER MURSELL, and MISS JEAN MILLIGAN.

Entries to be lodged by 13th April. Syllabus from Music-sellers and Secretary. Price 6*d.*

Hon. Secretary, E. H. HALE, 183, Union Street, Aberdeen.

EXPERIENCING NATURES.

DO you know what an "experiencing nature" is? If you have read Augustine Birrell's little sketch of Bagehot, or the latter's remarkable essay on Shakespeare, you will recall the expression and, having once met and mastered its meaning, will assuredly have taken it to your heart. For it will have helped you in an otherwise hopeless task, namely, the grouping of human beings in some sort of reliable category . . . . those with and those without—those whose minds continue to grow and those who mature early and then stand still.

EXPERIENCING NATURES

Bagehot compares Shakespeare with Pitt, the man who was Chancellor of the Exchequer at twenty-three, and was no better fitted for his job at forty-three. . . . . As somebody said, "he did not grow, he was cast."

Shakespeare on the contrary accumulated experience. He did not in early life "form a classified list of all the objects in the universe and learn no more about the universe ever after."

We musicians have our instances of these different characters. Who can regard Mendlessohn—the youth who at seventeen composed the Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and at twenty gave the famous performance of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion—as having shown the powers of development which make Mozart, Beethoven, and Wagner such amazing giants of genius?

But the distinction is not one that is confined to the great ones of the world; it is noticeable among all ranks of men and women. I wonder whether, while you read this, you are unconsciously applying the test to yourself, and have decided to which class you belong; whether, as a pianist, you have "grown" with the experience which later insight has provided, or have "stood still" in the "cast" your early tuition left you.

If you have any doubt you can put the question at rest by applying to

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM.
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

HORACE CURTIS
TENOR
ORATORIO, WORKS, REQUIEMS, Etc.
99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12. 'Phone: Streatham 5246.

ERIC GALE
TENOR.
AVAILABLE FOR ORATORIO, PASSION MUSIC, Etc.
12, Fernholme Road, Waverley Park, S.E.15.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, Etc.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5

CLAUDE PILGRIM
TENOR.
The Cathedral Male-Voice Quartet.
26, Seymour Gardens, Ilford. Tel.: Ilford 1826.

MR. LANGDALE BROWN
BASS-BARITONE.
29, Sedgeford Road, W.12. Tel.: Riverside 4353.

JAMES CAPERN
BASS-BARITONE.
Cleeve, Parkside Drive, Watford. Telephone: Watford 531

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE
BASS.
Concerts, Oratorios, Receptions, &c.
Stainer's "Crucifixion."
"Judas Maccabæus," "Messiah," "Elijah," &c
46, Rathcoole Avenue, Hornsey, N.8.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

JOHN HENDERSON
BARITONE. Lent Music, Masonic (Lodges), Concerts, &c.
Press Notices, &c., "Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.
Telephone: Willesden, 70.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

EDWARD W. GROOCOCK
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., A.G.S.M.
Organist, Rugby Parish Church.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
6, Regent Place, Rugby, Warwickshire.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

HARRY LYTTLER
SOLO FLUTE (AND PICCOLO), L.R.A.M.
London, 2LO, and Provincial Concerts.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, &c., also Tuition
20, Hampstead Road, London, N.W.1. 'Phone: Museum 9365.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and
2, Connaught Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MR. JOSEPH WHITESIDE
(A.R.C.M.)
SPECIALISES IN
VOICE CULTURE AND SINGING.
"Effortless production and excellent diction."—(Vide Press.)
72, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

MISS MARY WILSON F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

MR. W. LAURENCE LEE
MARYLEBONE STUDIOS,
HIGH STREET, MARYLEBONE, W.1.
The London Telegraph, November 23, 1925.
"Mr. Lee is indeed to be congratulated on having so many promising voices under his care, no less than on the thoroughly sound methods upon which the development of them is proceeding. In one or two cases promise is nearing complete fulfilment."

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
Correspondence Courses in
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
Hazeldene, Tewkesbury.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations.—Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

MR. RONALD BRIDGER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. (Registered Teacher), prepares pupils for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. examinations in singing, either personally or by correspondence. Lessons also given in Voice Production and Singing. Highest references. Full particulars from 54, Pembridge Villas, W.11.

J. C. BRYDSON, Mus. B. (Dunelm.). Correspondence Coach. Fee, 1 guinea for 10 lessons. Students enrolling this month receive first term at half fees. Kegworth, Derby.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.
L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ...286 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 76 " " "
MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O. Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

IVOR R. FOSTER, L.R.A.M., Sub-Professor, Royal Academy of Music; Professor, Metropolitan Academy, DESIRES POSITION as Teacher of Pianoforte and Theory, in or near London (non-residential). "Devonia," Cranbourne Gardens, N.W.11.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1; for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus. Bac. pass. Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; Mus.Doc., Trinity University, Toronto: F.R.C.O.: F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., Specialist in Postal Tuition, assures each individual student personal care and attention. Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for Diplomas, &c. Model workings. Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
279 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
174 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O , July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cli tonville, Margate.

MRS. J. SHARP, A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte), Coaching for Examinations and Festivals. Visits Streatham, Wallington, and Westminster. Address: Wigmore Hall Studios, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

CHARLES A. TREW, Composer and Author of "Elements of Music" and "Harmony Lessons" (30,000 Edition); also sole teacher of Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji, instructs and coaches pupils in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c., by Correspondence. Successes by pupils Inland and Overseas. Preparation for all accredited Examinations. Communications, 45, Greyhound Mansions, London, W.6.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

J. W. WILSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., T.C.L. Exams, &c. Solutions and Model Essays. Moderate Terms. 47, Hinckley Road, Leicester.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

DR. E. T. SWEETING.—Temporary address: 33, Crediton Hill, N.W.6.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

BACH'S "ST. JOHN" PASSION will be sung at St. Stephen's, Bow, on Palm Sunday, 28th March, and again on Good Friday, 2nd April, at 6.30 p.m., in each case under the direction of the Choirmaster, Mr. W. E. Pepper. The Church is within five minutes' walk of Coborn Road, L.N.E.R., and Bow Road, D.R., Stations. No tickets of admission are required, and further particulars can be obtained from the Vicar, Rev. G. H. Lancaster, M.A., St. Stephen's Vicarage, Bow.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

THE DEAN AND CHAPTER will shortly proceed to the Election of TWO CHORAL SCHOLARS, an ALTO and a TENOR.

The Choral Scholarships, which are of the value of £80 a year, are tenable by men who intend to take a University degree.

Successful candidates must either pass the Matriculation Examination of the University, or gain exemption from the necessity of passing it, before coming into residence in October.

Applications, accompanied by certificates of birth and not more than four testimonials, should be sent to The Precentor, from whom further information may be obtained. His address is The College, Durham.

Notice of the day of trial will be sent to selected candidates only, and their travelling and other necessary expenses will be borne by The Dean and Chapter.

ALTO WANTED.—St. Vedast Church, Foster Lane, E.C. One Service, Sunday, usually; Practice, Thursday. Apply, H. J. Timothy, 134, Ferme Park Road, Crouch End, N.8.

ALTO seeks place in Male-Voice Quartet or Choir. Apply, W. A. Henley, 259, Magdalen Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.18.

TENOR WANTED, St. Gabriel's, Pimlico. Good reader. Light duties. £22. Apply, Organist, 39, Gauden Road, Clapham, S.W.4.

TENOR WANTED.—£15. City Church. Light duties. Communicant. Apply, "M. K.," 171, Grove Lane, S.E. 5.

MR. EDGAR LEIGH, Tenor (St. Andrew's, West Green), is available for renderings of Stainer's "Crucifixion." 56, Grove Park Road, N.15.

TENOR (£25 per annum).—Wanted for St. Peter's, Bayswater; good Soloist and Reader. Also a BASS (£15 per annum is wanted. Write, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.13.

WANTED.—TENOR for St. Peter's, Belsize Park. £16 per anum. Write, "Organist," 42, Heath Street, Hampstead, N.W.3.

NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.

A VACANCY for a BASS will be filled by the appointment of either a Lay-Clerk or an Academical Clerk after a trial to be held early in March.

Salary of Lay-Clerk, £110 (with pension); if a suitable candidate presents himself the post may be combined with the post of Assistant-Librarian (Salary, £100). Academical Clerkships (reserved for men who propose to read for a University Degree), value £80. Apply to The Precentor, New College, Oxford.

ST. ANDREW'S, HOLBORN.—Two voluntary CHORUS BASSES WANTED. Fridays, 6.30, Sundays, 11 and 6.30. Travelling expenses paid. Apply, Organist.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Ilford Presbyterian Church. Good choir-training essential. Applications, with copies of testimonials, to J. P. Kerr, 52, Courtland Avenue, Ilford.

LANCASTER PARISH CHURCH.—WANTED, Organist and Choirmaster. Cathedral Services. £120 per annum, and Whit-Sunday collections. Apply, Vicar.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Highgate (Jacksons Lane) Wesleyan Church. Organ by Walker & Sons. Salary, £60. Experience in Choir training essential. Apply, with full particulars and references, to S. H. Hardy, 8, Shepherds Hill, Highgate, N.6.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE. Organ Scholarship vacant in October; examination will be held in April. Full particulars on application to The Dean, Pembroke College, Cambridge.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER requires post. Thirty years' experience (good organ). Mr. F. Gardner, 47, Brown Road, Hoe Street, Walthamstow, E.17.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires POST. Good Choir-trainer, Recitalist, disciplinarian. "H. F.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

F.R.C.O. Prizewinner, at present Organist and Choirmaster of an important Church in the Western suburbs, will shortly be seeking a similar appointment (C. of E.). Experienced in all types of ecclesiastical music. Apply, "W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. Deputises in London and Suburbs. Plainsong, Eucharist, &c. H. Eaton Cooter, 17, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER seeks RE-APPOINTMENT. Experienced. Congregational or Baptist. N. London. "E. J. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST for Roman Catholic Church, West London. Full Liturgy. Fine opportunity. State salary required. "M. H. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

GENTLEWOMAN seeks Salaried Position, Accompanist, or train musicians (Orchestral work). "Winmarleigh," 31, Seymour Place, W.1.

MUSICIAN, young, energetic, enterprising, and possessing organizing ability, requires whole or part-time post in music-publishing house, or as Secretary to professional man. (London only.) "F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST RECEIVES SINGERS for practices in Town. Write, "Box 22," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

£250 SINGING, Pianoforte and Elocution Free Scholarships, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition for the trained and untrained, April 24th, May 1st and 8th. Results at Lecture-Recital, "Practical Singing," King George's Hall, May 14th. Adjudicators: Madame Alice Esty, the famous prima donna; Mr. Harold Howell, Conductor, Beecham and Carl Rosa Opera Companies; Mr. Douglas Pack, A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M. (Eloc.), and Mr. Clifton Cooke. Prospectus, Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

ORGAN.—Mason & Hamlin. Two manuals and pedals. Stops through, like Church organ. Pipe top. 90 guineas. Seen London. "J. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

CHAMBER ORGAN, single Manual, "Positive" or other make; about three speaking stops. Must be in good condition. Volk, Electric Railway, Brighton.

CHAMBER ORGAN, by Hill & Son. 6 Stops, pedal board, sliding manual, swell. Hand or foot blown. Ready for erecting. Reasonable price. Seen by appointment. Gibbs, 10, Lillington Road, Leamington.

BELL ORGAN.—9 Stops, knee Swells. In good condition. £12, with Stool. A. Taylor, 107, Eglinton Hill, Plumstead, S.E.18.

PIANO-PEDALS FOR SALE.—Second-hand. R.C.O., radiating and concave. Complete with polished wooden stool. £7 10s. Inspection by appointment. "E. B.," 103, South Croxted Road, Dulwich, S.E.21.

'CELLO,—Nice tone, with Bow and canvas Case, FOR SALE. £7 10s., or offer. Martin, "St. Agnes," Whitehall Road, Chingford.

FOR SALE.—Three dozen copies each of canticle settings, Walmisley, Boyce, Gibbons, Clarke Whitfeld, &c. In good condition and cheap. Choirmaster, 32, Marlborough Road, E.18.

FOR SALE.—A Collection of Ancient VIOLIN MUSIC, the Works of Corelli, Tartini, Veracini, and other great violinists of the 17th and 18th Centuries in old or original editions. A complete list will be sent to any one applying to Mr. T. D., 328, Banbury Road, Oxford.

NINE-FOLD KYRIE.—An adequate Setting for dignified Choral Eucharist. Not difficult, but requiring good singing. Sample copy gratis, from George C. Phelps, "The Peabody," Boston-24-Mass., U.S.A.; or, Banks & Son, York.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMS.

A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.

(a) Outline of Course of Instruction; (b) List of Technical Studies and Pieces; (c) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars); (d) Advice and Hints (papers), £1 1s. A. Mus., A.R.C.M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.

(a) Outline of Course of Instruction (lists of Technical Exercises, books of Studies, Pieces), 5s.
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5s.
(c) Four Special Test-Papers for A.R.C.M., 5s. each.
"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

12,000 WORDS. 1s. 9*d*. Illustrated Method! Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING. SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION. ACCOMPANIMENT (with list of 75 Solos).
ESSAY.

3s. each. 10s. 6*d*. the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5s.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 44, BLANTYRE RD., LIVERPOOL.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7, 1925.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with Photos, 1s. 6*d*.

Full particulars from the Secretary—

MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

FOUNDATIONS OF PRACTICAL HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT

BY R. O. MORRIS,

OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

7s. 6*d*. NET.

The Musical Times:—"Altogether this is a most helpful and stimulating book, which will be warmly welcomed by many teachers and students."

MACMILLAN & Co., LTD., LONDON, W.C.2.

ORGAN SONATA

in F minor, Op. 23,

COMPOSED BY

WILLIAM H. SPEER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS

Augener & Co., London.

"Dr. Speer's Sonata is an important contribution to English organ music. It is finely conceived and powerfully worked out, the material being well-knit and skilfully developed. It consists of three movements. The first, which is broad and flowing in character, has much thematic interest. We like especially the melody with its delightful accompaniment of sixths, which forms part of the second subject. The middle movement is a graceful Pastorale, and the Finale—a fugue with a short introduction—is an effective piece of good rapid part-writing."—Musical Opinion.

MUSICAL BOOKS.

48-Page List (Cat. B) post free. Æsthetics—Biography—Criticism—Essays—History—Orchestra—Organ—Pianoforte—Technical, Theoretical & Elementary—Violin—Vocal—Wagner, &c.

REEVES'S, 83, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.2.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK II. (1925).

TWELVE SONGS AND DANCES

OF

FLANDERS, ARTOIS, PICARDY, NORMANDY, CHAMPAGNE, LORRAINE, and ALSACE

COLLECTED AND EDITED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENTS

BY

LEOPOLD ASHTON, GUSTAVE FERRARI, AND OTHERS.

With Illustrations, English translations, and descriptions and diagrams of the dances.

PREFACE BY DR. W. H. D. ROUSE, Perse School, Cambridge.

FOREWORD BY HARVEY GRACE and LASTWORD BY EDWIN EVANS.

CONTENTS.

FLANDERS-ARTOIS -	Ah! le joli Bois, Mesdames; Sur les Clanquarts.
PICARDY - - - -	Les trois Canards; Semons la Salade.
NORMANDY - - -	Les trois Pommes blanches; Compère et Commère.
CHAMPAGNE - - -	Le petit Bonnet rond; Eh! qui marierons-nous?
LORRAINE - - - -	Vous n'êtes par mon Berger; Je vais entrer dans la Danse.
ALSACE - - - - -	La Chanson des Beignets; Le Maître et Jacquot.

Messrs. NOVELLO & Co. beg leave to announce that they have acquired the Sole Agency for all British Territory and the United States of America for the sale of the Work above described, and that copies are now on sale.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS EACH.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BY APPOINTMENT.

A PERFECT SUPPLY OF WIND FOR YOUR ORGAN

THE ORGAN is, without question, the King of Musical Instruments. To enable the organist to give the fullest possible expression and to put power and inspiration into his rendering, it is essential that he should have ample blowing arrangements. The fact that he has a "Discus" Organ Blower doing this gives him that complete confidence so often absent when the blowing is done by hand. An illustrated booklet, entitled "Organ Blowing" will be sent free on application.

"DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

REGD. TRADE MARK.

WATKINS & WATSON.

Telephone. NORTH 2039.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN. BORD.
SCHIEDMAYER. ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: MUSEUM 439.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Three Preludes on Anglican Chants

FOR THE ORGAN

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.
(Op. 42.)

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London · NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHOIRMASTERS
should send for specimen copy of the anthem
"I WILL LIFT UP MINE EYES."

Gratis and Post Free.

P. LEECH, 588, Holderness Road, Hull.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS

IN D.
Composed for the Peterborough Diocesan Choral Association Festival, 1926.
BY T. H. ROSS, D. MUS.
Price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BY THE WATERS OF BABYLON

(PSALM 137)

FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

HERMANN GOETZ.

TONIC SOL-FA,
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."
Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND
Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D.	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord ! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M.	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4.	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7.	A safe stronghold our God is still
		Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M.	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep ! how broad ! how high !
Hanover	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D.	Alleluia ! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M.	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. (with Alleluias)	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
		Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D.	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7.	Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M.	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M.	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6.	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M.	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M.	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11.	Disposer Supreme, and judge of the earth
		O worship the King, All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M.	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M.	My God, and is Thy Table spread ?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M.	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version)	C.M.	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D.	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M.	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8.	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M.	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7.	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4.	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M.	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M.	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M.	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M.	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version)	C.M.	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version)	C.M.	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."
—Musical Times.

ANTHEMS: The Desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... 3d.

PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Leeds Musical Festival, 1925

FIRST CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

FULL SCORE (in the Press) PRICE £3 3*s*.

Separately from the above:

Ode on a Grecian Urn

FOR CHORUS AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Band Parts of the Complete Work and of the

SCHERZO

which may be played as an Orchestral Piece without Chorus may be had on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR TENNYSON LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

1. A LULLABY.
2. THE CITY CHILD.
3. THE REIGN OF THE ROSES.
4. THE THROSTLE.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus.D.

The FOLLOWING CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the COLLEGE and at certain centres recently:

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Eleanor W. Baillie, Wilfrid H. Parry, Dorothea R. Sharman, Roberta G. Spencer, May Nesbitt.

LICENTIATE in Music (L.Mus.T.C.L.).—George A. Armstrong, Mus.B.

LICENTIATE (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Ethel Ashton, Nora Barry-O'Brien, Winifred V Baskcomb, Beatrice M. Batson, Lena A. Best, Mary M. Bolton, Marjorie H. Brown, James Butler, Margaret Caldwell, Marguerite A. Caseau, Rose Chatterton, Phyllis M. Clough, Doris M. Cowling, Olivia F. Davis, Edith K. Dibble, Kathleen E. R. Drew, Horatio Ferrer, May C. Fisher, Thomas Gallagher, Alice C. Haynes, Elvira M. Hinton, Edith Hood, Elsie M. Kington, Eileen M. Mackreth, Angela C. McNair, Freda Marshall, Queenie Moses, Ethel M. Newham, Clare O'Beirne. Gertrude M. Parkes, Edith M. Peach, Irene V. Pearce, Constance A. Peet, Kathleen F. R. Plowman, Mary Purrett, Winifred E. Richards, Gwynydd M. Rogers, Charles R. M. Ross, Margaret Rowell, Emily D. Scott, Enid T. Thirlby, William Wall, Winifred, M. M. Webber, Gwendoline M. White, Ernest J. Willis, Cathleen C. Wright.

ORGAN.—Henry Hough, John H. Maddock.

VIOLIN.—Edith Dornford.

SINGING.—Blanche M. Cregan, Winifred A. Schooley.

ELOCUTION.—Elizabeth Donaldson, May McConnell.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A.Mus. T.C.L.).—Olive Battersby, Harry C. Bridger, Elizabeth M. A. Hankin, Douglas C. Hart, Harold E. Josolyne, Mrs. Kate F. Kirton, Leo Malone, William J. Penry Pryse, T. Rees, Hubert W. A. Ridler, William H. Wolfenden, Eirene M. Wright.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Eva Adamson, Irene Adamson, Madeline Ainsworth, Beatrice J. Baker, Florence M. Borland, Hilda H. Bradley, Marjorie Braithwaite, Constance E. M. Breach, Frances N. Brettelle, Gweneth M. Brown, Frederick D. Burrows, Dorothy M. Catlin, Doris M. Carter, Nancy K. Clarke, Lily M. Cole, Violet Cole, William A. Collier, Frances M. Crone, Eveline E. Cozens, Frederick R. Cutchee, John Davies, Thomas K. Davies, Phyllis V. Day, Doreen Dempster, John T. Digger, Irene H. Dixon, Walter Dobson, Harold Eckersall, Norman J. K. Edmonds, Kathleen W. Essam, Herbert Evans, Joseph W. Fitton, Mrs. N. Fitzsimmons, Winifred M. Fryett, Beatrix E. Gardner, Violet H. Garner, Maurice Garrod, Percy Greenwood, Eleanor L. H. Greville, Jessie Guise, Ada F. Hamblin, Charles Hanmer, Phyllis P. Harrison, Netta W. Highet, May J. Hird, Mabel E. Hobbs, William Holden, Ernest Hopkinson, Joseph A. Horton, Grace Houlgrave, Irene Hughes, Alice Jarman, Grace F. Jeffries, Alexander C. Jones, Effie L. Jones, Lottie E. Jones, Ellen Jukes, Estelle M. Keall, Harold Knight, Emily M. Langley, James E. Lowe, James H. May, Charles H. Matly, Gladys F. Meadows, Hedley Mills, Othick L. Morris, James Murray, Gwendolin J. Nockolds, Violet I. Owen, Katy A. C. Palmer, Susie M. Parkinson, Gladys M. Payne, Constance F. Penfold, Maud Pope, Francis G. C. Price, Phyllis B. Prickett, Violet C. Procter, Marjorie Pursglove, Ernest H. Rackstraw, Wilfrid P. Rickard, Edith M. Robinson, Connie Rule, Harry Rutter, Mildred Singleton, Winifred A. Snook, Winifred N. Stone, Vera H. Storer, Edith F. Sutherland, Clarence A. Stephens, Florence Taylor, Nancy E. Thatcher, Victoria M. Thomas, Samuel Thomson, Gerald Trendell, Doris Varley, Rose E. Walker, Eva Walpole, Frank A. Warwick, Stanley R. Watson, Eleanor A. Weedon, Lucy A. Whiteway, Muriel Williams, Dorothy M. Wright.

(Continued on p. 208.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC—continued.

VIOLIN.—Edith M. Morley, John W. Peacock, Doris Williams, Joyce Wright.

ELOCUTION.—Dorothy M. Archbold, Lottie Cooper, Madge Hargreaves, Eddice E. Heywood, Edna M. Jenkins, Mary T. Hopps, Elizabeth A. Knott, Ina L. Mansell.

SINGING.—Annie S. Frearson, Charles Gane, Edith M. Goodwin, Alice Holliday, Sadie Irwin, Fanny W. Joseph, Florence A. Symes.

ORGAN.—Andrew Forrester, John Irvine.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY AND PRACTICE COMPOSITION.—Annie Goulton, Cecil James, Harold G. Kirkham.

PIANOFORTE.—Gertrude M. Arnold, Harold Aspinwall, Dorothy H. Beavis (Hons.), Barbara Bonfield, Gladys M. L. Budge (Hons.), Kathleen M. Fryer, Helen M. Gardener, Madeline F. Habgood, Winifred E. Haglinton, Freda Hedges, Florence L. James, Lovis M. Johnson, Maude M. Juvet, William H. Pearce, Catherine Pleming, Vera E. Pollard, Irene E. L. Pobjoy, Alice E. Rainbird, Kathleen E. Secretan, Flora A. H. Shaw (Hons.), Margaret Slater, Mabel Thornhill, Francis E. Unsworth, Sidney M. J. Walsh, Jean I. Waters, Lillian E. Webley, Nellie Williams, Kathleen R. Wood (Hons.), Amy D. Woodhall.

ORGAN.—Leslie Mason, Edward Shaw.

VIOLIN.—Winifred A. Cowling.

SINGING.—Flora Wilkinson.

EXAMINERS.—H. L. Balfour, Mus. B., Prof. Granville Bantock, M.A., Mus. D., J. E. Borland, Mus. D., W. H. Brereton, Prof. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Ronald Chamberlain, B.A., Mus. B., Avalon Collard, Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Edric Cundell, Edward d'Evry, Paul Edmonds, Rev. W. J. Foxell, M.A., Mus. B., H. A. Harding, Mus. D., E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, C. Egerton Lowe, Adolph Mann, E. J. Moeran, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., Tivadar Nachez, G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. Palmer, Mus. D., E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Alec Rowley, Wilfrid Sanderson, Mus. B., Joseph Speaight, D. Vaughan Thomas, Mus. D., Anderson Tyrer, J. Warriner, Mus. D., and Gerrard Williams.

NEXT HIGHER EXAMINATIONS will take place at the College in London only in APRIL NEXT. Last day of entry, March 6th.

March 6th. Last day of entry for the next open competition for Scholarships.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

ELKIN & CO.'S

CHORAL SERIES

(General Editor: DR. JOHN BORLAND).

LATEST ISSUES

INCLUDE NEW

PART-SONGS and UNISON SONGS

BY

ELGAR, QUILTER, BRENT-SMITH,

PERCY JUDD, CHARLES WATERS,

LESLIE WOODGATE, ETC., ETC.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

CHURCH MUSIC

SUITABLE FOR

LENT.

DERING, RICHARD (1618).
(Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.)
I will arise. (5 parts) ... ... 4d.

BESLY, MAURICE.
Benedicite in E flat ... ... 3d.

GOOD FRIDAY.

DERING, RICHARD (1618).
(Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.)
O all ye that pass by. (6 parts) ... 6d.

VITTORIA, T. L. DA.
(Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.)
O my People. (4 parts) ... ... 4d.

PORTUGAL, JOHN IV. OF.
Faithful Cross. (4 parts)... ...

EASTER.

PALESTRINA.
(Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.)
This is the Day. (6 parts) ... ... 4d.

CHANTER, RICHARD.
Sing with Joyful Exultation. (4 parts) ... 4d.

GOSS, JOHN.
Christ our Passover. (4 parts) ... ... 3d.

Full Catalogue of Church Music upon application.

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE

ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, MUS. DOC.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

Demy 8vo size, 4*s.* net.
Imperial 32mo, 1*s.* 6*d.* net
The Canticles only, Demy 8vo, 6*d.* net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MARCH 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 271.)

A NOTE ON JOHN DOWLAND

(d. JANUARY 20-21, 1626)

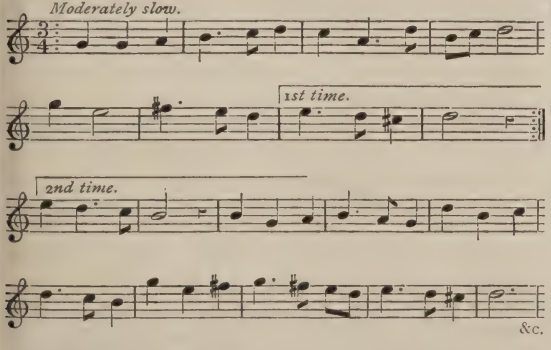
BY PHILIP HESELTINE

Dowland was not—as he has sometimes been considered to be—the first British composer to write or to publish either songs for a single voice with instrumental accompaniment, or songs for several voices, of which one sings a metrical tune and the others accompany it (in contrast to the madrigal, motet, and other forms of polyphonic song, in which all voices are of equal melodic importance). The dramatic songs of the first decade of Elizabeth's reign, for one voice and four stringed instruments, are by no means tentative experiments in a new form of composition; we have at least one admirable song for voice and lute —'Awake, ye woeful wights'—which may be assigned with tolerable certainty to the year 1564, though the manuscript in which it is preserved (British Museum, Add. MS. 15,117) is of a later date; and it is probable that 'The Willow Song' ('The poor soul sat sighing') and the setting of 'O Death, rock me asleep,' with the ostinato figure (both preserved in Add. MS. 15,117), belong to the same period.

The first instrumentally-accompanied solo-song to be printed in England was the charming 'Buy new broom,' of Thomas Whythorne, which is evidently based on a genuine street-cry of the time. This appeared in Whythorne's 'Songes of three, fower, and five Voyces' (1571), in which we also find lovely tunes or ayres for unaccompanied voices, such as the following:

Ex. 1.



But it was Dowland who brought the solo-song and the part-song or ayre to the highest degree of excellence in the last years of the 16th century and the first years of the 17th.

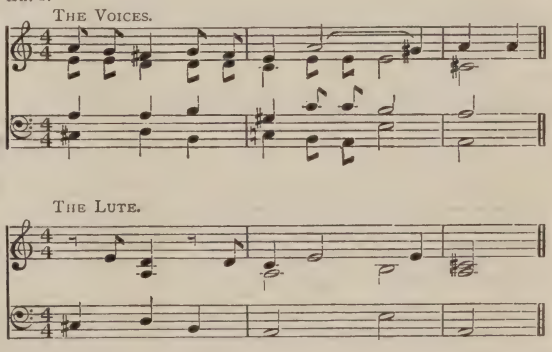
To many music-lovers the name of Dowland suggests little or nothing beyond 'Awake, sweet love' and 'Now, oh now I needs must part.' These are two of his earliest and simplest songs, and, beautiful as they are, show but one aspect of the composer's many-sided genius—viz., his gift of faultlessly-rounded melody. Besides these, 'The First Book of Songs or Ayres' contains that lovely tune, 'If my complaints could passions move'; 'Can she excuse my wrongs,' with its cross-rhythms and the interesting quotation of a popular song of the time, called 'The woods so wild,' on which Byrd and Orlando Gibbons both wrote sets of variations for the virginals (an anonymous virginal transcription of Dowland's song is also in existence); 'Come away, some sweet love,' a delicious song, instinct with all the freshness of a spring morning; and 'All ye whom love or fortune hath betrayed,' which is of a more serious character, with a remarkable chromatic passage towards the end.

It is evident that all the songs in this book were originally conceived as part-songs for four voices. The title-page is a little ambiguous in its description of:

> Songs or Ayres . . . so made that all the parts together, or either of them severally, may be sung to the lute, orpherian, or viol de gambo;

but it is quite clear from the texture of the music that the instruments were intended for use only on occasions when there were less than four voices present to complete the harmony. The bass-viol merely doubles the bass voice, and the lute part is generally a rough sketch of the three lower voice-parts; but the harmonies of the lute-part and of the voice-parts do not always tally exactly, which seems to show that the instruments were not used when the full complement of four voices was available. The following quotation from the end of 'Wilt thou, unkind, thus reave me,' provides an example of this disparity:

Ex. 2.



The second book of Ayres, published in 1600, shows a marked advance on its predecessor. The very first song in the book, 'I saw my lady weep,' strikes a deeper note than anything in the 1597 volume. This is a profoundly moving piece of work, and, unlike the songs in the first book, is intended to be sung by a single voice with instrumental accompaniment (though words are provided in the bass-part, so that it could be either sung or played—or perhaps both sung and played). The first eight songs in this book are laid out in the same way, the succeeding twelve being for four voices. The book concludes with a five-part song with treble viol obbligato, 'Clear or cloudy, sweet as April show'ring,' and a dialogue. Among the solo songs, the famous 'Lacrimæ,' or 'Flow, my tears,' makes its first appearance in print, and is followed by the elaborate and expressive 'Sorrow, stay,' of which a version for voice and four stringed instruments (not made by Dowland himself) is found in an early 17th-century manuscript (British Museum Add. MS. 17,786-91). Of the part-songs, 'Praise blindness eyes,' 'Fine knacks for ladies,' and 'Shall I sue? Shall I seek for grace?' deserve special mention.

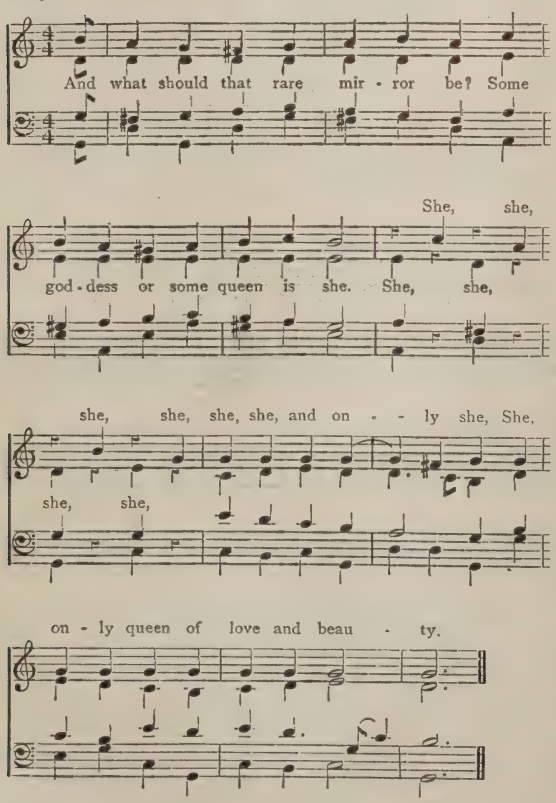
The third book contains some solo songs, but these are less remarkable than the part-songs which exhibit to the full the extraordinary originality of Dowland's mature genius. It is difficult to select particular numbers for comment from a book in which every song is so full of beauty and interest. Perhaps the exquisite fountain-songs—'Flow not so fast, ye fountains' and 'Weep you no more, sad fountains'—with their subtle impressionistic suggestion of stillness broken only by the gentle plashing of water, must take pride of place in this wonderful collection; and of the light-hearted songs, what could be more delightful than the sparkling humour of 'Say, Love, if ever thou didst find':

Ex. 3.



And what should that rare mir - ror be? Some
She, she,
god - dess or some queen is she. She, she,
she, she, she, she, and on - - ly she, She,
she, she,
on - ly queen of love and beau - ty.

the gay, debonair gait of 'What if I never speed,' and the charming fantasy of 'Farewell, unkind, farewell'?

In describing this book, on the title-page, as 'the third and last book of songs,' Dowland, like his contemporary, Robert Jones, took leave of the singing public rather prematurely, for 'A Pilgrim's Solace,' which was actually his last publication, did not appear until nine years later. Taken as a whole, this last is the finest of his song-books, the crown of his life's work. It is probable that, throughout his life, Dowland suffered considerably from the vagaries of his temperament; a period of exuberant and irresponsible gaiety would be followed inevitably by one of profound depression. He was not a man who could look upon adverse circumstances with stoical indifference, and in his later years the more serious side of his nature seems to have been in the ascendant. In 'A Pilgrim's Solace' one song alone, 'Were every thought an eye,' recalls the care-free happiness we find in all the earlier books; here the moods range from the tender melancholy of 'Love, those beams that breed,' to the impassioned despair of 'From silent night,' and the rather sombre devotionalism of the religious songs. But what marvellous music Dowland could distil from his adversities! The songs in this last book are planned on more spacious lines than those of the average ayre. All the old magical sweetness of melody is there, but it is strengthened by an extended harmonic vocabulary. The songs are freer and more supple than their predecessors, both in rhythmic structure, in relation to the metre of the words, and in their vocal texture, which is more definitely polyphonic than that of the earlier songs. In the Preface to this work Dowland complains that on returning home to England after many years spent abroad, where he had gained the highest honours that could be accorded to a musician, he found himself regarded as old-fashioned, and that his music was neglected in favour of that of the young men of a new school of composition. To us this complaint seems almost incomprehensible, for Dowland was one of the boldest pioneers of that most musically-adventurous period, and nowhere in his work do we see such daring flights of imagination as in this very book, 'A Pilgrim's Solace.' But we have, in our own time, some fairly close parallels to this charge of old-fashionedness levelled against music which was intrinsically novel and 'advanced.' In Dowland's time, as in our own, there were those who wished to put away all recollection of the traditions of their art, and to make, as it were, a 'new music' out of nothing. This 'new music,' as may well be imagined, was of a very negative kind; rhythm, melody, and counterpoint were abandoned in an attempt to discover a declamatory style that should approximate more nearly to the natural accents of speech than the supposed fetters of ordinary musical procedure would permit. The would-be dramatic recitatives of Peri and Caccini are merely childish babblings in comparison with the truly dramatic and profoundly expressive utterances of Marenzio and Gesualdo, which were cast in so old-fashioned a form as that of the madrigal; and anything more arid and uninteresting than the first volume of 'new music' published in England (the 'Nuove Musiche' of Notari, one of the musicians to King Charles I.) cannot well be imagined. The really big men of any period of musical history have always had the sense to master first the old resources of music and then add new ones to them. Monteverdi in Italy and Dowland in England rejected no part of their predecessors' technique, and at the same time eagerly accepted any new methods which might help them to make their music more beautiful and more expressive. For this reason Monteverdi and Dowland are alive to-day, when the devotees of the 'new music' are forgotten by all but musical historians. Do we not, all of us, know people to-day who consider Poulenc and Auric the last word in modernity, and Van Dieren and Schönberg old-fashioned and academic in their methods for precisely the same reasons for which the young men of 1612 praised the 'new music' of Italy and sneered at the true originality of their countryman, whom they could not rightly comprehend?

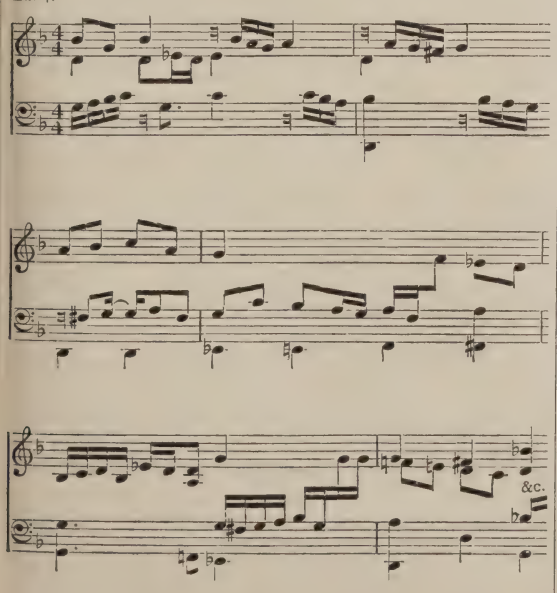
As a composer of instrumental music Dowland is still entirely unknown. He is said to have been a superb performer on the lute, and pieces of his composition for this instrument are to be found in most of the early 17th-century collections of lute music, in print and in manuscript, both here and abroad. There is no adequate bibliography of Dowland's lute music available; indeed, the compilation of such a list would involve several months of travel and research on the Continent. The following excerpt from a Fantasia called 'Farewell,' from a manuscript lute-book in the Cambridge University Library, is an example of the admirable music for this instrument which is still awaiting discovery by our archæologists:

Ex. 4.



The only book of instrumental music published by Dowland was:

> Lachrimae or Seaven Teares figured in seaven passionate Pavans, with divers other Pavans, Galiards, and other Almands, set forth for the Lute, Viols, or Violons, in five parts: by John Dowland, Bacheler of Musicke, and Lutenist to the most Royall and Magnificent, Christian the fourth, King of Denmarke, Norway, Vandales, and Gothes, Duke of Sleswicke, Holsten, Stormaria, and Ditmarsh: Earle of Oldenburge and Delmenhorst.
>
> Aut Furit, aut Lachrimat, quem non Fortuna beavit.
>
> Printed by John Windet, dwelling at the Signe of the Crosse Keyes at Powles Wharfe, and are to be solde at the Authors house in Fetter Lane neare Fleete street. (1605)

Of this book only one copy has survived, and this has fortunately been secured by the British Museum. The seven passionate pavans are called 'Lachrimae Antiquae,' 'Lachrimae Antiquae Novae,' 'Lachrimae Gementes,' 'Lachrimae Tristes,' 'Lachrimae Coactae,' 'Lachrimae Amantis,' and 'Lachrimae Verae.' These are followed by a piece with the curious title of 'Semper Dowland semper Dolens,' a finely constructed work, of larger proportions than anything else in the book. The seven passionate pavans are all developed from the same thematic germ, but they cannot rightly be regarded as a set of variations on a theme. The first pavan, 'Lachrimae Antiquae,' seems to have been composed many years before the others. It was perhaps the most famous musical composition of its time. It is found in William Ballet's manuscript lute-book, which dates from 1594, and repeated references to 'Dowland's Lachrimae' by the dramatists (it is, I believe, the only piece of music, other than folk-music, referred to in the plays of the period) show that it was as familiar to London audiences as a household word, even as late as 1623, when Webster refers to it in 'The Devil's Law Case.' It appears as a song in the second book of Ayres, and in many collections of lute music; an arrangement for five viols, differing from Dowland's published version, is found in Add. MSS. 17,786-91, and transcriptions of it for the virginals, by William Byrd and Giles Farnaby, appear in the Fitzwilliam book. An original pavan by Thomas Morley has been described by the modern editors of the Fitzwilliam book as another transcription of Dowland's 'Lachrimae'; but detailed comparison between the two shows that this conjecture is quite unfounded. The opening phrase of the 'Lachrimae' which runs through all the pavans:

Ex. 5.

is of frequent occurrence in the music of the period, and this phrase is all that the two pavans have in common. There is a far more striking, though no doubt equally accidental, resemblance between the opening bars of 'Lachrimae Antiquae Novae' and those of Orlando Gibbons's pavan in the second volume of the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. A short quotation from the second strain of 'Lachrimae Verae' will convey an idea of the texture of these pavans, as well as showing some of Dowland's most striking and characteristic harmonic progressions:

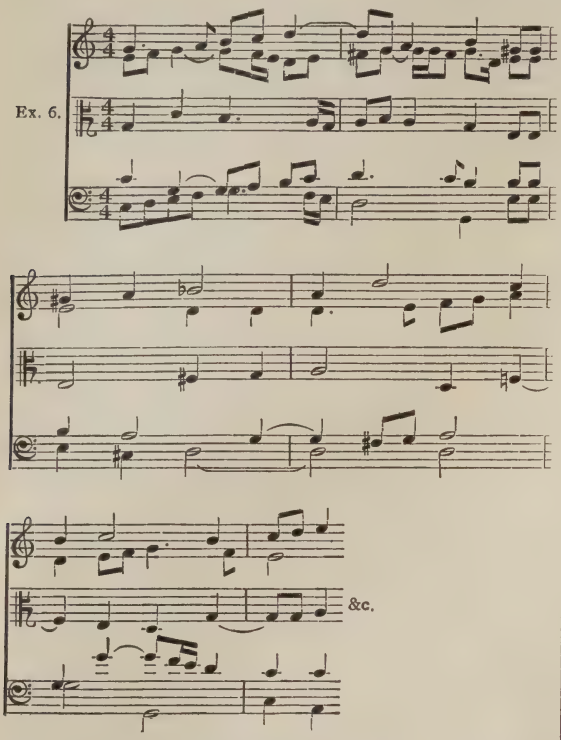
Ex. 6.



Among the other pieces in the book are 'The Earl of Essex Galliard' and 'Captain Diggorie Piper his Galliard,' which had previously been published as songs, in the 1597 volume, to the words 'Can she excuse my wrongs' and 'If my complaints could passions move' respectively; while 'M. Henry Noel his Galliard' was subsequently reprinted as a song in 'A Pilgrim's Solace,' with the title, 'Shall I strive with words to move.'

It is literally true that there is not a single bad work to be found in the five published books of Dowland's compositions. I am not one of those who accept as masterpieces the complete works of any and every Elizabethan composer, simply because he is an Elizabethan. There was good music and bad music, then as now, and one has as much need of critical discrimination when dealing with the Elizabethans as at any other time. But Dowland's work never falls below a very high standard of excellence. Although he did not essay the largest forms of composition, he was the equal of any of the composers of his time, with the exception of Byrd, and he is unquestionably the greatest of all English song-writers. It would be pleasant to think of him as being a poet as well as a composer, but there is no evidence whatever to show that he himself wrote the words of any of his songs. Yet if he was not a poet, he had a poet's understanding of poetry, and, setting aside all question of his merits as a musician, literature owes him a great debt of gratitude for having preserved in his song-books some of the finest lyrics in the English language which, but for him, we should have been without.

A MUSICAL IMPRESSIONIST

By Rutland Boughton

The late William Baines was generally classed with the composers of extremely modern music, both by those who approved and those who disapproved of him; and having made up my mind as to the decadent significance of the ugly movement, I did not go out of the way to hear his compositions. But staying recently with Mr. Dennis Laughton, of York (one of Baines's most intimate friends), I learned of the genuine admiration for his music felt by that fine musician, Mr. Frederick Dawson; so I have been led to consider this music as a thing by itself, and find that although it has been tricked out in some of the fashions of its time, it has a self-standing beauty which triumphs in spite of those silly influences, now so happily near their end. Certain of the composer's superficial mannerisms are hard to accept after any amount of study, but they are as thorns on a rose-bush, and do not entirely spoil the beautiful mass of musical thought which accompanies them. The mannerisms are incoherent in themselves, but the music which carries them coheres surprisingly.

What most clearly separates Baines from most of the unlucky apprentices to ugliness is his prevailing sense of architectural values. His is not the Palladian symmetry of the sonata, or the Gothic form of the oratorio. It is rather the small sweet form of the cottage; and if he sometimes builds an apparently unrelated after-thought up against or even into his main structure, as he has done at the end of the first and fourth Preludes, or in the last bars of the 'Exaltation Study'—well, we live in an age when a cottage-builder often puts up a corrugated iron car-shed to injure by sight and sound the peace of the country. To object to such things is of course reactionary; and while at first we tolerate the shed for the sake of convenience, we get used to it in time, and finally forget its ugliness. We cannot forget musical atrocities in the same way, but I think we can grow to endure some of the far-fetched bars which often seem to be unessential parts of Baines's work—passing disturbances in a well-planned and fairly sustained musical design. And it is the generally well-built scheme underlying his work which definitely marks him off from that group of young men whose ugliness arose out of no plan or desire, and resulted in no beauty or expression.

One prevalent criticism of Baines we can simply ignore: that he is an echo of Chopin and Scriabin. A sensible musician does not read the main traditions of a musical composition in the instruments for which it is written. Wagner's orchestration no doubt taught Elgar something in the massing of instruments, but very little in the use of music as language and expression. Nor does the fact that Baines writes perfectly for the pianoforte necessarily relate him to other composers of pianoforte music. His third Prelude is reminiscent of Chopin's Prelude in C minor, and his harmonic groping is of the same age as Scriabin's; but the essential musical thought of Baines is as personal to himself as it has any right to be if it is to find response in our hearts as we listen to it. It seems to me that we shall come by a fair appreciation of the young Englishman's work if we realise that his style is determined by the same kind of mentality which produces the impressionist method of painting.

So far as I have seen and read of the painters themselves, and understood those who have discussed the problem, Impressionism is generally referred to as a movement led by Manet, Monet, Renoir, and Degas. That, however, was a realist rather than an impressionist movement. Those painters seem to have noticed certain effects of colour in light and shadow which had been ignored or unrecorded by their predecessors, and certainly unseen by the world at large; for the majority of us see little unless it is pointed out to us. The Frenchmen promptly made it their business to indicate a colour-gospel in unmistakable terms. That everybody might see the purple shadows in a nude living figure, they painted pictures whose shaded flesh-tints are not very unlike the dead nude figures which we see hanging in a butcher's shop. That we might enjoy the chromatic quiver of sunlight, they painted figures trembling with coloured rashes, dissolving (not to say disintegrating) as effects of light were resolved into their primary elements by means of spots. Without exactly looking upon such efforts as those of science and marksmanship rather than of art, we may agree that if it was not always beautiful in its result it was (as Galsworthy says in that amusing chapter on modern music in 'The White Monkey') generally 'interesting.' But whether of science or art it is clear that it was of realistic tendency, drawing attention to facts generally unknown or ignored. Although those painters were called Impressionists, impressionism results from a frame of mind very different from theirs—in fact, it was in being before they were born.

Impressionism probably began as soon as the first great period of art had reached its climax, and certainly as soon as there came along an artist who took it into his head that the things he could imagine were better than the things he could see. Romanticism is a youthful disease, and it is not surprising that young or undeveloped artists should think that the things they feel within themselves immediately are more vital than the external things which they feel only mediately, if at all, in terms dictated by an inartistic world-force. Some artists move pessimistically in the opposite direction—find the world more than they can cope with, and seek salvation in ideas of the spirit. Turner, for example, starting in the world without, grew to develop within himself a realm more attractive and stimulating. Just as a great musical work seems greater after we have ceased to hear it (at any rate in the earlier stages of our acquaintance with it), because we cannot during the first hearing effect the necessary synthesis which makes of its serial parts a proportioned whole, so Turner seems to have effected in his memory many a synthesis of colour and form of greater beauty than the things he had actually seen in spacial, and sometimes in serial, relationship. That is the real Impressionism, and that was the method obviously followed by William Baines in his pianoforte pieces. Colour and music are perfect mediums for that kind of artistic activity; and the method is no mere insolent, arbitrary statement of egoism — no childish demand that the way must be good because an artist chooses it: it is an act of worship rather, an identification of the artist with what he sees or hears or senses in any way. Whenever this method is followed in the arts which depend primarily on recognition of art-forms already existing, the forms involved are bound to undergo some disintegration. Whitman, for example, with his

> I am the hounded slave . . . I am the mashed foreman with the breast-bone broken . . . I am the old artillerist, and so on, could not possibly have held to the recognised measures of poetry. Turner almost discarded visible form, and concentrated on colour, which is perhaps an even more spiritual vehicle than music. Impressionistic methods in music lead to meaningless rambling, if the composer has not the power to shape his mood as it flows; but given that power, it is even more definite than colour in its clarity of subjective statement. That is why Beethoven was so great. A purely subjective thinker in terms of art, he was born in a time of objective musical perfection. He cared very little for that perfection, but it was so strong a habit in his world that he could scarcely conceive a thought, however personal and passionate, apart from the conventional sonata-form of the time. His impressionistic spirit almost shook the form to pieces; but Haydn and Mozart had laid calm and solid foundations equal even to the vibration of Beethoven's fires, and so it happened that the greatest master's greatness is due almost as much to his predecessors' craftsmanship as to his own range of human sympathy. Without a secure basis on which to build, Beethoven must have exploded into ineffectualness; with that basis already provided, his wildest passions were made intelligible, even to tame and comparatively passionless people.

I do not wish to hinder the appreciation of Baines by comparing him with Beethoven; but it is permissible to remind ourselves that the young Englishman found a very unsteady foundation on which to build. That is why so many of his pieces do actually explode: they come to an end without finishing their story just because the emotion experienced is too strong for the method of music-making fashionable at the time. As examples of such untimely endings may be cited the fifth and seventh Preludes—the first vanishing into thin air, the second bursting into space. For the former Baines evidently had no technic fine enough, for the latter no sound powerful enough, for the thought of his imagination. Of course, this criticism may be rejected as a mere personal dislike of the terminal dissonances. Art is after all largely a matter of taste, and if a composer choose to end on a discord, why shouldn't he? Many people prefer rhapsodic to defined art, colour to line, emotion to proportion, and so on. Mere talk does not change personal taste. But certain historical and psychological facts remain. All the greatest works of musical art end on a consonance. It is hard to find more than a person here and there who will confess to pleasure in leaving a musical or any other sort of conception with an impression of incompletion, irresolution, and dissatisfaction. When an ordinary living organism is unable to refuse or wear down its dissonant elements it falls to pieces, and the same seems to apply to works of art if we take an historical view. If an artist does not fulfil the emotion and thought he set out to express there can be very little doubt that he is thinking and feeling vaguely as well as working ineffectively. The fault is forgivable enough in a young man for whom life and experience are, and ought to be, more important than the reflective moods from which great art issues, and is more than forgivable in Baines for whom the world can scarcely have begun to exist in any wide sense. But it is of no use to impoverish the life of art by sentimentalising over a young artist's misfortune. Nothing can alter the fact that an art-work which is unfinished in mood is unfinished in workmanship as well. And this consideration is not only an argument against the style and especially the endings of Baines's pieces; it is an argument against the impressionistic method itself. Turner's paintings often melted out at the edges. Whistler's peacocks overflowed (or should I say overflew?) his commission and settled on the furniture of his client. So any sort of attempt at impressionistic methods makes raids over the frontiers of art in the sense of imaginative achievement, and finds itself in a realm of infinity or repetition. That is why artists of an impressionist tendency prefer decorative to realistic art: it completes the circle from an archaic to a decadent period. This has been very noticeable in music during the last five or six years, when those people who were drawn to the most extreme kind of impressionism were almost always drawn to its earliest periods as well, and with one accord ignored when they did not positively reject the middle and greatest period.

Throughout this article I have referred to impressionism as being in opposition to great formal achievement, and I think it will be agreed that there is truth in the antithesis—so much truth indeed, that many people of an extreme tendency either way are scarcely aware that the opposition is one of necessity and not of righteousness. The most perfect, least passionate work of Mozart's sprang from a seed of living experience; and the most casual impression cannot be recorded without some degree of formal skill. Impressionistic Whistler is fanatic on points of form. Impressionistic Whitman lives nearer to the real world than the whole realistic school of novelists. Indeed, whatever art-work survives in any period from either school may be said to survive partly by virtue of those qualities which it appears to disapprove. And so the music of William Baines has survived the Ugly Period because, besides all the tortures of feeling and style which consciously moved the composer, he was unconsciously aware of those formal connections with life which most of his fellow composers ignored or despised. In the work of Baines the architectural backbone gives just enough support to the passing impression for its message to be intelligible to the non-musician. Those people who prefer art which enhances, and in certain directions completes, the experiences of the world will have less use for impressionistic music; but for those who find in art a heaven and a haven from the sordidness and unrest of life, impressionism provides many a sweet and romantic dream, including this handful of beautiful pianoforte pieces by William Baines.

PIANOFORTE WORKS BY WILLIAM BAINES.

The following are of moderate difficulty:

Twilight Pieces.
Milestones.
Silverpoints.
Seven Preludes.

A more advanced technique is demanded by:

Tides.
Paradise Gardens.
Three Concert Studies.

All are published by Messrs. Elkin.

MOUSSORGSKY AS SEEN BY ONE OF HIS FRIENDS

By M.-D. Calvocoressi

Nowadays a comparatively large number of documents enable students to form an idea of Moussorgsky's life and outlook. But among the few sources of information available at the time when I wrote my book on Moussorgsky (published exactly eighteen years ago), there was a long article by N. Kompaneisky, of whose existence, very unfortunately, I remained at the time unaware. It contains many interesting statements and remarks (some of which, perhaps, should be taken cum grano salis), and so far as I know has not yet been referred to by any Western writer.

Kompaneisky throws interesting sidelights on Moussorgsky's youth. He was the composer's junior by a few years, and eventually became a pupil of the School of Cadets through which Moussorgsky had passed. His description of this school is instructive, if not edifying:

> The cadets considered study as beneath their dignity. This view was shared by the head of the school, General Sutgov, who whenever he saw Moussorgsky working at his desk would say to him, 'My dear boy, what kind of an officer will you make!' The general objected to his alumni drinking vodka, or coming back from leave on foot when they were drunk. But he was proud indeed when a carriage and pair brought back a pupil who had been overcome by the fumes of champagne.

There can be no doubt that the influence of these surroundings and, a little later, of his reckless, hard-drinking brother officers of the Preobrajensky regiment, were primarily responsible for Moussorgsky's dipsomania.

Attempts have been made of late—mainly by way of protest against what Rimsky-Korsakov said of him in his 'Memoirs of my Musical Life'—to whitewash Moussorgsky in regard to this failing. But, however much one dislikes the superior and uncharitable tone in which Rimsky-Korsakov speaks of him, it is impossible to overlook the evidence to the effect that Moussorgsky often fell a victim to intemperance. This is not the place to adduce and discuss the bulk of this evidence, but another passage from Kompaneisky's reminiscences—and a passage which unquestionably rings true—may be quoted:

> After his mother's death, Moussorgsky was very sad and lonely. Needless to mention the names of those people who misled him and played upon his weakness. He did seek refuge with his true friends: but, alas, not one of them was endowed with a personality strong enough to influence him and rescue him. He suffered very much during the run of 'Boris Godunov' (1874). Invitations were showered upon him, he was asked to play and sing to fashionable people who were eager to meet the lion of the moment. And after the parties, endless suppers would take place at the restaurant Maly Yaroslavetz. Again, he was often asked to play at students' concert parties. All the students worshipped him. . . . . Alone the singer Daria Leonova took pains on his behalf, found him a billet at her school of singing, and influenced him to the good.

Kompaneisky first met Moussorgsky at a concert at which 'The Rout of Sennacherib' was played. His description of him is very similar to that which Borodin gave (and which is quoted in all biographies):

> Captain M. offered to introduce me, and pointed him out to me. I saw a medium-sized, very dandified youth, whose appearance did not attract me. He had a snub nose, bulging eyes, red cheeks, his hair was slightly curly, and he seemed rather excitable. I wanted to avoid the introduction; but it was too late: my companion was already speaking to him. So there I had him in front of me, elegantly dressed, wearing lilac gloves, perfectly groomed, aristocratic, tight-lipped, talking through his teeth, and adorning almost every sentence with French words. He struck me as the finished image of a young fop. Yet he was obviously well-bred, and I felt in him something out of the common, something engaging. The expression of his face would change suddenly from sternness to a frank, pleasant smile. I also noticed sudden changes in the intonation and rhythm of his speech, his deep, well-modulated voice, his impetuous movements, and his challenging attitude—tempered, however, by a certain shyness and restraint. Everything in him revealed a high-strung temperament and a very short temper. Five years later I began to meet him often at Petrov's house. There I learnt to love his music; and forthwith I started propagating it, chiefly by singing it in public.

Another quotation or two will show how important a place Kompaneisky's name deserves in the short list of those Russians who championed Moussorgsky's music between the date of his death and that of the first Paris performance of 'Boris Godunov' (1908):

> The better I came to know Moussorgsky, the more I realised how wonderfully gifted he was for music. Our conversations showed me that he was altogether innocent of theory and technique. He studied fitfully, never systematically. His genius alone enabled him to compose under so great a disadvantage. Had he possessed a greater command of craftsmanship, he would have been the greatest of European composers of his time, and acknowledged as such during his life-time. That he should have achieved as much as he did, and so adequately, is unaccountable, almost miraculous. His musical memory was incredible. Once, at Petrov's house, he read at the pianoforte and sang Wagner's 'Siegfried' from the vocal score, which had newly arrived at Petrograd. When asked to repeat the Wotan scene, he did so from end to end by heart. After the first performance of Rubinstein's 'Demon,' he came to Petrov's house and played all the characteristic passages from memory, underlining and caricaturing some of them most amusingly.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> All the critics inveighed against 'Boris Godunov.' Cui, indeed, hit below the belt by writing that 'Moussorgsky had carried artistic realism to an anti-artistic extreme, and made a mighty show of emptiness.' All professionals rose in arms against Moussorgsky—theorists, composers, and conductors alike. . . . Woe indeed to the artist who, by virtue of his talent and tenderness, stands apart from his colleagues, and holds his pennon high. Moussorgsky's position was worse than that of any other innovator, because of the absolute novelty of his contributions.

Kompaneisky asserts that Balakirev's influence was not altogether salutary to Moussorgsky. There may be some truth in this bold statement, although Balakirev's aim was precisely to impart to his pupil the theoretical knowledge and technical skill whose lack Kompaneisky himself deplores. Moussorgsky's case was very different from Rimsky-Korsakov's (who benefited by Balakirev's influence far more than a cursory perusal of his 'Memoirs of my Musical Life' would lead one to think). He stood in need of sympathetic understanding and of encouragement—such as he found with a few of his friends, and chiefly with Stassof. His own ideals led him very far indeed from his colleagues: had they been better understood, he might have more easily assimilated advice and learnt more from criticism.

Kompaneisky considers that Moussorgsky was very much influenced by Serof's music and critical writings. The point is interesting, and has been overlooked by most other writers. Serof's music is very little known outside Russia. Personally I am not greatly attracted by it, and nothing but the desire to verify what Kompaneisky has to say of its influence on Moussorgsky would lead me to study it further:

> The great event of the year 1863 was the production of Serof's 'Judith,' remarkable not only for the quality of its music, but for its Eastern colour, and for the particular interest of its choral parts. Its influence on Moussorgsky was great. In 1863, indeed, he started composing 'Salammbo,' writing the libretto himself according to the practice recommended by Serof. Why did he give up the idea? Was it because in 1864 Serof's next opera, 'Rogneda,' on a Russian historical subject, appeared? Was it because the same year Dargomyjsky returned from abroad, intent upon national Russian subjects? Once I put the question to him. He looked at me attentively, and replied, with a smile and a wave of the hand: 'It would have been bootless: Carthage was bound to fall into the hands of her foes.' After a moment's silence he added, in a more earnest tone: 'We have had enough of the East with "Judith." Art is not play, and time is precious.' This conversation took place in the 'seventies, when he had already finished 'Boris Godunov.'

I shall end my quotations with this appreciation of Moussorgsky the man:

He was everybody's friend and his own enemy. His kindness was boundless. The coolness and gentleness with which he bore the burden of his distress and difficulties were remarkable: he would laugh good-humouredly and carry on. He liked to poke fun at other people, but never uttered a word in malice. There were in him many features of the typical Russian—wit, shrewdness, a tendency to laziness, a lack of foresight.

There are certain facts of Moussorgsky's life, and perhaps certain aspects of his character, which will never be quite clearly revealed. But certainly conditions have improved since the time when all we knew about his life and views was what Stassof had thought fit to communicate, and a very little which a few other Russian writers had been able to contribute. And things are certainly easier—although not quite so obviously simple—for biographers in 1926 (two of them are at work in Germany, and one in this country) than they were in 1895, when d'Alheim's book appeared, and even in 1907.

PERSONALITIES AMONG MUSICAL CRITICS

II.—M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

By Basil Maine

Mr. M.-D. Calvocoressi is in the peculiar position of believing both in Oligarchy and Democracy, so far as musical criticism is concerned. He believes, if I read him aright, that to arrive at a judgment concerning a work of music—that is to say, a judgment with any kind of value—is a much more difficult process than we commonly imagine. Howbeit, he is not satisfied with leaving the practice in the hands of the few people who have denied the flesh to follow this narrow, arduous way. He must needs enlist every member of every audience, so that criticism—active criticism as opposed to the airing of easy opinions—may be as widely practised as concert going. He has an inherent mistrust of official pronouncements, and hopes to find a greater safety, not in numbers merely, but in an all-round increase of efficiency. So he publishes a text-book on the principles and methods of musical criticism, a book in which the tactics and strategy of the great game are outlined and formulated. He who runs to Queen's Hall may now read, and having marked and learned, may inwardly digest any composition, howsoever fearfully and wonderfully contrived, advanced or retarded. For the investigation of his subject, Mr. Calvocoressi has brought forward all the natural light of his mind, and all his early training in psychology, logic, and æsthetics. He has first of all applied the analytical method, and then attempted a synthesis. As an analyst, he is at the top of his profession. He collects data and opinions as easily as you would pluck cherries. He brings whole basketsful, and then proceeds to classify them in order of application and intrinsic merit. Does the subject of 'atonality' arise for discussion? Immediately Sir Henry Hadow and Dr. Felber are produced for evidence and set up against each other: Hadow is taken, Felber left. Does the argument veer round to 'plastic and diffluent imagination'? Ribot is arraigned. Does it then turn to the difficult question of 'appreciation'? There is rather an apt saying in Sainte-Beuve, and rather a good definition in Hennequin's 'La Critique Scientifique,' and did not Arnold Bennett once declare that 'the passionate few are passionate about the same things'? Not only are multitudinous witnesses called, but they are called in the nick of time, made to say exactly what we wanted to know, and turned down as soon as they become irrelevant. If you need a prosecuting counsel you could not do better than employ Mr. Calvocoressi. He is thorough, and thoroughly fair.

For the purpose of judicial summing up, however, it is possible that you will not find him so satisfactory. Indeed, it is exacting to expect the qualities of both counsel and judge in the same person. It goes without saying that a counsel must be a man of strong, even violent, inclinations. He may be convinced or he may have hypnotized himself into conviction, but he must be resolute in declaring himself. Mr. Calvocoressi is a man whose musical inclinations are often excitingly original; moreover, he has the gift of colouring the subjects of his preference with high probability, and the subjects of his aversion with utter impossibility. But it is always the analytical method which he employs. Recently, for example, he has been championing the best of Liszt's music, and ranks the 'Dante' Symphony (with the 'Faust' Symphony) foremost among the orchestral works of that composer. His reasons, according to his own dictum, 'reduce the difficulties of criticism to a minimum,' for they point to the absolute agreement of emotions, mind, and imagination.

The whole work is subjected to a diagnosis in which the scientific and the subjective methods are curiously mingled. When, however, it comes to the point of total appraisement, that point where criticism itself becomes creative, Mr. Calvocoressi can do no more for us than this:

I must confess to being even fonder of the 'Dante' Symphony than of the 'Faust' Symphony. I find it more compact in texture: I find the interest more sustained and more evenly distributed throughout as regards the ideas and their treatment.

It is as if Euclid had concluded his isosceles triangle theorem thus:

And as the triangle ABD equals the triangle ACD in all respects, I feel that the angle ABC must equal the angle ACB, otherwise how could they be——well, anyhow, they seem to me to be roughly the same size.

We must hasten to admit, of course—and before Mr. Calvocoressi forces us into the admission—that musical criticism is not so exact a science that we can speak of equality and congruency with regard to a given composition, and can assign a definite objective nomenclature based on the properties which are exclusively its own. But when a critic has examined a work as thoroughly as Mr. Calvocoressi examines all the music which comes to his wide experience, we are entitled to expect more than 'I find it more compact in texture'—for, when all is said, compactness and looseness of texture are matters of fact, and after following the analysis of the 'Dante' Symphony we can firmly and decisively declare 'The texture of this music is more compact.'

There is the same feeling of wasted opportunity in the synthesis of Mr. Calvocoressi's examination of the problems of musical criticism. We feel the waste to be all the greater after the component parts have been derived so clearly and arranged so neatly; we are constantly looking for some vivid stroke of decision, but it never comes:

> To describe a tune as ill-harmonized may mean that the harmonies do not follow one another in accordance with school rules, or that the part-writing is clumsy, and that the harmonies fail to satisfy the ear, or that they clash with the character of the tune as conceived by the critic, and a great many other things.

We meet with high and elaborate fences like this at every turn, and our impatience grows when we realise that Mr. Calvocoressi is the very man to descend to the field and fight with us, equipped as he is with the spear-point of imagination and the wide shield of a disciplined mentality.

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

The editorial comments on children's concerts in last month's Musical Times led me to attend the one given at Westminster Central Hall on January 23. It is an ungrateful task to find fault with an enterprise so excellently conceived in many ways, and so well carried out. But the movement is still young, and therefore at a stage when frank criticism may be necessary, and (if the organizers are not too proud to learn) profitable as well.

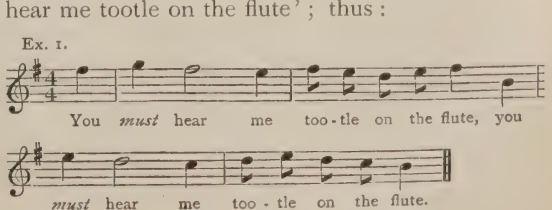
There was a large though not packed audience, with a good proportion of adults. The latter, I understand, are not admitted unless in the company of children—a good rule, but I fancy it is not very stringently applied. At all events, I saw one or two grown-ups enter without attendant bantlings. The programme was capital—Bach's B minor Suite for flute and strings, the first movement of Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Delius's 'On hearing the first cuckoo in spring,' and the 'Cockaigne' Overture. This would have made an ideal length, but the performance was spun out unnecessarily, as I shall show later. The playing was all that could be asked for, as was to be expected with an orchestra drawn from the chief London bodies and conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent. There were brief and sensible programme notes by Mr. Edwin Evans.

With these notes freely distributed there was surely little need for oral description from the platform, and here is the first ground for complaint. Dr. Sargent's opening remarks on the Suite were all that could be desired, as was also his happy informal way of firing them off. But it was a pity he then proceeded to break up the work by further comments between the movements. If, as he explained, the suite in music is analogous to a suite of furniture, why destroy the analogy? We do not put the table in one room, the sofa in another, and distribute the chairs about the house. Bach's Suite became a set of snippets, with their contrasting qualities destroyed by the two or three minutes of applause and comment interspersed. And surely it was a mistake to encourage the young idea to applaud between the movements—especially movements so brief as these. I take it that children's concerts should be a training ground in what may be called (for lack of a less objectionable term) concert-room deportment. The youngsters should be led on to think in complete works, and not in penny numbers.

I spoke above of the length of the concert. Actually it was just right—about an hour and a half. But we know that concerts (like sermons) are as long as they seem, and that unnecessary and protracted breaks induce a feeling of things being spun out. Had the breaks been cut down by about ten minutes, and the time thus saved been filled by another short work, the concert, though taking exactly the same time, would have seemed shorter, and would have maintained the interest much better.

And now I come to a feature of the concert that moved me to such a state of fury that, had it been expressed instead of being bottled up under a smiling face, would have ended in my being cast out for brawling. Let it be granted that the children's enjoyment of a work is increased by familiarity with its themes. Even so, I deny that this familiarity is best brought about by making them sing those themes to doggerel. Thus, after the subject of the Fugue in the Suite had been played on the pianoforte several times, the children were bidden to sing it to the words, 'You must hear me tootle on the flute'; thus:

Ex. 1.



I don't know what the rest of the large number of adults experienced during the subsequent performance. For my part every entry of the subject found me mentally informing the public that they must hear me tootle on the flute, and when the little bits of stretto came along, with some truncated entries, matters became even worse, with a maddening note of urgency in the 'You must hear me, you must hear me, you must, you MUST!'

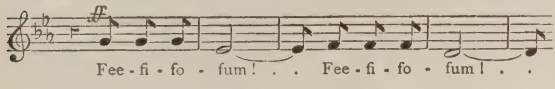
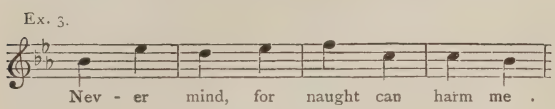
Thus bad began but worse remained behind. The next item was the Beethoven. One would think that the opening motive needed, at most, playing once on the pianoforte. But after having played it several times, Dr. Sargent proceeded to tell the children that they might liken the two subjects to the Giant and his wife in 'Jack and the Beanstalk.' The Giant was a terrible fellow, but his wife was a kind lady. And then we all sang (all but me, that is: I was dumb with rage):

Ex. 2.



and, after several encores:

Ex. 3.



also with repeats.

Need I say that during the playing of the movement I was haunted by that confounded 'Fe-fi-fo-fum' and its companion absurdity? And I fear it will be a long time before these nursery-rhyme associations will be lived down. Similarly, in the 'Cockaigne' Overture we had scraps of tune sung to 'Hurry up, hurry up! Move on there!' 'London Town! famous London Town,' and 'Let's take a walk; let's take a walk.' Why not sing the themes to la, or (even better) hum them?

Now I believe that most musicians will agree that this method of teaching 'appreciation' is bad in every way. As was said in the 'Occasional Note' last month, it saddles themes with incongruous associations, and it gives the children a bad start by leading them to take too programmatic a view of music. Many of the finest things in music are free from such bases—indeed, their chief beauty lies very largely in an entire freedom from any kind of anecdotal or imitative connection, and this is one of the things children should be made to realise as soon as possible. I hope that all teachers and others interested who agree with me will lose no chance of driving this point home to children's concert organizers whenever an opportunity occurs. The point is emphasised because the children's concert is likely to become a prominent feature of musical life, and there may be a natural tendency to work on the lines of these extensively advertised and widely reported concerts at Westminster. It is a thankless task complaining in any way of the excellent enterprise of Mr. Daniel Mayer and Dr. Malcolm Sargent, but it seems to be necessary in this one respect—especially as (I was staggered to see) it had the support of one of The Times critics, who said:

> The young child only understands the significance of Fate knocking on the door in terms of a parental veto, but the fifth Symphony will stir these profounder emotions, especially when Dr. Sargent has given them a further clue to its meaning in the parable of Jack and the Beanstalk. 'Fe-fi-fo-fum' for the first subject and the comforting ministrations of the ogre's wife for the second, are a wonderful help in leading from the known to the unknown, and may set the young mind on the road which leads both to philosophy and to music . . .

—a theory that I believe to be unsound, and even pernicious. Apart from merely musical considerations, there is a psychological objection. Everybody who has had much to do with children (or who remembers his own childhood) knows that youngsters like being treated as if they were a few years older than they really are; it puts them on their mettle. But they dislike a method that makes them out to be very young. The average children at this concert were well above the nursery-tale stage; anyway, if they were old enough to listen to Bach, Beethoven, Delius, and Elgar, they were in no need of kindergarten methods.

Let me beg Dr. Sargent to reconsider this part of his otherwise admirable method of building up the concert-audience of the future.

A few general remarks suggest themselves in connection with children's concerts.

(a.) One cannot avoid a feeling that any scheme based entirely on orchestral performances of music leaves a good deal to be desired. The glamour of the modern orchestra is such that its too frequent hearing in the early stages of listening is almost certain to be detrimental to the less immediately attractive media. The danger might be avoided by the inclusion in orchestral programmes of a few short and specially engaging examples of chamber music and solos, vocal and instrumental. Above all, children ought, as early as possible, to be brought to enjoy really good singing of fine English songs of all types. A couple of short groups of such songs would add welcome relief to the orchestral items, and would give opportunity for valuable comment from the conductor.

(b.) Singing by the children themselves is a frequent feature at such concerts, and there is everything to be said in its favour, but only if the singing is alert and unanimous. At the concert discussed above it was neither. We led off with the National Anthem, but the singing never really got going with heart and voice until the last phrase or two. I found myself wishing Dr. Sargent had pulled the youngsters up and insisted on a good start and less half-hearted tone. Similarly, if themes of the works are to be first sung, really good unanimous performance should be insisted on. Habit is everything, and children should never be allowed to feel that slack singing is good enough, even when the matter in hand is of so little moment as 'Fe-fi-fo-fum.'

(c.) Applause between the movements should be repressed, and the reason for the ban given.

(d.) If possible some means should be adopted of familiarising the children with the music before the concert. This is often done—for example, in connection with the excellent 'Concerts for Young People' given at Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, simple descriptive notes appear beforehand in the School Music Review for reading by (or to) the children. Such preliminary work leaves the actual concert to be devoted almost entirely to the music itself. The result is an increase of continuity, and a saving of time, the extra time being filled by one or two short items specially calculated to increase the scope and variety of the programme.

These suggestions are so obvious that I ought to apologise for making them. But I don't; for various reports, &c., received show that in some quarters children's concerts have been started with too little forethought. Enthusiasm is not enough—in fact, without discretion, it is too much. Hence such false steps as 'Fe-fi-fo-fum' and 'You must hear me tootle on the flute.'

I am loath to return to a controversial subject that has already had more than ample discussion, but in fairness to the Leeds Festival Choir and to the few adverse critics of the Queen's Hall performance of the Holst work, a passage from the Yorkshire Post ought to be quoted in this journal for the benefit of readers in parts of the country where the Post does not circulate. Readers will remember that in the February Musical Times appeared a statement from the hon. secretary of the Royal Philharmonic Society that certainly shed unexpected light on the subject. The statement appeared also in the Yorkshire Post, followed by this comment from the journal's musical critic, Dr. Thompson:

> If, as I have been informed from several unprejudiced sources, the performance of Holst's work in London was distinctly inferior to that of Leeds, it seems easy to ascribe the inferiority to the arrangements by which a chorus, after a long journey, a hurried visit to the hall, and an afternoon spent in recording some very exacting choral music, had to attempt so supremely difficult a task as Holst's music affords, and that without a single rehearsal with the orchestra. It certainly seems to have been ill-advised to risk the reputation of the Leeds chorus on its visit to the Metropolis, before a strange and critical audience. It was well for the singers that they had to finish with the 'Choral' Symphony, which requires, at least on the part of the singers, more physical energy than refinement of technique, and of which, when well warmed up to their work, they would, I make no doubt, give a brilliant account.

My comments last month on kings and queens of song, syncopation, &c., seem to have aroused some interest. I resume the subject in order to express my pleasure at seeing the paragraph about the Noble Pea and the Majestic Potato reprinted in Garden Life with appreciative editorial comment; and to say that two of the British musical royalties appear to have abdicated, if we may judge from the absence of their titles from gramophone catalogues. Good! A reader asks me if I have overlooked the costermonger who, bedecked in thousands of buttons, appears on certain high days as the Pearly King; and another adds the final touch to the ridicule already attaching to the use of such titles by telling me that a specialist in the more loathsome kinds of bait for fishing, such as grubs, maggots, and meal-worms (ugh!), used to advertise himself (and perhaps does so still) in a fishing journal as 'The Maggot King.' After that, there is nothing to be done but to ring down the curtain with a shudder.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XV.—John Farmer

Considering Farmer's many beautiful madrigals and his valuable contributions to Este's 'Whole Booke of Psalmes' (1592), it is remarkable that his biography has more or less eluded the researches of our musical historians, save for the notice, by L. McL. Dix, in the second edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (vol. ii., 1906). Henry Davey, in his 'History of English Music' (new edition, 1921), writes as follows:

> Nothing is known of Farmer; he published nothing more except his contribution to the Orianas, good sterling music.

Dr. Ernest Walker in the new edition of his 'History of Music in England' (1924) gives a solitary line: 'John Farmer seems to have been a predecessor of Bateson in the Dublin organistship.' There is, therefore, no apology needed for the present biographical data, which will at least serve to throw additional light on the career of a distinguished composer.

Dr. Fellowes, in his admirable volume on 'English Madrigal Composers' (Oxford University Press, 1921), says that it seems probable that Farmer was born about the year 1565, though 'the date of his birth can only be approximately conjectured.' A reference to Boase's Register of the University of Oxford (ii., 134) supplies more exact information, for it tells us that John Farmer 'matriculated at Merton College, Oxford, on March 27, 1584, age eighteen'—consequently he was born in $156\frac{6}{7}$. Further, the Matriculation Book affords the information that Farmer was 'from Leicestershire,' and was generosus (of good family). He was ordained a few years later.

At the age of twenty-five Farmer published 'Divers and sundry waies of two parts in one, to the number of fortie, upon our playn Song,' printed by 'Thomas Este, the assigne of William Byrd,' in 1591, and dedicated to his patron, Edward de Vere, Earl of Oxford. The plainsong on which Farmer constructed his forty Canons was the 'Miserere,' and the only known copy, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, formerly belonged to Rogers.

In 1592 Farmer was a notable contributor to Este's 'Whole Booke of Psalmes,' and set all the Canticles and hymns (twelve), as well as five of the psalm-tunes. These settings are deservedly praised by

Burney, who regarded the counterpoint as 'in such correct and excellent harmony as manifests the art to have been very successfully cultivated in England at that time.'

On the resignation of the Rev. Walter Kennedy, who had been acting as organist and Master of the Choristers in Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, at Christmas, 1595, the Dean and Chapter offered the post to Farmer, who took up duty on February 1, $159\frac{5}{6}$. As a further inducement to remain in Ireland, the Dean and Chapter appointed him vicar-choral on August 10, 1596, on the resignation of Robert Jordan. He was also appointed organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Apparently he went to London in the early summer of 1597, for there is an entry in the Chapter Acts, under date of July 18, 1597, ordering that 'if he do not return to Dublin by the first of August' his place was to be declared void 'for departing this land without licence.' On the same date (for evidently he was in holy orders) Farmer was ordered 'to attend on Mr. Heydon on his week on duty,' that is, to assist Treasurer Heydon as curate of St. John's.

Mr. Dix says :

> It seems most probable that Farmer went straight from Dublin to London in 1597, and we find him residing in Broad Street in 1599.

This, however, was not the case, as the Proctor's Accounts show that he returned at the end of July, 1597, and drew his full salary from Michaelmas, 1597, to Michaelmas, 1598. Moreover, he was presented to the Vicarage (non-resident) of Kilsheelan, co. Waterford, on November 26, 1598, in succession to Justice Johnson (Fiants of Elizabeth).

London, however, had a greater lure for Farmer, and he evidently left Dublin for good early in November, 1599, for on November 23 of that year, the Dean and Chapter appointed Richard Myles a vicar-choral, and on January 30, 1600, made him Master of the Choristers, as well as organist.

Farmer's 'First Set of English Madrigals to Four Voyces' was published in London, in 1599, and was dedicated to the Earl of Oxford, 'my very good Lord and Master.' In all, this volume consists of seventeen madrigals, but the best in the collection is a setting for eight voices. Canon Fellowes writes :

> Especially charming are 'You pretty flowers' and 'Cease now thy mourning'; while, in another style, 'A little pretty, bonny lass' and 'Fair Phillis I saw' are each full of buoyant gaiety that cannot fail to fascinate. No. 14, 'A little, pretty bonny lass,' has come into general use in the old Madrigal Societies with Oliphant's lamentable alterations 'To take the air.'

Dr. Ernest Walker tells us that Farmer

> . . . could occasionally write very delightful things like 'You pretty flowers' or 'O stay, sweet love' (both in the 1599 collection), and massive bits of contrapuntal work like the eight-part 'You blessed bowers,' from the same set.

In 1601 was published 'The Triumphs of Oriana' in honour of Queen Elizabeth, twenty-five madrigals in all; and Farmer contributed to it a fine six-part madrigal, 'Fair nymph, I heard one telling' (No. 14). After this date we hear no more of him, but he is said to have been alive in the first year of James I. In 1603-04 appeared 'Look up, sad soule,' for four voices (an adaptation of his madrigal 'O stay, swete love'), now in Christ Church Library, Oxford, but this was probably a posthumous publication.

A VISIT TO BÉLA BARTÓK

By Frank Whitaker

Béla Bartók* lives in a modern flat in perhaps the most ancient corner of Hungary. From his first-floor dining-room window in Buda he can see the electric tramcars passing to and fro on the cobbled quay of the Danube. From his back door, if he had one, he could almost throw a stone into one of the oldest churches in Europe.

This sharp contrast in his environment is oddly symbolical of the man himself. The Irish M.P. who twitted Lord Robert Cecil with having one foot in the Middle Ages and the other in the League of Nations, might have said almost the same thing of Bartók. One does not need to talk to him long to discover that he is not one man but two. While the one famous self is exploring untrodden paths to the music of the future, the other, of which the world knows little, remains engrossed in the rich folk-lore and folk-tunes of generations that are gone. You talk to the adventurous self and you find him interesting always, but like many revolutionaries, unexpectedly shy and self-effacing. The other self needs no drawing out. In him you discover a glowing enthusiasm for the simple songs of the people which carries everything before it. When I visited Bartók at his home a few weeks ago, he twice broke the bonds of his creditable but limited English and burst into Hungarian like the rattle of machine-gun fire. Both times he was trying to elaborate some theory of his about the evolution of the folk-song. 'Whatever I am,' he told me later, 'I owe largely to the years I spent in studying and assimilating the native music of my own country.'

Physically as well as mentally Bartók presents striking antitheses. His loosely-brushed hair is white, though his tanned face is young for his forty-four years. His rugged, strongly rhythmical music suggests that he is big and powerful, but he is slight and lean, with hands and feet almost as delicate as a woman's, and features as ascetic as those of Lord Darling, whom he strongly resembles. On the platform, at the pianoforte, he whirls tempestuously through his part; in private he is gentleness itself—alert but not aggressive, precise without being pedantic. In his grave, old-world courtesy there is not a trace of affectation. One is conscious all the while of his virility, but it is of the kind that burns inwardly—that glitters through the eyes rather than spends itself in gesture. His eyes, indeed, stamp him at once as a remarkable man. They are of a rich golden brown, and he has a habit of opening them wide and slowly tilting back his head as he waits for a question. A sculptor would seize at once on this backward poise of the head; a painter on those fine eyes.

He received me with that warm-hearted hospitality which an Englishman meets everywhere in Hungary, and for several hours, in his cosy sitting-room, discussed with me his work and his plans. On the wall behind us was a large portrait of Beethoven. That and a photograph were the only pictures in the room. Instead, on the walls and indeed in every corner, were the outward signs of Bartók's intense love of country—strips of peasant embroidery, brightly-coloured bodices which were once part of some national costume, pottery, and wooden vessels of various kinds. Even the furniture was peasants' work, of carved and stained wood.

* Pronounced Bayla Borr-toak, with a rolled 'r,' and the accents, as always in Hungarian, on the first syllables.

It was natural that we should talk first of folk-songs. They are not only Bartók's favourite theme; but they have had, as he himself says, a profound influence on his work. And no one living probably knows more about them—certainly no one can have covered more ground in pursuit of them. From the Carpathians to the Adriatic, from western Slovakia to the Black Sea, he has wandered with his phonograph and his note-book, living the life of the peasants, drinking in the atmosphere which nourishes them, until he too now feels its inspiration. Just before the war he rode his hobby still farther afield. He spent a long holiday at Biskra, in Algeria, and came back richly rewarded. Here in bare figures, is the result of his twelve years' painstaking labour: Hungary, 2,800 folk-tunes; Rumania, 3,500; Slovakia, 2,600; Biskra, 200. With his colleague at the Budapest High School, Prof. Kodály*, he has collected 4,000 more Hungarian melodies. Of this great hoard only between 3,000 and 4,000 have been published. A new collection of Rumanian melodies, as well as an exhaustive article on Hungarian folk-music which has already appeared in Germany, are now being prepared for publication in England.

Béla Bartók

The Hungarian Government, always ready to encourage national research, provided Bartók with the actual records for use on his own soil. These, each containing three tunes, are now in the State Museum. (How much more thoroughly these things are done abroad!) On the day of my visit I was fortunate to find that Bartók had withdrawn one or two score of the records. With boyish enthusiasm he unearthed his old-fashioned Edison phonograph from some odd corner, and wrestling patiently every now and again with a horn that insisted on parting company with the rest of the machine, he played over many of them. As he did so he handed me his note-books, all beautifully written and carefully indexed and preserved.

* Pronounced Ko-deye.

The theory is held by at least one famous English critic, I believe, that if the best of our folk-songs could be traced to their origin they would be found to be the work of comparatively few men, whose nameless genius has kept these songs alive through generations of change and made them proof against constant adulteration. Bartók, it was interesting to discover, prefers an entirely different theory. He believes that the songs sprang from ordinary people, and that they have been polished, rather than dulled, by contact with succeeding generations. In support of his case he pointed out that he had often come across different versions of the same song, all of them so good that it was difficult to choose between them. Did that suggest adulteration? he asked. He was very emphatic, too, in his assertion that the songs were always found in their purest form in districts where the peasants could neither read nor write.

Some of the earliest examples he showed me suggested that a vast amount of folk-music has probably been lost for ever in England. They were rescued in Hungary solely because of the more backward development of its country districts, and were clearly of great age. Many of the melodies were pentatonic; others employed nearly every known mode and had no definite form. Besides these, there are two other categories of Hungarian folk-song—one consisting of new-style melodies which have arisen in the last seventy years or so, and the other a heterogeneous collection which shows marked foreign influence. I shall return to these in a moment.

Bartók started his pilgrimages in earnest in 1906, at the impressionable age of twenty-five. He was a Strauss worshipper at that time, he told me, and Strauss had indeed given his career an important turn a few years before. Like the young Schumann, Bartók's early success as a pianist seemed to promise a more secure future than his creative ability. He was one of the most brilliant pupils of his time at the Budapest High School, and for several years had forsaken composition altogether. A performance of 'Thus Spake Zarathustra' rekindled his youthful imagination. Within the next two years he composed feverishly. Three works for orchestra, a Rhapsody for pianoforte and orchestra, several songs, and a quantity of chamber music came from his pen in quick succession, and laid the basis of his fame.

But he had not yet found himself. The orchestral works had a good deal of Strauss in them, and the Rhapsody, as he himself describes it, was 'very Lisztian.' He had already begun to employ folk-tune themes, but with the penetration of genius he realised that he was not building on solid foundations. Investigation showed that what he and others had looked upon as the venerable music of the people was of comparatively recent origin—the 'new-style' songs to which I have referred above. They had already been thoroughly exploited by Liszt, Brahms, and others, and were often artificial. Bartók resolved to dig deeper, and the pilgrimages of 1906 and the following years were the result.

I am dealing with this phase of Bartók's career in some detail because of its close bearing on the ever-recurring controversy about the influence of folk-songs on 'national' composers. A few months ago, in the American Mercury, John C. Cavendish attacked the premise > . . . that folk-tunes in general lend themselves most aptly to musical treatment, and have thus proved a source of invaluable inspiration to the greatest of composers.

In support of this carefully guarded statement, Mr. Ernest Newman wrote :

> No one denies the value of the good folk-song in itself. All that some of us have denied is that a 'national' school of music can be created by composers of the present day taking the folk-music of their own country as their model.

In its narrowest sense this is no doubt true, although I think Bartók, who is certainly helping to create a national school, and who frequently employs actual folk-tunes, only just escapes the proscription. Consider his development after 1906. His research immediately began to have a powerful effect on his style. His 'Two Portraits' for orchestra, published in 1907, show the new influence beginning. The rhythms are freer; there is an increased use of modal harmony, and the discords are more frequent and more bold than in the first Suite for orchestra (1905). In the first String Quartet and the fourteen Bagatelles for pianoforte (four of which have a pronounced folk-tune character), published in 1908, Bartók has completely shed his earlier manner. 'Since then,' he told me with a rather wry smile, 'I have tried to blaze my own trail.'

I knew the meaning of that smile. It meant that for years he had had to stand almost alone. His boyhood was hard. His father died when he himself was only eight, and he owed all his early opportunities and encouragement to his mother. His career at the High School, as I have said, was brilliant. In 1907 he was appointed a professor there. He had won wide recognition both as a pianist and a composer—how many people realise in these days that a work of his was produced by Richter at Manchester?—and the ball of fortune seemed to be at his feet. Then came dark years when he seemed to be losing all he had gained. His new style was criticised, and then ridiculed, by those who did not understand it. The very influences which were to raise him above his fellows began by bringing him down in the eyes of the world. In finding himself he lost his popularity, except among those who knew him best and appreciated his idealism and his intellectual honesty. He was hooted in public. Some of his concerts ended almost in free fights. He started a music society; it fell through owing to lack of support. It was a great blow to him, and more and more he withdrew into himself.

Since the war Fate has made him amends, but even now I think Budapest does not realise the high regard in which he is held abroad. His distinguished fellow-countryman, Dohnányi,* whom I also met while I was in Hungary, spoke of him with warm admiration, placing him at least on a level with Stravinsky. But he has still to become a national figure.

The cruel years of his early manhood have left their mark on Bartók. Several of his friends warned me that I should find him an embittered man. Embittered is, I think, too strong a word for one whose smile is so ready—his smile is beautiful: I can find no fitter word—and whose manner is so simple. I would describe him as a disappointed man, and a disillusioned man. No one of such acute sensibility could have withstood the buffetings of the world without being changed. But he shows it not so much in what he says as in an indefinable impression of aloofness from the world. Some of the things he knew about current musical life in London surprised me—e.g., that a prominent newspaper was at that time wanting a critic: he discussed with interest who was likely to get the post. But of other matters of greater moment he spoke as from a great distance. We talked of British composers. He was familiar with Holst and Bax, but apparently had had little opportunity of learning much of Vaughan Williams, Delius, and Ireland. I mentioned Bliss and Lord Berners. 'But they are a joke, are they not?' he asked. Poulenc and his school cropped up. 'Ah!' he said, with a mischievous smile, 'they started by being simple, and they have ended by being simpletons.'

But when we came to Stravinsky his enthusiasm flared up at once. 'The greatest of the moderns,' he said. 'In my opinion "Le Sacre du Printemps" is a work that will live.' He praised highly the technical skill of Schönberg, but thought he lacked Stravinsky's inspiration. I was interested to know if he had any difficulty in reading the scores of these fellow pioneers, and he confessed that he studied 'Le Sacre du Printemps' first from a pianoforte score. 'As a rule,' he added, 'I do not find Stravinsky too hard. Schönberg—yes. He is very, very complicated sometimes.'

As his remark about Poulenc showed, Bartók can be pungent about the things he dislikes. His own severest judge, he is roused at once by what I might call the psycho-analyst kind of critic, who hears a few score bars of music and then learnedly dissects the composer's mind for him. I reminded him of the constant cry that much of his music is harsh and barbaric, ergo an expression of the supposed cynicism within. He flushed with indignation—blushed would be a truer word, for he does not enjoy talking of himself. Then he smiled his slow smile. 'Yes, I know they tell me that,' he said. 'Well'—with a shrug of dismissal—'I do not understand: that is all. An artist can write only what is in him. He must follow his inspiration wherever it leads. When it is over let them discover what they will.'

'The critics in Budapest,' he went on, 'do not seem to find my music ugly. Their ears are not offended, and frankly, I do not see why others' should be.'

'But you do not mean to imply that you believe a composer must write only what is pleasing to the ear?' I asked.

'No,' he replied. 'He must write simply what is true. He must, and can, write only what is in him. Of the processes that go on in his brain—who knows?'

Another thing that annoys him is the common habit of confusing gipsy music with Hungarian peasant music. 'When will people realise,' he said, 'that gipsies are just as alien to us as they are to you. We have more of them, that is all. I doubt if they ever wrote a bar of music of their own. What they have done for the most part is to take as raw material the songs written by the country gentry in the last century or so—a totally different thing from our folk-songs—and furbish them up in their own way.' Brahms in naming his 'Zigeunerlieder,' therefore, erred as badly as Johann Strauss in naming his 'Blue Danube' Waltz. The gipsies have no lieder of their own, and the Danube is never, never blue.

There are a great many of these songs by landed families. Those arranged by Korbay*—'Had a horse,' 'Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane,' and so on—which are so popular in this country, come either from this source or are new-style folk-songs. Korbay, by the way, is something of a mystery in Hungary. If I may make a confession, I went there with the feeling that as I knew a good deal of his work I knew something of Hungarian folk-lore. I felt that if I told the clerk who swindled me over the exchange—'No matter: more was lost at Mohacz Field,' or 'Father was a thrifty man,' for example, I should be expressing myself in a way that commended itself to him. I made the experiment with the first musical Hungarian I met. He looked at me blankly. 'Korbay,' I said hopefully. He looked still more blank. I hummed a bar or two. He was polite, but clearly wondered what had come over me. He had never heard of Korbay or his songs. I tried the same thing later with the same result, until Korbay became an obsession. I forgot other things in the hunt for a man who knew Korbay. I did not find him until I met Bartók. With humility I asked him to explain the mystery. He spoke kindly of Korbay, whom he met in London many years ago, but did not take his music very seriously. 'They are drawing-room songs,' he said, 'with as much relation to real folk-music as your own shop ballads have. Korbay of course lived in New York and London for the greater part of his life; that is another reason why he is not even a name to the present generation.'

* Pronounced Doch-nahnye.

* Pronounced Korr-boy.

Once more I caught a glimpse of Bartók's deep feeling, but this time of a different kind. I asked him, in passing, if he thought his great collection of folk-songs was as complete as he could make it. He said he was sure it was not. 'But I shall never collect any more,' he added in a tone that made me look up. 'Our frontiers are not where they were,' he went on with sad significance. 'Even my own birthplace is now in another land, and the work can never be the same to me again.'

Like Holst, Bartók has had to spend precious years in the comparative drudgery of teaching, and even now his opportunities for composition are limited. He has devoted the present winter, however, to writing a pianoforte concerto which he has long had in mind. The only one of his works in which he is able to appear with an orchestra is his Op. 1, the Rhapsody I have already mentioned, which is not at all representative of his later style. Until this new work is finished he intends to remain at Budapest. The only visits abroad which he has planned for the winter are to Holland and Germany.

Finally we talked of the directions in which modern music is tending. He thinks there is a great harmonic field still to be explored, but believes that melody must not be sacrificed in the process. Recently at Prague, Hába, the Czech composer, gave him a demonstration of the quarter-tone pianoforte which the Czecho-Slovakian Government has placed at his disposal. Bartók was not impressed by its possibilities. Even his highly-developed musical mind found its tonality difficult to grasp, and Hába's explanation that the tuning was faulty was not sufficient to account for his uncomfortable impressions.

One last incident which will help to complete the picture of the man. When I was taking my leave I inadvertently referred to him as 'Doctor Bartók.' With mock horror he exclaimed, 'But I am not a "Doctor."' 'Well, "Professor,"' I said. 'Oh! everybody is "Professor" here,' he rejoined. 'That means nothing. And please don't refer to me as "Herr," as you did to Dohnányi, when he was in London. Why do you always speak of Hungarians as though they were Germans?' 'So I may not even say "Meister,"' I replied laughingly. 'No, no,' he said, in one of his rare bursts of colloquial English. 'Plain "Mister" is good enough for me.' And with that I left him.

OLD WAYS FOR NEW IN VIOLIN TRAINING

By Gerald R. Hayes

On a Sunday in the latter part of December last a few privileged musicians were enabled to see the results of a little known side of Arnold Dolmetsch's activities when, by the courtesy of the headmistress, they heard the young pupils at Dunhurst, the preparatory section of Bedales School at Petersfield, give an informal concert. Mr. Dolmetsch has been teaching these children for the past two or three years, and as their ages ranged from six to twelve years it may come as a surprise to some to know that they played, not only old tunes harmonized in three or four parts, but passages from Purcell's 'Diocletian,' Corelli's 'Nativity Music,' and Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio—not only played them, but did the job well, holding their parts both in time and tune with a certainty that many an amateur orchestra might envy. To one who has endured the horrors of many school children's concerts, it was astonishing to be able to sit back and listen to the playing, not only with interest, but with real pleasure.

Behind all this there lies a story which Mr. Dolmetsch unfolded to us in the morning, before the performance was given in the afternoon. He went back to the days when he first came to London as a young man, after studying the violin at Brussels Conservatoire under Vieuxtemps, and had been accustomed to practice eight or nine hours a day. Appointed music master at Dulwich College, he rapidly realised that nothing useful on those lines could be given to boys who could be allowed only about half an hour a day for practice. The difficulties for the child under these circumstances were as obvious as they appeared insuperable. Not only had he to get command of his bow, but he had to attain a correct ear for tune whilst fumbling about on the finger-board to learn his stops, coupled with the understanding of visual music in notation. The natural effect of all this complication on a schoolboy's mind, full of other matters, was, in the average case, to repel him and make the music a distasteful task instead of a pleasure.

Mr. Dolmetsch thought out what he then believed to be new lines of training, and he was fortunate enough to have a broad-minded principal, the famous Dr. Welldon, who gave him a free hand. In the first place, the boys must be encouraged to like the making of music for its own sake, hence they must play good music, however simple, right from the beginning, and never scales and exercises. Then, they must not be bothered with trying to understand the reading of music from notes: that could come later, for it is natural to speak before we read. Again, the mind must be trained from the start to think in perfect tune, and must not be distracted from the music by uncertainty about stopping, which also helped to ruin that sense of tune. To achieve these two objects Mr. Dolmetsch put frets on all the instruments. He then taught the boys simple old tunes of undying beauty by the positions of the frets—a sort of verbal tablature—and also made them play always 'in consort' (while some learnt the alto part, others learnt the tenor and bass). They thus acquired from the outset a practical sense of the meaning of harmony and time, which made progress to more advanced works an easier matter—for the children were not trying to translate visual instructions into music, they had nothing but the music, pure and simple, to think about.

He found that his experiments were rapidly rewarded with success, the most notable and, to him, pleasing feature being that the boys began to like the lessons and to look forward to the team work which they involved. After a year or two the time came when a school function gave the opportunity for his pupils to play in public in London. He had taught them the music he then loved best, Corelli, Purcell, and so on, not realising that this was then practically unknown to the musical public, and it was such pieces that were played at the concert. The next day he awoke to find himself made famous by a two-column article in The Times from the pen of J. A. Fuller-Maitland. However, his increasing realisation of the importance of the instrumental music of the past, and of the need for recovery of the instruments, led him to abandon his teaching in order to devote himself to research, and it was not till after many years that he used these methods again when teaching his young family and, quite lately, the children of Haslemere and Bedales.

But, as his researches proceeded, Mr. Dolmetsch soon found that much of what he had taken to be a new method of his own was simply a re-discovery of the ways of the past. He read Couperin's 'Méthode,' and found that in the early 18th century the young pupil had to learn a number of tunes by the hands before he was even allowed to be shown the written tablature, much less the staff notation. This, of course, involved frets which were, just as with Mr. Dolmetsch, gradually removed as the pupil became more proficient. More than half-a-century before, John Playford had advocated this use of frets for learners in the famous violin section of his 'Introduction to the Skill of Musick,' which first appeared in the second edition of 1655.

This method is, however, far older than the 17th century; how old, it is impossible to say, but the writer recently found it fully described in a text-book of the early 16th century. In 'Musica Teusch' there is first a long treatise on the playing of the Viols ('der Grossen Geygen'), followed by instruction for 'the small fiddles which have no frets' ('den Kleynen geygen die Kein Bündt haben') —that is to say, the rebecs or violin family. On sig. Hii verso, we read :

> No man knows at first how to find and sound the stops. One should put on frets, and when one is quite sure of the stopping, they may be taken off again. Yes, it is better in the end for the beginner to put on frets than trying to find the positions gradually, &c.

Then follow elaborate directions for finding the correct positions of the frets. The pages of Ganassi's 'Regola Rubertina,' of about the same date, also give some interesting information on the subject of the frets.

To return to our practical experience of this method at Bedales, it must be said at once that the results appear to have been very satisfactory. These young children so obviously enjoy the music-making that that alone would have been a justification, even if the effects had not been so good as they were. But the most noticeable feature was the certainty and rhythmic sense that the playing showed; there was no hesitation about the entrance of parts or feeling for notes. Mr. Dolmetsch led the little orchestra, seated on a chair in front of them, and his daughter played the double-bass viol (the violone), but this was only because the child who usually played it was ill. One cannot imagine any child sawing on a double-bass fiddle, but the violone, like all the viol family, 'speaks' at the lightest touch.

The children are encouraged to exchange parts, the alto to take tenor at times and vice versâ, and their practical sense of harmony was well illustrated by one small boy with the viola who had forgotten his part; he tried, without success, to pick it up alone, but as soon as one of the others put in the alto he remembered it at once. This learning by sound is, of course, in direct defiance of text-book maxims, which say that the child 'must be taught to read, not to memorize,' and the awful fear some teachers seem to have of anything learnt by ear; but judged by the pragmatic test, it is true because it 'works.' Not only do the children enjoy the lessons, but some of the older ones have been found trying (and succeeding too) to teach young ones by themselves, thereby learning much that cannot otherwise be taught.

One feature of this demonstration was that all the violins and violas, to begin with, are held between the knees like a treble viol, and are bowed in the viol manner with the hand under the bow, not above it. This makes the bowing much easier at first, and avoids the difficulties of the long stretches on the bottom strings when it is held under the chin. But it has another and very important aspect; it enables the child from the start to use a full-sized instrument, and so get a true idea of its tone-value. As the pupils get more confidence they are allowed to put the violins up, and we observed that some used their instrument in both ways in different pieces. It is all a question of which is the most convenient at the particular stage of development; thus, when the frets are taken off, the child will sometimes ask for them to be put back, as he has such a keen sense of tune that he knows at once when something is going wrong. As to 'technique,' Mr. Dolmetsch says :

> . . . it is a mistake to try to make it grow any faster than the musical sense—it will grow as fast as that grows.

It was not clear whether this method of holding the fiddles viol-wise was part of Mr. Dolmetsch's original experiment at Dulwich; it may have been, but the writer is inclined to think that it is an outcome of his classic researches in the playing of the older instruments. That it has great advantages can hardly be denied, for it frees the mind from so much pre-occupation and allows the music to become the paramount factor; after all, the instrument is only what its name implies—a means to an end.

Music in the Foreign Press

TIME, SPACE, AND MUSIC

Charles Kœchlin, in the January Revue Musicale, suggests that musical facts may contribute some data towards the solution of the philosophical problem of the relativity of time and space. A few concrete examples are all that can be quoted here, as the author's actual demonstrations (which are most interesting) do not readily lend themselves to condensation.

> Henri Poincaré wrote, 'If everything in the universe became n times larger, we could not realise the change, since our measuring instruments would have become altered in the same proportion.' But the human ear provides a measuring instrument whose capacity might remain unaltered by a change of size : hence, it might perceive, e.g., the resulting changes of the pitch, timbre, and intensity of musical instruments. Bergson considers that pure duration, being mere sensation, is no more measurable, quantitatively, than, say, heat, cold, or pain; it is measurable qualitatively only. But for the musician, the continuity and divisibility of tone, and hence of time, are realities quite apart from mathematical measurements founded, as Bergson has it, on the 'spatialisation' of time. As regards space, Einstein's theory (and Michelsen's experiments) point to its measurement varying according to the conditions under which it is measured. But it remains to be seen whether, e.g., the sound emitted by a vibrating body could be found to vary so as to indicate that its change of length is actual, and not merely an illusion due to a defect in the process of measurement.

BORODIN'S FIRST SYMPHONY

In the same issue, S. Dianin and A. Rimsky-Korsakov give the following particulars on the various texts of Borodin's first Symphony:

> The arrangement, by Borodin himself, in pianoforte duet form appeared in 1874. In 1882 only, Borodin's publisher decided to print the score. Borodin then determined to carry out certain alterations, according to advice given to him by Balakirev, Liszt, and others. Balakirev's suggested corrections were sent to Borodin in writing. The score appeared in November, 1882. No score edited by Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazounov ever appeared.

Most students of Borodin's music will realise that this last assertion is not altogether accurate. Indeed, the only score that is conveniently available for study is the miniature score whose title-page bears the mention 'Revue par Rimsky-Korsakov et Glazounov.' But, in point of fact, the text of this is exactly that of the original edition, as I eventually succeeded in ascertaining after a long quest for a copy of the original edition. The alterations have not yet been incorporated in a pianoforte arrangement.

GEORGES AURIC

In the same issue, Boris de Schloezer devotes an essay to Auric and his music. He considers Auric as one of the masters of contemporary musical France:

> 'Les Matelots' and 'Les Fâcheux' are among the finest things in French music since Debussy. Auric's pianoforte pieces do not often show him at his best, but his 'Pastorales,' 'Sonatine,' and 'Adieu New York' represent the very essence of his art and individuality.

EUGÈNE GIGOUT

The December 15 issue of L'Orgue et les Organistes is devoted to Gigout, his life and music. It contains the text of the speeches delivered on the day of his funeral.

MOZART AND WIND INSTRUMENTS

In the January Bulletin de la Société Union Musicologique (The Hague), G. de Saint-Foix writes on Mozart's little-known Divertimenti for wind instruments, published by Breitkopf in 1801 (K. An. 226, 227, 228), and points out that although Mozart has written comparatively little for combinations of wind instruments, he has done more in that line than people are aware of. Two Divertimenti of the same kind (K. An. 224 and 225) are unavailable—probably lost.

THE SAXOPHONE

On January 22, says the Guide du Concert (January 15), part of the meeting of 'La Musique Vivante' (see Musical Times, January, 1926, p. 34) was devoted to 'an ill-fated instrument,' the saxophone. In the December Monde Musical, René Laurent (who on the above-mentioned occasion had performed various pieces written for the instrument) writes in praise of the saxophone, and expresses the hope that this fine instrument will not be finally confined to the jazz-band. Among the composers who used the saxophone were Vincent d'Indy ('Fervaal,' &c.), Bizet ('L'Arlésienne'), Saint-Saëns ('Henri VIII.,' &c.), Délibes ('Sylvia'), Debussy, Caplet, Florent Schmitt, and Mahler. Richard Strauss has (optional) saxophones in the 'Domestica.'

NEW RUSSIAN COMPOSERS

The January Sovremennaya Muzyka contains an article by Igor Glebof on Miaskovsky's Pianoforte Sonatas, and articles by Victor Belaief on Alexandrof, Shirinsky, and on Shenshin's vocal works.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Occasional Notes

We have received the full programmes of the fourth Festival of the International Society of Contemporary Music to be held at Zurich on June 18-23. The only English composer in the scheme is W. T. Walton, with an Overture, 'Portsmouth Point.' Seeing that Switzerland and Czecho-Slovakia each have three representatives, this strikes us as being a poor show for the country of Vaughan Williams, Holst, Bax, Ireland, and at least half-a-dozen others who have achieved more than Mr. Walton. Presumably their music has not the International touch that distinguishes the work of Krasa, Weill, Hoeree, Miaskowsky, Geiser, Petyrek, Caplet, Honegger, and the rest. We cannot help wondering to what extent the Jury of five—Arthur Bliss, Scherchen, Straram, Szymanovsky, and Honegger—are in touch with music on this side of the Channel. Interest in the Festival has always been tepid so far as England is concerned, and we don't think the cold shoulder is likely to make it red hot.

Last month 'Feste' discussed some of the advertising methods of 'star' performers. A correspondent sends us a prospectus of a concert recently given at Coventry by Miss ——, a violinist so accomplished as to be independent of such fulsome twaddle as the following. It filled two pages, from which we pick a few choice flowers of speech:

THE MAGIC FIDDLER

LISTENING TO ——

> The greatest fiddlers have come to us, enveloped in an atmosphere of mystery. Paganini was supposed to be in league with Satan. Tartini confessed that his Sonata was inspired by the devil, in a dream. And though, in these days, no one would connect Miss —— with the Evil One, yet, in the girl artist, who sprang, almost at a bound, to absolutely the first living English violinist, one is struck by this atmosphere of the supernatural that surrounds her. . . . As she mounts the platform, slim, pallid, waxen figured, her wide eyes peer into the crowded hall as though she saw nothing there, save, perhaps, some invisible ghostly mentor. She is as pale as death.

We stopped at this point and did a bit of peering on our own account, but the more we peered the less wide were our eyes. So perhaps after all Miss —— merely stared—as indeed she well might, in order to see a mentor that was invisible.

> The Queen's Hall Orchestra begins the Prelude to the Paganini Concerto. Miss —— does not smile at the audience, as others do ; she is too full of her work. Nervous, anxious, she fingers absently at the strings of the violin held loosely by her side. One is afraid she is not in form—there will be a nervous breakdown. Such a slight, transparent creature—a puff of wind would be too much for her—is not fit for the excitement of the concert-room. The orchestral prelude reaches a climax, stops suddenly—there is silence. The violin goes swiftly to the shoulder [not, you perceive, to the nape of the neck, or the knee-cap], the bow, raised, descends on a single note that rings clear as a bell. There is a dive into the deep alto of the G string, and up again to the top of the instrument, where the notes run like rippling laughter. Then the melodies begin to unfold, with a purity and sweetness never heard before. [What, never?] And now the very devil is in the fiddle. Gay, mocking laughter thrills from it. There is a scampering of little demons that have not been loosed since Paganini himself first conjured them out of horsehair and catgut. This girl, then, can call up spirits. Yes, but they are harmless ; they have put on their best behaviour, and, with smug faces, gambol about, in great awe of their enchantress, who smiles out of the corners of her eyes at them, enjoying the fun. As the tune changes, they go. This twittering in Alt, it is bird-music. To the whistling of the harmonics, we sail up in the air, ever so high. Another change, moonlight, clouds, and pattering rain, lonely churchyards, faint wailings, grisly skeletons—Ugh ! We are nearing the climax. The orchestra swells out, the sound grows brighter, brighter, brighter—a musical sunrise, heralded by trumpet calls, and welcomed by a sky full of larks. Whew ! it is over. We pull ourselves together. Yes ! we are in the Queen's Hall. There is Henry J. Wood, as large as life, and the pale girl in white, bowing to tumultuous applause.

We are sure that Sir Henry will not be offended if we find the reference to his substantial presence a bit of an anti-climax. After sailing up in the air, ever so high, we seem to descend with a rich dull thud, ever so low. Whew !

With the growing appreciation of Bach's Cantatas has come a desire for performances of these works on a scale suited to their intimate quality, both in feeling and texture, which more often than not is akin to that of chamber music. The Newcastle Bach Choir has been working on these lines for some years, and the newly formed Bach Cantata Club is a London organization with a similar aim. This choir consists of twenty-five professional singers, assisted by the Bach Chamber Orchestra, a new ensemble of well-known London players. Mr. Kennedy Scott will conduct, but occasionally guest-conductors will take charge. There are strong executive and advisory committees. Six concerts per year will be given in London, with, it is hoped, a subsequent expansion of activities into the suburban and provincial centres. Among the soloists for the first series of concerts are Dorothy Silk, Margaret Balfour, Adila Fachiri, Harold Samuel, Harold Darke, and Joseph Slater. A prospectus giving dates and full programmes of all the concerts for the first year may be had from the Secretary, Mr. Hubert Foss, Oxford University Press, Amen House, Warwick Square, E.C.4, from whom may be obtained also applications for membership. The subscription of £1 4*s.* entitles the member to one transferable ticket for each concert; £2, two tickets; and £2 17*s.* 6*d.* three tickets, and so on. We are glad to see that the programmes are not confined to the Cantatas, works for orchestra and organ solos being also included. The Choir will join forces with the Oriana Madrigal Society in the B minor Mass at Queen's Hall on March 29. One of the concerts will take place at the Royal College of Music, and the remaining four at St. Margaret's, Westminster. We hope that an early result of the birth of this attractive organization will be a performance of the 'Magnificat,' a work that has been strangely neglected in London of late.

Mr. Noel Ponsonby, organist of Ely Cathedral, has been appointed organist of Christchurch Cathedral, Oxford, in succession to Dr. Henry Ley.

We learn from the February issue of The Musician that 'the concerts of the State Symphony Orchestra at New York have been abandoned temporarily because of a lack of funds.' This unexpected discovery that there is a limit to the power of the subsidising millionaire may prove to be a blessing in disguise. We have not much faith in any form of artistic activity that has to be bolstered up by fat donations, whether from the State or from Mæcenases. Now that the age of patronage is gone the motto should be : Spread the liability, widen the interest (the two things go together), and cut your coat according to your cloth. If the problem of opera in this country is ever solved it will probably be on this democratic and business-like basis. The 'Old Vic.' has been showing the way for years.

Apropos of the subsidising of music, is it not a mistake to begin with the most expensive form of activity? We have long felt that a start should be made in departments calculated to cater for the largest possible number at the smallest cost. This view is expressed by Mr. Carl Saerchinger in a recent number of the Musical Courier. Speaking of the meeting at which the National Opera Trust was launched, he points out that the income from the half-million pounds aimed at (£25,000) is 'less than the deficit of one season of opera, either at Berlin or Chicago, in both of which places it is being more widely patronised than in any English town.' He adds, truly, that 'the essential nucleus for an opera organization is an orchestra; and the orchestras of England at present are struggling against almost impossible odds.' All of which hard truth leads to his reasonable conclusion :

> When English cities have taken the first step toward recognising the cultivation of music as a public function, by endowing or subsidising a symphony orchestra ; when, in other words, they have reached the stage that America has reached, it will be time to look ahead toward the next stage—attained by Germany —in which the opera house is established as a corollary to the symphony orchestra, co-operating with it to the economic benefit of both. What England needs, at present, is not an Opera Trust but a National Symphony Trust.

And he ends by pointing out that the 'Old Vic.,' even if its performances are sketchy, is 'building up a mighty audience for the future, when real "grand" opera for the people will become a reality.'

We hope a sufficient number of mere English will see the point of this quip of Mr. Hugh Roberton's. Perhaps many of them will not realise that the Fras——. But we refuse to spoil a joke by explaining it:

> All great artists phrase well. Speaking at Inverness once, I put it differently. I said: 'All great artists are phrasers.' The loud applause was puzzling, until I noticed that one part of the hall was silent. It was occupied by M'Donalds.

In the February number of The Musician we found a paragraph the moral of which should be digested by singers, both solo and choral, who are well past their vocal prime:

> An ordinary citizen remarked the other day of his sister that after singing in the quartet in the same Connecticut church for some thirty odd years she had just quit, and was now experiencing the reaction of sitting in the congregation. Asked why she quit, he said: 'On a recent Sunday she opened her mouth to sing softly, and nothing came—and when it did come it was loud. So she said it was time for her to quit. And she quit.'

Bravo! Of this conscientious singer it may truly be said that nothing in her career more became her than the way she quit.

New Music

SONGS

The name of Elizabeth Poston is not at present well known, at any rate in England, but five songs of hers which come from Winthrop Rogers are of considerable importance. The excellence of the poems at once appeals, and a sensitive fresh appreciation of them is apparent in the music. The composer writes a good vocal part, and careful accentuation is always noticeable. The music itself shows considerable sense of style, and though it is possible to detect the influence of Elizabethan song, and of Delius, perhaps viâ Warlock, these influences are well assimilated, and the composer never descends to mere copying. The handling, at its best, is firm and capable, but there are signs of uncertainty here and there, and slight amateurishness in the movement of parts and basses detracts from the value of some of the songs. 'A little candle to St. Anthony' is a case in point. The song has interest, both melodic and harmonic, but flags on the second line of its second page, whilst there is a rather artificial second-rate harmonic effect at the bottom of the same page, at the words 'You have.' Such blemishes are much to be regretted when there are so many good things. 'Sweet Suffolk Owl' is another case of a song good at its best, but not of equal interest all through. 'The Bellman's Song' and 'Aubade' show firmer grasp. The first is a charming thing, words and music, and the composer has cleverly managed to put real freshness and vitality into a 'bell' accompaniment, which is apt to sound very commonplace nowadays. 'Aubade' depends less for its effect on 'spice,' and is perhaps a better song. The vocal line is free and strong, the accompaniment well-written and light in texture. One regrets a slight tendency here and elsewhere to arrive at the ultimate destination in cadences almost too soon, so that the phrase has to be lengthened out beyond its carrying power. And it is a pity that the words 'your curtains' have to be repeated near the end, an effect which is out of keeping with the composer's general plan of straight setting. But it is a good song, and ought not to be passed over. The songs are all of them on the light side, and unpretentious, and even if the handling is not always quite certain, the freshness and sensitiveness of outlook are so welcome that one will await further works from this composer with interest.

What a contrast is Helen Kilner's 'My Mary, sweet and brown.' Here we are back again at the old, sophisticated-simple, bass-in-octaves-with-the-tune style of thing. And not much better, though free from Miss Kilner's worst excesses, is Una Bourne's 'A Cloudless Night'—poor music, to such words as:

> As we near the mighty ocean,
> It seems, my love, to me
> 'Twould be complete contentment
> To sail ever thus with thee.

From the same publishers (Enoch) comes 'The Palatine's Daughter,' a good Irish tune, edited with skill and humour by Herbert Hughes. One can see how careful this writer is to eliminate all unessential notes from his pianoforte parts, thus giving them clarity and vividness. Straightforwardly effective, too, though not so much out of the common, are Howard Carr's arrangements of four traditional songs of the hearty type. 'Ben Backstay,' 'High Barbaree,' 'Dorothy's a buxom lass,' and 'A jug of this,' are all good in their way, given the singer and the occasion (Paxton).

'The Dressmaker,' by Donald Ford, is a setting of some words by H. D. C. Pepler, which are of the 'quaint' sham-mediæval style to which religious subjects, unfortunately, sometimes lend themselves. The music matches the poem, being affected to a degree, and full of exaggerated, commonplace harmonic effects. If this kind of thing is really naive and simple, like certain stanzas of 'Jerusalem, my happy home,' the effect is moving and beautiful; but when it is far from simple, and gives an impression of insincerity and pose, it is insufferable. The same composer's 'A Hymn of Thanksgiving,' shows how affected he has been in the former song; this last is less offensive because more straightforward and plain-spoken—it is merely commonplace.

E. Markham Lee's 'A Flemish Lullaby' is of a very different sort, for it is simple, genuinely so, musicianly, and sincere. It was a bold venture of Phillis James to set 'My Garden,' for the poem is extremely difficult to deal with; and this music has not the strength or individuality required. Incidentally, the author of this poem is T. E. Brown, not Thomas Browne: the good Norwich physician, for all his love of gardens, would turn in his grave at having this 'lovesome, God-wot' poem attributed to him. 'In the Trades,' the second of 'Two Songs of the Sea,' by G. T. Francis, has exhilarating rhythm, and might have been a fine thing if the interest had been kept up throughout. Unfortunately it flags during the middle section, and the song never quite gets over this. All these publications come from Murdochs.

'The Little Cares' is probably the best number in T. C. L. Pritchard's 'Six Songs' (Paterson). Its unaffected simplicity and sincerity carry it through in spite of the fact that the music shows no particular originality. The same qualities are elsewhere apparent; but there is a touch of the commonplace in some of the songs, notably, 'When I am dead, my dearest,' and 'I had a dove,' which robs them of effect. The composer is not equal to E. B. Browning's 'O wilt thou have my hand.' Terribly intimate as the poem is, it needs to be matched with music of equal insight.

Percy E. Fletcher's 'Four Tennyson Lyrics' (Novello) are typical of the composer in their easy-flowing, graceful effectiveness. The composer knows what he cannot do: what he can do he does with care and musicianship: and he is seen at his best in the lighter numbers. 'The City Child' and 'The Throstle' are both charming. This last is an unusually good 'bird' song whose cleverness does not prevent it from catching the slightly deeper undertone that sounds in the poem.

Seven translations by A. C. Benson from classical writers are set by D. M. Stewart and published by Augener. There are sincerity and sensitiveness here, and at its simplest the music often has charm. But every now and then there are harmonic adventures, often for the purpose of underlining particular words, which are disconcertingly commonplace. 'Love's Precinct' shows this. The beginning is quiet and simple, but at the word 'still' we get a sudden colour effect which disturbs the flow without achieving much. The same thing occurs at the word 'wither,' in 'Unchanging Love.' 'The Tomb of Ajax' and 'The Trio' are freer from it, and gain in consequence. 'The Well' is probably the best of the songs: a picturesque little phrase out of which the accompaniment is made gives unity and interest. The change to the major key in the last verse is effective, and the atmosphere of the words is well portrayed.

Like Percy Fletcher, Graham Peel knows his talent, and avoids affectation or pretentiousness. Two songs published by Forsyth, 'Little Brown Bees' and 'Hills in Heaven,' show his usual skill, and have charm, but not perhaps the distinction which some of his work has revealed. In their different styles, however, both are effective, and the tramping rhythm of the accompaniment gives the second of these songs a certain strength. Charles Wakefield Cadman's 'Flowers of Forgetfulness' is a setting of a highly-coloured poem by Mlle. R. Eberhardt about 'Mystic poppies of the mystic East' and 'Bright cups of visions, drug my wine of sorrow.' Of course it is done skilfully; excitement is well worked up: but in the end one feels that it's all about nothing. The composer is happier in simpler styles. The same publishers, Winthrop Rogers, issue Dwight Fiske's 'The Bird.'

Augener's publish Frank Bridge's setting of Tagore's 'Dweller in my deathless dreams,' a poem on which the composer has brought to bear all his great knowledge of effect. Needless to say, voice and instrument are alike well written for; the poem is clothed in veils of beautiful sound, and a big climax is worked up, the whole thing calling for the utmost skill from both performers. This is not perhaps one of the most highly individual songs of this composer, for some of the harmony is reminiscent of Scriabin; but it is a fine piece of work.

From the Oxford University Press come two more songs by Norman Peterkin, 'Song of the Water-maiden' and 'Pierette in Memory,' and Hubert Foss's 'The New Mistress.' The first of these should sound charming, if the pianist can achieve the lightness and elusiveness which the accompaniment needs, an effect which will probably be best got from the arrangement for string quartet, which is published. 'Pierette' needs careful handling too, if the feeling of impulsiveness is to be got without that of scrappiness: and here again any but the lightest of touches on the pianoforte will destroy the effect of fragility. Hubert Foss has fully realised the potentialities of Hardy's fine poem, 'The New Mistress.' Effective use is made of the tonal scale in characterising the heartless one's outspoken farewell. Swinging rhythm and a modal tune bring the song to an effective end. The song has strength and impetus: but one gets tired of some of the harmonic tricks, notably the excessive use of fourths. 'Hucbaldism' is being overdone in several quarters.

A beautiful song is Viggo Broderson's 'Auf duftiger haide' (Steingraber, Leipsic). A long, unbroken, finely vocal melody is accompanied by arpeggio chords: there is little of eventfulness, but the quiet serenity suits the atmosphere of the poem: and singers with high voices should not overlook this song. The same composer's Op. 26 (the former song is Op. 45), from the same publishers, is a set of five numbers. Less simple in their methods, they seem less effective in their results. But 'Weltenweiter Wandrer' in its rather luscious way is undeniably beautiful. The influence of Strauss is strongly noticeable.

T. A.

CHURCH MUSIC

Some recent issues from the Oxford University Press include an arrangement by W. G. Whittaker of Henry Purcell's 'Evening Hymn' (on a Ground); Ernest Bullock's Saints' Day anthem, 'Give us the wings of faith' (words by Isaac Watts); a setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in E flat, by Sydney Watson; and William Byrd's 'Preces and Responses.' Purcell's beautiful little work, as we are reminded by the editor, appears in the key of G in Playford's 'Harmonia Sacra' (first book); and only bass—occasionally figured—and voice are given. In its present form in F, with Dr. Whittaker's musicianly arrangement of the accompaniment for pianoforte or organ, it should make a most acceptable unison anthem. An arrangement for four-part mixed choir and pianoforte or organ, by Harvey Grace, also appears in the same series. The words are by William Fuller, Lord Bishop of Lincoln ('Now that the sun hath veiled his light'). Dr. Bullock's anthem is a strongly-written little work of only moderate difficulty. The organ-part is excellent, and in the vigorous middle section gives scope for the effective use of reeds. Sydney Watson's setting of the Evening Canticles is for unison singing. It is straightforward in style, and may be recommended to choirs on the look-out for music which is easy without being either feeble or vulgar. In the last bar of page 3 there is a misprint in the organ-part. The arrangement for four voices (S.A.T.B.) of Byrd's 'Preces and Responses' is an adaptation by Dr. Percy Buck from the original setting for S.A.A.T.B.

A number of works from Novello call for notice. Eric H. Thiman's setting of 'O Strength and Stay' (words translated from the Latin by J. Ellerton) may be cordially recommended. The composer has written a good tune and treated it simply but very effectively. The first verse is sung by soprano (solo or full), the second is for four-part unaccompanied singing, and in the last the melody is sung in unison over a broadly-written organ-part. A setting in D of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, by T. H. Ross—composed for the Peterborough Diocesan Choral Association—is well-written music. The voice-parts flow along easily, and nowhere present any real difficulty. Canonic writing is effectively employed in the Nunc Dimittis. W. R. Pullein has provided suitably expressive music for the 16th-century Prayer, 'O Lord, support us all the day long of this troublous life.' It consists of only twenty bars, is intended for unaccompanied singing, and is published on a card. Those interested in the new 'English Psalter' recently issued by Novello should note that the Canticles may now be obtained separately. Set VII. of Novello's 'Hymns and Tunes for Sunday School Anniversary Services' contains, in addition to tunes by G. C. Martin, E. J. Hopkins, and A. Herbert Brewer, two new ones by Eric H. Thiman, two by Harvey Grace, and others by R. McLeod, C. J. May, and F. G. Russell. The music appears in both notations, and the words are also issued separately. From Novello's may be obtained a setting by Healey Willan of 'Hail Thee, Festival Day,' for Whit-Sunday Morning Procession (H. W. Gray Co.). The words are from the 'English Hymnal.' This is one of 'Four Processionals,' the others being for Easter, Ascension, and Dedication Festival. The music is admirably dignified in style, and choirmasters who use this hymn should make its acquaintance.

A short Communion Service for unaccompanied singing, by E. Francis R. Woolley (S.P.C.K.), should meet the requirements of those unable to cope with elaborate contrapuntal settings. Straightforwardly written, and of only medium difficulty, the music should prove both interesting to the singers and effective in performance. The Creed and both forms of the Kyrie are included.

Choirs capable of eight-part unaccompanied singing should add to their repertory a new Motet by William H. Harris (Year-Book Press). This is a setting for double-choir of Spenser's 'Faire is the heaven where happy soules have place.' The composer writes freely and effectively for the voices, and is equally successful in his harmonic treatment. An Adagio opening (pp) in D flat is succeeded by a section in which the pace constantly quickens, key changes are frequent, and some imposing climaxes are reached, before the return to the original tempo and key three pages from the end. A big choir is necessary to do full justice to this fine work. Adequately performed, the result should be impressive. G. G.

STRINGS

We have received a number of pieces for violin and pianoforte composed by that busy fellow 'Anon.,' in this instance a native of the Netherlands. They are 'freely' arranged by M. Willem De Boer, and published by Gebrüder Hug & Co., of Leipsic and Zurich. We have of course no means of finding out to which particular branch of the numerous family this particular 'Anon.' belongs. These pieces point to a mind of no great originality. The music resembles the current coin of the 18th century, and indeed could be written to-day by a musician with a bias for imitation. Sinding and even Vieuxtemps did very pretty things in that line. And perhaps it is better that it should be so, for the 'Anon.' who shows genius is ever a tragic figure. The arrangements appear to be neatly and conscientiously done, but of course only the publication of the originals could give us the measure of the editor's skill. The 'Variations' are quite of concert standard, although not particularly difficult. The Moderato and Intermezzo are more modest in scope.

One often hears it said that the student of to-day has a much better time of it than the students of the last generation used to have. This is borne out by the number of pieces written with the avowed purpose of enlivening the early stages of technical training. The latest addition to the student's repertory is a Suite of four pieces (Menuet, Pastorale, Marcia, Spinning Song) by the leader of the London Symphony Orchestra, W. H. Reed (Joseph Williams). They are simple, and distinctly profitable to the student. Bülow asserts somewhere that it is impossible to begin too soon to transpose. If that is so, more advanced students would derive great benefit by practising the 'Spinning Song' in D instead of C, the original key.

To a much more ambitious type belong Dorothy Howell's 'Phantasy' (Augener) and Felix White's 'La Bella Capricciosa' (Schirmer), both for violin and pianoforte. The first has the merit of sound construction and interesting ideas; the second, that of being a well-turned trifle.

Manuel de Falla's 'Seven Spanish Popular Songs' have been adapted for the violin by Paul Kochanski, and published by Max Eschig, of Paris. As could be expected from so expert a violinist, the arrangements are, on the whole, very effective. The 'return' pizzicato in the Jota is undoubtedly a good stroke, and this is altogether successful—the key (E) being one that on the violin sounds particularly well. There are more harmonics in the 'Chanson' than such a simple melody appears to demand, but no doubt even the simplest melody is to-day often invested with finery a more Spartan age would have scorned. B. V.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Beethoven.' By Paul Bekker. Translated and adapted from the German by M. M. Bozman.

[Dent, 10*s.* 6*d.*]

'The Letters of Ludwig van Beethoven.' Selected by A. Eaglefield-Hull.

[Dent, 10*s.* 6*d.*]

Mr. Bekker's book, the Preface tells us, has had a great success in Germany, having gone through numerous editions. On many grounds—above all, its thoroughness, and the excellence of its plan—it deserves all the good things said of it. It suffers, however, from a serious blemish of the kind that ought to be avoided at the present juncture, when both Beethoven and his music are being scrutinised as probably they have never been before. In regard to the man, Mr. Bekker is torn. The biographical section of his book gives much of the old picture of Beethoven as the heroic soul—a kind of blend of Prometheus and Ajax-defying-the-lightning. Mr. Bekker, it is true, does not evade the unpleasant facts brought to light by Thayer, but he passes over some of them so lightly that the uninitiated may regard them as mere eccentricities. He admits that > . . . Beethoven's conduct in money matters was one of the weak spots in his character, and cannot be presented in a favourable light. . . . He not infrequently broke his word, struck a bargain and then withdrew on receiving other offers; he took payment in advance for work which he did not carry out, and for his own purposes roused expectations which he knew could not be fulfilled.

The worst example of this shady conduct is, of course, in regard to the Mass in D. Mr. Bekker disposes of it in one sentence :

> There are few more regrettable episodes than that of the publishers' rivalry for the great Mass, which Beethoven promised almost simultaneously to six firms, only to hand it over to a seventh in the end.

There was nothing 'regrettable' in the publisher's anxiety to produce the Mass ; their eagerness did them credit. On the other hand, the term is too mild for Beethoven's tactics. There is no space to go into the matter here. Let the reader who still thinks of Beethoven as a demi-god turn to Thayer's many pages dealing with the whole affair. He would confess that a mere business man would be haled to the Old Bailey for less calculated fraud. Nor was this the only shady episode in which Beethoven was indebted to the forbearance of his friends and publishers. His first dealings with the Royal Philharmonic Society are rightly described by Mr. Bekker as 'neither decent nor honest.' Asked to compose something specially for the Society, for a fee of £75, he sent on three Overtures ('King Stephen,' 'The Ruins of Athens,' and the 'Name-Day') that had already been sold on the Continent, and that, moreover, were so poor that they were laid aside with frank expressions of disappointment. No wonder London publishers were cool when Neate a little later suggested that they should obtain some new works from the composer. 'For God's sake,' said one of them, 'don't buy anything of Beethoven.' Of these same Overtures the publisher Birchall said, 'I would not print them if you would give them to me gratis.' Mr. Bekker is aware of all this, and indeed begins his study of Beethoven's personality by saying that the composer 'had hitherto been presented to us in a falsely romantic light,' yet, like Rolland, d'Indy, and others, he continues to regard Beethoven as being of noble character, 'enthroned in lonely majesty,' and so forth. Noble characters don't stoop to such shady tricks as those indulged in over and over again by Beethoven. And such remarks as 'He would never prostitute his art to pecuniary needs' cannot be squared with the fact of his constant practice of selling works that he admitted to be inferior. No ; the more one reads his letters (especially those to publishers and others when 'raising the wind,' or driving a bargain, or evading repayment of a debt) the more painfully one realises the strain of meanness that ran through his character. Beethoven was immeasurably smaller than his music, and no good is done by blinking the fact.

Much of this inequality is present in his work, and in fact the unevenness of his output is understandable only when viewed in relation to the man himself. Unfortunately Mr. Bekker makes us dubious about his valuation of Beethoven's music by describing as 'great' such works as 'Adelaide' and 'The Mount of Olives,' both of which were little esteemed by the composer himself in later years—a judgment which (at all events in regard to the oratorio) Mr. Bekker admits is that of posterity. 'Adelaide' he still regards as 'vital and effective,' an opinion in which few who are really critical in the matter of song will agree with him. Nor will many follow him in his enthusiasm over such pianoforte works as the E flat Fantasia-Sonata, Op. 27, the G major, Op. 31, the Andante con moto of the 'Appassionata' (a movement which he describes as 'one of the most enthralling works ever composed by Beethoven'), and the Bagatelles. Mr. Bekker's writing on the critical side is usually so full of insight that his apparent inability (or unwillingness) to recognise the immense distance between the composer's best and worst work, and the unusually large proportion of the inferior, is the more to be regretted because it weakens our confidence in his judgment as a whole.

Mention was made above of the excellence of the book's plan. Mr. Bekker wisely condenses the biographical side, and so leaves the major part of his space for a discussion of the music—unfortunately without music-type examples. He ekes out his compressed biography by a chronological table of the main events in Beethoven's life. There is an admirable index, and also a classified summary of the works, in order of composition—so far as such an order is possible in the case of works whose production often overlapped widely, and cannot always be ascertained. There are some slips. On page 347, the 'Eroica' is described as being in D minor ; the letter to the 'Immortal Beloved' is definitely assigned to 1801, whereas the year must always remain as doubtful as the identity of the damsel herself ; the translator frequently uses such expressions as the 'two first' when he means, of course, the 'first two' ; on page 73, discussing some of Beethoven's expression marks, he tells us that beklemmt in the famous 'Cavatina' means 'straightened [sic] in the Biblical sense of the term'—a misleading remark, because the Biblical 'strait' has a variety of meanings, from 'narrow' to 'adversity' : what is the matter with the actual meaning of the German itself ? Surely 'oppressed,' 'anguished,' was in the composer's mind, as it certainly is in the music of this portion of the Cavatina. A curious lack of perception is shown on page 63, where, apropos of Beethoven's attaching significance to certain keys (a point which Mr. Bekker overstrains), we are told that 'he [Beethoven] associated the greatness of Klopstock with the solemn D flat major key.' But the analogy was made in a somewhat derogatory sense. Beethoven was talking with Rochlitz, and comparing Goethe with Klopstock :

> He [Goethe] has killed Klopstock for me. You are surprised ? . . . I gave myself up to him [Klopstock] for many years . . . I didn't understand him always. He is so restless ; and he always begins too far away, from on high down ; always Maestoso, D flat major ! Isn't it so ? But he is great nevertheless.

Beethoven is clearly pointing out that Klopstock is too consistently grandiose.

A very odd contention is put forward by Mr. Bekker on pages 142-3. After eulogising the 'Diabelli Variations,' the author quotes Bülow, and goes on to say :

> In the enthusiasm of the discoverer and propagandist, however, Bülow has overlooked one fact, and that is that the piece ought not to be played. In this respect it is the counterpart of the B flat Sonata, Op. 106. There the clash between creative will and tone-material occurred over a tragic subject ; here it is the quintessence of humour which laughingly disregards the insufficiencies of imperfect mechanism and soars on the wings of imagination high above the world of actuality. Both the B flat Sonata and the 'Diabelli' Variations are written for an instrument which never existed, and never will exist. In these works Beethoven moves in an abstract world of music ; he plays not with sounds, but with conceptions of sounds, using the language of the pianoforte symbolically. Actual physical tone is but a coarse materialisation of the artistic idea, given here to the mind's ear alone.

> We see instrumental music carried to the point of absolute perfection, and carried beyond it by the urge to the immaterial ; physical sound is rejected, and an experiment is made with tone-abstractions which can only be grasped intellectually.

With due respect to a critic of such ability and standing as Mr. Bekker, one is strongly disposed to describe this as nonsense. Personally, I have no use for instrumental music developed to such a point that it becomes inaudible. Music is a matter for the ear, as food is for the palate, and we don't want Barmecide feasts of either. Even Mr. Bekker seems to have some doubts about the above theory, for he adds :

> We must at the same time allow the justice of the pianist's complaints as to the disturbing peculiarities of his work when taken phrase by phrase. It is perfectly true that, with increasing age, Beethoven 'instrumentated' worse and worse both for his orchestra and for the pianoforte.

Exactly ; and is not the impracticability of certain passages in the Sonata to be explained on that ground? We may be sure that Beethoven would thank no one for suggesting that he was writing for an instrument that never existed, and never will exist. (Though, by the way, is not this Sonata food for the player-piano?) If a further reason for the ungrateful style of the later pianoforte writing be needed, it is to be found in Beethoven's constant attitude towards executive artists. For example, on a player pointing out that a certain passage did not 'lie' well for the hand : 'It must lie,' says Beethoven. And when Schuppanzigh—an excellent violinist—complained of some unnecessary difficulties, 'Does he imagine that I think of his wretched fiddle when the spirit is upon me?' said Beethoven. But a composer's job is to express himself in such a way as to suit his medium, making the most of its possibilities and avoiding its weaknesses ; and any shortcoming in this respect is a fault, whether the composer be a Beethoven with the spirit on him or a mere bungling amateur. It is a pity that this wrongheaded attitude is so often spoken of as if it were a virtue, instead of the musical bad manners which, after all, it is.

The quotations will, I think, show the direction in which the book fails. The author wants to have it both ways—the Beethoven of tradition, eating out his lonely soul, noble and defiant, with a lofty conception of his mission as creative artist ; and the uncouth, ill-educated, mean individual who, to a degree unequalled by any other composer of the first grade, ranged from the heights to the lowest levels of banality and commonplace. Is this too strongly put? The reader who thinks so is advised to look down a complete list of Beethoven's works, and mark how small a proportion is alive to-day. He should then take some of the justly neglected works ; say the Triple Concerto and the Fantasia for pianoforte, Op. 77. If he can get through these without a mixture of yawning and irreverent mirth, he is easily satisfied. The worst and best of Beethoven, both the man and his music, can no more be reconciled than oil and water, and it is a pity that Mr. Bekker should stultify so much excellent writing by attempting the impossible.

After all, we may tell the truth about both the man and his work, and at the same time lack neither sympathy nor appreciation. All Beethoven's personal failings may be traced more or less directly to his parentage and the wretched circumstances of his early home life ; and his slow development as a composer, and the extraordinarily uneven quality of his music, were due largely to the intermittent and unsatisfactory nature of his training. Yet his place is secure among the small group of composers unanimously held to be of the first rank. Most of us would admit his claim to stand even among the topmost three, and he earns that position without special indulgence of any kind, but by virtue of the towering beauties of the pick of his output : for although no other great composer failed so often and so completely, hardly another flew so high and maintained the altitude for so long. He has everything to gain and nothing to lose from a cessation of the highfalutin and cloudy gush that has surrounded his name for so long. One's quarrel with Mr. Bekker is that, well aware as he is of the real Beethoven, he wants to retain the legendary one as well. Hence dozens of passages in the bad old tradition, as, for example, this from the description of Beethoven's death :

> Ludwig van Beethoven's earthly course was finished. Like the great prophet of the old Testament, he ascended to heaven in a chariot of fire.

This account of the apotheosis needs only the commonly misused journalistic 'literally' before the word 'ascended' to make it a perfect example of how not to write biography.

As Shedlock's translation of Kalischer's 'Complete Collection of Beethoven's Letters' has long been out of print, it is well that this liberal selection of nearly five hundred of the original thousand odd should be issued. At the risk of appearing ungrateful, however, it must be said that the edition suffers from a defect similar to that of Mr. Bekker's book. It is a pity that Dr. Hull, in addition to selecting the letters, did not also revise or supplement such of Kalischer's notes as put a misleadingly favourable construction on certain passages. The original Preface of Mr. Shedlock tells us the old tale about Beethoven's 'love of truth and justice,' of his noble-mindedness, and his 'contempt for all that was mean and wicked.' But, as has been shown above, that view of the composer can no longer be maintained. If, as the Preface tells us, the letters are a faithful reflex of the composer, it must be said with regret that the character they reveal was as a whole very far from noble.

As examples of Kalischer's over-kind gloss on certain letters, take this note at the end of a group of letters to publishers concerning the Mass :

> Simrock, Schlesinger, Probst, Peters, Artaria, and Schott, were all wanting the Mass ; the last-named acquired it.

To the innocent reader this conveys an impression of eager publishers and a coy composer, and ignores the fact that the advances were made by Beethoven, in letters enjoining strict secrecy. Again, at the end a letter to the Archduke Rudolf, pleading poverty and seeking his good offices in obtaining subscriptions for the Mass, we read :

> One may perhaps wonder at the whole affair of the subscription and the correspondence with so many potentates, considering Beethoven's former political opinions ; but this letter gives the sad explanation : 'Necessity knows no law.'

In other words, a noble-minded man may modify his opinions to suit his pocket! Moreover, it is now well known that Beethoven was by no means in a state of poverty at this period.

One more example: In a letter to his nephew Carl, Beethoven says disparaging things about the faithful Schindler—'He has a bad, crafty character,' &c. Dr. Kalischer adds:

> Considering Schindler's activity and zeal as amanuensis, the remarks about him in this and the previous letter are one of the mysteries of Beethoven's life.

Where is the 'mystery'? Beethoven's treatment of his best friends throughout his life, and especially towards the end, was notoriously bad. Such letters as those in question were written during the frequent spells when all the members of his circle in turn were the victims of mean suspicion. Instances by the score could be given.

The volume is rich in interest, both human and musical, not because the letters are good qua letters (as a rule they are far from being that), but because of their source and associations. Despite Beethoven's poor literary ability, however, they contain glimpses of a powerful and original mind working under the difficulties of an uncongenial medium. Indeed, the wonder is that he wrote so many letters, seeing that literary expression (even in such humble departments as orthography and punctuation) tried his patience sorely. Probably one reason is to be found in his curious liking for involved transactions, bargainings, and roundabout approaches. It is amusing to see how often he seems to regard an affair as something to be consummated by stages not unlike the processes of exposition, counter-exposition, development, &c., by which a sonata movement is achieved.

The production of the book is excellent, and there are fifteen illustrations, chiefly portraits. One gains from it a vivid picture of the composer by turning a deaf ear to some of Kalischer's over-charitable notes, and reading the letters in the light thrown on some of them by the researches of Thayer. Let nobody complain if the result is something in the nature of a dethronement. It is sometimes said that our concern to-day is with a composer's works only, and that his private life should be left in obscurity. But the proper study of mankind is man, and so long as our instinctive curiosity proves this to be true, biographies will be written. This being so, we have a right to demand that the biographies shall be fact, not fiction. Worshippers who hate to have the truth told about their idols may easily avoid it. The rest of us will continue to enjoy the composers' works none the less (perhaps all the more) for knowing that they proceeded from a very human and imperfect source, 'as your pearl in your foul oyster.'

H. G.

'Die Technik des Geigenspiels.' By Prof. Julius Winkler. III. Teil, Anfangsunterricht.

[Rikola Verlag.]

This little volume, written by a Viennese violin teacher, contains much valuable material. It is obviously the outcome of considerable experience, and of not less considerable patience. Perhaps its full worth can be realised only by reference to the previous volumes, which have not reached us. But there is no question as to the soundness and thoroughness of the teaching it upholds. It deals with the subject in as thorough a manner as is possible, given the great variety of types of student and the different degrees of natural aptitude they show. If violin teaching could be reduced to a science, if it were possible to find a formula which would guarantee a definite amount of progress in a definite period of time, Prof. Winkler would be the very man so to reduce it and to evolve the formula. As, however, every teacher knows, no two pupils are alike physically or temperamentally. One will produce a thinnish tone yet take to staccato as a duck takes to water; another will find Kreutzer's Study No. 10 a trifle and boggle hopelessly at No. 8. In such cases only personal contact with the teacher can be of help. Hence it may be said that although some students may derive far greater benefit than others from the study of this little treatise, all should derive some benefit at one or another point of their progress.

B. V.

'Deux Livres d'Orgue, parus chez Pierre Attaingant en 1531.' Transcrits et publiés avec une introduction par Yvonne Rokseth.

[Société Française de Musicologie. Tome 1.

Harold Reeves, £2.]

This is a publication of considerable historical interest, especially to organists. Attaingant seems to have been the first in France to print music from movable types, and judging from the date, this organ book must have been one of his earliest productions. Incidentally it shows that, even at so early a period, the organ was given a well-defined place in the services of the Church. The pieces consist of more or less florid treatments of plainsong themes for use at Mass and Vespers, presumably as interludes, since most of them would be unsuitable for accompanimental purposes. There is a certain amount of descriptive writing connected with some verses, and in this connection it is interesting to see that the composer of the set of little pieces on 'Te Deum' anticipates Bach's Chorale Prelude treatment of the same tone by leading off the verse 'Tibi omnes angeli' with a scale-passage presumably descriptive of the flight of angels. A long piece, with a good deal of effective development and sequential writing, called 'Prélude sur chacun ton,' suggests that the voluntary was establishing itself. Attaingant gives no indication as to the composers he called on in the compilation of the work. That they varied considerably in skill is clear. Inevitably the bulk of the music has little more than antiquarian value, but some pieces still fall pleasingly on the ear when played on quiet organ stops. Most of the writing is in three-part harmony, one part consisting mainly of the cantus in long notes. Some of the contributors essay brief fugal expositions, and show a realisation of the consistency that is to be obtained from basing the subject on the cantus. Hitherto the only samples of this book available have been two brief extracts given by Ritter in his 'Zur Geschichte des Orgelspiels,' issued in 1884. The editor contributes an interesting Preface, which is enriched by some facsimiles, notably four beautiful pages from an ancient missal in the Bibliothèque Nationale. The book is handsomely bound, and the edition is limited to five hundred copies.

H. G.

'The Journalist in the Making' consists of the meat extracted from sixty addresses delivered to students at London University by well-known writers, critics, reviewers, and editors. The musical side is dealt with by H. C. Colles and Percy Scholes, but aspiring musical journalists (what a lot of them there are !) will find much that is hardly less helpful in the other critical sections by A. B. Walkley, E. A. Baughan, W. R. Titterton, W. L. Courtney, Robert Lynd, &c. There is also much good advice on the practical side on a host of other subjects from sports reporting to the law of copyright. In fact, no single point concerning journalism seems to have been omitted, and the whole is collated and made into a very interesting and readable little volume (Newspaper World Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*).

After 'Don'ts for Church Organists' and 'Don'ts for Choirmasters' comes yet another series—'Don'ts for Choirmen,' by John Newton, with a Foreword by Dr. Prendergast. This booklet strikes us as being an improvement on its predecessors, because it is less consistently negative. It contains a lot of sound sense expressed in a telling way. Though designed for choirmen, we should like to see it handed round among members of the congregation—for, after all, a congregation generally has the choir it deserves, and it often deserves a bad one because it is either too easily satisfied, or unappreciative of such good work as is forthcoming (Cambridge: Heffer, 6*d.*).

'Proceedings of the Musical Association.' Fifty-first session, 1924-25.

[Leeds: Whitehead & Miller, £1 1*s.*]

The six papers and discussions make, as usual, excellent reading. It is a sign of vitality in the Association that two of the subjects dealt with are 'Operatic Ignorance' (Dennis Arundell) and 'The Gramophone' (Compton Mackenzie). The Report read at the annual general meeting mentions that though the attendance has increased the discussions have shown a falling off. This is easily understood in the case of papers on obscure subjects, when none but the few experts would care to rush in. A glance at this volume shows that few were disposed to take the field at the close of Dom Anselm Hughes's paper on 14th-century harmony, whereas the contributions on modern harmony (Dr. Kitson) and the gramophone drew fire from all quarters. So long as the tradition of discussion is kept alive by the inclusion each year of two or three papers on subjects well within the range of the average member, a certain coyness at other times matters little. The value of this book is enhanced by the copious examples of early harmony illustrating Dom Hughes's paper.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'The Musicall Gramarian.' By Roger North. Edited by Hilda Andrews. With a Foreword by Sir Richard Terry. Pp. 41. Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Musical Directory, 1926.' Pp. 488. Rudall, Carte, 6*s.*

'A Comparison of Music and Poetry.' By Sir W. H. Hadow. Pp. 41. Cambridge University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*

The Report and 'Register of Members of the Incorporated Society of Musicians.' London: For the Society, Silas Birch, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'La Vie de Franz Liszt.' By Guy de Pourtalès. Pp. 301. Paris: Libraire Gallemard.

'The Temple of Tone.' By George Ashdown Audsley. Pp. 260. New York: J. Fischer.

'Studies in Modern Music.' By Sir W. H. Hadow. 1st series: Berlioz, Schumann, Wagner; 2nd series: Chopin, Dvorák, Brahms. London: Seeley, Service, 5*s.* each series.

'Aids to Elementary Violin Playing.' By Jeffrey Pulver. Pp. 200. Strad Library, 5*s.*

'The Spirit of Music.' By Edward Dickinson. Pp. 218. Charles Scribner, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'School Worship.' Pp. 712. The Congregational Union of England and Wales, Memorial Hall, London.

'Introducció a la Paleografia Musical Gregoriana.' By Dom Gregori Ma. Sunyol. Pp. 409. Abadia de Montserrat.

'Mozart: The Man and the Artist revealed in his own words.' Compiled and Annotated by Friedrich Kerst. Pp. 143. Geoffrey Bles, 5*s.*

'Beethoven: The Man and the Artist revealed in his own words.' Compiled and Annotated by Friedrich Kerst. Pp. 110. Geoffrey Bles, 5*s.*

'Recommendations to the British Music Industries.' Pp. 38. Federation of British Music Industries.

'The School Orchestra, organization, training, and répertoire.' By Adam Carse. Pp. 55. Joseph Williams, 4*s.*

'The Violinist's Encyclopedic Dictionary.' By Frederic Barclay Emery. Pp. 233. William Reeves, paper, 4*s.* 6*d.*; cloth, 6*s.* 6*d.*

'Songs of Praise, with Tunes.' Oxford University Press. Music edition, 6*s.*; Words only, 6*d.*

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

This month's output is strong on the instrumental side. First in scope comes Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet, played by the London String Quartet and Ethel Hobday (L1698-1702). This presents considerable difficulties in recording, because of the problem of blend and balance of pianoforte and strings, and also owing to the fact of there being a double-bass as well as a violoncello. The problems have on the whole been got over remarkably well. At the start the pianoforte seems unduly reticent, but the balance improves as the work goes on. The music has both the virtues and defects of Schubert—his flow of melody, and his tendency to take the easy path of repetition rather than the arduous road of development. But when all is said, there is a wealth of delightful sound, and the playing is what we expect from the L.S.Q. and Miss Hobday. The work fills nine of the ten sides; on the remaining space is the 'Interludium in modo antico' of Glazounov, from his five Novelettes for string quartet. The Interlude is a beautiful example of pure modal writing, and is also admirable in its fugal portion. There is a singular charm in modal music played on strings, and it was a happy thought to use this Glazounov piece as a make-weight to the Schubert, its austerity providing the best of contrasts to the easy-going 'Trout.'

The London String Quartet is recorded also in the three Idylls of Frank Bridge (L1704-5). These are extremely effective, the idiom being free and modern without crankiness. The sonority, range of power, and delicacy of nuance are astonishing. There is a curious difference between these two sets of records. Those of the Quintet are of normal power, whereas the tone in the Idylls is far greater, and the resonance and 'bite' of the strings far more pronounced. Why this marked difference of effect from the same players? (The instrument used is a new H.M.V.) These Bridge records are amongst the most vivid and enjoyable of recent issues.

Another query is raised by the next two sets of records. First, here is Percy Grainger playing Chopin's B minor Sonata (L1695-7). A highly-exciting performance it is, too, with, however, an excess of rubato and the power too violently laid on, especially in the left hand. One has an impression that the composer, like the player, has become a naturalised American. The most satisfying movement is the last. The Scherzo is a mere scurry. These records are made by a new process for which much is claimed. Certainly there is immense power and a notable improvement in the definition of the bass. Played with a loud needle, however, there is a painful amount of jar.

The other example of pianoforte recording is of William Murdoch playing de Falla's 'Cubana' and Albeniz's 'El Puerto' (L1707). It shows the new process in so favourable a light as to suggest that in the Chopin Sonata either Grainger or his pianoforte is responsible for the unpleasant tone. The Murdoch performances have abundance of power and variety, but are musical all the time—in fact they are outstanding examples of pianoforte recording, and hold out a promise that this branch will soon be on a level with the best string and wood-wind work.

Two military band records offer interesting contrast. The Garde Républicaine of France is heard in a couple of Marches (3845) and our own Grenadier Guards in a Spanish March and Alford's 'Voice of the Guns' (3844). The music is of no great account, of course, but the records are enjoyable, especially that of the Guards. The French Band is far less rich in tone and (unexpectedly) not so good in execution. The sonority of the Guards' brass is splendid, and there are some fine fat bits of bass.

A record of the Russian Balalaika Orchestra will appeal to those who do not weary of the hard, steely tone. The works played are a Russian Polka and Mozart's 'Turkish Rondo' from the well-known Pianoforte Sonata. The Mozart piece is better suited than one would expect. The Polka is poor, and bored me until towards the end, where the players shout what sounds like either 'Fire!' or 'Hi!' but is no doubt a Russian word expressive of joy in the Polka. They are easily pleased (3846).

The Cherniavsky Trio play Widor's Serenade pleasantly and Haydn's 'Rondo all' Ongarese' rather sketchily (3739).

The best of the vocal records is that of Harold Williams in the Prologue to 'Pagliacci.' He is abundantly dramatic, yet sings all the while—which is more than can be said of most of the foreign operatic basses and tenors (3843).

H.M.V.

The only orchestral recording is that of the Albert Hall players in 'Leonora' No. 3, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald (D1051-2). This strikes me as being an efficient and workmanlike, rather than an inspired performance. The recording is capital, and it is good to note a marked improvement in the way the new process deals with massed string tone. There is scarcely a hint of the hard, almost brassy, effect that was complained of a few months ago. The Overture fills three sides; on the fourth is the Ballet Music from 'Rosamund,' very well recorded, though perhaps a little too seriously played.

Probably many Bachites have been waiting for Harold Samuel to be recorded playing one of the Suites. I have always felt that it was a mistake in tactics to start him on his gramophone career with such works as the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, instead of the jolly dances in the Suites and Partitas. He is now recorded in the first three movements of the B flat Partita—one of the best of the set (D1053). This is wholly delightful, though personally I prefer the Prelude a shade quicker—as, indeed, I fancy Mr. Samuel himself played it when I heard him last. The tone is good, and the playing is, of course, an object-lesson in clarity and fluency. Presumably the rest of the Partita is on the way. When is the pick of all the Suites—the G major French—coming along?

Thank goodness, here is a violinist giving us a genuine piece of fiddle music instead of snippety transcriptions. Beethoven's Romance in F does not show him at his best, perhaps, but it is a pleasant sounding piece, with the length and breadth that we don't get often enough in violin solos. Thibaud's playing of it is, of course, graceful and refined, but somewhat tepid (DB904).

A military band record that should be popular is that of the Coldstream Guards playing a Naval Patrol and Scottish Patrol—stirring (and often amusing) potpourris of sea-songs and shanties, and Scottish airs (C1234).

I am sorry the latest organ record is to be commended only in so far as it shows an improvement in reproducing the tone of the instrument. Gatty Sellars and C. Whitaker-Wilson play respectively 'The Lost Chord' and Handel's 'Largo.' The diapason tone sounds more like the real thing than on any record I have heard before, and at the end of the Sullivan song there is a good burst of full organ. But the playing in both cases is poor in rhythm, and the arrangements appear to contain some harmony that is not in the original. Certainly some of the chords in the song might with advantage have been lost in addition to the one in the title. Apparently the tremolo is liberally used. Perhaps it would be advisable to keep that feature out of action till organ recording is better. At present it seems to be detrimental to clearness. I hope that better music and better playing will soon be forthcoming. Clear, bold, and strongly-rhythmical works with diapason tone as the normal, would surely record better than these rather poor arrangements, with their over-use of soft string and reed tone, vox humana, &c. (C1237).

Another choral record comes to hand—the Glasgow Orpheus singing Coleridge-Taylor's 'Summer is gone' and Balfour Gardiner's 'Cargoes' (E407). This is good, though, as choral recording is in the stage when the best results are got by powerful, straightforward works, subtleties of nuance and colour, which are the strong suit of the Orpheus, cannot be done full justice at present. Even so, at each verse-end of 'Summer is gone' there is a diminuendo such as one rarely hears: a fine bit of choralism, wonderfully recorded. And I have never before heard those difficult, unrelated chords in the 'Tyne coal, pig-iron' passage in 'Cargoes' so finely sung. Imperfect though the record be, it leaves us in no doubt about the excellence of the choir. Of the two songs, 'Cargoes' comes off the better (E407).

Among vocal solo records is one of Caruso, showing that still unequalled voice at its richest—and, by the way, emphasising the baritone quality of the middle and low notes. The power is immense, but there are some bad tricks, e.g., the scooping attack and the characteristic sob. The songs are of no importance—Fucito's 'Sultano a te' and Donaudy's 'Vaghissima Sembianza' (DA754).

There are also records of Gerhardt singing a couple of Wolf songs, with some sense of effort and unsteady tone (DA715); Anne Thursfield in Bax's 'Cradle Song' and 'Rann of Exile' (E410); and Paul Robeson in a negro 'spiritual' and a Convict Song (E410). The 'spiritual' vein, like that of the shanty, is being overworked. Mr. Robeson's fine sympathetic voice should be heard in fresher and better material.

VOCALION

Bach's Concerto for two violins has already been recorded several times. Here is yet one more version, the soloists being Adila Fachiri and Jelly d'Aranyi, with Stanley Chapple conducting. These players were recently recorded in the slow movement with pianoforte accompaniment; one is glad to have the whole of this fine work at their hands. The result is not perfect, the balance between soloists and orchestra leaving a good deal to be desired at times. The string background is far from clear, the harmonic basis being hazy. One of the results is that in the first and last movements (especially the former) there is a vague, persistent humming of tonic and dominant. This effect may be peculiar to my set of records. The slow movement just lacks something on the part of the soloists. It is surely one of the most lyrical of movements, and it is just this intimate touch that, to me, seems lacking. Speaking from memory, I feel that the sisters achieved it in the detached record spoken of above. The spirit and energy in the remainder of the work are capital, and the recording first-rate, barring the lack of definition in the orchestral part (A252-3).

Readers who know Elgar's 'Falstaff' will recall the two delightful sections that describe Falstaff's dream of his youth, and the episode in the orchard of Master Shallow. Played by the Modern Chamber Orchestra, under Stanley Chapple, they have been excellently recorded. For companion piece they have the 'Canto Popolare' from Elgar's 'In the South' (K05215).

Debussy's Arabesques are deservedly among his most popular pieces. York Bowen is recorded playing No. 2, in G, together with Rachmaninov's Prelude in G minor. Recording first-rate; playing a little less so. I have heard Mr. Bowen in work that seemed to suit him better (K05214).

Vocal records are rather above the average. Kathleen Destournel is heard in a couple of duets, singing 'Lovely maiden in the moonlight,' from 'La Bohème,' with Hardy Williamson; and 'Dear love of mine,' from 'Nadeshda,' her partner this time being Frank Titterton. Both duets are good, the second especially so, thanks to Mr. Titterton's fine voice and manly style (K05213).

Very sonorous and impressive is Murray Davey in airs from 'La Juive' and 'Robert le Diable,' singing in French (A0254).

Stanford's 'Five Songs of the Sea' have been recorded complete, though unfortunately without the male chorus that adds so much to their effect. Mr. Watcyn Watcyns is the singer, and his excellent voice is heard to great advantage, especially in 'Drake's Drum' and 'Devon, O Devon'; but I suffered a cruel disappointment when I turned on 'The Old Superb.' Here is a song in which pace is a vital factor, surely. Mr. Watcyns is far too deliberate, and (if one may say so without being misunderstood) makes too much of the purely singing side. Despite the vigour and tone it demands, the song belongs rather to the 'patter' type. At anything much less than the right spanking pace, it gives us a whole fleet of 'lame ducks' instead of merely the one in the refrain. The orchestral accompaniment is good, but not uniformly so.

Player-Piano Notes

By William Delasaire

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—John Powell plays the Chopin B minor Scherzo (6490) splendidly. The rhythmic accent is well brought out, although it is played well up to time. I do not, however, like the middle section so well. It is altogether too heavy in tone, and so fails to make the contrast it should with the tempestuous opening subject. But the work is too virile to lose much by this treatment, which I suspect lies in the indexing of the roll rather than in the original performance.

Mendelssohn seems tame after this, especially in the first of his two 'Lieder ohne Worte,' which Miss Beryl Rubinstein plays on roll No. 5935. They are No. 4 from Book 1, Op. 18, and No. 47 from Book 8, Op. 102. The second is the more pleasing, and reveals an apt neatness that is again rather spoilt by too generous dynamics. It should obviously be played lightly as well as crisply, and I can hardly think the performer used so much force as the roll indicates.

The Gluck-Brahms 'Gavotte' (6476), with its charming archaic atmosphere, is a welcome little piece in 'Duo-Art' form. It is played impeccably by Guiomar Novaes.

A roll of unusual beauty is Backhaus's playing of his own transcription of Strauss's 'Ständchen,' Op. 17, No. 2 (6684). The lovely tune is treated in just the right way—the performer clearly enjoyed his little pianistic flourishes, but they are never overdone: unlike so many transcriptions, it is the composer first and the arranger afterwards.

An important roll which arrived too late for inclusion in last month's notes is Cortôt's playing of the Chopin-Liszt 'Maiden's Wish' (6478). I like it, except that to my ear it is taken much too fast. I have a feeling that Cortôt often errs in this way in his public performances; but such treatment, doubtless pleasing to an audience, is not too kind to the music. However, this defect is easily remedied in the present case—try a tempo of 70, instead of the 90 which is marked on the roll. Then get Paderewski to play it on roll No. 6594, and make your choice. I prefer the latter.

Hand-played.—One cannot help liking Schumann's 'Arabesque' (A857), but every time I hear it, I sigh for a little development instead of so much repetition —though, perhaps, in a work with this title, one ought not to expect it. But fine playing goes a long way towards making the listener forget such things, and Miss Margaret Volavy does her very admirable best. Her reading is an invitation to the player-pianist to make his dynamic phrasing match her finely-graded nuances.

Before hearing Guiomar Novaes's reading of the Chopin Berceuse (A859), I was inclined to think this work was one of which as good a performance could be achieved with a straight-cut as with a hand-played roll, but I am more doubtful now. It may be that my own conception of it approximates closely to hers, but I can play this with ease and comfort, and, with only a very gentle hand upon the tempo lever, do exactly as I would wish to by hand. (Incidentally, it is imperative that the accompaniment be subdued to a mere whisper, and subtly varied between this and piano—a nice test for performer and instrument.)

Another charming fragment with the same title is Cortôt's transcription of an example by Fauré, from Op. 56 (A865). A pleasantly rocking left-hand figure sustains a gentle tune, and, as played by Cortôt, makes a roll which should appeal to all tastes.

Personally, I cannot endure the persistent high note in the Paganini-Liszt 'La Campanella' (A863), though Arthur Friedheim probably plays it in a manner which Liszt himself could hardly have bettered.

Ordinary.—Mozart's Sonata in A major (T24673/4) is the principal work this month among straight-cut rolls. I know of nothing that is more difficult to play well on the player-piano than such music as this. There is nothing spectacular, no rich harmonies, no fat chords, no brilliant ornamentation to dazzle one's hearers ; every note must be carefully thought out and played. After close study, play this to a musical friend, and you will convert him to the player-piano for life.

There are also three little salon pieces worth noting : 'Rosamund,' from Quilter's 'Where the Rainbow Ends' (T24670), tuneful and musicianly ; 'My Little Brook,' by L. Butler (T24668), quite pleasant ; and 'Devon Ditties,' arranged by C. A. Trew (T24667), in which 'Widdicombe Fair' and another folk-tune are happily treated.

HUPFELD

Tri-phonola.—One would naturally suppose that Gieseking, with his marvellous control of the softer tone-colours, would provide a supreme test for the reproducing piano and the 'Tri-phonola' certainly sustains the test with distinction in two rolls which are to hand recently—the pianist's own arrangement of Strauss's 'Freundliche Vision' (T59386), and Debussy's 'Reflets dans l'eau' (T58763). I suppose the latter may be described as a study in delicate pianissimos, and the instrument certainly reproduces these with extraordinary fidelity. The Strauss work is rich and beautiful—a joy to hear. At times the tone is reduced to such a point that one almost waits for some notes to miss their speech—but waits in vain. By way of contrast, Grainger's paraphrase on Tchaikovsky's 'Valse des Fleurs,' played by Leon Delafosse (T50736), covers the entire range of the pianoforte in a most brilliant way, and gives us some real pianistic 'spanks,' followed by a startling pianissimo. For power and variety of tone I know of no roll to better this.

A Bach Toccata, in G (T51725), played by Paula Hegner, and a Scarlatti Gigue in the same key (T51208), recorded by Ernesto Consolo, are both delightful little pieces, in which the tone, naturally on the small side, is controlled in delicate crescendos; crisp accent and well-marked rhythm are also in evidence.

Chopin's 'Andante Spianato,' from Op. 22 (T55755), is a marvel of delicacy. The left-hand part murmurs like a zephyr, while the melody hovers above it in a beautiful cantabile. I will go so far as to suggest that few living pianists could equal the extreme evenness and softness of tone which this roll evokes from the pianoforte.

Two very charming morceaux, elegant both in conception and execution, are Friedman's playing of his own 'Elle Danse' (T52756), and 'Etude d'Oiseaux,' by Bortkiewicz (T50336). Of their kind they are excellent examples.

Animatic (hand-played).—A fine batch of big Bach works calls for much more space than I can command, but the two organ transcriptions deserve special note. They are the Prelude and Fugue in D (55807) and A minor (55808). The first, played by Louis Closson, is too fast for my liking—it seems to lose dignity, which a mere slowing of the tempo does not altogether restore. The arrangement is Busoni's. The A minor is the Liszt arrangement, played by Willy Rehberg in a manner which disarms criticism. At the risk of incurring disagreement, I am willing to assert that these big organ works gain as much as they lose when transcribed for the pianoforte. Volume and length of tone are lost, but what wonderful accent and phrasing may not be introduced !

Backhaus gives us a remarkably fine interpretation of Busoni's arrangement of the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue (51263). I cannot imagine a better performance.

Rudolph Ganz plays Liszt's Variations on Bach's 'Weinen und Klagen' (51332 A and B). The player-pianist needs a good deal of stamina, both mental and physical, to cope with its colossal scale, but the effort is well rewarded.

Some really good light music is to hand called 'Pierrot and Colombine,' by a composer unknown to me, Hugo Kaun (50386 A and B ; 50407). Much of it is beautiful, and has the character of an improvisation, almost always avoiding the commonplace. Richly coloured, melodious, and well-played, I can cordially recommend it.

Wireless Notes

BY 'ARIEL'

The witnesses called by the Broadcasting Committee have not so far put forward much evidence of a constructive value. Mr. Filson Young said some interesting things, though (judging from the condensed report in the daily press) he seemed to blow hot and cold : 'The B.B.C. had carried out its duties marvellously well, considering its difficulties'—a warm tribute to which most of us will say 'Hear, hear !' But—here the temperature drops—'At present broadcasting was conducted too much on the lines of imitation journalism.' But the B.B.C., if it is to give us news, weather reports, &c., can hardly do it in any other way than it does at present, so where is the point of the derogatory 'imitation'? Wireless is merely another form of journalism, with its own advantages and drawbacks. Among the former is its ability to keep pace with events to a degree that makes ordinary journalism a slow and cumbrous medium. While the editor of an evening paper is considering a piece of news with a view to including it in his next edition (which, after all, can only reach a fraction of the population), the wireless announcer can pass it on to millions in less time than is needed to write it down. And he can keep his millions informed of anything worth their knowing until long after the last edition of the evening paper has been read and cast aside in preparation for the next morning's fire-lighting. Think, too, of the hundreds of remote centres where the morning paper arrives late in the day (or even a day late), and the evening paper not at all.

The daily press, by its publication of descriptions and portraits of missing persons and criminals, plays no small part as police auxiliary. But here again, the wireless leaves it standing. Within a few minutes of the commission of a crime the whole of a neighbourhood could be put on the qui vive. As for portraits of suspected persons, the advantage of the press is only temporary. When television is perfected, a crime will be followed so promptly by a broadcasting of the suspect's portrait, that many a wrong 'un will be laid by the heels before he has had time to shave off his moustache, or stick on a false one. As a sleuth, the press will soon be a back number.

Of the beneficent work of the B.B.C. in its issue of special announcements of the S.O.S. type it is impossible to speak too highly. Not many of us can hear, without a thrill of sympathy, and a desire to help, the summoning home of an absent member of a family owing to sudden illness or accident. No other agency can, in a flash, so focus the interest and sympathy of millions. Who can hear an appeal of the sort without hoping that she'll be better to-morrow, or that he'll get home in time?

Wireless has to cry second to the press in two respects, and these are so important as to rule out the possibility of the daily paper being superseded. A newspaper is also a viewspaper, and there are obvious reasons why the B.B.C. will never be able to go beyond the bare announcement of news. Comment on events must always be left to the various organs representing and appealing to different sections of the public. The other matter in which the newspaper scores is, of course, in its permanency. The B.B.C. announcer's voice comes and goes, and leaves behind only such scraps as stick in the memory. You cannot cut or file it.

Coming to the musical side, I feel that Mr. Filson Young did the B.B.C. less than justice :

> In music, all the B.B.C. had attempted was to take a musical performance as it existed already in concert-rooms and theatres, and by means of the microphone to transmit to as many people as possible. That policy could have only a very limited success.

In so far as the reference is to the broadcasting of performances from halls this is true enough. But presumably Mr. Filson Young means that at present the weakness in wireless music lies in the fact that, generally speaking, the medium—type of instrument, orchestration, &c.—is merely that of the concert-room. There is something in this, and he was right when he added that 'all music broadcast should be specially chosen, arranged, and performed with a view to ensuring its suitability to the method employed.' No doubt the B.B.C. is well aware of this, and is making a note of the relative success with which certain instruments and combinations lend themselves to transmission. But many of us will think the speaker exaggerated when he said :

> In the present stage to which wireless apparatus had attained the effect produced by a large orchestra in a concert-room could not be reproduced by a loud-speaker in an ordinary sitting-room. What was produced was an imitation, a sketch, it might be a caricature. The receiving apparatus reproduced fairly faithfully some kinds of sound, while others it badly disturbed or refused to transmit at all.

This is only partially true, for even the most complex orchestral score escapes caricature under ordinary favourable conditions. When conditions are exceptionally good the approach to the real thing is so near that little of value is lost. And even if much of the colour is shed in transit, the 'sketch' is not to be despised—for there is a difference between a sketch and sketchiness, and in music which depends (as so much of the finest music does) on line and texture, we get all that matters most, plus some of the colouring.

As for the apparatus reproducing some kinds of sound 'fairly faithfully,' the expression is an under-statement in the case of stringed, and most wind instruments, heard singly or in small combinations. For example, I broke off in these notes in order to listen to a Mozart Quartet, and the first movement of the Franck, played by the Virtuoso String Quartet (February 11). The difference between the effect viâ wireless and that in a concert-hall was negligible—in fact, the result, in clearness, sonority, nuance, and colour, exceeded many a chamber music performance in a concert-hall. This is surely far more than mere 'imitation,' 'sketch,' or 'fairly faithful' reproduction! On the contrary, it was the real thing, save that the performers were invisible. (I am sure that the virtuosi concerned will not misunderstand me when I add that this was an advantage rather than a drawback.)

One direction in which the B.B.C. scores is in its ability to give us performances of works for instrumental combinations that, for economic and other reasons, rarely get a chance in the concert-room. For example, we have lately had a Mozart Concerto for flute and harp, and a recital of solos for double-bass. It is easy to see that success in this policy may have considerable effect on musical developments by encouraging composers to write for the solo and combined use of some instruments (especially wind) whose possibilities have not yet been fully realised. Who can say what delights there may be in (say) a quartet for oboe, xylophone, horn, and double-bass?

Apropos of the xylophone, I wonder if many readers noticed a peculiarity of the instrument in the solo, 'Sparks,' played on February 7. Above a certain pitch the notes sounded a fourth above the actual pitch. (It may have been a fifth: the music was so rapid as to make one uncertain.) The result was amusing as well as curious. For long stretches the solo instrument and the orchestra were clearly in two keys. I have never noticed this effect when listening to a xylophone in the ordinary way. Perhaps a scientific reader can say whether transmission was responsible. Anyway, the fourths and fifths gave to a trivial piece of music an up-to-date effect that would have tickled such Hucbaldians as Sir Walford Davies, Holst, and Vaughan Williams.

The short pianoforte recitals appear to be very popular, and we may hope that the present short ration of fifteen minutes may be extended. Especially good was the week of old clavier music so delightfully played by Mrs. Norman O'Neill. Above all, Scarlatti and the little bit of our own Thomas Augustine Arne must have been a revelation to many. A kindred feature that was well devised was the group of Toccatas played by Adolphe Hallis on February 11. No lecture on the form could tell us more about it than these four pieces by Galuppi, Scarlatti, Paradies, and Debussy; and perhaps the most interesting point was the way in which Debussy, under all his colour and decoration, joined hands with the older composers. The reading of Browning's poem on 'A Toccata of Galuppi' was a happy thought. Browning must have heard one of the old composer's works: how if it happened to be this very one? Here is the kind of stimulating and imaginative touch that the concert-room can never give us.

An annoying feature in some of these recitals calls for an emphatic growl. The first of the Beethoven series consisted of Sonata No. 1, in F minor, down to the end of the Minuet and Trio, the final Prestissimo being reserved for the following evening, when it was bracketed with the first movement of the C major! Such an absurd arrangement might have been avoided by a cutting of the repeats in the F minor, plus an extension of the time—an extension that always seems to be forthcoming for all sorts of feeble items. Two minutes would have been enough if the repeats had been dropped. After all, these repeats are usually a mere convention of the period, and composers often put them in with little thought, if we may judge from their bad effect in certain works where an emotional climax makes a restatement inadvisable. In one of the Mozart recitals we had a very bad case of pedantic regard for such marks. Every section of the well-known variations in A was repeated, the result being that here again there was no time for the Finale. This is just one of the small and easily-avoidable annoyances that bother one out of all proportion to their size.

Points from Lectures

Outstanding among recent lectures has been the series endowed by Miss Cramb at Glasgow University. This season the lecturer is Mr. Gustav Holst, and he has drawn crowded audiences on each occasion. The fact that the Scottish Orchestra—in which long ago he played 'second trombone'—was about to give concerts at Glasgow, decided Mr. Holst to act as forerunner, and to base some of the lectures on their programmes. At others he had the assistance of a vocalist, pianists, and the Glasgow Bach Orchestra, besides players in the chamber music examples. The sixth lecture may here be mentioned as a specimen of Mr. Holst's plan. He took the Scottish Orchestra's Wagner concert selections as a peg on which to hang an interesting talk about the composer's scoring, its inevitability and richness, as well as its earlier and later characteristics. It was seen that the Wagner of the re-written Coda of 'The Flying Dutchman' Overture was the Wagner of 'Tristan'—not a different man, but the same man with an enormously enlarged musical vocabulary and strength. Besides its rich, intense colour, a characteristic was its amazing originality. The passion of the work was something that had never happened before in music. There was no end to the tune; one phrase glided into the other for four hours. In similar fashion, and in greater detail, Mr. Holst treated the Scottish Orchestra Wagner programme, and proceeded to consider Wagner's use of the orchestra in general. Later, he commented on selections from 'The Planets.' Usually, he said, only three or four of the seven numbers were heard, and it was partly his own fault, as he had conducted incomplete performances which ended with 'Jupiter'—that was, with a happy ending. The complete cycle of seven 'Planets' had not a happy ending at all. The audience could imagine how a novelist would feel if certain novels were brought out which ended in the middle, at a happy moment. 'The Planets' was scored for a very large orchestra, on a pre-war design. Mr. Holst was not concerned as to whether it was modern or old; what interested him was whether the orchestration of a composer grew out of what he was expressing.

Scotland has had a feast of lectures during the month. Aberdeen now has music lectures under the auspices of the University. Mr. Willan Swainson's present plan is to follow through the periods of musical history. The greatest of all periods of British music, he said, was the madrigal period. The polyphonic age was the choral age, but towards its close the ever-increasing use of instruments caused composers to endeavour to find the most favourable setting for these new factors in musical expression. In the moulding of style they either adopted the choral manner of writing, or exploited the possibilities of rapid movement which the virginals afforded, and for their forms they relied either upon the already popular dance measures, or, taking a well-known tune, they attempted to present it in as many guises as possible.

Pipe music repels or attracts according to the nativity of the hearer. Ardent Scots have been keenly interested in the report of a lecture prepared by the Rev. Neil Ross, and given before the Aberdeen University Celtic Society. It must have entailed life-long research. The classical period of the pipes ended about 1700, or shortly afterwards; the pibrochs produced after the '45 were merely re-echoes of the old masters. An imitative school arose at a later date. The old verbal notation has been revived in a good book of 'Ceol Mor,' just published by the Piobaireachd Society. In the schools of the old masters, the playing of marches or any other 'small music,' such as strathspeys, reels, jigs, or even folk-melodies or airs of songs, was strictly prohibited.

While the Rev. Neil Ross laments that the glory of the bagpipes has departed, the Rev. J. L. Robertson, in a lecture at Culter, finds there is room for new genius in Scottish music:

> In orchestral work [he said] we have not got past the fantasia. Our overtures are only simple melodies strung together by a few bars of musical interlude. We await someone who will compose symphonies, concertos, overtures, and the like which will reveal the national characteristics and be an artistic whole.

While giving credit for the lyrical heritage of the Scot, the Aberdeen Press says:

> The weakness of Scottish music is that it lacks the urbanity and—shall we say?—culture that seem inherent in English lyrical music, whether from Arne, Lawes, or Purcell, or such moderns as the late Arthur Sullivan, Martin Shaw, and Roger Quilter.

Although Dr. Vaughan Thomas had a small audience when he lectured before the City of Cardiff Male-Voice Choir, his hearers listened to an enthusiastic address on Schubert, with beautiful illustrations. His reflections and asides were interesting:

> Much of modern song writing was not art but artifice, so lacking in melody that composers were never certain what key they were in. Welshmen make the mistake of exaggerating the value of the voice, neglecting the music. If the world to-day could get another Schubert it would soften life and restore the spirit of brotherly love.

Visiting Wolverhampton to lecture on 'Musical Appreciation,' Mr. Percy Scholes said that during his visit to America he found that that country was ahead of us in its finer schools, its school orchestras, and its equipment for the teaching of music, but that it was lamentably behind in the matter of taste. It was falling behind in musical appreciation, and perhaps that was the explanation. There was a common idea that listening to music was a very easy occupation, but after composer and performer had done their share, the listener must work also. We must get rid of the idea that work was opposed to pleasure.

Significance may be found in the decision of Dr. Vaughan Thomas to follow Sir Walford Davies, with a course of six lectures on similar lines to the lecture given by Sir Walford to Swansea University College Music Society on 'Mozart and Schubert—Melodists.' Dr. Thomas is Chairman of the Welsh Music Board, which opposed Teutonic influences. Apparently common ground has been found in the brotherhood of great melodists. Speaking about Mozart, at Newport, Sir Walford Davies said:

> If there ever was a composer who put the right note in the right place at the right time it was Mozart, and it was not surprising that his melodic singing style should have found its way into Welsh composers' works in the 18th century, as the manuscripts of the time clearly showed, though it was probable that the influence there was due more to Haydn than to Mozart. Still, the charm of the style had spread all over the world.

Dr. Thomas, at Cardiff, as quoted above, spoke of the similar influence of Schubert.

'People would not stand repetition, as a rule, of modern works.' This concluding remark showed the attitude of Dr. Henry Coward in his lecture at the Royal Institution, Hull, on 'Music in relation to Art.' The speaker's life-long work and performances were progressive, but on well-ordered lines. He wished to give stability to the conception of music. In the early years of this century a new school of critics arose who were dissatisfied with convention, and figuratively said, 'Let's have a splash, a crash, anything to make things hum.' The trend towards ugliness in music was excused because the ear could become accustomed to anything. But from Bach and Purcell to Parry, Elgar, and Bantock, progress had been enriched by the individual notes of composers without being revolutionary or cranky. The claims of music's regenerators must be examined when they said:

> Bach is an old fossil, Handel should be buried for thirty years, Mozart only wrote piffle, Beethoven should be knocked off his pedestal, Gounod was contemptible, and Wagner had not composed a bar of real music.

The idea of new scales having been started, all kinds of freak scales by crankish musicians had been adumbrated as the real elixir of musical life. The summit of the aspirations of the reformers was reached in their declaration that 'music should be independent of and free from emotion.' After all, old standards of art, as in morality, still remained, and would persist in spite of slight occasional lapses from the normal. Music as an art was the spiritual expression of the soul, and they must each do their bit to maintain its highest ideals of beauty.

'Style and Quality in String Quartet Playing' was a subject that Mr. James Brown, was able to illustrate well with the aid of the Dunstable String Quartet, at the Bristol Musical Club. For such playing the audience was not essential; it was a game for those engaged in it. The lecturer remarked that academies and many teachers followed wrong methods, or we as a nation would have made more progress in music. Take the metronome, he said, and drop a hammer on it. If a player had a proper idea of the real meaning of a piece of music, he should have no use for the tick-tack going on in an instrument standing on the pianoforte. A quartet should be a team of soloists who were trying to unify themselves. There were moments in music where absolute precision was indispensable, but slavish attention to mere precision was fatal to good musical art.

Baird Lectures on 'Music in Church Worship' are regularly given at Glasgow. At the latest available for report in this issue, the Rev. Dr. Wauchope Stewart discussed the kind of music suited for use. 'What outrages,' he said, 'had not been condoned in the name of popularity in our Church music. But that the people could appreciate and delight in what was good was shown by the folk-song in the secular and the Psalm-tune in the spiritual sphere, which held their place in the heart of the people, while the music-hall ditty or the revival melody, after a passing vogue, was soon forgotten.'

In a lecture-recital on Chopin, at Dublin, Miss Grace O'Brien said that 'throughout his life Chopin never wavered from his allegiance to Bach and Mozart. Only the earlier works of Beethoven made any appeal to him, while Schumann's work aroused in him no interest at all. Chopin's mode of expression was lyrical—his themes were chosen with a nice sense of blend and contrast, and his climaxes were dramatic and inevitable. There was a wonderful richness of colour, and his tonal effects differed from Beethoven's—partly the outcome of differences between the personalities of the men, but to a great extent because of improvements in the pianoforte, which lent itself to new developments.'

J. G.

SIR ROBERT PRESCOTT STEWART

1825—1894

In connection with the centenary of Sir Robert Stewart's birth, Dr. C. H. Kitson gave a lecture at Trinity College, Dublin, on December 10. We are indebted to Dr. Kitson for kind permission to print copious extracts from the lecture.

As an organist, Stewart had a very high reputation. He played at the Great Exhibition in 1851, and at Manchester in 1857. There the Church of St. Peter was famed for its organ recitals, and Sir Frederick Bridge records having heard Best, E. J. Hopkins, Smart, Parratt, and Stewart. Sir Charles Stanford, who was once a pupil of Stewart, says he was the first organist in Ireland to phrase with his feet: he 'bowed' pedal passages as carefully as if played by 'cellos. He refused to add appoggiature to chords—a trick common at that time in cathedrals and churches—and to herald the beginning of a Te Deum or Magnificat with a preliminary bump on the pedals, to warn the choir when to begin. His technique was brilliant, and sometimes led him astray. It is said that when he was bored by some dull anthem, he would fill up the organ score with all sorts of extemporaneous florid passages, much to the discomfort of the singers, who had to keep their places in the unfamiliar texture. It is remarkable that his treatment of Bach was really an anticipation of the principles of phrasing laid down by Schweitzer. In other words, he 'bowed' Bach. It may be that in some cases there was a loss of dignity in style, but there was a great gain in brilliance and definition. He excelled in his orchestral treatment of the organ. At that time there was not much pure organ music to be obtained; even when I was a boy we were usually given Handel's choruses to play. Stewart took orchestral works and transcribed them for the organ at sight from the full score. It seems to us rather inappropriate to hear the Overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' in church; but, judged merely as a musical performance, it must have been a source of great delight, for the chances of hearing orchestras at Dublin were very scanty. The brilliancy of the playing led people to forget and forgive the secularity of the music performed. Stanford, I think, was somewhat influenced in his organ-playing by his work with Stewart. He frequently played transcriptions of orchestral works, and of his playing at Trinity College, Cambridge, the Master said: 'Mr. Stanford's playing always charms, and occasionally astonishes; and I may add that the less it astonishes, the more it charms.'

Stewart's musical memory was quite remarkable. It is said that he generally played the complete service without any music before him (Rogers in F and D). At a performance of 'Samson,' at Belfast, there was no orchestra, and he played the accompaniments on the organ. When the tenor began 'Total eclipse,' Stewart's eyes gave out, and he accompanied the remainder from memory. No one knew anything about it till the close of Part 1. On another occasion he played the shake for the flute at the end of 'O rest in the Lord' on the middle B of the stave. The singer protested that it should be an octave higher, but Stewart proved he was right by producing the score. He also detected an error in orchestral treatment made by Stainer at St. Paul's when he was accompanying Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul.' Dr. Culwick says that he was pre-eminent as an extemporiser. And, speaking of extempore playing, Stewart said to him that he did 'not think it possible that any man could worthily play extempore who could not, if called upon, put his thoughts down, and in good form, upon paper.' That of course is sound argument. Stewart had probably suffered much from hearing fingers 'wandering idly over the noisy keys.'

Stewart's duties as an organist must have been very onerous. Stanford in his 'Pages from an Unwritten Diary' thus describes the Sunday work: 'One organist and one choir did duty for three of them [i.e., Trinity, Christ Church, and St. Patrick's]: Trinity at 9.30 a.m., Christ Church at 11 a.m., St. Patrick's at 3.0 p.m., and Christ Church again in the evening. At Trinity, after the Anthem, the choir all decamped out of chapel, and made off hot-foot for the Cathedral, dropping four or five singers on the way to do duty at the Chapel Royal. They all combined at 3.0 for Paddy's Opera, and those that had any voice left dissipated the remains of it in the evening at Christ Church.'

As I have just quoted from Stanford, I may state here that he always acknowledged his debt to Stewart for what he knew about orchestration. And I may add another quotation from Stanford. Referring to the fact that Stewart was self-taught, he says: 'He evolved his own organ playing, his own knowledge of orchestration in particular and composition in general, his own general familiarity with the literature of European countries. How he did it is a mystery to me, for his grasp of every detail of contemporary progress was unmistakable, and he certainly had no one to teach him at home. To this spontaneous bringing up was probably due a certain carelessness of detail and irresponsible love of ornamental incrustations upon familiar masterpieces which were calculated to shock the accurate artist.'

In estimating Stewart's worth as a composer, it is very necessary to take into account the general state of music in his time, and also his own particular environment.

Standards and ideals were low both in England and Ireland. Stewart towered head and shoulders above everyone else in Ireland, and in England only a few were his equals. His work, therefore, was apt to be appraised at more than its actual value. It was so much better than the work of his immediate predecessors. This is not to underrate Stewart's ability. He had quite outstanding ability: but there was no one to criticize what he did. It was all wonderful in comparison with other work. If he had had the opportunity of foreign study that fell to the lot of Stanford, he would have been a very great man. His work is always melodious and facile, and his technique generally sound. He could write fugal choruses in a very spontaneous manner. They are, perhaps, too spontaneous, for one can generally imagine what is coming. This implies some lack of depth and individuality. His Church music is generally somewhat secular in style. This was probably his revolt against the dry work of previous generations.

The problem of finding a type of independent organ accompaniment to anthems and services that is not secular in style is not an easy one to solve. The fact that Stewart tackled it at all is greatly to his credit. If he sometimes failed it may be said that not only did his contemporaries often fail, but also many composers of a later period. He was a great admirer of the work of S. S. Wesley, and even he had his weak moments in this respect. Speaking of Wesley's work, Dr. Walker says, 'Whenever the accompaniment does more than double the voices it is (except in a mere handful of instances) commonplace in texture.' This is equally true of Stewart. The solo quartet in the anthem, 'The King shall rejoice,' is ruined by a trite accompaniment of triplet chords familiar in ballads. Again, 'Thou, O God, art praised in Sion,' is first-rate till we come to the tenor solo with its accompaniment of arpeggios and detached chords.

This and a certain lack of depth of feeling are rather serious faults in work otherwise brilliant in technique and often charming in melodic ideas.

The writing of glees suited his genius and capabilities much better. In this department he won many prizes and great renown, and I think it is fairly obvious that if he had had proper opportunities for study, he would have been even more distinguished as an operatic composer. It is most unfortunate that so many of Stewart's works are unavailable. Some were burnt by himself, others by publishers; but I gather from Dr. Culwick's paper that a fair amount still remains in manuscript, including some of his best work. Among these Stanford mentions 'a short choral work, "Echo and the Lovers," a little gem of its mock-antique kind.'

Stewart travelled a great deal. From the year 1857 onwards he went every summer to some English or Continental musical centre. He went to Bayreuth in 1876 for the first performance of 'The Ring,' and when he came back he told Dr. Mahaffy that they were all out-of-date and that the music of Wagner was the music of the future. The articles which he wrote for the Dublin Daily Express are said to be among the best which appeared at the time. This leads me to add a few final words on his literary work. As a lecturer he was very popular, and had the gift of treating highly technical matters in an attractive and even amusing manner. It is to his credit that in these lectures he laid special stress on the point that music was well able to hold its own with other spheres of intellectual activity, as being worthy of the attention of the keenest intellects. He would have rejoiced to know that at the present time it is one of the subjects for the B.A. degree in several English universities.

(Continued on page 245.)

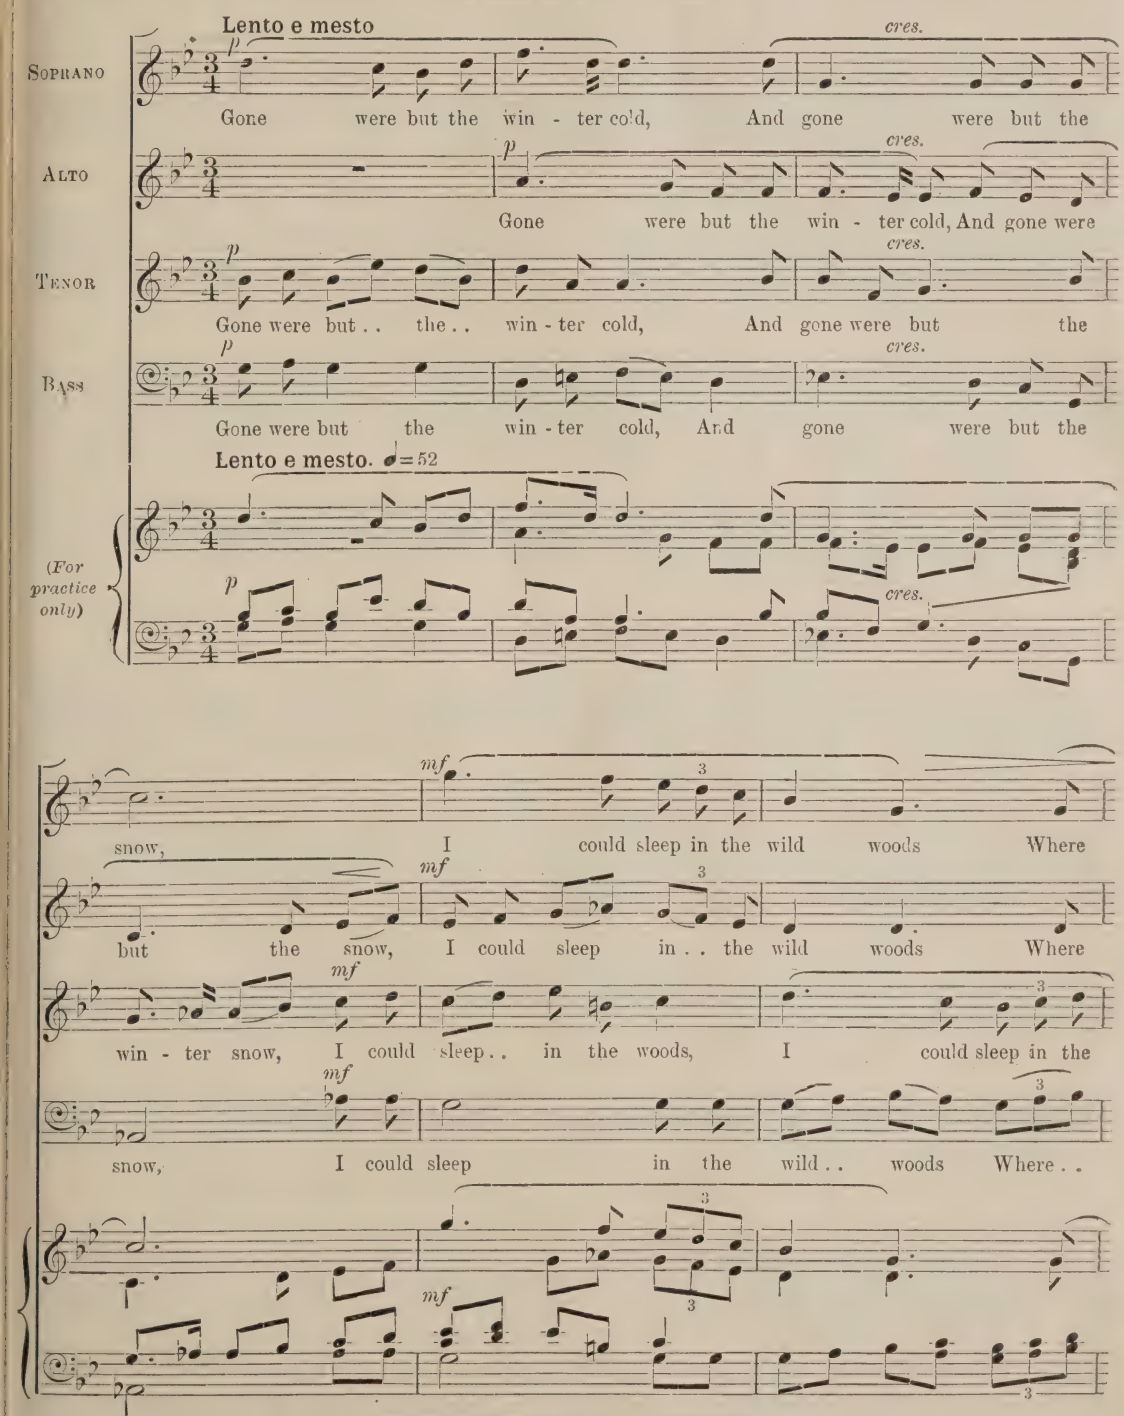
The Spring of the Year

FOUR-PART SONG

Words by Allan Cunningham, 1784—1842 Music by Ethel Boyce

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Lento e mesto
Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
Gone were but the win - ter cold, And gone were but the Gone were but . . the . . win - ter cold, And gone were but the Gone were but the win - ter cold, And gone were but the
cres.
Lento e mesto. ♩=52
(For practice only)
mf
snow, I could sleep in the wild woods Where but the snow, I could sleep in . . the wild woods Where win - ter snow, I could sleep . . in the woods, I could sleep in the snow, I could sleep in the wild . . woods Where . .

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

prim-ro-ses blow.
prim-ro-ses blow, where prim-ro-ses blow. Cold's the snow at my wild woods Where prim-ro-ses blow. Cold's the snow at . . my prim - ro - ses . . blow. Cold's the snow, cold at my Cold's the snow at my head, And cold at my feet; And the cres. molto e sempre
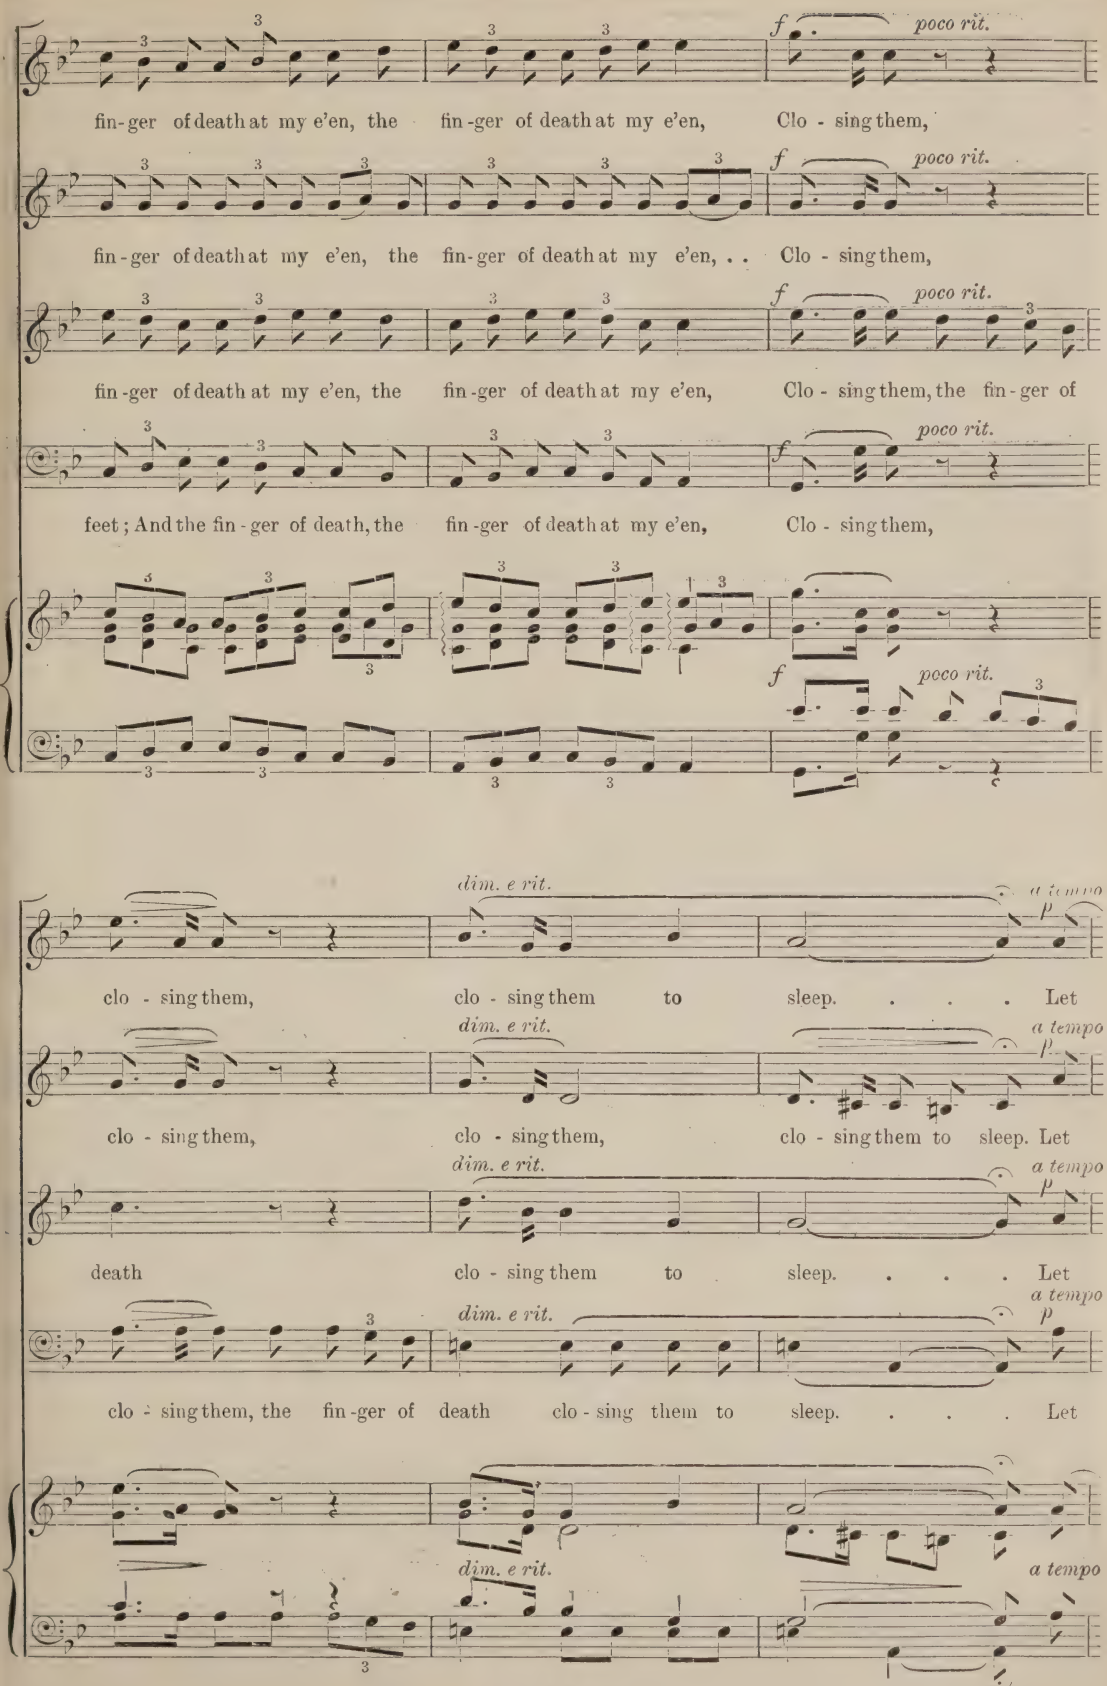
poco agitato head, And cold, ... and cold the snow . . at my feet; And the head, And cold at my feet, and cold at my feet; And the head, And cold's the . . snow at my feet, and cold at my . .



f poco rit.
fin-ger of death at my e'en, the fin-ger of death at my e'en, Clo - sing them, fin-ger of death at my e'en, the fin-ger of death at my e'en, . . Clo - sing them, fin-ger of death at my e'en, the fin-ger of death at my e'en, Clo - sing them, the fin-ger of feet; And the fin-ger of death, the fin-ger of death at my e'en, Clo - sing them, dim. e rit.
a tempo
p clo - sing them, clo - sing them to sleep. . . . Let clo - sing them, clo - sing them, clo - sing them to sleep. Let death clo - sing them to sleep. . . . Let clo - sing them, the fin-ger of death clo - sing them to sleep. . . . Let

pp none tell my fa - ther Or my mo - ther so dear,— I'll
pp none tell my fa - ther Or my mo - ther so dear,— I'll
pp none tell my fa - ther Or my mo - ther so dear,— I'll
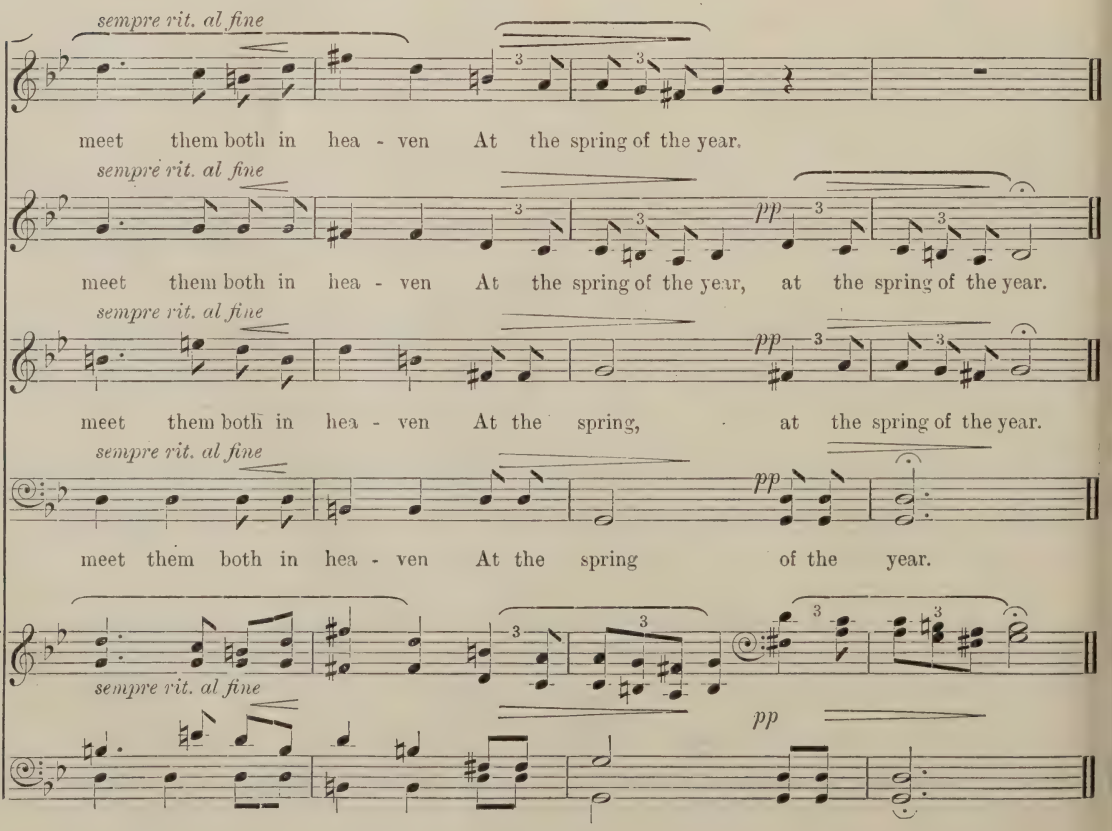
pp none tell my fa - ther Or my mo - ther so dear,— I'll
pp



sempre rit. al fine
meet them both in hea - ven At the spring of the year.
sempre rit. al fine
pp
meet them both in hea - ven At the spring of the year, at the spring of the year.
sempre rit. al fine
pp meet them both in hea - ven At the spring, at the spring of the year.
sempre rit. al fine
pp
meet them both in hea - ven At the spring of the year.
sempre rit. al fine
pp

(Continued from page 240.)

He gave in all about forty lectures, on such subjects as 'Irish Music,' 'Church Music,' 'National Music in relation to Modern Musical Art,' and 'Musical Education: by what means can National Education in Music best be promoted?' I have read this lecture, delivered at the meeting of the Social Science Congress at Dublin, in 1881, and I will repeat here his summary. Some of the things he mentions have been done; others remain to be accomplished:

(1.) Historical concerts.
(2.) Lectures on the scientific and philosophical aspects of music.
(3.) A better style of pianoforte teaching, with more attention to sight-playing, and the knowledge of classical form.
(4.) The inclusion of sight-singing as a regular part of the course at every school in the country.
(5.) A resident orchestral band of sixty performers to refine and guide the taste of the public.
(6.) A good concert-hall, and a really fine organ erected there.
(7.) The inclusion of music as a voluntary subject in the curriculum of the universities.
(8.) Some authorised qualification for teachers of music.
(9.) The means for adequately trying over, and, if found worthy, producing in public the works of young composers, who are now placed at a great disadvantage by the impossibility of their works being heard.

You have on Leinster Lawn a statue of Sir Robert Stewart, which stands for ever as a memorial of his worth. You have on the walls of Christ Church Cathedral a monument bearing this inscription:

'To the glory of God, and in memory of Robert Prescott Stewart, Knt., Doctor of Music. Trained as a Chorister in the Cathedral School, he was appointed Organist at the age of 18, and continued in that post during 50 years. His name stands foremost among the many who, for seven centuries, devoted their musical talents to the Service of God within this Ancient Sanctuary. Upright in life, and modest in spirit, he gained the warm affection of a large circle of friends, and universal honour and respect. A brilliant Organist and Composer, he impressed his genius on the Use and Mode of Services in this Cathedral Church, and enriched its library with many noble Compositions. Born 1825. He entered into his rest on Easter Eve, 1894.'

These are fitting memorials of a great man. But doubtless the best memorial that could be erected to him, and one that would most assuredly have pleased him best, would be the completion of that scheme for promoting national education in music which he promulgated in 1881, and which is set out above. Firstly, a resident orchestra; secondly, a concert hall; and thirdly, a fund—like the Ernest Palmer Fund in England—for paying the expenses of the rehearsing of unpublished orchestral works by young native composers. All these things cannot be accomplished at once: but may we not hope that the Centenary of Robert Prescott Stewart will give the stimulus for the consummation of his ideals?

At Lincoln Cathedral, on January 28, a festival service took place, the choral works being Bach's Christmas Oratorio and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas carols. An unusual feature at a service of this kind was the performance of a pianoforte concerto, Miss Dorothy Hess playing the Schumann work. The orchestra and choir numbered two hundred and fifty, the former being composed chiefly of members of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra and a few local players, and the choir being made up of Cathedral choristers and members of the Lincoln Musical Society. The building was crowded, and the performance reached a high standard. Dr. G. J. Bennett conducted, and Mr. W. W. Hewitt, assistant-organist of the Cathedral, was at the organ.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The Choir-Training Examinations will be held as follows:

CHM. Diploma Examination on Tuesday, May 11; and the Certificate Examination on Wednesday, May 12. Last day of entry, April 14.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given on March 13: at Exeter, by Dr. Ernest Bullock, and at Leeds, by Dr. E. C. Bairstow.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

The recently-elected Fellows and Associates were presented with their Diplomas on January 23, by Dr. H. W. Richards, President of the College. Amongst those present were Sir Ernest Palmer, Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine, and Mr. W. H. Leslie (Vice-Presidents), and the following members of the Council: Dr. W. G. Alcock, Mr. H. L. Balfour, Prof. P. C. Buck, Mr. E. T. Cook, Mr. G. D. Cunningham, Dr. H. E. Darke, Mr. Edward d'Evry, Dr. Eaglefield Hull, Dr. Henry G. Ley, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Mr. Stanley Roper, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Dr. Davan Wetton, and Dr. H. A. Harding (hon. secretary).

There was a very large attendance of members and friends, and every seat in the Concert-Room was filled before the proceedings began.

THE PRESIDENT, who was cordially received, said: It is a real delight to us to see so many here in spite of the inclement weather. I do not want to keep you very long by introductory remarks, but there are one or two matters to which I should like to refer. First of all we offer our congratulations to Sir Herbert Brewer on his being made a Knight by His Majesty the King. It is an interesting fact that the four musical knights who have recently received this honour at His Majesty's hands have been members of this Council. There were Sir Walford Davies, Sir Richard Terry, Sir Ivor Atkins, and now Sir Herbert Brewer, and one of our vice-presidents has been made a C.V.O., in the person of Sir Hugh Allen. We congratulate him also. I do not know whether all the distinguished people who have promised to come this afternoon are here, but I see Mr. Cart de Lafontaine—he has always taken such an interest in the College. I wish he knew how keen the candidates were to win his prize, which is a very valuable and encouraging one. We also welcome Sir Ernest Palmer and one of our new vice-presidents, Mr. W. H. Leslie, who has done much for village musical festivals. I have a letter from Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who unfortunately has a bad cold, which prevents him from being present to-day; and Mr. J. B. McEwen, the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, would have been here, but he has to preside at a concert at the Royal Academy this afternoon. I will now call upon Dr. Harding to make a preliminary announcement before we proceed with the programme.

DR. HARDING: It is my usual pleasant duty to tell you how many people entered for the examination, and how many failed! For the Fellowship there were sixty-eight entries, and five passed; for the Associateship there were a hundred and fifty-two candidates, and thirty passed—a pretty good average. The Lafontaine Fellowship Prize was won by Mr. E. A. Smith (Harpenden). The Turpin Prize was not awarded—I suppose nobody reached the required standard. The Lafontaine Associateship Prize, I am delighted to say, was won by a lady this time, Miss J. P. H. Cook (Chesham Bois). The Associate Sawyer Prize went to Mr. D. S. Williams, of London, who is a blind candidate from the Royal Normal College, Norwood. Will you allow me to mention two things which are on my mind? First of all, I wish to say something about cinema organists. Hitherto, I am afraid, musicians have rather passed by on the other side when there was a cinema organ in question, but the Council feels that cinema organists are working very hard to maintain their artistic position, and that it is within the province of the R.C.O. to offer them sympathy and encouragement, and to try to help them to raise their profession, in the exercise of which they can do a lot of harm or an immense amount of good. The R.C.O. should foster the best side of their work. To this end we are arranging to have some lectures at this College by eminent cinema organists, who will play illustrations on the organ. I do not know how they will do this on the College organ, but cinema organists adapt themselves to almost anything, whether in the plot or on their particular instrument, and I am sure we shall all learn a good deal from what they tell us. Another subject which I wish to mention is Choir-Training. It is a long way from cinema organ playing to choir-training! But both have to be done well, if done at all. We were told from all parts of the United Kingdom, that we ought to institute some examinations in choir-training. After much consideration and many hours of committee work, we formulated a scheme of examinations, specially designed to meet the suggestions put forward by the Archbishops' Committee on Church Music. We spent a large sum of money on lectures and propaganda, but the result has been very disappointing. It is now a question of giving up these examinations, or of persevering a little longer with the hope that the clergy and church musicians will realise the importance of this movement. There are two choir-training examinations, one for Diploma holders only—the CHM.—and the other of a much simpler character open to all, successful candidates at which receive a Certificate. There are organists who cannot, because of expense or for some other reason, get the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O., and are, therefore, debarred from our CHM. diploma, but any choirmaster who can do his job can get the Certificate. With regard to proficiency as an organist he is only asked to play a hymn-tune on the manuals—he need not use the pedals, not even the Swell pedal! We are sending lecturers into the provinces to stir up interest in this matter. It is my experience that organists themselves often require something to show that they really can train a choir, and in many cases it will be a very useful thing to possess the Certificate of the R.C.O.

MR. CART DE LAFONTAINE: May I say just one word. It is Dr. Harding's fault, because he has spoken about the cinema in regard to the organ, and that is a subject in which I am particularly interested. I am afraid he hints at rather a decadent condition in our art, but we are obliged to confess that a man can earn more by playing in a cinema than in a church, and that is a fact we have got to face. I was at Edinburgh a few weeks ago, and heard a very clever English musician play upon one of the new Wurlitzer organs at a cinema in that city. He was a complete master of the intricate instrument. Costly organs are being erected everywhere, and the services of the highest artists are engaged.

THE PRESIDENT: It is the unfortunate lot of the President to say something on a serious subject at these meetings, and I propose to offer you some observations on

THE STUDY OF MUSICAL HISTORY

From time to time students have brought forward a variety of reasons why it is quite unnecessary for them to study musical history. They boldly assert that there is more than enough to learn of a practical nature; that everything is changed from what it was formerly; and they ask: 'What possible bearing can the history of the past have on the work of the future?' If their idea of history reduces itself to barren facts, such as a string of dates, titles of works, or trivial incidents in the life of a Master, then their contentions are valid. Some of the old examination papers may have been responsible for these perfectly futile excuses, but surely the power of historical knowledge, in the widest sense, is such that every musician however eminent is helped and guided by it. The most renowned, even an original genius, must build on foundations laid in the past; they only can extend and enlarge the base, or add more stories to the building. Although a student may be unaware of it, or too egotistical to admit it, he must feed upon the products of other human minds, and these act, or should act, as an incentive, constraining him to put forth his finest efforts. The profound thoughts which have been revealed in the works of the great are a potent force, and are of immense consequence to us through life. The old Masters are conspicuous examples of this, for not one of them was ignorant of the writings of either a predecessor or a contemporary. Even the superhuman Bach voluntarily took the infinite pains of copying out works which he was soon completely to out-distance in technique, originality, and depth. It is presumptuous for anyone to imagine that he can take his part in the development of a growing art if he is ignorant of how it grew from primitive times, and how it has been brought to its present pitch by the combined labours of those who have gone before and who have left their mark. No one is sufficient unto himself, nor can he stand alone. There is always some past personality whose influence he particularly feels, and who, musically, is his guide, philosopher, and friend. A man, perhaps unconsciously, chooses a model in history to whom he is specially drawn. He will either surround his thoughts with the profound or with the superficial. The latter may be temporarily attractive, but will, in the end, prove specious and delusive. Shallow thinkers are often lured away by the brilliant and the meretricious who have no quality of permanence. Such writers either dazzle by bizarre effects, or interest us by skilful contrivances; they may advance technical possibilities by their ingenuity, but that will be their limit. The student is urged to take his stand on firmer ground, and select those whose works have been tried in the furnace of criticism and found to be pure gold. The dross, of which there is a quantity in every age, will inevitably find its way to the scrap-heap. We should first of all disabuse ourselves of the notion that in order to study history aright it is necessary to wade through ponderous volumes. Such a procedure mostly leads to aimless theorising. The essence of the matter is a thorough and intimate knowledge of the works of the great Masters. By the careful study of these one can gain views on symmetry, design, and æsthetic principles; one can follow the purport, the mental growth and development; discriminate between the different styles of music, and perceive how each classic has contributed its share to the advance of true art. The Royal College of Organists is doing its best to encourage this attitude towards the study of history, not only by setting questions on definite periods, and asking for musical examples, but by demanding the critical understanding of a classical score. The history of music is of engrossing human interest. Besides the charm of knowing the origin and perhaps the chequered career of various masterpieces, there is a fascination in following great men in their struggles, industry, and temptations, their combat with financial anxieties; how they were undaunted by discouragement, and undeterred by disappointment. We may even strengthen our own character by endeavouring to avoid their blemishes and shortcomings. It is melancholy to read how constantly they were misunderstood and their great creations under-estimated from lack of comprehension. At the same time it is amazing that so much was achieved in spite of the limitations and disadvantages of the conditions in bygone days. The mystery inherent in the creative power of a supreme genius is beyond our finite brains. In this we have to be humble, for no probing, however deep, will bring us any enlightenment. I ask those who tell us that a study of history is of no use, to imagine what the position would be to-day if there had been no Bach. Can anyone conjecture what course music would have taken? Can they picture our tentative efforts if there had been no Beethoven—no Wagner? We should be groping about waiting for the appearance of other pioneers to point the way. It would be like removing the supports from a great building; take away the pillars of our art, and chaos supervenes. In beginning the study of history it would be wise to concentrate our attention on outstanding epochs, for all important movements show astonishing cerebral vitality. One must try and trace development from stage to stage, and see 'how each age, working out the gifts of the last, transmits its labours to the next'; but in order to apprehend the influence of one age upon another, a close acquaintance with the products of both ages is essential. Again, there is nothing more absorbing than to investigate and learn how a craft can give a striking impetus to art. For instance, the Amatis, Stradivarius, and the brothers Guarnerius, by their consummate craftsmanship produced musical instruments which made possible all nuances, and the most elaborate modern violin music. Analogous to this is the rise of our own instrument, the organ, from its crude beginnings. It does not need the penetrating mind of the scientist, or the learning of a scholar, to realise what the inventions and perfect workmanship of such men as Father Schmidt, Renatus Harris, and Father Willis, have done for organ music. The most exacting and intricate compositions can now be played with complete effect, and without physical fatigue. By knowing more of past history we shall have a clearer vision of what our art ought to be ; its significance and its aims. We shall be better able to distinguish the purposeful and solid from the insipid and effervescent. This knowledge will enable us to form impartial judgments, and to learn what are the canons of good taste ; it will show us how to reverence tradition, without being fettered by it ; it will also be a mental training, and help in the cultivation of the mind. We have always to remember that we are responsible for our own intellectual life ! It is a truism that history is not confined entirely to the past ; the experimental productions of our own age give us much food for thought. It is an interesting study to try to fathom in what way present-day compositions are likely to influence the art, and whither they are tending. In this connection I would observe that one can learn much by reading serious critiques on the music of to-day, but a critic's opinions would carry little weight had he not adequate historical knowledge at his back. The more we are steeped in history, the more we can keep the finest models in front of us and grasp fundamental principles, the better able we shall be to form individual judgments with certainty and in true perspective. There will always be different points of view, but it is for us to exercise our intellectual faculties to substantiate our findings or to support our assertions. History will help us to give reasons for the 'faith that is in us.' We must never allow emotion to pervert sound sense. Here history again will act as a corrective, preventing us from becoming merely emotional, and giving us balance of mind. Musical history is many-sided, and we shall be obliged to consider it from various aspects—environment, personal characteristics, different conditions prevailing at different times. It is impossible to appraise the writings of every composer from the same standpoint. The outlook, character, and temperament of the Anglo-Saxon, the Teutonic, the Slav, and the Latin races are frequently as wide apart as the North and South Poles. Again, we shall in our research discover the impossibility of defining in every case ; there are many things in Art which are intangible and defy definition. As we become immersed in the works of the great we shall unconsciously absorb their spirit, but this can be felt only if we possess the full sympathy that comes from knowledge. The study of musical history, rightly undertaken, becomes a living force in our training. Our education will be lamentably incomplete without it, and those who neglect or despise it will be poorer in mental equipment, and less able to add their quota to the advance of art. I cannot do better than finish with the words of Sir Hubert Parry. He says :

> 'The source of a man's art is not merely within him, but its beauty and strength are due to what he gains from intercourse with musical ideas, and the common interests and efforts of mankind.'

PRESENTATION OF DIPLOMAS

DR. RICHARDS next presented the Diplomas. (The names of the successful candidates appeared in the February number of the Musical Times, p. 151.)

PROF. P. C. BUCK : I have been asked to propose a vote of thanks to the President for his able address and for the work he does for this College, and it is a very great pleasure to do so. I am one of the regular attendants at the Council meetings, and so can tell you at first hand what an excellent President he is. I should say that everybody in this room has had to serve at one time or another on some form of committee, and they will know how the whole pleasure and happiness of such gatherings depend on the attributes of the chairman. You can have a President who is rated high in his own profession by his brother professionals, and it is an even more excellent thing when you have a President of individual charm, but the best thing of all is to have one who is both ; and that is what we have in Dr. Richards.

THE PRESIDENT : I have to thank Prof. Buck most warmly for his kind and generous words. I appreciate them when they come from so eminent an authority as Prof. Buck. You all know that he holds a very distinguished position, and that he is a man who does not say what he does not think, and therefore I am proud to hear what he has said. We shall now ask Mr. Cunningham to show us how the examination music for next July ought to be played.

THE ORGAN RECITAL

MR. G. D. CUNNINGHAM, organist of Birmingham Town Hall, then played the following programme :

FELLOWSHIP

Prelude only, from Prelude and Fugue in E flat ('St. Ann') ... ... J. S. Bach
Choral Prelude on 'Newtoun' ... Charles Wood
(Sixteen Preludes, vol. 1, Stainer & Bell)
Fantasie in F minor ... ... Mozart
(Best's Arrangements, No. 76, Novello)

ASSOCIATESHIP

Choral Prelude on the tune 'St. Peter's' H. E. Darke
(Op. 20, No. 1)
Prelude only, from Prelude and Fugue in D minor ... ... Mendelssohn

The applause that followed the recital was rapturous and long sustained.

THE PRESIDENT : We are glad to see Dr. Charles Macpherson back from his tour in India, and we will ask him to say a few words.

DR. CHARLES MACPHERSON : It is very good of you to ask me to perform a pleasant and perhaps a not difficult duty. We must congratulate Mr. Cunningham for going through his ordeal in a way very few of us here could have done. I think Mr. Cunningham has taken his courage in both hands, and feet, and has come out with flying colours. I am sure there are few achievements that are more worthy of medals for bravery than that which Mr. Cunningham has performed so splendidly. Some of us probably thought that we had come to criticise, but I think after we heard him for a short time any sense of criticism was entirely lost in admiration.

The vote of thanks was carried with acclamation.

MR. CUNNINGHAM : May I say one word to convey my special thanks to Dr. Macpherson for the encouraging terms in which he has spoken.

THE PRESIDENT : Another important function remains. Will you all come upstairs and have a cup of tea and a friendly talk ?

THE CONVERSAZIONE

The newly-decorated upper chamber was quickly thronged by the visitors, who were received at the door with a cordial greeting by the President, and were soon on good terms with the distinguished members of the Council, and others eminent in the musical world. The 'crush' seemed as great and the conversation as animated as at the summer gathering, and no doubt the interest and pleasure of these meetings grow with improved acquaintance and the renewal of friendships. The verseuses at the urns continually did fill the cups that cheer and stimulate the flow of soul without dulling the faculties or taking the keen edge off the intellect. In short, there were a few happy minutes that will be a cherished memory until it is overlaid by the next merry meeting.

Appended are the Reports of the Examiners at the January Examinations.

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

On this occasion the standards reached were so variable that it is impossible to say that some questions were answered well and others badly. But it is worth while to point out a few facts which may help students :

(1.) There was a lack of commonsense shown in the way candidates tackled questions—e.g., in orchestration a piece was set which scored itself. Three horns were to be used, and the three-part chords obviously asked for horns : but few solutions were good. In the string quartet there was an almost complete misunderstanding of the modulations clearly suggested by dominant sevenths in inner parts. In the fugue candidates handicapped themselves by choosing dull counter-subjects with no character. In the free counterpoint few workings showed any facility in the weaving of parts.

(2.) In answering the questions there was a marked tendency to reply to an entirely different interrogation. Nearly all the answers to the question on 'blend' were in reality treatises on voice-training; and no answer as to the effect of the French Revolution on music touched more than the fringe of the matter—only one candidate, for instance, mentioning the name of Berlioz.

(3.) Once more, attention should be drawn to the fact that every F.R.C.O. in England ought to be able to do, quite perfectly, the easy dictation tests given. Had all candidates got full marks for the ear-tests the pass-list would have been twice as long.

P. C. Buck (Chairman).
G. J. Bennett.
H. Davan Wetton.

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

It is again unfortunately necessary to urge the cultivation of a stronger sense of rhythm, and a better realisation of the character and general feeling of the pieces. The examiners cannot jeopardise the high reputation of the diploma by giving it to people whose time and rhythm are obviously measured by the exigencies of the technical difficulties, or to those who have no more musicianship than to adopt a tempo entirely unsuitable to the emotional character of the music, however accurate they may be as to the notes. The phrasing often sounded as if it was merely a perfunctory thing, put in because marks are awarded for it, and not because it is an all-important factor in musical expression. Many candidates still seem to imagine that all staccatos demand the same sort of hurried 'peck' at the keys; so hurried, in fact, that the wind has scarcely time to find its way into the pipes. Few found the right, gently flowing tempo for the Bach Aria; some made it a dull crawl, others a muddled rush, whilst many cut up its shapely phrases with the staccatos referred to, which were particularly inappropriate here. Not a great number realised the smoothness and consequent dignity of the Franck Fugue: several times it was played as a frenzied presto. Most candidates failed to grasp the breadth of Parry's March; the gradual acceleration of the last two pages was secured by but one or two players.

The tests were by no means difficult; but, strange to say, many of the worst mistakes occurred at the simplest places, as, for instance, at the sixth and seventh bars of the sight-reading test, where only a single manual part had to be negotiated. This is probably due to candidates approaching the examination with a false suspicion that the examiners have set traps in their way. It is again most needful to draw attention to the obvious fact that a very poor chance of success awaits those who will not observe the key- and time-signatures before beginning the tests.

The most encouraging features were the great improvement in the management of the organ and the continued rise in the artistic level of the extemporisation.

Walter G. Alcock (Chairman).
Edward C. Bairstow.
Alan Gray.

ASSOCIATE PAPER-WORK

The Strict Counterpoint was again well done, but the Free Counterpoint, while good, was a little disappointing, inasmuch as the given figure was insufficiently maintained. In the writing of the pianoforte accompaniment to a melody the candidates often showed a lack of appreciation of pianoforte style, and too little use was made of suitable accompanimental figures. Candidates should understand that a four-part harmonization is not the style required.

The two-part work was, on the whole, musicianly and interesting. On the other hand, the harmonization of the melody was much the weakest feature of the whole examination. The parts should have more individuality and flow. There were instances of excessive repetitions of the same note, and too often the harmonization was entirely of the note-against-note order, giving the effect of little more than a hymn-tune style.

Ivor Atkins (Chairman).
A. Eaglefield-Hull.
C. H. Kitson.

ASSOCIATE ORGAN-WORK

The improvement in technique which was so gratifying a feature of the last examination has not been maintained. Many old faults reappeared, and the playing generally was characterized by a degree of inaccuracy which indicated weakness in technical skill. We recommend a continued course of study in pianoforte technique. It is perhaps only in this way that the necessary improvement in organ playing can be achieved.

Technical mistakes were noticeable in Guilmant's 'Meditation,' Stanford's 'Prelude,' and Bridge's 'Adagio.' Bach was marred by careless part-playing and the adoption of a tempo which, in some cases, was erratic.

The softer pieces were seldom played artistically. An absence of flow and continuity in the phrasing, and a lack of rhythmic energy, prevented many candidates from reaching the necessary standard.

The management of the organ was often unskilful, though we gladly noticed a considerable improvement in pedal registration. A more sparing use of the manual doubles is recommended, together with registration more fitted to the character of the music.

We cannot emphasise too strongly the importance of general musicianship apart from the mere performance of the set pieces.

The vocal score was generally better. The crossing of parts and the repeated notes were the chief sources of trouble.

In the sight-reading test many did not secure pass marks owing to a failure to realise the change and establishment of a new key, and the fact that rests form an integral part of musical design.

The following figures may be of interest. Of 132 candidates heard, 80 failed in the transposition; 100 failed in the accompaniment.

Henry G. Ley (Chairman).
Harold E. Darke.
E. Stanley Roper.

REGISTRATION GONE MAD

'Don't make fugue subjects stand out as if they were in capital letters,' said Mr. Harold Samuel the other day to an interviewer who asked for some tips in Bach-playing. He was speaking to pianists, of course, but the advice is still badly needed by many organists, above all, perhaps by concert players. For example, at Queen's Hall recently a recitalist gave out the subject of the 'Wedge' Fugue on a soft solo stop, and the answer on another. Apart from the unsuitability of such finicking treatment of a large-scale work, there is the further objection that such a method could not be carried out consistently without the texture in places being drastically modified (a charitable word). And, in effect, this is

He wants not friends

COMPOSED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

917. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 4d.
424. Ditto ... ... R. Dunstan 4d.
805. Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann 6d.
927. All go unto one place ... Wesley 4d.
247. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 6d.
113. All they that trust... ... Hiller 1s.
1033. All Thy works ... T. Adams 4d.
475. Ditto ... ... J. Barnby 6d.
503. Ditto ... ... G. H. Ely 6d.
30. Ditto ... ... E. H. Thorne 4d.
719. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
9. All ye who weep ... ... Gounod 4d.
592. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 4d.
729. Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris 4d.
548. Almighty Father ... B. Steane 4d.
937. Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 4d.
261. And all the people saw J. Stainer 8d.
699. And God shall wipe Greenish 4d.
1055. And in that day F. R. Rickman 4d.
229. And it was the third hour Elvey 6d.
485. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 8d.
658. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 6d.
732. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 4d.
1089. And the earth was reaped E. S. Craston 6d.
675. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 4d.
357. And the wall of the city Oliver King 4d.
778. And there shall be signs Naylor 6d.
1130. And we beheld His Glory G. Rathbone 4d.
402. And when the day ... C. W. Smith 4d.
684. Angel said, The (S. & B.) A. H. Brown 3d.
861. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 3d.
642. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 4d.
611. Angels from the realms Cowen 4d.
749. Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
751. Ditto ... .. E. V. Hall 4d.
1017. Arise, shine ... T. Adams 4d.
1093. Ditto ... H. A. Chambers 4d.
1112. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
923. Ditto ... ... G. F. Cobb 6d.
723. Arm of the Lord, The ... Haydn 6d.
228. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
948. As Christ was raised Wareing 4d.
311. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 4d
333. As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent 4d.
498. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 4d.
643. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 6d.
24. As the hart pants (S.S.T.B.) Gounod 4d.
147. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 8d.
109. Ditto ... ... S. S. Wesley 6d.
399. At the Lamb's High E. V. Hall 4d.
456. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 6d.
957. Author of Life Divine Button 3d.
1091. Ditto H. A. Chambers 4d.
660. Awake, awake ... John E. West 4d.
700. Awake, awake, put on Greenish 6d.
56. Ditto ... ... J. Stainer 8d.
759. Ditto ... ... Stephenson 6d.
149. Ditto ... ... M. Wise 6d.
955. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 4d.
199 Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 8d.
150. Awake up, my glory M. Wise 4d.

744. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 4d.
578. Ditto ... ... B. Steane 4d.
212. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 6d.
989. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 4d.
145. Be merciful... .. H. Purcell 8d.
257. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
597. Be peace on earth... ... Crotch 4d.
567. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 4d.
583. Be ye all of one mind A. E. Godfrey 4d.
471. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 4d.
440. Before the heavens H. W. Parker 4d.
651. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 6d.
598. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 6d.
865. Behold, God is my John E. West 4d.
636. Ditto ... ... F. C. Woods 6d.
1035. Behold, how good J. Battishill 4d.
349. Ditto (Male) ... Caldicott 4d.
349.* Ditto (S.A.T.B.) Caldicott 4d.
419. Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke 6d.
89. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 4d.
348. Ditto ... J. Maude Crament 6d.
1113. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 3d.
296. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
810. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 3d.
713. Behold, I have given you C. Harris 4d.
554. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 6d.
587. Behold My servant J. F. Bridge 4d.
65. Behold now, praise J. B. Calkin 4d.
631. Ditto ... ... F. Iliffe 4d.
912. Ditto ... ... John E. West 4d.
315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 6d.
524. Behold, the days come Woodward 6d.
1045. Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 4d.
652. Behold the Name... Percy Pitt 6d.
501. Behold, two blind men J. Stainer 4d.
938. Bethlehem ... ... Ch. Gounod 2d.
378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 6d.
796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 4d.
855. Bless the Lord thy God Roberts 4d.
450. Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 6d.
374. Ditto ... ... Oliver King 4d.
693. Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 3d.
667. Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 4d.
390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 4d.
616. Ditto ... ... H. Blair 4d.
77. Ditto ... ... W. H. Monk 4d.
112. Ditto ... ... Arthur Page 4d.
15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 3d.
756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 4d.
570. Ditto ... ... J. F. Bridge 8d.
895. Ditto ... ... O. Gibbons 3d.
876. Ditto ... ... E. V. Hall 4d.
183. Ditto ... ... Heap 8d.
770. Ditto ... ... Markham Lee 4d.
331. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 6d.
1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren 4d.
724. Blessed be Thou E. C. Bairstow 6d.
1120. Ditto ... ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
838. Ditto ... . J. Kent 6d.
400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 6d.
284. Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 3d.
262. Ditto ... ... C. H. Lloyd 1s.
292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 6d.
206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfeld 4d.
64. Ditto ... ... John Goss 6d.
769. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
1004. Blessed is the soul (S.B.) Macfarren 4d.
286. Blessed Jesu (Stabat Mater) Dvorák 8d.
943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 6d.
950 Ditto ... ... A. H. Brewer 4d.
472. Blessing of the Lord. The J. F. Bridge 3d
194. Ditto A. C. Mackenzie 4d
652. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 4d
97. Blow ye the trumpet Henry Leslie 4d
961. Born to-day... J. P. Sweelinck 4d
118. Bow Thine ear ... ... W. Bird 4d
939 Bread of Heaven ... E. German 4d
1082. Bread of the world H. A. Chambers 4d
1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 4d
774. Ditto ... ... H. E. Button 4d
415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d
798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 4d
92. Ditto ... ... R. Prentice 8d
491. Ditto ... ... B. Steane 4d
323. Brightest and best... E. V. Hall 6d
340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 4d.
98. Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 6d.
279. By Babylon's wave Gounod 3d.
197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 6d
121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce 6d
644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d
511. Ditto ... ... H. Clarke 6d
853. Ditto ... ... H. M. Higgs 4d
1074. Ditto ... ... Palestrina 4d
1076. Ditto ... ... H. Goetz 4d
742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorák 6d

116. Call to remembrance J. Battishill 8d
952. Ditto ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d
680. Calm on the list'ning ear Parker 4d
841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 3d
975. Ditto ... ... S. S. Wesley 4d
953. Charge to keep I have, A... King 4d
497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 4d
454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken 4d
368. Ditto ... ... J. M. Crament 4d
666. Ditto ... ... W. Jordan 6d
533. Ditto ... ... J. V. Roberts 4d
814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d
307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 4d.
783. Christ the Lord is risen again E. V. Hall 6d.
370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day .. 4d.
488. Christians, awake... ...J. Barnby 4d.
648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 6d.
983. Christmas Day ... ... G. Holst 6d.
445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 4d.
989. Come and let us ... A. Hollins 4d.
52. Come, and let us return J. Goss 4d.
95. Ditto ... ... W. Jackson 4d.
1106. Come, come, help, O God W. Byrd 4d.
805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 6d.
283. Come, Holy Ghost G. Elvey 6d.
201. Ditto ... ... J. L. Hatton 6d.
829. Ditto ... ... Palestrina 3d.
717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 3d.
881. Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 4d.
293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 6d.
314. Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 6d.
1. Come unto Him ... ... Gounod 3d.
946. Ditto ... ... H. Leslie 4d.
256. Come unto Me H. R. Couldrey 4d.
635. Ditto ... ... G. J. Elvey 4d.
103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 4d.
922. Come with high and holy Blair 4d.
1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren 4d.
748. Come, ye children and J. Booth 4d.
924. Ditto ... ... H. J. King 4d.
334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 4d.
921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain E. V. Hall 4d.
1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 4d.
951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 3d.
931. Come, ye thankful ...B. Steane 4d.
914. Comes at times ... ... Woodward 4d.
1008. Ditto ... ... H. Oakeley 3d

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED MADE IN ENGLAND

HE WANTS NOT FRIENDS THAT HATH THY LOVE

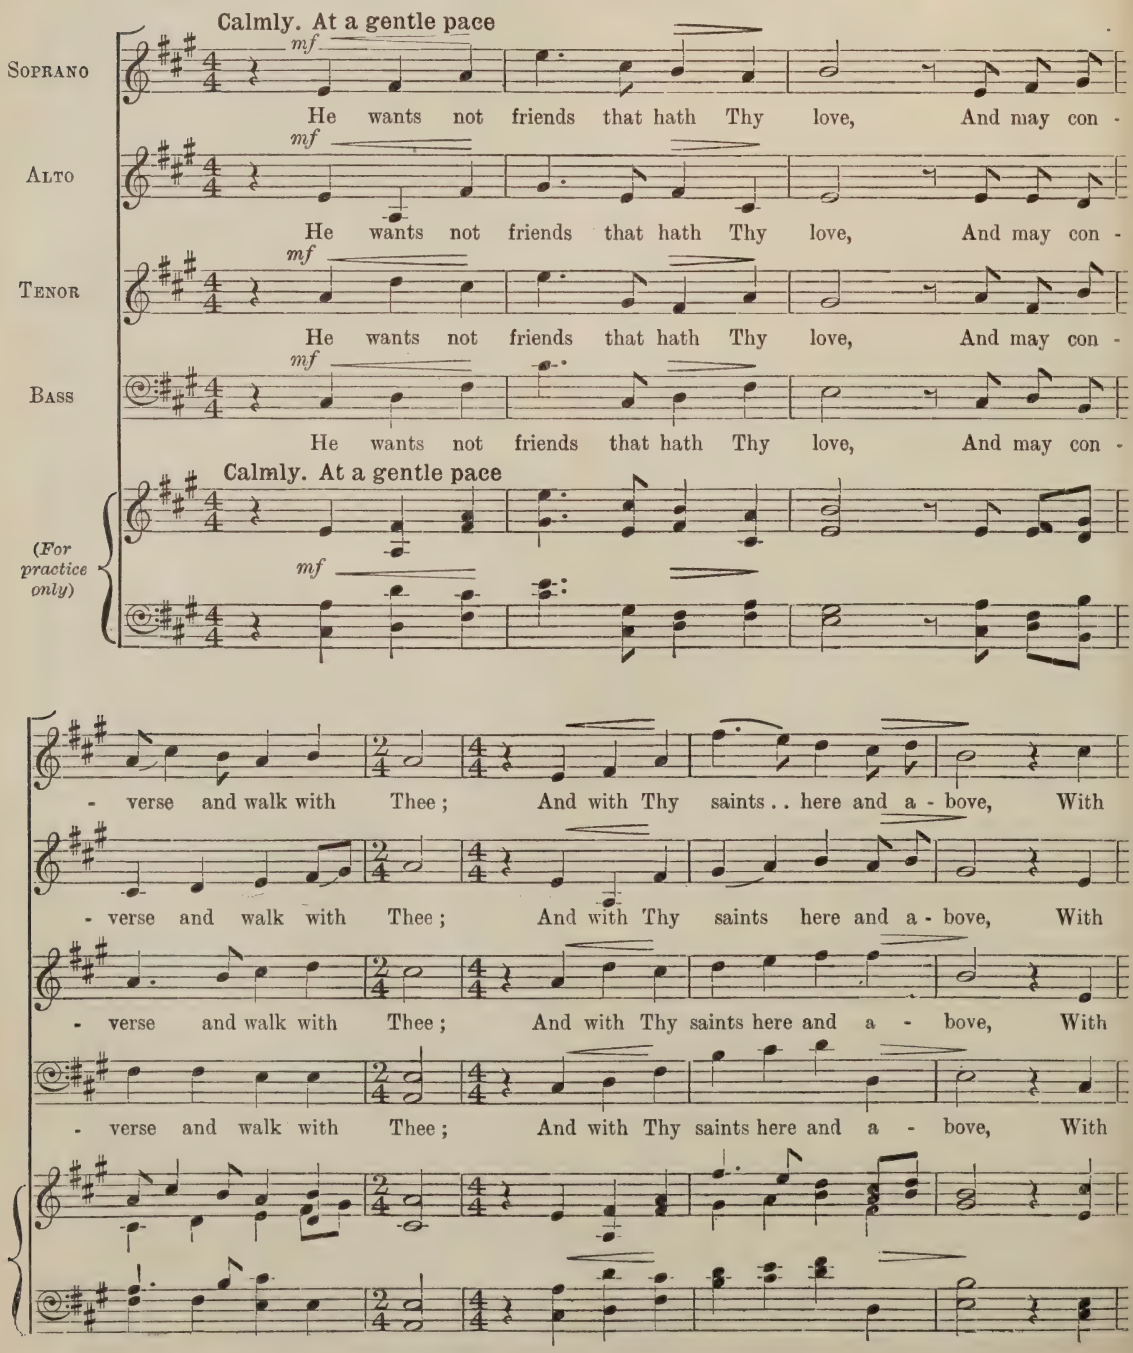
ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE

WORDS BY R. BAXTER (1615—1691)

MUSIC BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Calmly. At a gentle pace
Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
mf
He wants not friends that hath Thy love, And may con -
Calmly. At a gentle pace
(For practice only)
- verse and walk with Thee; And with Thy saints . . here and a - bove, With
- verse and walk with Thee; And with Thy saints here and a - bove, With
- verse and walk with Thee; And with Thy saints here and a - bove, With
- verse and walk with Thee; And with Thy saints here and a - bove, With

Copyright, 1923, by Novello and Company, Limited.

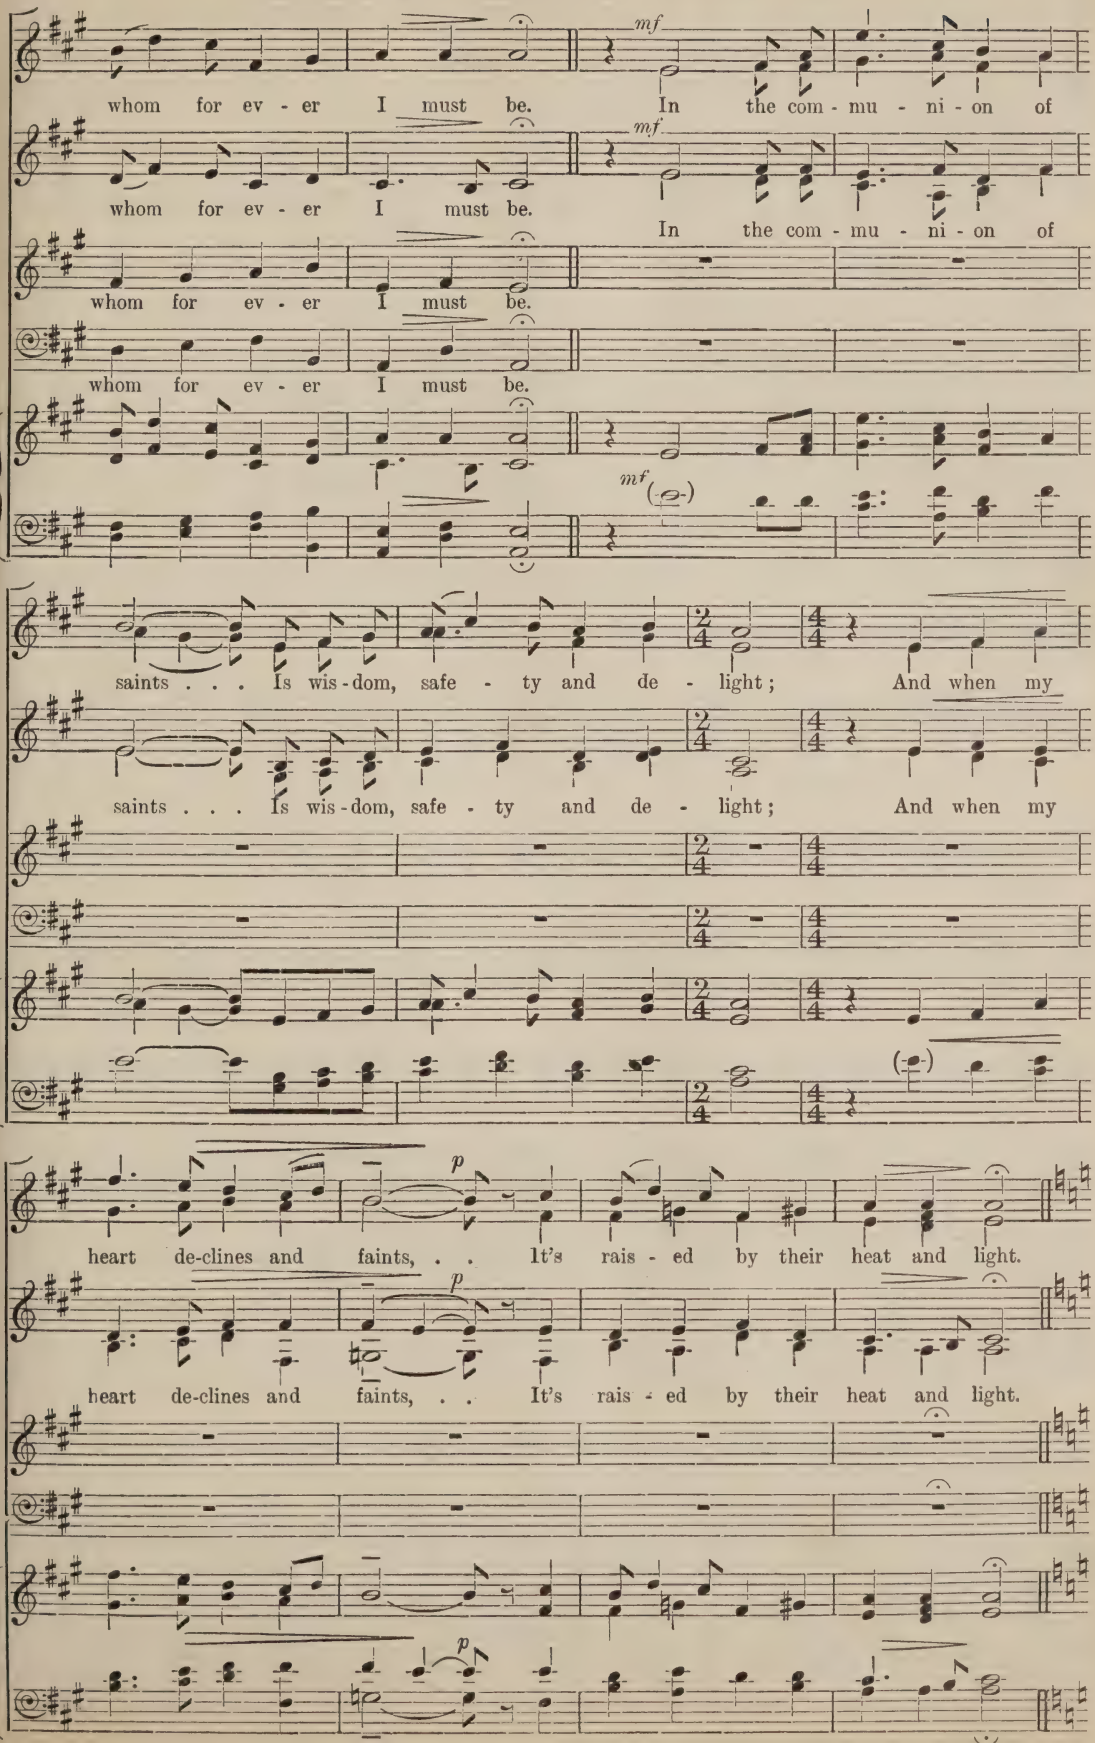
HE WANTS NOT FRIENDS THAT HATH THY LOVE



whom for ev - er I must be.
In the com - mu - ni - on of saints . . . Is wis - dom, safe - ty and de - light;
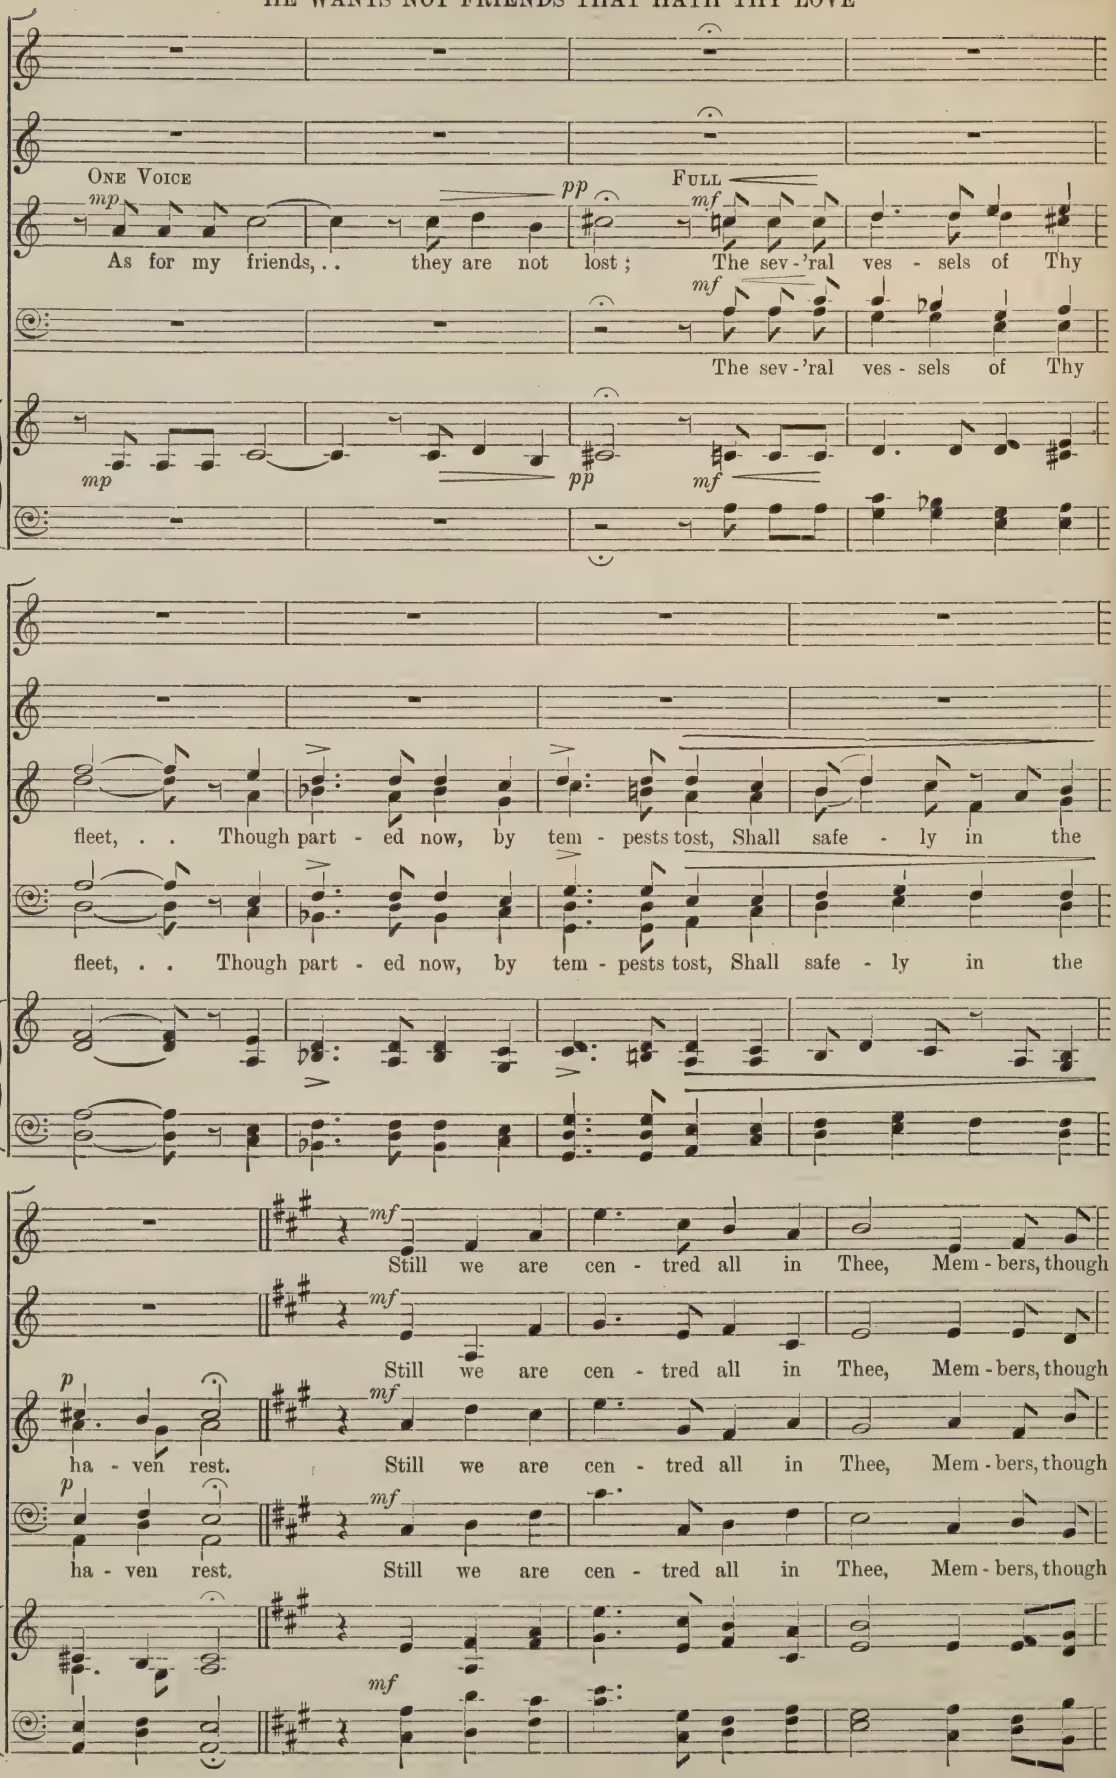
And when my heart de-clines and faints, . . It's rais - ed by their heat and light.
mf
p



One Voice
mp
pp
Full
mf
As for my friends, . . they are not lost ; The sev - 'ral ves - sels of Thy
mf
The sev - 'ral ves - sels of Thy mp
pp
mf fleet, . . Though part - ed now, by tem - pests tost, Shall safe - ly in the fleet, . . Though part - ed now, by tem - pests tost, Shall safe - ly in the
mf
Still we are cen - tred all in Thee, Mem - bers, though
mf
Still we are cen - tred all in Thee, Mem - bers, though
p ha - ven rest.
mf
Still we are cen - tred all in Thee, Mem - bers, though
p ha - ven rest.
mf
Still we are cen - tred all in Thee, Mem - bers, though
mf

dis - tant, of one Head, . . In the same fam - i - ly we . .
dis - tant, of one Head, . . In the same fam - i - ly we . .
dis - tant of one Head, . . In the same fam - i - ly we dis - tant, of one Head, . . In the same fam - i - ly we
One Voice
mf
be, . . By . . . the same faith and spi - rit led. Be - fore Thy throne be, . . By . . . the same faith and spi - rit led.
be, . . By the same . . faith and spi - rit led.
be, . . By the same . . faith and spi - rit led.
mf
Full
mp
p
. . . we dai - ly meet As joint pe - ti - tion - ers to Thee; . . In mp
p
As joint pe - ti - tion - ers to Thee; . . In mp
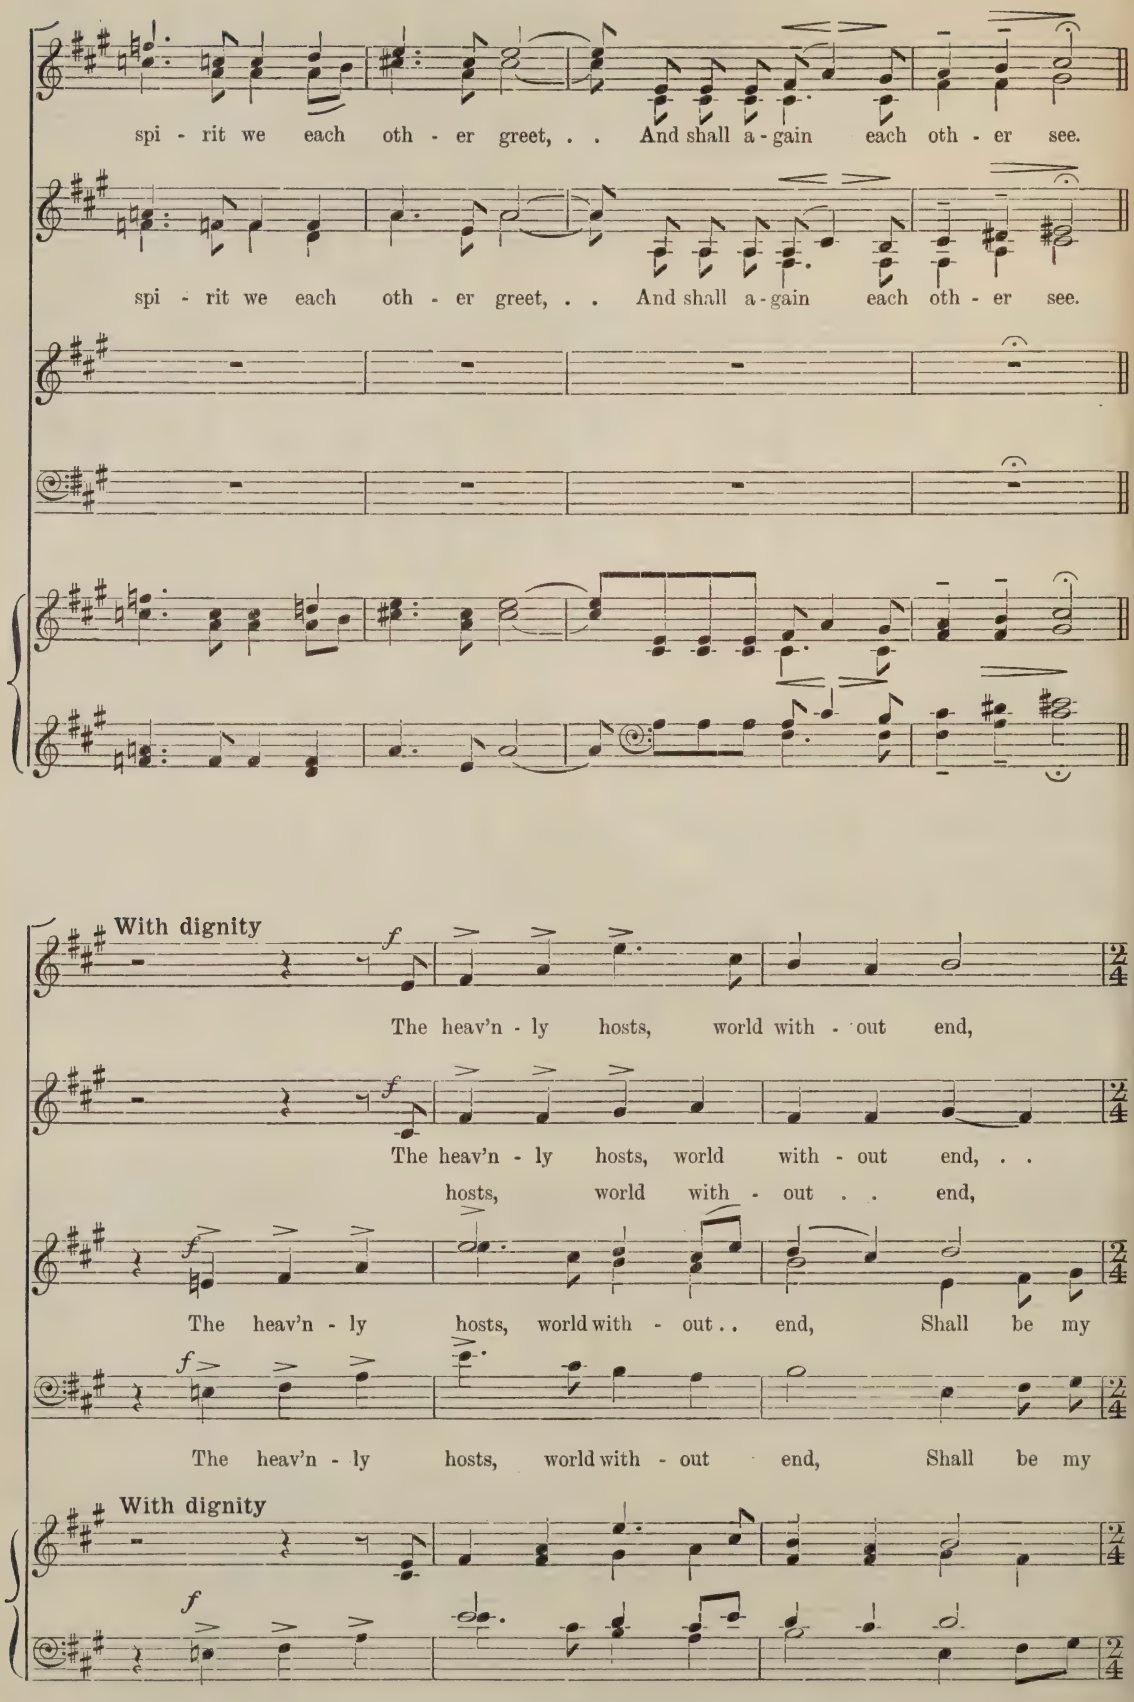
p



spi - rit we each oth - er greet, . . And shall a - gain each oth - er see.
spi - rit we each oth - er greet, . . And shall a - gain each oth - er see.
With dignity
f
The heav'n - ly hosts, world with - out end,
The heav'n - ly hosts, world with - out end, . .
hosts, world with - out . . end,
The heav'n - ly hosts, world with - out . . end, Shall be my
The heav'n - ly hosts, world with - out end, Shall be my
With dignity

Shall be my com - pa - ny a - bove, . . And Thou, my Shall be my com - pa - ny a - bove, . . And Thou, my Shall be my com - pa - ny a - bove, . .
com - pa - ny a - bove, a - bove, . . And Thou, my com - pa - ny a - bove, a - bove, . . And Thou, my

A little slower
ff
mp
best and sur - est . . Friend, . . Who . . shall di - vide me from Thy love?
best and sur - est Friend, . . Who . . shall di - vide me from Thy love?
best and sur - est Friend, . . Who shall di - vide me from Thy love?
best and sur - est Friend, . . Who shall di - vide me from Thy love?
A little slower

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
†HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
†LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
RISE, O SOUL	180	Schmücke dich
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
†STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
*COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf.

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa, complete. † May be had in Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(Sept., 1925.)

what happened, we understand. (We were not present.) It is such practices as this that make the organist still somewhat of a pariah among instrumental soloists. He should test his playing by the best examples in other branches of the art, refusing to be satisfied until he can reproduce the phrasing of a first-rate fiddler or singer, the texture of a good string quartet, the crispness and clarity of a fine pianist, and, above all, the continuity in his Bach-playing that an orchestra gets in the Suites and Concertos. He would then be promoted to the position that is already his due on grounds of all-round musicianship and ability. Registration is so vital and delightful a part of solo-playing that we hesitate to decry it, for fear of being misunderstood. Yet we think it is undeniable that many of the faults in organ-playing (especially in rhythm and phrasing) are the result of over-registration. The player who feels he must be doing something with the stops in every bar can have very little confidence in the interest and appeal of the music he is interpreting. The lengths to which even musical editors will go in this direction is astounding. For example, we recently came across an American edition of Rheinberger's Monologue No. 2, in A minor. Now here is a simple piece of music, quite short—a mere forty-six bars—continuous in style and mood. The composer himself has marked it Poco agitato, and has given no other indication save a solitary f, leaving such simple variety as is needed to the discretion of the player. Yet the edition before us has no fewer than thirty changes of manual! We give the opening bars:

This is registration gone mad. On the practical side it will be noted that the power of the pedal remains the same whether the manual part is soft or loud! This is no mere oversight in the opening bars; it continues throughout. If the player wishes to obtain a proper balance he must be shooting his Great-to-Pedal coupler in and out all the time. Such frantic efforts to make a simple piece of music interesting usually defeat their aim. The main effect of this Monologue lies in its oneness—its monologuishness, so to speak—and this is destroyed by constant changes of colour and power, just as its title would be if cut up into letters. Better too little registration than too much, because the responsibility of maintaining the interest is then thrown on to composer and player—which is as it should be, for, after all, it is their job. If the music be good, and the playing worthy, the listener will not complain if the same stops are used for several bars on end.

WESLEY ANNIVERSARY

Organists, choirmasters, and others interested should note that the British Music Society is compiling lists of the published works of Samuel Sebastian Wesley for the benefit of any who desire to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of his death on April 19. Particulars may be had from the Secretary, the British Music Society, 117, Great Portland Street, W.1. (Stamped addressed envelope.)

In our last issue we mentioned the long term of service of Mr. William Dyson as lay-clerk of Worcester Cathedral. Mr. Dyson has since been the recipient of a presentation—a silver tea service bearing the inscription: 'A gift to W. Mann Dyson from the Dean and Chapter of Worcester Cathedral on his completion of sixty years' service. December 25, 1925.' The presentation was accompanied by a cordial letter of appreciation from the Dean. By the way, in our last issue we inadvertently credited Mr. Dyson with too many years, saying he was in the 'nineties. He tells us that he is not 'yet quite half-way through the 'eighties.'

The Newcastle Bach Choir gave its first Cathedral recital of the season at St. Nicholas on January 30, when four of the Church Cantatas were sung—'See ye, I'll send for many fishers,' 'Lord God, Thee praise do we,' 'Jesus sleeps, vain all my hope,' and 'How brightly shines yon star of morn.' Mr. William Ellis was at the organ, Mr. Alfred Wall led the orchestra, and Dr. Whittaker conducted. The choral work was of the usual high standard.

A concert was held in Norwich Cathedral on January 14, the performers being the Nave Service Choir, augmented to ninety voices, and the Municipal Orchestra. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and 'Hear my prayer,' the 'Unfinished' Symphony, and 'Finlandia.' The soloists were Mrs. Ivor Horton, Mrs. C. Twiddy, and Messrs. R. W. Durnford and Joseph Jones. Mr. Maddern Williams conducted, and Mr. E. G. Coombs was at the organ.

The first of a series of Musical Services took place at St. John's, Bognor, on January 25, the proceeds being in aid of the organ fund. There was a choir and orchestra of sixty, and the programme included Dale's 'Before the Paling of the Stars,' Haydn's Symphony No. 7, the Pastoral Symphony from the Christmas Oratorio, and organ solos by Bach and Maleingreau. Mr. Philip Dore was at the organ, and Mr. Norman Demuth conducted. The church was full.

Mr. John Pullein, organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow, gave a lecture-recital to the Glasgow Ecclesiological Society on January 26, on 'British Organ Music from the 16th century to the Present Time.' His examples included pieces by Byrd, Bull, Gibbons, Purcell, Blow, Stanley, Samuel and S. S. Wesley, Ernest Farrar, E. C. Bairstow, and Harvey Grace. There was a large attendance, and Mr. Pullein's lecture aroused great interest.

The 'St. Matthew' Passion will be sung at Southwark Cathedral on March 20, at 3 p.m. The London Symphony Orchestra will assist. A few seats are reserved, and for these application should be made to the Precentor, The Rectory, Sumner Street, S.E.1. (Stamped addressed envelope.)

A new organ has been installed in Padgate Wesleyan Church, Warrington. The instrument was dedicated on January 19, Mr. William Wolstenholme giving the opening recital. His programme included Wesley's Choral Song and Fugue, Faulkes's Idyll in D flat, his own Carillon in B flat and Scherzo in F, and an improvisation.

Dr. C. H. Moody lectured before a large audience at the Royal Hall, Harrogate, on January 20, his subject being 'How we got our Church Music.' The choir of Ripon Cathedral sang unaccompanied works by Tallis, Byrd, Gibbons, Whyte, Palestrina, Vittoria, and Purcell.

At the Free Church Choral Festival to be held at the Crystal Palace on June 26, the choir of four thousand voices will sing works by Mendelssohn, Parry, Stanford, German, Handel, Balfour Gardiner, &c. Mr. Robert Radford will be the soloist.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw will lecture on 'A Sense of Proportion in Church Music,' at St. Mary Aldermary, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., on March 2, at 8 p.m. On March 23, at 8 p.m., Charles Wood's 'Passion according to St. Mark' will be sung.

The Wolverhampton Chronicle gives particulars of the career as church organists of two brothers, Mr. Harry Richards, of Wolverhampton, and Mr. William Richards, of Sedgley, both of whom have done over fifty years' service.

The first part of 'St. Paul' was sung at All Saints', Gosforth, on January 31, accompanied by organ, strings, and drums. Mr. R. A. Waddle was at the organ, and Mr. T. W. Ritson conducted.

Mr. Samuel Warren, organist of Palmerston Place Church, Edinburgh, has been presented with an easy chair, fender-stool, and silver cigarette box, the occasion being the twenty-fifth year of his appointment.

Sydney H. Nicholson's new Passiontide Cantata, 'The Saviour of the World,' will be sung at Barking Parish Church on March 18, at 8, and on Good Friday, at 7.30.

At Henleaze Congregational Church, on January 25, the Choral Society sang Bach's 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' 'Blessing, Glory, and Wisdom,' and Holst's Two Psalms. Mr. A. Bartlett Hunt conducted.

RECITALS

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Lawrence Jewry—Concerto No. 5, Handel; Pastorale, Bossi; Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Grace; Minuet (Symphony No. 4), Vierne.

Dr. William Prendergast, Winchester Cathedral—Largo, Minuet, and Fugue, Handel; 'In Thee is gladness,' Bach; Fantasy on Old Christmas Carols, Hugh Blair; Variations on an Old Carol Tune, Geoffrey Shaw.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Chaconne, Purcell; Fantasie, Franck; Finale, Rheinberger.

Miss Marjorie Renton, St. Mary-le-Bow—Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Preludes on 'Ein' Feste Burg,' Karg-Elert; Two Christmas Preludes, Percy C. Buck; Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols, John E. West.

Mr. H. Percy Richardson, St. John's Parish Church, Yeadon—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Lament, Grace; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Scherzo in A flat, Bairstow.

Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Stephen's, Wandsworth—Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Dithyramb, Harwood; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' John E. West; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury—Finale, Lloyd; Fugue in D, Guilmant; Coronation March, Meyerbeer; 'In Memoriam 1914,' Purcell Mansfield.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Patricroft Parish Church—Triumph Song, Arthur Baynon; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Legend, Grace; Gavotte, Martini.

Dr. Gordon A. Slater, Boston Parish Church—Choral No. 3, Franck; Scherzetto, Vierne; Concerto in B flat, Handel.

Miss Lilian Trott, St. Lawrence Jewry—Sonata No. 16, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; March in D, Smart.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, National Institute for the Blind—Andante in D, Hollins; Postlude in D, Smart; Minuet Antique, Watling; Fugue, Reubke.

Dr. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Concerto No. 3, Handel; Andante (String Quartet), Debussy; Dorian Toccata, Bach; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Mr. A. E. Howell, Parish Church, Trowbridge—Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford.

Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, Town Hall, New York—Fantaisie Dialoguée, Boëllmann; Concerto No. 5, Handel; 'The Tumult in the Prætorium,' Maleingreau; Meditation in A, Bairstow; 'The Nymph of the Lake,' Karg-Elert.

Mr. L. H. Baggarley, St. Katharine's, Leadenhall Street, E.C.—'Finlandia'; Fugue in G, Bach; Andantino and Finale (Suite No. 2), Boëllmann.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Royal Albert Hall—Toccata in F, Bach; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; March, Barié; Fugue (Sonata No. 3), Rheinberger.

Mr. W. J. Comley, All Saints', Hertford—Introduction and Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Overture in C, Hollins; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Pastorale, Franck; Postlude in C, Alcock.

Mr. F. Dalrymple, Tredegarville Baptist Church, Cardiff—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; 'Chant de Mai,' Jongen; Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Finale (Sonata No. 1), Harwood.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Civic March, Ellingford; Prelude, Theme, Variations, and Finale, Guilmant; Allegro non troppo (Sonata No. 3), Stanford.

Mr. Allan Fortune, Keighley Parish Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Solemn Festival, Rheinberger; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. Owen le P. Franklin, St. Mary-le-Bow, E.C.—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Adagio (Clarinet Concerto), Mozart; Final in B flat, Franck.

Mr. Fred Gostelow, Flinders Street Presbyterian Church, Adelaide, S. Australia—'Egmont' Overture; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Choral No. 3, Franck; Overture in C, Hollins.

Mr. A. M. Hawkins, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Alla Marcia, Rheinberger; Allegretto grazioso, Frank Bridge; Two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Fugue on the name B A C H, Schumann.

Mr. John Holgate, St. Alban's, Cheetwood—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Bénédiction Nuptiale, Hollins; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant.

Dr. Reginald H. Hunt, St. Mary's, Bryanston Square—Concerto Grosso, Corelli; 'En Bateau,' Debussy; Choral No. 3, Franck; Carillon, Elgar.

Mr. Samuel Kerry, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Alla Marcia, Ireland.

Mr. W. F. Kingdon, St. Lawrence Jewry—Passacaglia, Bach; Psalm-Prelude, Howells; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Sonata in F sharp minor (slow movement), Rheinberger.

Mr. Frank Newman, St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich—Choral No. 3, Franck; Fugue in G, Parry; Rhapsody, Grace; Two Sketches, Schumann.

Mr. Guy Michell, St. Mary's, Brighton—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Allegretto, Mulet; Two Chorale Preludes, Reger; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. J. Roland Middleton, Mold Parish Church—Sonata No. 11, Rheinberger; Scherzo, Guilmant; Prelude on 'Hyfrydol,' Vaughan Williams.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Melbourne Holman, choirmaster and organist, Holy Trinity, Brook Green, W.

Mr. W. Irwin Hunt, choirmaster and organist, St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Ernest W. Pettit, choirmaster and organist, St. Peter's, Elgin Avenue, W.

Mr. H. Vernon Roach, choirmaster and organist, St. Philip's, Worcester Park, Surrey.

Mr. Edward G. Yeo, choirmaster and organist, Monken Hadley.

London Concerts

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Unless my memory is at fault, the financial prospects of the Royal Philharmonic Society are not exactly flourishing. The concert given last month under the conductorship of Rhené-Baton showed that if its income is declining the Society has only itself to blame. After all, the public can be attracted only by excellence—excellence of programme and excellence of performance. Rhené-Baton gave us neither the one nor the other. The orchestra at best was like a brass band 'fra Lancashire' competing at the Crystal Palace. The programme consisted mainly of French music of a typical 'second-best' type. The soloist was Ricardo Viñes, of whose ability we were unable to judge on this occasion, since the orchestral accompaniment to his Mozart Concerto was easily one of the worst ever heard in London. It has been said that Rhené-Baton was hampered in his work by the fact that the orchestra was new to him. If that is so, then it was folly to ask him to conduct the Philharmonic Orchestra. There are conductors—Toscanini amongst them—who, to be heard at their best, require more rehearsals than can be given under present conditions here. It is, then, obviously useless to bring them over, and if they are men of determined character they will refuse to come. No possible explanation can be proffered, however, for the hopeless inadequacy of the accompaniment to Mozart's Concerto. An orchestra of amateurs reading it for the first time would have done better, or at least would have shown some compunction. But the Philharmonic Orchestra went on with the determination of a child who breaks a toy to see what is 'in it.'

The programme was typical of a time in which music can be offered to the public not because it is good, but because it is the music of Czecho-Slovakia, of Jugoslavia, &c. It was mainly French—but it did not contain a single example of the best French music, either of the present or of the past. B. V.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS

A programme of Mozart and Haydn, on January 23, proved to be somewhat of a miscalculation. A Symphony (No. 25, in G minor) and three Concertos by Mozart, and the 'L'Isola disabitata' Overture and 'Lamentatione' Symphony of Haydn, make a formidable show on paper. In practice the scheme led to monotony. Having heard a Concerto for two pianofortes, we were in no mood to endure yet another work of the kind for three pianofortes. The slender amount of variety was soon exhausted. Why, on such occasions, the pianofortes used should be all of one make (and therefore of one tone) is difficult to understand—on artistic grounds, that is. Some day the experiment should be tried of substituting a harpsichord for one of the pianofortes. With the other powers scaled down, the effort might well be engaging. The pianists were Miss Fanny Davies, Miss Mathilde Verne, and Mrs. Norman O'Neill. The remaining Concerto was for horn, with Mr. Aubrey Brain in such good form that the inevitable anxieties with which we hear (and see) such feats often gave way to delight. The Haydn Symphony was the most interesting work, with its many original touches. It should have come earlier in the programme, where it would have been a welcome relief to the over-long dose of Mozartean neatness—not to say complacency, for there was too little of Mozart at his best. Two hours of such shapely, facile music make us realise the hard-wearing quality of Bach, with his continuity, athletic basses and rhythms, and the constant harmonic interest set up by vigorous polyphony. H. G.

A Bach programme filled Queen's Hall on February 6, and the enthusiasm was such that it actually disturbed the performers. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi was so deeply moved by the warmth of her reception when she appeared on the platform that she seemed bent on deserving it by doing her utmost when her average standard would have done. The result was an uneven, restless, and in part rough performance of the Concerto in E, which, according to the precedent set by Gevaert, of Brussels, was accompanied by strings reinforced by the organ. This is well, but greater discretion is needed on the part of the organist than was shown by Mr. Kiddle, who, perhaps, was too far above the soloist to realise how ill the tremolo matched the string instrument. The Concerto for two violins was adequately played—no more—by Miss d'Aranyi and Madame Adila Fachiri. Two Pianoforte Concertos—one for pianoforte solo (Miss Harriet Cohen), the other for two pianofortes (Miss Cohen and Mr. Arthur Benjamin), and a 'Brandenburg' Concerto for strings, on the other hand went admirably. At the end we had a Suite arranged for orchestra by the conductor, Sir Henry Wood. It was excellent in parts. The second section, for instance, had not a flaw, but there was one section when Bach sounded more like Bizet than we would have thought possible. B. V.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The L.S.O. concert on February 1 was another triumph for Sir Thomas Beecham. Sir Thomas is reported as being a somewhat difficult person to deal with, and rather 'unbusiness-like'—whatever that may mean. One thing, however, is certain: he cannot be allowed to live in retirement. A conductor who can make what he made of the 'Bartered Bride' Overture, who can put such stimulus and vitality into 'Heldenleben' belongs to the public. We cannot afford to ignore our best men at this critical time in our musical history. And 'Heldenleben' is a great test for a conductor. The hero is sick: sick with self-love. Great ideas still come to him, but he no longer reads clearly his own soul, unperturbed by the clamours from a lower world. He is agitated, ill-at-ease, and the conductor has to act the physician, soothing, encouraging; administering now a sedative, then a stimulant. Beecham did all this to perfection.

The soloist was Erica Morini, whose playing was infinitely better than her choice of Goldmark's Concerto, so suave and plausible that it becomes insignificant. B. V.

HANDEL TO MOZART

The fifth of Mr. Gerald Cooper's concerts, at Æolian Hall, on February 5, was devoted to 18th-century composers, from Handel to Mozart. The music was played by the London Chamber Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Anthony Bernard, and Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse (harpsichord). Mr. Cooper is only gradually winning a faithful audience for these very select concerts of his, but one cannot help feeling that in a musical community that was thoroughly sound and hale there would be no keeping people away. The programmes all along have been exquisitely chosen, and the performances as good. The fact seems to be that in our sprawling London it is not an exquisite entertainment—it must be an exciting one—that will take people out of nights.

Mr. Bernard's orchestra is wonderfully well composed. And we thank the players for not treating the 18th century too gingerly. Possibly they were a trifle overbearing towards the harpsichord in Mozart's Concerto in B flat, K. 456. But one has not a very certain standard for judging the effect of a Harpsichord Concerto. A Suite from Rameau, 'Les Fêtes d'Hébé,' arranged by Mr. Cooper, was a departure from the beaten track, mitigated by the appearance of a favourite 'Tambourin.' But nothing throughout the evening was common. The 'Alessandro' Overture of Handel was fine, sturdy stuff ; the Scarlatti Sonatas of Mrs. Woodhouse's second appearance were of the daintiest, most witty, and spirited rococo. We do not know half enough of the younger Scarlatti. The Symphony was Haydn's 'Farewell,' carried out with the due rites—the turning of a switch at the bandsmen's desks taking the place of the blowing-out of candles. The players departed with solemn, noiseless politeness. C.

BUDAPEST QUARTET

The Budapest String Quartet (Messrs. Hauser, Pogany, Ipolyi, and Son) appeared at Wigmore Hall on January 27 with a programme which consisted of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat major (Op. 18), Reger's in E flat major (Op. 109), and Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D major (Op. 11). The players' abilities were demonstrated most clearly in the Beethoven work, where meticulous regard for and understanding of the composer's aim resulted in a perfectly flawless performance. The slow movement in particular stood out as a faithful interpretation in which 'nothing extenuate, nor set down aught in malice' was the guiding principle. Its strict application gave us in just proportion the greyish picture Beethoven has painted unrelieved by sudden climaxes, generous lyricism, or unexpected touches of humour such as break through the last movement. The Quartet's technical skill and endurance, on the other hand, were tested (and thoroughly tested) by the Reger item—a long, wearisome essay in the art of modulation, as interesting as the composer's text-book on harmony. Not so much obscure as turgid (like many other works of Reger's), it has pages of some beauty and a few lines of great worth. But while most others see things more clearly as they get along, Reger seems to become more and more involved the further he goes. That he is a great master of the art of composition in all its branches is beyond doubt, but it is equally beyond doubt that here his skill was not a help but a bane which prevented him from stopping in time. It seems to have been his ambition to make the longest speech of the evening. He succeeded in this to perfection—and also in making a speech seem even longer than it actually is. After Reger, Tchaikovsky—with his infinitely slighter technique but infinitely more human mind—was very welcome, even though in the first movement these Budapest players were not equal to their earlier performances. B. V.

FACULTY OF ARTS

A series of modern chamber concerts began at the 'Faculty of Arts' Gallery, Golden Square, on February 2, with performances by Mr. Edgar R. Wilby's String Quartet, songs by Mrs. Thursfield, and pianoforte playing by Mr. Arthur Benjamin. The programmes (in the second of which, March 2, a new Trio by Gustav Holst figures) are intelligently arranged. Unfortunately the little gallery is about as hostile a place for music as one has ever known. Music there does not offer itself to you, but is thrown at you at close quarters. You are acutely aware of the smallest scratchiness or (in the case of the pianoforte) woodenness in the music-making. Every sort of tone that night sounded dead.

It was, then, by some intellectual rather than sensuous apprehension that one decided to applaud Mr. Gerrard Williams's second String Quartet. Its four short movements make up an extremely pretty achievement. There is some French influence, undoubtedly—in particular a reference to the Scherzo of Debussy's G minor Quartet. But here—let us recognise it—is a modern English piece which is not merely to be patted on the head and sent away with a penny to run and play somewhere else. It deserves to be made to feel at home. Mr. Benjamin was so clever as to play Mr. Arthur Bliss's set of four pianoforte 'Masks' with an air of spontaneity, though the music—full of quips—seemed designed to baffle the memorizer. Mrs. Thursfield sang Ravel, and the concert ended with a Quintet of Boccherini, in which the 'Faculty of Arts' audience recognised the celebrated Minuet with all the joy of Saturday night 'Promenaders.'

Why are these concerts termed 'Concerts Spirituels'—i.e., 'sacred concerts,' which they are not? Foreign terms are absurdly over-used in musical London. Let us resort to English rather than mis-use them. C.

SPENCER DYKE QUARTET

Violins—to say nothing of violinists—are peculiarly sensitive things, and either the instruments or the players seemed a trifle out of humour on February 8 when the Spencer Dyke Quartet appeared at Wigmore Hall. Apart from occasional impurities of tone and intonation, there was a tendency to anticipate the climaxes of a Beethoven Quartet which did not add to its beauty. Perhaps the players resented recent criticism which suggested a lack of 'bite' in their tone. But if 'bite' is what they are aiming at, they have got only as far as 'scratch' at present. They gave us also the first performance of an 'Ode to Autumn,' by Napier Miles, for voice, string quartet, oboe, and clarinet. This is a gentle, melodious work, free from any taint of modernism, impressionism, or any other 'ism.' B. V.

STRAVINSKY'S OCTET

Stravinsky's Octet for wind instruments (called an 'Octuor'—but why borrow a French solecism?) was played at the Music Society's concert, on February 9, by part of Mr. Anthony Bernard's orchestra. We do not know whether this composition has evoked a quasi-metaphysical disquisition from M. Boris de Schloezer, but we hope so, since otherwise it can have filled no purpose in life. It sounded as though it were meant to be funny ; but, whether or no, it saddened us, for the years are passing, and all that Stravinsky—the wondrous, coruscating young hopeful of 1911-14—produces is this sort of idle buffoonery. The Octet naturally causes a grin or two. But who, playing the fool with eight wind instruments, could not do as much? The plain fact of the case seems to be that Stravinsky has done nothing worth mentioning for thirteen years.

Paul Hindemith's inconsiderable scraps of wind 'Kammermusik' were also produced at this concert, to which Ricardo Viñes lent distinction by his icily-decorative pianoforte playing. C.

'MR. PEPYS'

Ballad operas are all the vogue. Let us be glad, for otherwise there would be no entertainments with reputable light music, musical comedy having gone to the dogs. 'Mr. Pepys,' by Clifford Bax and Martin Shaw, at Everyman Theatre, Hampstead, is a clever, tasteful, painstaking follower of 'The Beggar's Opera.' It made a very pretty entertainment, though it lacked the spontaneity of its exemplar. Somehow we never became convinced that Mr. Bax had his whole heart in the venture. It was as though a plain young man of to-day had got himself up for a fancy-dress ball. He does it thoroughly—historical detail all correct, bow and deportment properly studied. But he will, we are sure, change back into everyday clothes with alacrity. So Mr. Bax might have been challenged to take up a Restoration rôle, and he proves his cleverness by doing it so neatly. A Charles II. dramatist? Done in a moment! Wigs and picturesque clothes, and a well-simulated rakishness! What is wanting?

The hero of the piece is Pepys. Pepys is quite safe. His book is here to prove he was a man, in case he should for more than a moment be thought of as Mr. Bax's puppet. The amours revealed in the Diary give an excuse for Macheath scenes, and the link with 'The Beggar's Opera' is all the stronger since Mr. Frederick Ranalow is Pepys. The present generation flatters itself on its broadmindedness and charity towards Restoration licentiousness. But Pepys's amours were altogether more serious and dark and less picturesque and formal than Mr. Bax's little show, which has really had to leave Pepys out. It is another Macheath opera, and the crowds will go forth to see Mr. Ranalow. He brings to the scene a flowing geniality which does not seem to be in the careful, elegant libretto itself.

Pepys's passion for music gives a useful excuse for much song. Here again—and it is our only point against Mr. Martin Shaw's share in the work—we are aware of a rather cautious reproduction of an old pattern. Mr. Shaw sticks close to the epigrammatic brevity of 'The Beggar's Opera' songs, and in small space he has contrived many attractive little pieces that will please both the knowing and the casual ear. He has, we should say, saturated himself in late 17th-century tunes, and he is never at a loss for a merry thought quite in keeping with the period. Very likely there may be a permanent foothold for some of these pieces.

The opera is very cleverly and prettily staged, in the smallest possible space. Mr. Pepys is surrounded by a bevy of agreeable young women. It will be very surprising if it is not found to have hit the mark. C.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Madame Elizabeth Schumann, who had already made good friends at Covent Garden, has extended her London experience and, by giving a song-recital at Wigmore Hall (January 25), earned new regards. A sweet and highly-cultivated singer.

Her success is an indication of the recent improvement in the standard of singing in German-speaking countries. The best women singers of recent years have nearly all come from Vienna, Munich, or Dresden. None from Italy! The Italian men are still the best, however.

Madame Schumann sang Mozart, Schubert, and Strauss. It was a provincialism to give us 'Deh, vieni' in German, but generally her Mozart singing was enjoyed—for in it she finely matched tone and sentiment, and the diction was to the last degree polished. A difficult 'Alleluia,' new to the writer, was an occasion for a remarkable technical display, supple and full-throated.

Among her best successes were Schubert's 'Trout' and 'Im Grünen,' and Strauss's 'Cradle Song'—the first two were exquisitely sprite'y, and the legato of the last was beautifully sustained. Fault-finding may be reduced to a minimum. Only here and there one remarked exaggerated slurring, an inclination to stress an unimportant word, and a certain stiltedness. The result of this was to remind us that this charming person's art was studiously considered and calculated. It did not create the illusion of a natural ebullition. Mr. George Reeves's pianoforte playing fitted the singing like a glove.

Madame Elena Gerhardt gave a recital at Queen's Hall (February 2), and was also applauded at one of the Albert Hall Sunday concerts. No singer has a more faithful body of insatiable listeners here, and they have been gratified by her recent excellent form. At Queen's Hall, she sang Brahms in a way—full of dignity, understanding, and a solid conviction of the worth of the sentiments expressed—that was to be remembered. Madame Gerhardt, by exception, included in her programme some Italian and English songs. It is generally accepted as a deliberate compliment that a German singer should take up Purcell, and Madame Gerhardt's pronunciation was exceedingly good. In this group of pieces, however, her technique was more exposed than in the songs which are her special domain, and its weakness was particularly visible. She was apt to forget the rule that a phrase should be finished with a still open throat, whereby the impression is made that the singer could go comfortably on and on. Her long phrases sagged in the middle, and she did not hesitate to alter a vowel-sound in its course. These detailed criticisms of the work of a highly outstanding and artistically conscientious singer are called for because her overwhelming popularity may lead to an imitation of her faults. (Faults are easier to imitate than virtues.)

A baritone, Mr. C. Ciarni-Black, sang at Wigmore Hall with abounding confidence. He helped his expression by semaphoring his intentions with arms and hands. He based his tone, which was not by any means unpleasant in itself, on the deepest possible ah—a good, useful vowel, but not the only one. Of course the effect was monotonous, and in general the singer's performance was immature.

Miss Laurie Cruwys (contralto) gave a concert at Æolian Hall, proving so well in more than one way her artistic feeling, that one regretted she should not sing better. She made the impression of having altogether under-rated the requirements of, and necessary preparation for, professional singing. She began phrase after phrase as though it would be carried along and brought to an adequate end by some power within the music itself. That is all very well with lighter-than-air phrases, and some tripping songs, such as Parry's 'Ye little birds,' she sang very pleasingly. But the heavier-than-air phrases fell to the ground. The singer's quickly varying sympathies with the moods of her songs convinced one that a deeper study of her art would be well and usefully undertaken.

An American singer, Mr. Herbert Swing, at Wigmore Hall, struck me as being of a serious-minded order. His programme in itself proved as much. His tone easily filled the hall, but the quality of it wanted refining. Only occasionally did a truly-articulated word appear amid all this sound. Until Mr. Swing learns to pay out his breath in an artistic manner, his diction will remain undecisive, and his tone top-heavy.

Miss Joan Muirella at the same hall undertook far more than she can yet properly accomplish. She has a useful contralto voice, but of most of her performances one can only say that they were 'undigested.' She made her way through many songs as if it were a mere ramble. Her French, in particular, was impossibly bad.

Miss Linda Seymour (Wigmore Hall, January 25) was one of the best of the younger singers heard. A contralto, she had learnt how to produce a good flowing tone without the affliction of the usual contralto's 'plumminess.' And she could lighten her tone in a well-sustained piano. She sang the usual enormous variety of songs—a greater variety than almost any artist, let alone a young person, could adequately interpret. But it is the practice of present-day recitalists to produce at West-end concerts any songs they may happen to have studied or merely to have liked, without being able to throw any real light on the music. We must not reproach Miss Seymour in especial for this practice, for she gave us some uncommonly agreeable singing.

Mr. Dunstan Hart (Wigmore Hall, January 21) was a very young baritone with the beginnings of an excellent voice. At present his technique is amateurish.

The opera performances at the Old Vic. are interesting as a nursery of young dramatic singers who are working in a more arduous field than that of semi-amateurish lyrical singing. 'Aïda' on February 11 was a tall order for these aspirants, but the singing was of great interest and certain merit. The tenor, Mr. Henry Wendon, is someone to watch. His voice was light for the great task. He did not give us thrilling singing, but it was free and likeable, and never at all bothered by the tessitura. It strikes us at present as a voice for Mozart or for 'Rigoletto.'

The Aïda, Miss May Busby, sang the two great solos extraordinarily well, especially the one in the Nile scene. A big and a telling voice, but not yet a voice of especially beautiful quality. Miss Busby has already a knowledgeable art, and she husbanded her resources (as the tenor had not known how to do); she gave us a sense of the inwardness of the part, and could burst into a blaze of passion. Miss Busby should be careful to sing her lower notes on the chest register. When the music went below F she could make no effect against the orchestra.

H. J. K.

SOME PIANISTS OF THE MONTH

Mr. Sciaretti (from America) gave two recitals at Wigmore Hall. Spasmodically torrential, his playing would be of more interest had he a greater sense of proportion and fine phrasing, without which essentials music can be so desolating. Miss Nancy Thorp, at Grotrian Hall, was at her best in the limpidly flowing early music with which she opened her programme. Later, appearing to attempt to see every note as it was played, she mesmerised herself to a standstill. Allowing for the undoubted difficulties of facing a public audience, it cannot be said that she showed a real grasp of Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3. Miss Edna Garrard (Grotrian Hall) also experienced sad lapses of memory, without exhibiting the musical qualities of the former player. Both these ladies would seem to require further development and discipline before appearing again. Mr. Harry Field (Grotrian Hall), a Canadian pianist whose programme bristled with laudatory notices, amongst which were three from the greatest English dailies, may have forgotten much, but—after a conscientious if brief hearing, we regretfully concluded that he had not begun to know the meaning of music, or to suspect the potentialities of the pianoforte. In the Paganini-Liszt Variations there were cascades of wrong notes, and sentimentalised cadences in Liszt's 'Consolation' in D flat. These were drawn out beyond the limits permitted herself by the most offending prima donna.

This sloppiness is depressing! Is one too censorious? What is this will-o'-the-wisp quality that evades capture? It is the bloom on the grape—the delicacy of texture and fragrance of the flower — the breath of spring — the unselfconsciousness of a child. Definite but elusive, in music it is perhaps best illustrated in the playing of a great string quartet. It cannot be taught or tacked on to other accomplishments, but is personal, intuitive, and has something to do with spreading roots in congenial soil, and expanding in sunlight.

At last a more cheerful note! Miss Ethel Bartlett, at Wigmore Hall, on January 26, gave us for an hour that rare privilege of enjoying the intimate thoughts and society of some of the great spirits of the earth. This was music welling up from the living spring. Miss Bartlett possesses that exceptional gift of the true interpreter of merging her personality in that of the composer she interprets, and which—given adequate technique—results in the power to express the essence of their music. Opening her programme with Bach—two Bourrées, two Chorale Preludes, and the Prelude and Fugue in A minor—she then played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 110, other composers being Debussy, Delius, Ireland, Rachmaninov, and Chopin.

Miss Katherine Bacon has such capacity that we regret to record a gradually diminishing interest in her playing at Wigmore Hall. Brilliant, forceful, and sure, her performance was marred by lack of quality in her tone. She appeared to make too much use of the soft pedal, and on the other hand, to force her loud tone. Her Bach was good, but the breadth was destroyed by over-emphasis of occasional notes which, important in themselves, did not require such 'pointing out.' One was reminded of those students of campaigns who, working them out at home, stick pins into the strategic positions on the map. Miss Bacon stuck in too many pins. Though her playing of the Appassionata Sonata displayed grip, one wondered at times whether passion was not degenerating into bad temper. But even in the most agitated moments she never jumbled a passage or lost a note. Though one or two numbers in Debussy's 'Children's Corner' were good, there was a general lack of delicacy and subtlety.

The present crop or efflorescence of historical and analytical notes is all to the good, though it is more easy to write an analytical programme than to secure a superb performance, and one would forego the former if the latter were assured. Mr. Willoughby Walmisley, who gave two recitals at Æolian Hall, introduced them by a chronological chart of composers, and a historical review and analytical notes in his programme. A keen and sincere lover of music, Mr. Walmisley, though displaying excellent qualities, handicapped himself in his exposition by his disturbingly erratic time. One was not quite sure whether this was unconscious or intentional

Miss Susanne Morvay (Æolian Hall) began her recital with Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue. She was almost too energetic in the Fantasia, and there was a consequent lack of clarity. The Fugue was worked out on a large scale, being clear, rhythmical, and well wrought up. Miss Morvay has developed mannerisms, and indulges in too much rubato. Possessing a good touch and technique, her loud playing is too violent; indeed at times one wondered whether her instrument was a pianoforte or an anvil. The 'Pastoral' Sonata was wanting in the delicacy and charm that should distinguish it, and the Andante was taken too slowly to 'get over,' to use a theatrical expression. It was unfortunate that her memory played her false in a very loud and frenetic passage in Chopin's F major Ballade, which was hammered out several times (ffff) before she was able to weld it to her satisfaction—if not to ours.

D'A.

CHORAL CONCERTS

With the exception of 'The Messiah,' 'Samson' is probably performed more frequently than any other of Handel's oratorios—say once or twice a year in Central London—for masterpieces like 'Jephtha,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' and 'Saul' seem to have slipped out of the modern repertory altogether, to our grievous loss. However, if Handel is to be represented to musicians by one choral work, most Handelians would vote for 'Samson.' To begin with, the 'book' is, for a change, really satisfactory. Newburgh Hamilton's muse, when left to herself, may have been decidedly pedestrian, but she showed a pretty talent in compiling and dovetailing the products of another and greater muse—that of Milton, whose 'Samson Agonistes,' reinforced by passages from other works, notably a beautiful one from 'The Hymn to the Nativity,' constitutes the bulk of the poem. As regards the music, quite apart from familiar and well-loved things such as 'Let the Bright Seraphim,' 'Total Eclipse,' 'Honour and Arms,' the score abounds in revelations of Handel's overpowering and in many ways unique genius. The recitatives alone are masterpieces of psychological insight, and, in regard to the hero himself at any rate, of still undiminished poignancy. The choruses include 'Then round about the starry throne,' one of the most satisfactory essays in choral writing that even Handel ever produced. The duet, 'Go, baffled coward,' and many arias, among which 'How willing my paternal care' can alone be specified, remain to attest the essentially operatic flair of the composer.

Unfortunately, under modern conditions, 'Samson' can hardly be presented in its entirety. Something must be 'cut,' and the part selected for the process is mainly that of Delilah, which seems a pity. The lady is whitewashed by means of lawful matrimony in the text, but Handel's music leaves no doubt as to what he intends us to think of her. Most of her numbers, however, being omitted, she becomes a mere lay figure, and not a little ridiculous at that. If only conductors would take the recitatives at the proper (not the traditional) pace—that is to say, almost but not quite the pace of recitativo secco in opera—not only would the recitatives themselves gain immeasurably, but more of the music could be given. The disease that has settled on oratorio recitatives, however, appears to be incurable, if, indeed, it has not already killed the patient.

The performance of 'Samson' by the City of London Choral Union, under Dr. Harold Darke, at Central Hall, Westminster, on February 9, which gave occasion to the above reflections, had at least one great merit—it was really alive. There were mistakes—a bad one in the third part—and the tone of the tenors left a good deal to be desired, but soloists and choir sang the music as if they liked it—not in the perfunctory manner of certain recent performances that shall be nameless. Indeed, Miss Janet Powell, the contralto, proved herself a good Handelian singer with a real sense of style; and Mr. John Adams, the tenor, showed that he appreciated what the music should sound like, even if his voice did not always allow him to translate his intentions into actuality. Mr. George Parker, the bass, was more impressive as a Hebrew Father than as a Philistine Bully, and Miss Bertha Steventon courageously attempted the perhaps impossible task of singing 'Let the bright seraphim' after wrestling with what remained of the musical lures of Delilah.

F. T.

A large audience went to the Albert Hall on January 30 full of enthusiasm to hear the Royal Choral Society sing 'Hiawatha.' No other choir has done more than the Royal Choral to make and maintain 'Hiawatha' as a classic, and Coleridge-Taylor's picturesque trilogy remains in the repertory with everybody's consent. With all the tragic story of Minnehaha's death overshadowing its middle portion, it is the brightest afternoon's music that the Society provides, with the exception of the Christmas carol concert.

In the hands of the Royal Choral Society and under the guidance of Dr. Malcolm Sargent, the music lost none of its lustre. The choir sang with the certainty and expressive freedom of long familiarity; in fact, it is common knowledge that many or most of the singers know the 'Wedding-Feast' by heart. The solo parts were taken by Miss Ruth Vincent, Mr. Morgan Kingston, and Mr. Harold Williams.

A few hours later the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society was performing the same music at the Northern Polytechnic, under Mr. Allen Gill. The only difference in the standard of performance was that Mr. Gill had a number of amateur players in his orchestra, and for that his Society loses no marks of credit, but rather gains them.

The London Choral Society, under Mr. Arthur Fagge, held a miscellaneous and rather experimental evening on February 10. One of the experiments, Elgar's 'There is sweet music,' had to be abandoned without a trial. It certainly contains trouble for a choir that has four new part-songs and two Bach Motets to deal with on the same evening. The Motets were 'Now shall the grace' and 'I wrestle and pray,' and the part-songs were four Scottish compositions or arrangements by John Foulds, pleasantly devised and effective.

'The Kingdom' was performed on January 23 by the People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Society—one of the most prominent of the organizations to which we look for light and leading in the outer musical circle of London. Under Mr. Frank Idle the choir showed the power of thoughtful expression that the music demands.

At the Crystal Palace there was a pleasant Sullivan-Elgar concert by the Choral and Orchestral Society on January 30, under Mr. Walter Hedgcock, and on February 13 the Penge and District Society, conducted by Mr. Alfred B. Choat, gave a performance of 'King Olaf.'

The London Sunday School Choir held its annual concert at the Royal Albert Hall on February 13, when anthems and choruses by Handel, Mendelssohn, Stanford, and Walford Davies, and part-music by Gibbons, Bishop, Elgar, and others, were sung under Mr. Walter White. Mr. Wesley Hammet conducted the orchestra.

Beethoven's Mass in C and the 'Choral' Symphony were given at the Baths Hall, Wimbledon, on January 26, by the Wimbledon Choral Society. The conductor was Mr. Kenneth Brown.

The first public appearance of the new Bach Cantata Club occurred at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on February 15. The solo singers were Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Arthur Cranmer; and under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott a select and well-balanced choir of about thirty voices took part in three Cantatas. These were 'Das neugebor'ne Kindelein' (No. 122), for soprano and bass, chorus, strings, oboes, harpsichord, and organ; 'Jauchzet Gott' (No. 51), for soprano, strings, trumpet, and harpsichord; and 'Liebster Jesu' (No. 32), for soprano and bass, chorus, oboe, violin, strings, and harpsichord. Everything was done according to Bach's scoring, or, in the case of some figured basses, a skilful imitation of it, and the dimensions were those that were common in Bach's day. The Prelude and Fugue in B minor were played by Mr. E. Stanley Roper.

Letters to the Editor

'ABSOLUTE PITCH'

SIR,—In your 'Answers to Correspondents' column in the January issue you refer to 'absolute pitch.' This 'gift' has always greatly interested me. How can it possibly be a drawback or, as is stated, 'a nuisance'? The only possible nuisance it might be is if a musician had the gift and played one of the transposing instruments in an orchestra. Otherwise possession of this sense is nothing but a sheer joy and ever-constant delight.

How is it one can correctly tell the pitch of two instruments tuned a complete semitone apart? Several times I have tested this, and in pianoforte shops, where all the instruments are differently tuned (some differing more than a semitone), I have never failed in correctly stating notes or chords or keys. Is it common or very uncommon? —Yours, &c.,

A. P.

'TEMPERING THE WIND TO THE SHORN LAMB'

SIR,—Since so many of your readers must have read Mr. Brent-Smith's article in the January number, may they not have before them at least one other point of view this month? Mr. Brent-Smith complains that the uneducated musical public is given no tunes they can understand (Palestrina, Byrd, Tallis), and pleads for the 'simple melodies' of Handel, Schubert, and Beethoven.

Let us divide up this ill-used people into two categories—rural and urban. The rural population hears music chiefly (a) in the Sunday anthems, (b) by wireless, (c) from village home-trained choirs. I should say that very few country parsons and organists train their choirs to sing Palestrina, and club-room concerts do not often include Byrd, but very often 'render' romantic German pianoforte solos and songs about roses, love, and moonlight. And doesn't the country occasionally hear 'The Messiah'? The urban population hears music (a) at 'celebrity' concerts, (b) by wireless, (c) through its own endeavours in singing and chamber music. I have never heard, nor ever seen, a 'celebrity' concert programme which has not included pieces by Beethoven, or Schubert, or Chopin, or all three. The tuneless Bach, Palestrina, and Byrd rarely, if ever, appear. Nor do they appear in amateur concerts, because the 'simple melodies' always attract player and hearer for the simple reason that they are simple. Wireless does not force us to listen to Palestrina, but gives us plenty of intelligible stuff. The gramophone too—but we are too uneducated to use them.

There is, however, a bigger question behind it all—the thick shadow of German romanticism. England cannot free herself from it. She has had in the past the finest music in the world, and she has at present a large school of promising composers; yet she clamours for more German treacle. The sooner Mr. Brent-Smith's uneducated people are made to realise that Englishmen can write 'simple melodies,' and have written them, the better it will be for us all.

Too patriotic perhaps? But nevertheless necessary. —Yours, &c.,

W. A. G. BROWNE.

Oxford.

AN ARPEGGIO POINT

SIR,—It is almost with a feeling of presumption that I suggest to my fellow pianists there is something in the details of technical instruction they have overlooked; and therefore, with a preliminary protective apology, I offer the following remarks on a matter that for me contains something of value and importance. I refer to the non-use of the arpeggio of the dominant major ninth. So far as I have been able to ascertain, no pianists' examination syllabus, from those of the highest diplomas downwards, includes this arpeggio among the requirements specified. It will be asked, What virtue can be claimed for it which makes its omission a matter of importance? The answer, I think, is simple and obvious.

The value of arpeggio-playing lies in the power it possesses of developing lateral control of the fingers, upon which the correct placing of the finger-tips over the various chord shapes depends—a delicate muscular acquirement called for by the construction of the pianoforte keyboard.

The necessities of pianoforte-playing emphasise the importance of equal development of each hand, although in actual playing the character of the work performed by the two hands may be for the greater part different, especially in elementary music.

Now the finger shapes of the dominant seventh in the two hands are different, since the notes are selected in the same direction, whereas owing to the construction of the hands the fingering is set out in opposite directions. In playing an arpeggio of this chord each hand therefore acquires a different finger shape. It may be contended that the inequality is rectified when all the different dominant sevenths are studied, and that ultimately the result in both hands will be the same. But a curious fact emerges, for the dominant shapes in one hand are the dominant major ninth shapes in the other, so that unless the latter arpeggio is used the development of the hands can never be equal.

This can be proved by considering the construction of the keyboard and noting the distances that correspond when taken in opposite directions. So far as white notes are concerned, all distances of equal interval are similar, but once black notes are employed it is no longer so. Thus D to F♯ is smaller than E to G♯, and so on. This is due to the placing of the black notes in relation to the white; G♯ is centred between G and A, but F♯ and A♯ are placed to the left and right respectively of the white notes they lie between. The same is noticed of C♯ and D♯, but here the displacement is greater, causing the space between the two black notes to be greater than the spaces separating the three black notes. It follows that intervals between white and black notes have a variety of width that needs to be taken into account, as, although the differences are minute, it cannot be denied that all pianoforte playing is a matter of minute differences, and accuracy depends on the ability to control the fingers to this delicate extent.

So far as regards common chords the work done by each hand is identical—D major in the right hand being similar to the second inversion of G minor in the left, and so on. The same holds good of diminished seventh chords—that on E in the right hand being similar to that on C (downwards) in the left.

In order to ascertain the chords that resemble each other in the two hands, it is only necessary to remember that the note D is the centre of the symmetrical arrangement of the keys, and all measurements from D in opposite directions are equal for the same number of semitones. Measuring from a certain distance to the left of D requires measurements to be made from the same distance to the right of D; thus, calculations from B towards the left have as their contributories similar calculations from F towards the right, and so on.

We can now compare the chords that are similar to those of the dominant seventh. If we take the dominant seventh on D—D F♯ A C D—for the right hand we shall find, taking the notes downwards, that D B♭ G E D provide us with a similar chord for the left hand; this is, the fourth inversion of the dominant major ninth on root C. Likewise if the left hand plays D C A F♯ D downwards—a dominant seventh—the right hand similar chord will be D E G B♭ D. These two chords may therefore be called contributories, and all inversions will present the same features. Experiment will demonstrate that every dominant seventh has its contributory major ninth.

A simple illustration will show why this is so. Place the two hands on the diminished seventh on D, so that the thumbs occupy the same note D. Now the note which constitutes the minor ninth from the root may be either F, A♭, or C♭ (the thumb note is not concerned in the argument). Let us take the case where A♭ is the minor ninth. This note is occupied in each hand by the middle finger. To form a dominant seventh chord it will be necessary to move the middle fingers to G, but this at once disturbs the symmetry of the fingering. If we wish to preserve symmetry—the basis on which equality of finger work depends—the middle fingers must move either towards the thumbs or towards the little finger; that is, in opposite directions. Consequently one A♭ will move to G and the other to A natural. This produces in one hand a dominant seventh and in the other a dominant major ninth.

Having proved my point I will only add that this corollary follows: the diminished seventh arpeggio should be studied first; not only because the spread of the fingers is more evenly disposed, but because it forms a basis from which the more difficult positions of the fingers in the other chords can better be studied.

It will be a satisfaction to me if one day every advanced pianoforte examination syllabus is revised, so as to include this highly logical feature of technical instruction.—Yours, &c.,

PERCY RIDEOUT.

The Charles A. Gillett Pianoforte School,
11, South Molton Street, W.1.

THE VIBRATO AND OTHER VOCAL MATTERS

SIR,—Mr. E. C. Dutton quotes an old Italian maestro who wrote that 'we leave the vowels oo and e to those who wish to imitate wolves and tigers.' If this is so, pray what are we to do when dealing with words which contain these vowels: who, whom, you, through, sweet, blue, &c.? There is a lot of nonsense written, talked, and practised with regard to singing, and a great deal is made of certain 'secrets,' which should not be secrets to teachers, singers, and pupils. Granted that singing, like other arts, requires years of patient study in order to gain facility and technique, and that there are problems which have to be faced, yet there are rock-bottom facts which cannot be disputed, and singing pupils need to be put on the right tack as soon as they commence to study, if they are going to do any good, keeping these facts in mind.

Many teachers commence training on the open vowel ah, as in 'father,' and teach their pupils to sing with an open mouth—a widely-open mouth—seeming to model all the other vowels on this sound. Randegger, in the preface to the 'Fifty Lessons' of Concone for soprano, says that all the lessons should be sung to this vowel. In the introduction to the 'Forty Lessons' for contralto, he says that the last fifteen should be sung in this way, but—apart from the use of solfeggi, which are anathema to most British students and teachers—omits to say how the first twenty-five should be done. Of course nobody who knows anything about the subject would tackle Concone without some previous training. Take, for example, the words whom, home, haulm (I know that we shall not be required to sing about potato haulms, but I use the word for consistency), harm, and hame (Scotch). There is a different condition of the mouth for each word. You cannot sing harm with the mouth in the position for whom, neither can you sing whom with the same shape as for harm; but a pupil has to learn to sing all these vowels with the same forward production, otherwise there will be no resonance, and there will be no vocal curve—the line of a song would be merely a switchback, or would probably assume the appearance of the track plotted on a weather chart. Ah is the most difficult vowel, and, I am convinced, should be left to the last, when the more easily-produced forward vowels have been mastered. Training on ah, except under special circumstances, results in the hard, white-toned, throaty singing which so often we have to put up with. Surely we have to learn to sing and to blend all the vowels, which will never be done by a staple diet of ah in a widely-opened mouth. Most singers open their mouths too much, merely to make a loud noise and to win the applause of the ignorant.

Madame Lilli Lehmann says in 'How to Sing' (I quote from the translation by an American) that > '. . . all the vowels must be mixed with oo. Ee certainly must be (try oo-ee-oo-ee-oo without altering the shape of the mouth) or the vowel is a horrid, piercing noise. Oo-ay-oo-ay-oo, used with judgment, will in most cases produce a round and good ay, as in "may" or "day," instead of the abominable meh or deh which we so often have to listen to. The short vowels also need to be taught. The short e, as in "fled," frequently needs to be coloured—the singer imagining that it is followed by an r ("fler*d*"); not singing it, but merely imagining it. Imagination is a useful thing.'

The vibrato goes on its way rejoicing. The only thing is to continue to stamp upon it whenever one gets the opportunity. It is an ugly distortion, as is also the habit many so-called singers contract of commencing any word beginning with a vowel with a grunt or horrid click in the throat. I have heard 'everlasting' attacked in this way, and I always want to attack the perpetrator. It is a part of the policy of the so-called singer who prides himself (or herself) on 'kicking out the words.' Doesn't this sound artistic? The things we want in singing are pure vowels, ease of production, colour, control, and clean consonants.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM J. COMLEY.

'Panfield,' 153, Ware Road,
Hertford.

SIR,—I am greatly interested in the controversy upon the art of singing in your February issue, and shall be glad if you will permit me to submit a few lines on the question. (I was a pupil for four years with Edwin Holland, for three years with Manuel Garcia, and for some years with others.) I shall be glad to know where, in either of the works of these masters, one can find the correct method of production clearly set forth, so that an intelligent student can follow it. With the greatest respect for Garcia, I say that neither in his writings nor in his personal training did he give the necessary guidance. As I am one of nature's exceptions, and did not mature until I was thirty-five years of age, it may surprise some of your readers to know that it was the late

Sir August Manns who, before I was thirty, said I should not mature until I was thirty-five. At the age of forty-five (I had rested for over ten years), I, with six or seven years' constant daily practice, re-trained my voice myself upon the lines of Plançon's and Battistini's singing, and have had great success.

The trouble with present-day singing in general, lies, I think, both with the masters and the pupils. Too few masters of the present day know anything about the art of correct production, and very few pupils are willing to work the necessary years to acquire the art.

Natural resonance is found in all instruments, but with the human voice it is frequently not developed, and in many cases is frustrated by a wrong method of production.

True production is not acquired in two or three years. Chaliapin says in seven or eight years; Caruso eight or nine; Battistini seven or eight.

I have gained more knowledge from the chance sayings of a well-known conductor than from all the books.

To excel in any art requires patience, perseverance, energy, enthusiasm, and intelligence. May I ask the gentleman who has studied vainly for fifteen years, and read many books, if he can tell me of a book on the art of painting which would do for that art what he wishes from one on singing?

—Yours, &c.,
B. W.

London, S.E.

Sir,—I second the suggestion of Mr. Reginald Bussell. It is exactly what I desire to know. What is this distinction between 'declamatory' and 'cantabile' open? Is not the latter term an invention of Mr. Travers Adams's?

—Yours, &c.,
W. E. Bell-Porter
(late of the Moody-Manners Grand Opera).

4, Fielding Road, W.14.

Sir,—I will do my best, with pleasure, to answer Mr. Bussell's question, though it is a big subject.

The cantabile, or strictly 'singing' open voice, is a clear, firm, penetrating, hard (not harsh), style of quality, but at the same time it possesses a certain mellowness, roundness, and smoothness that mark it off from the coarser, more noisy declamatory open voice. This 'singing' open voice is suitable for portraying really beautiful effects of a lively, cheerful, rousing, jocular nature, and, on the more serious side, passionate love, exhortation, &c. On the other hand, the declamatory open voice is a shouting, noisy, at times coarse kind of open quality, frequently harsh and devoid of mellowness. It is imperatively necessary for the true expression of effects which are not of a legally pleasant kind, however dramatic, grand, and forceful they may be. I allude to the portrayal of anger, hate, rudeness, malice, rage, boastfulness, sarcasm, &c., all of which must at times be expressed in song. But however much the whole effect may be admired, the quality is not admitted to be pleasant in the strictly beautiful sense of the word.

Sensations caused by correct placing:

(1.) Cantabile.—The weight of the sound rests upon the walls of the pharynx, and in the cavity of the larynx. The pressure is felt against the entrance to the nasal cavity (just above the uvula), also against the under surface of the soft palate and the hard palate, sideways into the inflated ventricles of the larynx, firmly on the edges of the vocal cords, and extends down into the windpipe and chest. The pressure is equally distributed above and below.

(2.) Declamatory.—The pressure, or weight, of the vibrating column of air is almost entirely confined to the hard palate, higher than which it does not rise. The predominant sensation of the pressure is underneath the vocal cords—in windpipe and chest, and above in the cavity of the larynx. The pressure is very strong on the under surface of the cords themselves. The line of mental direction of the sound is somewhat from the back of the throat and chest in a forward direction.

Action of the mechanism (scientific):

(1.) Cantabile.—Cords gradually made thinner and shorter, tensed in a lateral direction as the scale is ascended, and edges made specially firm. Gradual elevation of the soft palate, and narrowing of the pillars of the fauces and pharynx. Inflated ventricles, and air running sideways into them. Special tension, and consequent resonance of parts above the vocal cords, i.e., ventricles, cavity of larynx, pharynx, mouth, and nasal cavity. This latter is owing to the tension and shaping of the pharyngeal walls, which conduct the vibrations of the column of air contained in them to the entrance of the nasal cavity, thus throwing into vibration the air inside that cavity. These resonators, acting in such a manner above the cords, add harmonics to the fundamental sound, making it rich and pleasing. Throughout the scale the larynx is kept in the same position as it assumed for the low notes.

(2.) Declamatory. — An excessive preponderance of fundamental resonance. Sound confined too much to the chest, and too low in the laryngeal cavity, owing to the uniform thickness of the vocal cords. Cords stretched in a longitudinal direction only, thus raising the pitch like the screwing up of a violin string. Larynx rising higher as the scale is ascended. Ventricles not inflated. Mouth open to such an extent that the pillars of the fauces and the pharynx are hindered from narrowing and tensing in such a manner as to draw the sound up high enough to procure the upper resonance consisting of special harmonics.

Effect on vocal mechanism, power, solidity, and quality produced by the two voices:

It cannot be denied that a carefully cultivated declamatory open production has enormous power, solidity, and volume. It is the voice naturally employed in shouting on all occasions where power is the chief object. Bellowing out words of command, violent efforts, in rage, to make oneself heard, do not permit of any pleasantness in the quality of the sound sent forth. Power and excessive weight are the only effects striven for. Therefore it should easily be seen that this voice can be legitimately used only for the production of certain effects. It is highly inartistic to employ it for really beautiful effect, because the quality is not intended by the true artist to be beautiful. When a singer shouts out in derision, or in uncontrollable rage, the quality would not be impressive at all if it were pleasant. However artistic a singer may be, while he is limited to this kind of production he cannot command real success in spheres outside its legitimate radius. I feel sure that this is the principal reason why grand opera does not impress the majority of people in this country. Their true artistic sense is not satisfied by the quality generally employed in this kind of opera.

But, further, if no other production is used at all, the effect on the vocal mechanism may be tragic. Almost all the weight falls on the under surface of the vocal cords, which are kept as thick as possible throughout the whole scale. In time this will ruin the elasticity of the cords, roughen their edges, and occasionally produce little nodules or warts on them. The substance of the cords becomes stale and dead, and finally utterly unresponsive to anything but excessive expiratory force. Soft singing has no penetration at all. But it may be objected that, as the declamatory open voice must be used at least on certain occasions, it must be practised; but if its use is so risky, how can one dare to practise it at all?

The truth of the matter is this. The special production called declamatory should always be limited to exceptional occasions. It should be very seldom used even by the most robust and hardiest organs at the commencement of training. Those who possess weak and delicate voice mechanisms should leave its practice severely alone. After all, it is the practice of dark or closed production and the cantabile open that feeds the declamatory open. First of all gain a beautiful, mellow, dark quality. From this proceed to the cantabile open tone, fully developed, big, solid, and penetrating. Then try the declamatory production, at first sparingly and at intervals.

Introduced carefully in this way it will improve the cantabile open, as well as itself. This is all a matter of experience. There are singers who on occasion can use a magnificent declamatory voice without any injurious results. But these are clever, thoughtful artists; they thoroughly understand their voice, and know exactly how much work it will stand. The great majority of teachers and performers do not understand this side of the matter, and the results are often tragic. They do not appear to have studied the physiological side of the subject at all.

I am sorry to have taken up so much space, but the point under discussion is of the greatest importance in the singing world. Until the full truth is clearly recognised matters will go from bad to worse. I repeat at the close of this discussion that which I asserted at the start, that it is the permanent use of this declamatory open voice that tends to end in the tremolo, or vocal wobble, because of the over-emphasised pressure on the vocal cords.

But I have just one word more to say to Mr. Hamilton. Knowing him well as a keen student and specialist in the science of phonetics, I am the more surprised at his assertion about my expression 'exaggeratedly clear pronunciation.' After what I have explained about the various productions possible to the human voice, surely he, who speaks about the oo mould for all vowels, must see that in the changes involved in each of these productions the vowel sounds must also undergo modification. There is such an operation as closing the ah sound in a sad legato melody, and on the other hand opening the oo vowel sound in a lively, rousing, declamatory theme. Neither care about the necessary modification, or the being forced to occupy other than their casual speaking moulds, but such procedure has to be submitted to.

This, however, is also a very big subject and cannot be properly treated here.—Yours, &c.,

10, Portman Street, W.1. H. TRAVERS ADAMS.

[This correspondence is now closed.—EDITOR.]

SIR WALTER PARRATT

SIR,—We hope that a Memoir of my father will shortly be written by one of his old pupils, and I have been asked to collect material for it. I should be grateful for any reminiscences or letters (the latter being promptly copied and returned) from those who knew him well.—Yours, &c., GEOFFREY PARRATT.

143, York Road, Woking.

'YET IN MY FLESH'

SIR,—During Eastertide probably no solo is sung more frequently than the air from 'The Messiah'—'I know that my Redeemer liveth.'

In the second part of this solo, owing to a mis-translation, the words convey an opposite meaning to that intended. I refer to the verse, 'Yet in my flesh shall I see God.' In the Revised Version of the Bible, the word from is substituted for in (from, according to a marginal note, meaning without).

I have persuaded several eminent sopranos to make this alteration, and I hope that the revised version—at least as regards this one important word—may be soon universally adopted.—Yours, &c., HERBERT HODGE.

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2.

'SUBJECTIVE CRITICISM'

SIR,—I think I can see a hole in the argument of Mr. Cecil Gray's letter on 'Subjective Criticism.' Certainly no one critic can see all sides of a case at once, and it may be true that two utterly dissimilar criticisms of a given object might be equally just, though it is difficult to think of such a case in practice. But what Mr. Gray leaves out is the necessity that the reader should be impressed by an attempt, at least, on the part of the subjective critic to see as much of the object as possible before describing it—by the critic's fairness, in fact. Perhaps I may hint that an impression of fairness is usually obtained by an intention to be fair. On the other hand, this naturally hampers the lively verbal quips of our subjective critics. Brilliant subjective criticism is all the easier the narrower one's blinkers. Given these blinkers, the critic of course cannot 'see all round the table.' He catches perhaps a partial glance of a really distinguished composer, and decides that he is nothing more than a 'hippopotamus in a bath'—so down that goes in black and white, even in book form, and in the 'twenties is dignified with the name of subjective criticism. What real service this sort of literary activity may do is a puzzle to some of us, but it occurs to me that music may possibly be simply a peg on which a candidate may hang his thesis for the diploma of some obscure Academy of Facetiousness.—Yours, &c.,

H. J. KIMBELL.

'OPERA RECORDS'

SIR,—In an article under the above heading, by Mr. Wakeling W. Dry, which appeared in the February number, there are two statements that require correction. The first refers to the German performances of 'Tristan' and 'Die Meistersinger,' given at Drury Lane in 1882, and says that 'neither opera seemed to attain much success.' The very contrary was the case. I was present on both occasions, as well as at more than one repetition of each work, and I can confidently assert that the enthusiasm with which they were then received has never been exceeded either in this or any other country. The houses, too, were uniformly crowded.

The second mistake is in the date of the five-hundredth performance of 'Faust' at the Paris Opéra—never, by the way, called the 'Grand Opéra' by Frenchmen. This event took place not on November 4, 1878, but on November 4, 1887. The brothers Jean and Edouard de Reszke, who both appeared in it, did not make their débûts at the Opéra until 1885.—Yours, &c.,

40, Avenue Road, N.W.8. HERMAN KLEIN.

A MUSICAL RENASCENCE

SIR,—Amid the sadness of bidding good-bye to so many friends of mine up and down the country, it has been a pleasure to note almost everywhere a quickening in musical appreciation. To-day there are gratifying signs that the British audience begins to hear as well as listen; and if the result is to be a musical revival the credit for it will be due in no small degree to such men as Hallé, Henry Wood, Eugène Goossens, Landon Ronald, Albert Coates, Hamilton Harty, and a number of other pioneers in London and certain provincial centres.

Yet mainly, so it seems to me, the secret of this new interest is to be found in the astonishing enlargement of the audience for music accomplished by the gramophone and broadcasting. Although I believe I was the first prima donna to make a gramophone record and the first to broadcast, I have, whilst recognising the possibilities of these devices, never accepted either of them uncritically, and I am well aware of the flaws in wireless as that science is practised to-day. But, just as I have followed the gradual perfecting of the gramophone, so I think we may look forward to like improvements in wireless. Broadcasting and the gramophone are certainly the two most eloquent missionaries to the musical heathen in our midst.—Yours, &c., NELLIE MELBA.

5, Chesham Place, S.W.1.

'MUSICIANS, BEGGARS, ETC.'

SIR,—I am prompted to ask you what (if any) is the status of the musician to-day? We know that in law he is merely a subject for jest, and that the great legal lights make sport of his attainments. The late Sir Frederick Bridge, for instance, was in a certain law case regarded as a harmless imbecile, and more recently a great judge counselled early drowning as the most effective prophylactic of musical intention.

I am reminded of this because to-day I chanced upon a dictum which seems to place the musician even lower yet. In the window of an establishment a few yards east of Aldgate Pump was displayed the following notice in print: 'Hawkers, flower-sellers, musicians, beggars, &c., are not allowed in this Bar.'—Yours, &c.,

Westcliff-on-Sea, Essex. MUSICO APPENATO.

AN INTERESTING RELIC

SIR,—The church in which I am organist possesses a relic of the old days of church orchestras in the shape of a 'cello marked:

'Benjamin Banks
Fecit
Catherine Street, Salisbury (1775)' which was used up to the time when an organ was introduced.

I shall be obliged if you or any of your readers can tell me whether this maker was a well-known one, and if the instrument is likely to have any value apart from its antiquarian interest. It is without bridge and strings, but is otherwise in good condition.—Yours, &c.,

'Dolwar,' Groes Lwyd, Abergele. E. LLOYD SIMON.

RAVEL'S HARMONY

SIR,—In his interesting analysis, M. Casella traces certain well-known harmonic features in Ravel to the climactic passage in Chopin's B minor Scherzo (1835), which he quotes as Ex. 6. It may not be devoid of interest to point out that this chord is found earlier (and used, not climactically, but quite quietly, as if in the ordinary course of things) in Schumann, at the thirteenth bar from the end of No. 5 of the little-known six 'Concert Studies,' after Paganini's Caprices, Op. 10 (1833).—Yours, &c.,

28, Hilldrop Crescent, N.7. FELIX WHITE.

CLEMENTI'S CONNECTION WITH LICHFIELD

SIR,—I was much interested to read in the December number of the Musical Times of Clementi's connection with Lichfield.

I am a native of Lichfield, and heard the story fifty years ago. At that time I was an articled pupil of the Cathedral organist, Thomas Bedsmore, and another articled pupil told me that his grandmother, a Mrs. Summerland, had been connected with Lyncroft and knew Clementi.

My brother, who is a little older than I am, and who has lived at Lichfield all his life, corroborates. He well remembers hearing from an old articled pupil and assistant at the Cathedral in Spofforth's time (H. Matthews) that Clementi used to walk to the Cathedral on Sunday afternoons to hear the anthem.—Yours, &c.

CHARLES J. WOOD.

3, Castle Road, Wellingborough.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Young tenor vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. S.W. or W. districts.—W. BIGGS, 12, Redcliffe Gardens, S.W.10.

Male vocalist wishes to meet good accompanist for mutual practice.—P. PARSONS, 2, Felday Road, Lewisham, S.E.13.

Young tenor singer wishes to meet contralto for practice of duets. Brixton district.—H. M. W., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet other good instrumentalists for the practice of classical works. Would like to form quartet or trio, or would accompany singer.—Miss AYTON, 35, Camynge Square, Clifton, Bristol.

Lady pianist wishes to meet good 'cellist or violinist for solo or trio work. S.W. district.—V. H., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice, with view to formation of quartet.—S. London district.—H. W. K., c/o Musical Times.

The Clarendon Singers have vacancies for three baritone-basses and a tenor. Keen men and good readers desired. No subscription. Meetings, Mondays, 8.30 to 9.30.—CONDUCTOR, 19, Clarendon Road, Lewisham, S.E.13.

Lady pianist wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual practice. Experienced in trios and quartets. London, W.10, district.—W. B. C., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wishes to join orchestra or dance band. N.W. or W. district.—W. G. F., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to meet pianist or violinist for duets, &c. Classical music.—J., 443, Hale End Road, Higham's Park, E.4.

Amateur violinist (intermediate grade) wishes to meet accompanist or instrumentalist for mutual practice. Blackpool district.—C. F., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist and violinist wish to meet 'cellist, for practice of trios. Fair sight-reader. Near East Ham.—R. B., 47, Sibley Grove, E.12.

Young lady pianist (A.L.C.M.) wishes to meet violinists or vocalists for mutual practice, or would join amateur concert party. N. London.—TETRA, c/o Musical Times.

Young pianist wishes to meet good violinist or 'cellist for mutual practice.—J. E. TURNEY, 30, Athletic Street, Burnley, Lancs.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet good violinist or 'cellist for mutual practice. Essex.—R., c/o Musical Times.

Vocalist (Southampton) wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Hampshire reader preferred.—HARMONY, c/o Musical Times.

The music-master of University College School, Hampstead, N.W.3, wishes to hear from amateur string players who would care to join in occasional symphony concerts given at the school to the boys during the daytime.

Sharps and Flats

Shakespeare's dictum, 'The man that hath no music in himself is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils: let no such man be trusted,' is utter nonsense at the present day. Speaking from a long experience, I would much rather lend a fiver to a non-musical friend than to a musical one.—A. Eaglefield Hull.

I loathe sham. It is literally impossible for me to say what I do not mean.—Dame Nellie Melba.

There is always a renaissance for anything good, but only the bad goes on for ever.—Sir Thomas Beecham.

People say British audiences are cold, but when once they like you, they are far more demonstrative than any others. Why, they stand in line to get into your dressing-room after a concert, and beg for autographs and flowers, and even tear bows off your dress for souvenirs, if they can. That may prove expensive, but it's a sincere compliment in a way.—Luella Melius.

What is an audition?—Mr. Justice Eve.

Max Reger's Quartet in E flat is truly lethal chamber music. Once Reger gets fairly going there is never any stopping him; he does not compose, he spawns.—Ernest Newman.

Miss —— would give more pleasure if she confined herself to music within her powers. The Babu's highly coveted honour, 'failed B.A.,' is not really worth having; that he covets it is what makes him a Babu. Let us decide what we can play, and then play it as well as we possibly can.—A. H. Fox-Strangways.

'8.5. Bad music by living British composers, by the Wireless Military Band.'—Programme in Provincial Paper.

Reger reminds me of a fat old fakir trying to get illumination by fixedly but confusedly regarding his abdomen through endless years. . . . If César Franck is the Pater Seraphicus and Scriabin the Pater Ecstaticus, Max Reger is surely the Pater Umbilicus of music.—Ernest Newman.

'Next Sunday a day of special interest at church. Morning subject, "A Drunken Church." Anthem by a full Choir.'—Canadian Paper.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of March, 1866:

SOPRANO.—A Lady possessing a good voice, and accustomed to lead a congregation, desires a re-Engagement.—Address, Miss S., 148, Great College Street, Camden Town, N.W.

MUSICAL TRANSPOSITION MADE EASY—MINASI'S TRANSPOSITION TABLETS are invaluable to those who wish to transpose songs, &c., accurately and quickly. Complete in case, with description of their use. Price 3*s.* 6*d.*—Metzler & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

OSWESTRY GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—Wanted, at Easter, an ASSISTANT MASTER, with some knowledge of Singing and Accounts.—Address, Rev. A. Short, the Schools, Oswestry.

WANTED, a good COACHMAN; must drive well, and understand horses, carriages, &c. Must be active, quiet, and respectable, with good character. Also be able to read music and sing well. Alto preferred. Married or single. If the former, wife as laundress.—Address, Rev. L. D., Lockington, Beverley, Yorkshire.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

What may be almost termed a novelty will be the special performance at Queen's Hall, on March 24, of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, by the Royal Academy orchestra and choir, under the direction of Sir Henry Wood. It will be novel, inasmuch as the work has never yet been given in London in its entirety. Beginning at 2 o'clock, it is expected to last till 6.45 p.m.; there will be an interval of three-quarters of an hour, from 4.30 to 5.15 p.m. This concert should prove of great interest, and Sir Henry is taking, if possible, even more than his usual pains with its production. The playing of the Academy orchestra has attained a high pitch of perfection, as was agreed by everybody present at the half-yearly orchestral concert last December. For the Passion music the ensemble will be reinforced by several additional instruments, especially in the wind department. It is as well to state that the public may obtain tickets from Queen's Hall, or the Secretary of the Royal Academy.

A students' organ recital was given in Duke's Hall on February 1, and served to bring out talent distinctly above the average. There was no display nor artifice exploited; indeed, in practically every solo austerity was more the prevailing feature, and performers and professors are to be congratulated on this admirable feature. Extremely confident and quietly assured was Mr. Owen Franklin's performance of César Franck's Finale in B flat. This promising student experienced no difficulty in the purely executive part, and, in addition has clear ideas of his own as regards phrasing. Two of Bach's Chorale Preludes were tastefully played by Mr. Eric Brough, and moreover played from memory. Another promising performance was given by Mr. Leonard Foster, of a Fantasy-Prelude by Charles Macpherson, the music being attractive as well as good. The concert was pleasantly diversified by a number of songs, and especial commendation is due to Miss Lesley Duff for her singing of a couple of songs by Guirne Creith. The student-composer accompanied. Both songs—particularly the second, 'Tranquillité'—are unusually attractive. Miss Duff has a pretty voice and an effortless production, and in due course may go far.

On February 15 a successful chamber concert took place in Duke's Hall. Perhaps the most interesting item of a well-made programme was the slow movement of a String Quartet by the Principal of the Academy. It was well played by the four girl instrumentalists. The movement is difficult, but its sombre greyish colour, so Scottish in its symbolism, makes it very fascinating. Two vocal duets from 'Proserpine,' composed by Sybil Barlow, a one-time student, were sung with much facility by Miss Maud Bostock and Miss Vera Kneebone, but the duets themselves missed the mark through aiming too high. Gifted with a pretty voice of sympathetic quality, and a pleasing style, Miss Dorothy Hall sang 'Una voce poco fa' with a good deal of charm, and will do even better in a little while. An excellent performance of the Prelude and Bourrée from Bach's Suite in C for violoncello (unaccompanied) was given by Miss Peers Jones.

The following scholarships have been awarded:

Gowland Harrison Exhibition (male pianists) to John M. Fraser (Inverness), Philip Burton being highly commended and Alfred Cave commended. Emma Levy Scholarship (Jewish pianists) to Esther Lewin (Liverpool), Fannie Rosenberg being commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The principal feature of the last month has been the number of excellent performances of ensemble works at the chamber concerts, especially worthy of notice being Beethoven's F minor Quartet, Op. 95, led by Miss Marie Wilson, and Brahms's Sonata for violin and pianoforte, played by Miss Barbara Pulvermacher and Mr. Norman Greenwood.

In orchestral work the College students have been unusually active, for within eight days there were two orchestral concerts and an operatic performance with full orchestra. Of the orchestral concerts the programme given by the first Orchestra was naturally the most extended. It included the Grail Scene from 'Parsifal,' with solos and chorus; the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto; Richard Strauss's 'Don Juan'; and Saint-Saëns's 'Africa.' The programme of the second Orchestra afforded opportunities to the senior conductors of the College. Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, Boëllmann's 'Cello Variations, Schumann's Concertstück in G major, and Overtures by Beethoven and Mendelssohn were played.

The performance by the Operatic Class consisted of three Acts of Puccini's 'Bohême,' produced by Mr. Cairns James, and conducted by Mr. H. Grünebaum. This was given in the College Theatre, and went with great smoothness. Perhaps one might single out for special mention the Mimi of Miss Vera Gilman, and the Rudolph of Mr. Cavan O'Connor.

Two rehearsals for executive artists have been given this term by the Patrons' Fund. At the first of these Miss Anthea Bowring (of the Matthay School of Music) gave a highly interesting and artistic performance of the Beethoven E flat Concerto, and Miss Ida Starkie (Royal College of Music) made a very good impression in Elgar's exacting Violoncello Concerto. Songs were also contributed with success by iMss Myrtle Stewart and and Mr. Edward Warburton (Trinity College of Music). The programme of the second rehearsal included, besides some songs, a performance of Richard Strauss's Burlesque for pianoforte and orchestra, by Miss Rene Cook (Royal Academy of Music), and of the Dvorák Violin Concerto by Miss Eda Kersey, who studied privately.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Lent term is now in full swing, with an ever-increasing complement of students whose enthusiasm is well shown at the popular Wednesday afternoon House concerts. The terminal orchestral concert will be given at Queen's Hall on March 27, preceded on March 25 by a chamber music concert at Æolian Hall.

The harpsichord lecture on January 27 was full of interest, and was a valuable lesson to the College students, who as a rule have little acquaintance with this elegant music, which suffers by transposition to the pianoforte. Miss Chaplin's performance was a thorough delight, and the comments by Dr. Bridge contained many valuable historical notes. This lecture was on compositions from Byrd to Couperin; and the programme of the next—to be given in March—will include music by Rameau, Bach, Handel, and other composers, concluding with Arne.

Successful distributions of certificates, attended by Dr. J. C. Bridge, have been held at Rochdale and Southend; at Guildford, Torquay, and Brixton, Dr. Horner has represented the College.

O.U.D.S.

The composer commissioned to provide incidental music to Shakespeare's 'King Henry IV.,' Part 2, has not a very heavy task. Falstaff, it is true, is inclined to sing when he enters the Boar's Head Tavern, and he calls for musicians to make a background for his amour with Doll. But it is so much in the background of the general din that no composer need spend any pains on that. There is the military march, of which Holst makes a thrilling moment in 'At the Boar's Head,' but the songs of Master Silence are too drunken to call forth much lyrical inspiration. None the less, if Shakespeare put in few stage directions demanding music, a sympathetic producer like Mr. Bridges-Adams knows where a composer can heighten his effects for him. In an Elizabethan theatre, where one scene would run without interruption into the next on another part of the stage, these opportunities would be too few and fragmentary to require music worth the name, but where a curtain has to come down between episodes a thread of music can give unity to the rapid changes of scene.

In the recent production by the University Dramatic Society, at Oxford, we were introduced to the King, to Prince Hal, to Falstaff, to Doll Tearsheet, and to Justice Shallow, before the curtain went up on them. There was a little prelude, like a Wagnerian Vorspiel in miniature, in which the characteristic motifs stretched out their natures before we saw their doings. These five themes persisted and recurred throughout the play, and in true Wagnerian fashion changed their shape according to the demands of the drama. Hal's tune, in particular, became the climax of the play when the populace acclaim him in the streets in the last scene to a march that had a touch of the 'Meistersinger' and a hint of 'Cockaigne.'

Mr. H. Temple Abady, who was till quite recently an undergraduate at Christ Church, has been remarkably successful in writing distinctive themes that are admirably fitted to the needs of the play. An opera composer might envy his skill in hitting off so briefly his characters. Simple, broad effects are required in the theatre, and Mr. Abady obtains them at once. If the actual tunes, though distinctive, do not make music of great distinction, they have the supreme virtue of being apt to their purpose. 'Polite modernism' is the composer's own description of his music, but he has modelled himself more on Verdi and Elgar than on Milhaud or Poulenc, or the other gentlemen who have recently been giving us impolite modernism in music of the theatre at the Coliseum. His tunes are certainly tunes, and not misshapen melodies, and even the more grotesque form of Falstaff's theme is not uncouth or bizarre.

This is the first time for many years that an undergraduate has provided music for an O.U.D.S. play, and Mr. Abady has to be congratulated not only on adding to the merits of an excellent production, but upon his powers of characterization and of dramatic effect, for the exercise of which we may hope he will find wider scope in many future theatrical enterprises.

F. S. H.

Competition Festival Record

We have received and read with interest the report of the Conference of Delegates from the Competition Festivals of Western Canada, held at Calgary in January. Inevitably much of the discussion was of purely local importance, but one topic at least has some interest for Festival promoters in this country. A delegate suggested that > . . . some effort should be made to test the musicianship of the winners of first awards before bestowing gold medals.

The point arose because it had been found that some gold medallists were > . . . using the Festival for their own personal aggrandisement in a way that was not warranted, and was not intended by the Festival itself.

The term 'gold medallist' often gave an exaggerated impression of the holder's ability. As one of the speakers pointed out, this was because the public generally failed to distinguish between an award of the kind gained at a competition, and one obtained as a result of examination by a recognised body. In the former it merely meant that the winner was the best of the entrants (all of whom may have shown a poor standard), whereas in an examination a total of marks was set, below which no award of the kind was made. One remedy suggested was the dropping of medals and the substitution of prizes in kind—presumably books and music. We hope this proposal will be adopted. Canadian Festival promoters may be interested to hear that at British Festivals medals are now given much less rarely than formerly. In fact, we believe that the old custom of wholesale distribution of bronze, silver, and gold medals has been dropped entirely, the only awards of the kind being in connection with special solo classes. Even this limited use is to be deprecated, for the reason given above. Far better is the very sparing bestowal of a piece of plate for outstanding merit. For example, success in the Rose Bowl contest at Blackpool carries weight, because the test is searching and the winner is the survivor of a leet from six large classes comprising some hundreds of entrants.

We wonder if judges in Canada or at home make sufficient use of their power to withhold an award in cases where the standard is poor. This is a very valuable prerogative. No judge likes to exert it, but there can be no question as to its salutary effect. It may cost a Festival a slight loss of entries from disgruntled competitors, but the impression made on the remainder, and above all on the public, is ample compensation. After all, the Festival movement will stand or fall in so far as it attracts and retains public confidence in its educational power. A Festival at which cups, medals, and certificates are lavishly bestowed will soon lose the support of the really keen public, and of all competitors worth their salt. We should like to see a more courageous attitude in this matter, especially on the part of local executives. No judge cares to take a drastic step (and one that must be to some extent unpopular) unless he can count on the backing of the organizers. In saying this, we do not overlook the necessity for discretion. Obviously too stringent an attitude at a new or struggling Festival would be out of place.

Bound up with this subject is that of a sight-test for soloists. One of the delegates doubted the wisdom of such a test, on the ground that the competitors were amateurs :

> Many amateurs were good soloists, but only indifferent readers, although with preparation they could give as fine a rendering as some professionals.

That may be so, but the aim of the Festival is not merely to enable amateurs to beat professionals in the singing of a given song. It is also (and above all) to improve the musical culture of the community, and such culture can never reach a high standard so long as the level of sight-reading (which carries with it immense possibilities of all-round musicianship) remains low. We sympathise with this delegate's remark as to the importance of avoiding the discouragement of entries, but we part company with him when he goes on to say that the 'own choice' piece in the chief solo classes 'provided some test of musicianship.' It is a guide as to taste, but in all other respects it is exactly on all fours with the test-piece in the syllabus, because unlimited time may be spent in its preparation. Like the test-piece it may be picked up parrotwise. There will be a weak spot in the Festival movement until this question is tackled boldly and discreetly. The solution will be found in the use of tests so easy as to preclude absolute failure on the part of the average competitor; and in the avoidance at all times of a suspicion that sight-reading is regarded as a fetish and an end in itself instead of a means.

Our Canadian friends may be assured that their efforts on behalf of the Festival movement are being watched on this side with interest and good wishes.

Mr. Theo. Wendt sends us a syllabus of a Wireless Eisteddfod held recently at Johannesburg—the first of its kind, as far as can be ascertained. The procedure is of interest, as similar events will no doubt take place in this country sooner or later. At Johannesburg the preliminary contests were held in a hall, the judges being screened, and arriving at their decisions by sound alone, as would the wireless listener. The final tests took place in the Broadcasting Company's Studio, and the listeners were invited to vote on forms provided for the purpose. Great interest was aroused, and although the event was arranged at rather short notice, six hundred entries were received. The large number of voting papers sent in testified to the public interest, and Mr. Wendt tells us that the voting on the whole showed sound judgment. The final tests lasted nine evenings.

In addition to the usual solo events the classes comprised ensembles of various kinds, including wood-wind duet, brass quartet, jazz orchestra, boys' band, military band, mandoline band, vocal quartets, and choirs of various kinds, and on the elocution side duologues, one-Act plays, and (a capital feature) an announcing competition, the entrants being allowed ten minutes to prepare for the reading of news, advertisements, &c. (We wonder if any new and sonorous 'uncles' were discovered.) The vocal solo classes included English folk-song, old-fashioned ballad, Afrikaans, Coon or Plantation song, jazz song, and musical comedy solo. In a large proportion of the classes the choice of piece was left to the competitor; where tests were set the standard generally was excellent. Were listeners asked to vote on the competitors' 'own choice'? A vote of the kind would be instructive.

The potentialities opened out by an event of this kind are considerable, but apparently a Wireless Competitive Festival can never be more than supplementary to the real thing, because it is inevitably weak just where the ordinary Festival is strong—on the social and communal side. Still one never knows, and we may yet live to see Mr. Fairfax Jones and the Federation swallowed up by the B.B.C.

Mention of the Federation reminds us to draw the attention of conductors of amateur orchestras to the Carnegie Orchestral Loan Library, formed by the Federation for the benefit of such organizations of the kind as find a difficulty in obtaining suitable music. Special terms are granted to small bands in villages, or in connection with schools, clubs, &c. Full particulars from the Secretary, British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, 3, Central Buildings, S.W.1.

The Federation Year-Book for 1926, in addition to the usual features that make it an indispensable work of reference, contains an article by Dr. W. G. Whittaker on Choral Conducting, full of the keen practical commonsense that is expected from him. This new departure is so good that we hope the Year-Book will follow it up. There are at least a dozen Festival subjects (not forgetting those concerned with organization) that call for just this practical treatment. Why not issue one or two of such essays annually in this way, and in a few years publish a collection in book form?

CHESTERFIELD.—Over fifty classes were judged at this three-days' Festival (January 28-30). The adjudicators praised especially the school singing (which, Mr. Roberton said, was as good as anything of its kind south of the Border) and the violin playing. Mr. Lawson's Holmewood Choir was at the head of the mixed-voice choirs.

GOLDERS GREEN, LONDON.—The first Hampstead and Hendon Musical Competition Festival will be held at the Institute, Hampstead Garden Suburb, on April 8, 9, and 10. The syllabus is obtainable from the hon. secretary at the Institute.

HUDDERSFIELD ('Mrs. Sunderland' Competitions).—At the Festival held on February 10-13 there were fewer entries than last year, but the number of choirs had increased. There were eight entries in the chief mixed-voice competition, the test for which was 'I wrestle and pray.' Holmfirth and District Musical Society (Mr. Edred Booth) was placed first, and Checkheaton Central (Mr. Harry Bennett) second. Greetland Vocal Union (Mr. H. Shepley) was first in the male-voice choirs. One of the sensations of the Festival was the playing of Wieniawski's 'Légende' by a violinist of seventeen, Albert Hepton.

Music in the Provinces

ALTON.—The Choral Society of Alton distinguished itself greatly, on February 10, even to the capturing of half-a-column in The Times, by giving a stage performance of 'Dido and Æneas.' Miss Susan Lushington conducted, and well-known artists figured in the cast, Miss Millicent Russell being Dido, and Mr. Steuart Wilson Æneas. The accompaniments were played by a small string orchestra, with Mr. Gerald Cooper at the harpsichord. Everybody concerned won huge credit.

BATH.—Beethoven's Symphonies are being given in chronological order at the Pump Room concerts, under Mr. Jan Hurst. The seventh was excellently played when its turn came. On the same evening Mr. Hurst handed the baton to Mr. John Roberts, and played the second Pianoforte Concerto of Saint-Saëns.——The eighth Symphony came to performance on January 23.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The Pianoforte Quartet of Strauss was the only work on the programme when the Philharmonic Pianoforte Quartet appeared at the Mid-day concert on January 21. It was admirably played, and its youthful, energetic spirit was kept alive throughout. ——Mr. Leonard Hirsch and Miss Lucy Pierce were partners in the César Franck Sonata for violin and pianoforte the following week. Mr. Hirsch, who is a member of the Catterall Quartet, displayed much technical expertness, yet did not quite catch the inner spirit of the work. He was delightful, however, in two pieces by Kreisler.——The Philharmonic String Quartet called on Mrs. Kauffmann to assist with the second viola part when essaying the Mozart G minor Quintet on February 11. The work was given capably rather than with any special beauty of treatment. Perhaps it is that Mozart's music, with its simplicity so full of meaning, calls for players of maturer years than the members of this Quartet.—— The Birmingham Music Society continues its Sunday evening concerts. On January 24, Bach, Handel, and Scarlatti figured in the programme. Miss Mary Abbott was the soloist, and played Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, the Prelude and Fugue in A minor, and the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, as arranged by Busoni. At another concert in this series, Mr. John Goss gave a song recital. His programme consisted of songs by Schumann, Purcell, Schubert, Liszt, and included a group by van Dieren.——Mr. Goss was the soloist also at one of the Sunday concerts given by the City Orchestra. On this occasion he sang Schubert's rarely heard 'Todtengräber's Heimweh' with superb art. Mr. Michael Mullinar was a perfect partner at the pianoforte. Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Scheherazade' Suite, Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad,' and Chabrier's 'España' were played by the orchestra. Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony was the principal item at the Sunday concert on January 24. Mr. T. A. Clarke was the soloist in Weber's Bassoon Concerto, which he played in fine style. Mr. Charles Hedges sang a Mozart Aria extremely well.——Mr. Emerson Whithorne's orchestral piece, 'The Aeroplane,' which was the novelty at the concert on January 31 had its first English performance on this occasion. Mr. Whithorne is said by some to write music expressing to a marked degree the American mentality. One hopes this is not so, for in this piece he seizes on the most unpleasant features of his subject, and describes them in musical sound. We are given the noise and rattle of an aeroplane without a suggestion of its grace and speed.——The 'Enigma' Variations were the principal feature of a Sunday concert on February 7, but Mr. Boult gave them rather a dull performance.——Madame Adila Fachiri was the soloist at the City Orchestra's Symphony concert on January 19. She played Brahms's Violin Concerto in D in big, bracing style, though her tone at times had a suggestion of roughness. Mr. Boult conducted 'Death and Transfiguration,' the Prelude to 'Parsifal,' and Elgar's 'In the South.'——The Symphony concert on February 9 had for its principal item the first performance of Granville Bantock's 'Four Pagan Chants.' The poems are set for tenor solo with orchestral accompaniment. Written in the vividly-coloured, rhapsodic style characteristic of Bantock's music, the songs strike a passionate note welcome in these days when so many composers are restrained and aloof. Mr. Bantock had a perfect interpreter in Mr. Frank Mullings.——A quartet of gifted artists appeared at the third concert in the Max Mossel series. Madame Elizabeth Schumann brought exquisite taste and perfect musicianship to songs by Mozart, Strauss, Graham Peel, and Vaughan Williams. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi and Miss Myra Hess played together in Bach's B minor Violin Sonata and the G major Serenade of Mozart. Miss Daisy Bucktrout was an admirable accompanist.——Madame Gell's Ladies' Choir gave a concert of its own on January 7. The pieces drawn on for performance were for the most part just a little commonplace, Holst's 'Ave Maria' being an exception. Berlioz's 'Ballade of Ophelia' was delightfully sung. At the same concert Mr. Arthur Cranmer sang, and Miss Mavis Bennett gave some songs in the conventional coloratura style.——On February 11 the Festival Choral Society gave a performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony, with Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Roy Henderson in the solo parts. Debussy's 'The Blessed Damozel' and Brahms's 'Alto Rhapsody' were included in the same programme.——The City of Birmingham Choir ventured on a concert performance of Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' on January 27. The noble choruses were sung with splendid vigour and beauty of tone, but the soloists (Miss Constance Willis, Mr. Parry Jones, and Mr. Herbert Heyner) failed to live up to the standard set by the choir.

BOLTON.—At a concert of the Choral Union, on January 27, Sir Hamilton Harty conducted the Hallé Orchestra in his own D minor Violin Concerto, and Mr. Arthur Catterall played the solo part. The choral works included 'Forward through the glimmering darkness,' from Parry's 'War and Peace.'

BOURNEMOUTH.—The following works appeared in four programmes at the Winter Gardens: Glazounov's 'To the Memory of Gogol,' Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune,' Beethoven's ninth Symphony (without the Finale), Harty's 'Irish' Symphony, Elgar's Violin Concerto, Glinka's 'Komarinskaia,' Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, Schumann's fourth Symphony, Stravinsky's 'Fire-Bird' Suite, and d'Albert's 'Cello Concerto.——The Don Cossacks have given two concerts.

BRADFORD.—The first performance of a String Quartet, Op. 30, by Mr. Douglas, was given on February 10 by the Yorkshire String Quartet.——St. George's Hall is soon to be turned into a cinema theatre, and, with no adequate hall to perform in, the four chief concert-giving organizations at Bradford will probably have to close down. The musical part of the population is greatly troubled at the prospect of Bradford becoming one of the least instead of one of the most musical towns of its size in the kingdom.——Mr. Julius Harrison conducted Brahms's first Symphony at a recent concert of the Permanent Orchestra.——At the Eastbrook Hall 'sixpenny concerts' on Saturday evenings, the artists have included Mr. Frank Mullings, Miss Rosina Buckman, M. Sapellnikov, and Mr. Norman Allin.——Mr. Keith Douglas opened a series of orchestral concerts at St. George's Hall on February 14.

BRIGHTON.—At a concert given by Mr. Herbert Menges and his Symphonic String Players on January 30, the music included an orchestral arrangement of the Finale of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in F, Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite, Grieg's 'Holberg' Suite, and Julius Harrison's 'Prelude Music' (with Miss M. Adams as harpist).

BRISTOL.—Twenty madrigals and part-songs were sung at the ninetieth annual ladies' night concert of the Madrigal Society. The modern works included three by Sir Walford Davies—'Tune thy music to thy heart,' 'Weep you no more,' and 'Fair and Fair.'——The Don Cossacks were at Colston Hall in January.——Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Lionel Tertis sang and played for the Philharmonic Society on January 23. Under Mr. Arnold Barter the choir sang Bach's 'Jesu, Joy and Treasure,' Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' and other well-known part-songs.——The fine standards of the Choral Society were upheld at its hundred and twentieth concert on January 30, when Mr. George Riseley conducted 'The Dream of Gerontius' and the Grail scene from 'Parsifal.'——The Bristol Orpheus Glee Society held its eighty-second annual ladies' night on February 11, when the choir of ninety voices sang a varied programme under Mr. George Riseley.

DARWEN.—The Choral and Orchestral Society, under Mr. John Bentham, gave 'The Banner of St. George' and a selection from 'The Messiah' at the first concert of its season.

DERBY.—The last of the season's chamber concerts took place on February 5, when the programme included Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet and Brahms's Clarinet Quintet. The string players were the Catterall Quartet.

EASTBOURNE.—The new Christ Church Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. H. Mills, made its first appearance in January with a performance of Stanford's 'The Revenge.'

EXETER.—'Dido and Æneas,' arranged for concert purposes, was performed by a choir, small orchestra, and soloists, at a concert of the Exeter Chamber Music Club on January 20, Dr. Ernest Bullock conducting.

HANLEY.—The programme originally chosen by Sir Thomas Beecham for his tour with the London Symphony Orchestra was changed on arrival at Hanley by the substitution of Beethoven's second Symphony for the Tchaikovsky Theme and Variations—to everybody's satisfaction. The concert was much enjoyed.

HASTINGS.—Seven players from the Municipal Orchestra gave the Beethoven String and Wind Sextet at a recent concert.——The orchestra, under Mr. Basil Cameron, played the 'Unfinished' Symphony as illustration to a lecture by Mr. Percy Scholes, on January 23.

HUDDERSFIELD.—Mozart, Beethoven, and Debussy were played by the Capet Quartet on January 26.——At a concert of the A. W. Kaye orchestra the principal work was Schubert's seventh Symphony.

HULL.—Sir Henry Wood conducted Franck's Symphonic Variations (played by Miss Helen Guest) and a D major Symphony of Mozart at the Philharmonic Society's concert on January 21.

LEAMINGTON.—A concert devoted to the music of the late Purcell Warren was given at the Town Hall by Mr. R. S. Bullock on January 30. The works performed were a String Quartet in A minor, an unfinished Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, played by Mr. John Snowden and Mr. Thomas Dunhill, pianoforte pieces by Miss Marion Keighley Snowden, and songs sung by Miss Megan Foster. At the end the quartet played Mr. Dunhill's 'Scherzo of Happy Remembrances,' written in memory of Purcell Warren.

LEEDS.—The D minor Organ Symphony of Guilmant was played at a Saturday orchestral concert, by Mr. H. Percy Richardson and the orchestra, under Mr. Julius Harrison. Beethoven's eighth Symphony was given at a later concert of the series.

LEICESTER.—A special concert of string music was given by the Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Malcolm Sargent, on February 4, the principal features being a Purcell Suite, arranged by Albert Coates, Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite, and Elgar's 'Introduction and Allegro.'——The Beecham-L.S.O. tour opened at Leicester.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Sam Vickers has announced that owing to lack of support he will be unable to continue his series of concerts after this season. He attributes the failing attendances to broadcasting.——The B.N.O.C. opened a fortnight's season on February 8.

LOWESTOFT.—A concert performance of 'The Immortal Hour' was given by the Musical Society on January 20, Mr. C. J. R. Coleman conducting. The bass parts were taken by Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, and the oboist was Mr. Leon Goossens.

MANCHESTER. — Like Pachmann's, the two farewell concerts of Dame Melba partook somewhat of a personal and public demonstration, the Brand Lane audiences including many who would recall the singer's first appearance here in the palmy days of the Percy Harrison régime, when she followed in Patti's train ; and some who still retained the vivid impression produced by the intensity of her trills, whose vibrations were such as to produce a mental-aural impression that the walls of the Free Trade Hall were rocking on their foundations. Like many an artist before her, Dame Melba paid warm tribute to the discrimination of Manchester audiences.——This event apart, the year's music so far has witnessed a singular and unpremeditated concentration on the work of Bach, Berlioz, Brahms, and Elgar. As a sign of the times it may be noted that the hoarding-posters of the Hallé concerts now merely state the title of the symphony or concerto to be played. That has sufficed to draw full houses—clear evidence that the Hallé management believes that works (as distinct from 'star' soloists) are the more potent attraction.—— As the early autumn provided something in the nature of a Beethoven quartet festival, so the earliest days of the New Year brought from the members of the Edith Robinson Quartet (with assistance from Mr. Frank Merrick, Mr. Otto Paersch, Mr. Harry Mortimer, &c.) three concerts devoted to Brahms chamber music, supplemented in mid-January by the fourth concert of the Catterall Quartet, consisting solely of the same composer's work and culminating in the great Quintet in G. The second concert of the Manchester Vocal Society was also devoted to the Brahms Liebeslieder, with pianoforte duet accompaniment, and several of the great choral songs from his ripest period, first introduced to Northern choralists at Morecambe in the early years of this century. At the Bowdon Chamber concert the fine lieder singing of Mädame Elizabeth Schumann was not more admirable than the great Brahms A major Sonata played by Arthur Catterall and John Wills. This Brahmsian concentration would have been carried a step further, but for the fact that Harty cancelled the January 21 expected performance of Brahms's third Symphony, in favour of a 'repeated by desire' of Elgar's Symphony No. 2, which had been first heard at the Hallé concerts in November, 1911, under Richter, and not again until January of this year. Writing last season in admiration of Harty's undoubted genius in Brahms interpretation, the hope was then expressed that this enthusiasm might lead directly to a similar concentration on Elgar's symphonic output, as the qualities revealed in Brahms would inevitably find their complement in the modern work. One hardly could have expected so speedy a vindication of judgment. The A flat a year ago, under Harty, may not have achieved the sculptural and monumental character as revealed under Richter or Ronald, but it had a good deal of Elgar's own finely nervous energy and impetuosity. This quality in Harty found even fuller expression in the two performances of the E flat on January 7 and 21. The first movement's sheer exhilaration quite took the audience by surprise—those glorious few bars' fantasia on the chord of E flat at the end, for example, found the listeners open-mouthed in simple wonder. It must be remembered that, unlike the audience of twenty years ago, it was discovering its Elgar. Elgar properly performed may leave you hot or cold ; he appeals overwhelmingly or not at all ; people don't 'approve' him ; they are unmistakably 'for' or 'against,' and never 'neutral.' It was soon evident that the orchestra loved its job—no mental reservations there. What one missed on January 7 was the ripe, mellow colouring of the more contemplative sections. Elgar's moods of reticence or repose, for some, constitute his greatest wonder, and those people at Manchester who know his work fairly well have gained much of that knowledge from his own conducting at the meetings of the Three Choirs Festivals, where the enormously impressive quality of these moods is enhanced by the glories of the setting, the autumn sunlight, and general feeling of repose. That feeling cannot be recaptured in the Free Trade Hall of a great industrial community, and those who never have the privilege of these experiences in the West Country will never drink to the full the emotional content of the contemplative thinker in his music. The 'repeat' performance a fortnight later was much more persuasive in the softer moods, especially in the solemn sunset splendour of its closing moments, whilst Elgar as the man of action evoked a still more thrilling response from conductor and players. Harty we know to be supremely a master in Brahms and Berlioz (his 'Fantastique' on February 4 was easily the most vivid reading ever heard here, both in its pictorial and emotional aspects). His mastery of Elgarian emotion is no less complete.——Miss Jelly d'Aranyi has been the most distinguished visiting instrumentalist of the period, and her Brahms Concerto (February 11) was most refreshing in its rhythmical aspect.——Bach's B minor Mass under Harty, on February 4, produced some of the most sensitive Bach choral singing I have ever heard, worthy to rank beside the memorable Sheffield Festival performances under Wood, in 1910.——The spring season of the B.N.O.C. operas has been guaranteed to over eleven hundred pounds, and the advance bookings for the first week are in excess of the total advance bookings for a fortnight of the autumn season. Those who know their Manchester best always said that the disastrous loss sustained last November was no fair criterion of this city's interest in opera.

NEWCASTLE.—Peter Warlock's 'The Full Heart,' having been twice abandoned by the Bach Choir for further rehearsal, was at length performed—and enjoyed by the audience—on February 6. Dr. Whittaker said it was the most difficult piece written by an Englishman. At the same concert the choir sang Ayres by Dowland and Bax's 'This worlde's joie'; Miss Joan Elwes sang and Dr. Whittaker played the spinet.——John Ireland's Fantasy Trio and two movements from Glière's String Octet were given at a concert of the Oppenheim Society.

NORWICH.—The 'spring season' of weekly municipal concerts opened on January 23, under the direction of Mr. Maddern Williams. At the third concert, which drew the largest audience, the English Singers gave madrigals and folk-songs.——At St. Mary's Lecture Hall, on January 28, a small string orchestra, under Mr. Cyril Pearce, played a Vivaldi Sonata da Camera, the third 'Brandenburg' Concerto, a Haydn Symphony, and a Purcell Suite.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Municipal Orchestra, which is not receiving the support it deserves, presented the following excellent programme on February 3 : Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture, Handel's fourth Organ Concerto, in F (Mr. Bernard Johnson), Mozart's E flat Symphony, the 'Dream Music' from 'Hansel and Gretel,' Debussy's 'Petite Suite,' and Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques.' Mr. Fred Mountney conducted, and the soloist was Mr. Walter Widdop.

Oundle.—The Choral and Orchestral Societies joined forces under the Rev. E. S. Lake, and gave a concert at which the principal features were Stanford's 'The Revenge,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Viking Song,' and movements from Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony.

Oxford.—At the fourth subscription concert Mr. Maurice Besly conducted the Æolian Chamber Orchestra in the second 'Brandenburg' Concerto, Mozart's Symphonie Concertante for violin and viola, Gerald Finzi's 'Severn Rhapsody,' and various other well-chosen works.

Portsmouth.—An Elizabethan and Bach Society formed under the direction of Mr. Hugh Burry made its first appearance at the Town Hall Saturday Municipal Concerts on January 23, singing madrigals by Benet, Pilkington, Byrd, folk-song arrangements, and Holst's 'Two Psalms.' The orchestra, assisted by Mr. Alfred Fransella and Mr. Claude Hobday, played a Purcell Suite, two Bach Concertos, and the B minor Suite for flute, and Miss Margaret Champneys sang Bach and Elizabethan songs.

Reading.—The concert edition of 'Faust' and Stanford's 'The Revenge' were sung by the Reading St. Luke's Musical Society, at one of the most successful of its concerts. Mr. Arthur C. Foster conducted.—Miss Dorothy Helmrich (singer), Mr. Gerald Cooper (harpsichord), Mr. John Barbirolli ('cello), and Mr. Samuel Kutcher (violin), were the artists at the Music Club's concert on January 27.

St. Albans.—The second series of Mr. Claude Powell's orchestral concerts at the Grand Palace Cinema opened on February 4. Mr. Norman O'Neill conducted his four 'Blue Bird' Dances and Mr. Powell the remainder, which included the 'New World' Symphony.

St. Austell.—'Samson' was performed by the St. Austell Musical Society on January 21, under Mr. S. D. Collins, the choir of eighty voices being accompanied by Miss I. M. Little and Miss Myra Ball on the pianoforte and organ.

St. Neots.—The performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha' on February 12 was in every way a credit to the St. Neots Musical Society, the orchestra, the soloists, and the conductor, Mr. J. H. White.

Sheffield.—A number of interesting recitals and chamber music concerts took place late in January and early February under various auspices, the artists being Mr. Laurence Turner (violin) and Mrs. J. B. Leathes (pianoforte), in the second Sonata of Delius; Miss Myra Hess; the English Singers; Miss Murray Lambert (violin) and Mr. Cyril Chantler (pianoforte); Mrs. Dorothea Rodgers (in a Lieder recital); Mr. Reginald Paul and Mr. Charles Woodhouse; Mr. Frederick Woodhouse; and Miss Edith Robinson (violin).

Torquay.—At the fourth and fifth Symphony concerts Mr. Ernest W. Goss conducted a Purcell Suite arranged by W. Y. Hurlstone and Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony. The soloists were Mr. Lionel Tertis and Mr. Frank Mullings.

Wellingborough.—Accompanied by an orchestra of twenty-six, and with well-known soloists, the Wellingborough Choral Society performed Smart's 'The Bride of Dunkerron' on January 27, under the Rev. Canon W. E. Tarry's direction.

Weston-super-Mare.—The annual concert of the Choral Society was held on February 9, under the new conductor, Mr. Seymour Dossor, who made his appearance with an excellent programme well performed: 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'Everyman' (Walford Davies), and Holst's 'Two Psalms.'

Woodbridge.—The first part of the programme given by the Woodbridge Philharmonic Society, on February 2, consisted of Cowen's 'The Rose Maiden,' of which Mr. H. M. Timbers conducted a creditable performance.

York.—A programme of unaccompanied music, Elizabethan and modern (Vaughan Williams, Holst, Parry, and Bainton), was recently given by the York Madrigal Singers at the Yorkshire School for the Blind. The older music included Wilbye's six-part madrigal, 'Draw on, sweet night,' and Byrd's carol, 'This day Christ was born.'

Music in Scotland

Aberdeen.—Under the enterprising and enlightened direction of Mr. Willan Swainson, the Aberdeen Oratorio Choir, with the assistance of the Scottish Orchestra, gave a performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom.'

Elgin.—Miss Kim Murray, a well-known Morayshire violinist and teacher, gave a violin recital, the most exacting item in a widely diversified programme being the Mendelssohn Concerto.

Edinburgh.—The Paterson orchestral concerts followed the same general lines as those of the Scottish Orchestra at Glasgow, dealt with below.—The Reid Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Prof. Donald F. Tovey) gave a concert of 18th-century music, the principal interest of which lay in two Bach Concertos, the Trio-Concerto in A minor, for pianoforte, violin, flute, and string orchestra, and the Concerto in A major, generally played on the cembalo or pianoforte, but on this occasion played with extraordinarily pleasing effect on the oboe d'amore, the instrument for which the work was originally written. The programme also included Beethoven's first Symphony.—Prof. Tovey's series of Sunday concerts at Synod Hall comprised a programme by the Reid Orchestra, which included the Schumann Pianoforte Concerto, the 'Eroica' Symphony and 'Prometheus' Variations, and Mozart's 'Theatre Manager' Overture; a Beethoven pianoforte recital, at which Prof. Tovey played the 'Hammerklavier' Sonata, the 'Sonata Pathétique,' and the 'Righini' Variations; also a chamber music recital, with an unhackneyed programme which embraced a Mozart Divertimento in E flat and a Serenade by Dohnányi, both for violin, viola, and 'cello, and Beethoven's Variations for violin, pianoforte, and 'cello, on the song, 'Ich bin der Schneider, Kakadu.'—At the second meeting of the Edinburgh Bach Society, the programme comprised arias, with obbligati, from four of the Church cantatas, and songs from the 'Schemelli Song Book,' sung by Miss Cecilia Brenner, one of the Sonatas for flute and clavier, and the Prelude and Fugue in A minor, for pianoforte, upon which the Trio-Concerto in the same key is based.—At the Edinburgh Corporation Tramways Concert, the recently-formed Edinburgh Tramways Choir made a first appearance, under the conductorship of Mr. Thomas Butcher.—At its third concert of the present season, the Edinburgh Choral Union (Mr. Greenhouse Allt) sang Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's 'Creation.' The Reid Orchestra supplied the accompaniments, but, curiously, the opportunity was not taken to play the opening instrumental symphony of the 'Hymn of Praise.'

Glasgow.—As always, the last weeks of the Scottish Orchestra season were characterised by increased attendances and a marked growth of enthusiasm. At the tenth Tuesday concert, Nicolas Orloff played Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto and a group of solos with great success, the Orchestra playing an unfamiliar Haydn Symphony in D, and the Brahms-Haydn Variations. The Orchestra made probably its finest appearance at the eleventh concert of the season, when the programme contained Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Mozart's 'Haffner' Serenade, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture, and a novelty, César Franck's symphonic poem, 'Psyche.' At the twelfth, the Glasgow Choral Union revived Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám,' Mr. Hutton Malcolm conducting in the absence of Mr. Wilfrid Senior. At the thirteenth concert Mlle. Youra Guller played a Mozart Pianoforte Concerto in E flat and Chopin's 'Funeral March' Sonata with outstanding beauty of tone and style, and the orchestra gave us a British programme, Purcell's 'Trumpet' Voluntary, the Boyce-Parry Suite for strings, and a selection from Holst's 'Planets.' The 'Planets' selection inspired great enthusiasm, Mr. Holst, who happened to be in the audience, receiving an ovation.——At the eleventh Saturday concert of the Scottish Orchestra season, Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome' repeated its success of the previous season, Dvorák's Symphony No. 3, in F, met with deserved luke-warmness, and a young local singer, Miss Mabel Couper, sang some Italian arias with pleasing freshness of voice, fair vocal technique, and the platform deportment of a prima donna who has 'arrived.' The twelfth Saturday concert brought M. Victor Labunski, who introduced a very dull Pianoforte Concerto by Glazounov and two rather pretentiously modern 'Impromptus' by himself, and accepted encores with an ingenuous alacrity which would have aroused envy in the most hardened of 'international celebrities.' The feature of the thirteenth concert was the revival, after a ten years' interval, of Bantock's 'Hebridean' Symphony, composed for, and dedicated to, the Scottish Orchestra. It was a disappointment to find how unimpressed one was on rehearing this work after so long an interval. The works selected by audience vote for the fourteenth (the 'plébiscite') concert were Beethoven's seventh Symphony and 'Leonora' No. 3 Overture, a 'Mastersingers' selection, 'Mars,' 'Saturn,' and 'Jupiter,' from Holst's 'The Planets,' and Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome.' There was an enormous audience. At the close of the concert, M. Talich, who had conducted the concerts with great brilliancy throughout the last six weeks of the season, announced, amid much applause, that he hoped to return to Glasgow next season.

KIRKCALDY.—Madame Melba gave a farewell concert, repeating the programme given at other Scottish centres the previous month.

GENERAL.—Following up the exceptional artistic success of his male trio of artists, Messrs. Casals, Cortôt, and Thibaud, Mr. Max Mossel, at his third concert at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Bridge-of-Allan, presented with equal success an accomplished female trio in Mesdames Myra Hess, Jelly d'Aranyi, and Elizabeth Schumann, the last-named the Viennese operatic and lieder singer. It is many a long day since we last heard singing so superlatively fine as that of Madame Schumann in songs by Mozart and Strauss. Miss d'Aranyi joined Miss Hess in a Bach Sonata for violin and pianoforte, and played two groups of violin solos with her accustomed wayward charm. Miss Hess, whose art grows from strength to strength, played a Bach group and a modern Spanish group, and, as encore, an unpublished arrangement of her own of a Bach chorale prelude, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring,' which was sufficient in itself to make of the concert an enduring memory.—— The fourth 'international celebrity' concert at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee was hardly up to the general level of this series. Miss Evelyn Scotney, the coloratura soprano, the Russian Kedroff Male Quartet, and a young and undistinguished violinist, Zoltan Szekeley, were the artists. At the fifth of these concerts, Sir Thomas Beecham, conducting the London Symphony Orchestra in a programme which included Beethoven's second Symphony, presented his customary excellencies and personal eccentricities in about equal measure. Mlle. Luella Paikin contributed to the programme a mildly interesting pyrotechnical display of vocal agility.——Mr. Joseph Hislop appeared in all the principal Scottish cities, supported by M. Bratza, the violinist, and by Mr. Walter Rummel, who made a first appearance as a solo pianist in Scotland.

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—On January 21 the hundred and ninety-first College concert was held in University Hall, when Mr. Powell Edwards gave a song recital, consisting mainly of Welsh folk-songs, which were very much appreciated. The programme included also a movement from Schubert's Trio in B flat, played by Sir Walford Davies, Miss Evelyn Cooke, and Mr. Arthur Williams, and carols sung by the Small Choir.——On January 28 the College Choral Society, conducted by Dr. David de Lloyd, gave a fine performance of 'Beyond the Veil' (written by Dr. de Lloyd in memory of the late Principal T. F. Roberts, of the College). Miss Megan Lloyd sang the solos.——On February 4, the College Choral Union gave two movements from Brahms's 'Requiem.' A Mozart Quartet was played by the College Quartet; also Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet in A, with Mr. Charles Clements at the pianoforte.——The following week Mr. Owen Bryngwyn gave a successful song recital, his programme including 'A Song of Innocence' (Walford Davies), 'Love went a-riding' (Frank Bridge), and folk-songs of various countries. The principal chamber music and choral items were Schubert's 'Quartet-Satz' in C minor and Holst's 'Evening Watch.'

CARDIFF.—On January 15, Mr. W. Morgan Evans lectured to the Cymmrodorion Society on 'The History of the Harp,' with illustrations.——A large number of extra-mural students of Cardiff University College attended a chamber concert which was held on January 30. The programme included Brahms's Trio in C minor and Ireland's Pianoforte Trio in A.——The annual Police concert took place on January 29, the performers including Mr. Jack Salsbury, Miss Garda Hall, Miss Edith Furmedge, Mr. Walter Glynne, Mr. Roy Henderson, Mr. G. R. Coombes, and Mr. David Richards.——The school concerts at Cardiff High School for Girls have been resumed. The programme on January 30 included Arensky's Trio in D minor, Grieg's Sonata in G minor, for violin and pianoforte, and Kreisler's 'Viennese Melody' for violin; also some folk-songs.——Conducted by Mr. A. J. Brown, the G.W.R. Orchestral Society gave a concert at Cardiff City Lodge on February 10.——At Park Hall, on February 7, the second concert of the season was given by the Cardiff Musical Society. The programme included Verdi's 'Stabat Mater,' Debussy's 'The Blessed Damozel,' and two extracts from 'The Mastersingers.' The soloists were Miss Dorothy Bennett and Miss Blodwen Caerlun. The orchestra of the 5WA, combined with the Musical Society, played the 'Egmont' Overture and 'Death and Transfiguration.' The conductor was Mr. Julius Harrison. ——Mr. Harold Samuel gave his third recital on February 6, at Roath Park Presbyterian Church. Parties had come from Newport and the mining districts around, and many Bach converts appear to have been made.

GREGYNOG (Montgomery).—On January 30 a conference was held by the various conductors of choirs attached to the Montgomeryshire Festival. The meeting took the form of an instruction class on the works to be performed on May 20 at Newtown. The morning session was presided over by Mr. W. R. Allen, Aberystwyth, for the Welsh portion of the programme, and the afternoon meeting was in the hands of Mr. Adrian Boult.

KENFIG HILL.—A successful performance of 'Elijah' was given by Elim United Choral Society on January 16, under the conductorship of Mr. Hugh Evans.

LLANDINAM.—At the sixth annual concert of the Llandinam and Caersws (Montgomeryshire) United Choral Society, an attractive programme was presented under the direction of Mr. W. R. Allen, of Aberystwyth, with the aid of a small contingent of the Aberystwyth College Orchestra. Spirited performances were given of Stanford's 'The Revenge' and selections from 'The Creation.' The programme also included Bach's Overture in D, Grainger's 'Handel in the Strand,' and songs by Schubert, Elgar, &c.

NEWPORT (Mon.).—The Aberystwyth Trio (Sir Walford Davies, Miss Evelyn Cooke, and Mr. Arthur Williams) gave a recital, with examples from Mozart and Schubert, at Newport High School for Girls on January 16, when an address was given by Sir Walford on the 'Influence of Melody-Makers on Musical History.'

NEWTOWN (Montgomery).—'A Tale of Old Japan' was sung on February 12 by the Town Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. W. R. Allen.

PONTARDAWE.—Tabernacle Church Choir gave a performance of 'King Olaf' (Elgar) at the Public Hall on February 11. The soloists were Miss Stiles Allen, Dr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Watcyn Watcyns. Mr. G. T. Jenkins was the conductor, and Mr. T. J. Davies accompanied.

Pontycymmer.—On February 11 the Tabernacle Choral Society gave a performance of 'Elijah,' Mr. James Garfield conducting.

Resolven.—Dr. D. Vaughan Thomas gave a lecture on 'The Essential Principles Underlying Instrumental Music,' at the Schools, on February 9, under the auspices of the Welsh National Council of Music. Dr. Thomas was assisted by Miss Cooke and Mr. Arthur Williams.

Ruthin (North Wales).—At the Town Hall, on January 21, a song and violin recital was given by Miss Muriel Hughes, Mr. Glyn Dowell, and Miss Murray Lambert.

Swansea.—On January 28, at Llewelyn Hall, Dr. Ben Davies gave a much appreciated song recital.——Three performers of note provided an admirable concert at Llewelyn Hall, on February 5—Mr. Arthur Catterall, Miss Muriel Brunskill, and Miss Claudia Lloyd.

Trecynon.—On February 3 and 4, at Ebenezer Welsh (Congregational) Chapel, performances were given of 'Elijah,' conducted by Mr. W. E. Thomas. The principals were Miss Annie Davies, Miss Mattie Davies, Mr. David Thomas, and W. T. Rhys.

Musical Notes from Abroad

HOLLAND

The return from America of Willem Mengelberg has given a new zest to orchestral life here, and incidentally a renewal of interest in the works of Gustav Mahler. Not that Mengelberg is the only propagandist of this master. He is, however, better able than any other conductor to represent Mahler in the light of a great composer, and by that curious psychological association of ideas which obtains between an interpreter and the public his mere presence in the country creates a new interest. He celebrated his return by strikingly individual readings of Beethoven's fifth Symphony, and of the 'Flying Dutchman' Overture—the latter a whimsically appropriate choice. At a subsequent concert he gave Mahler's 'Lied von der Erde,' with Durigo and Urlus as vocalists, a Bach Suite, and Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture. Conceding Mengelberg's ascendancy as an interpreter of Mahler, one of the best performances of a Mahler Symphony we have had was by the Residentie Orchestra, under Pieter van Anrooy—for Anrooy knows how to get at the lyrico-poetic character of the slow movements in a fashion that few who are more successful with the big architectural movements can command. His reading of the fourth Symphony was an exceedingly fine effort, and balanced well with that of the 'Jupiter.' The same orchestra and conductor have also presented us with some very delightful and interesting music by Dutch composers. Emile Enthoven's Symphony in D minor, although evidently under the influence of Mahler and Bruckner, is a work of considerable power and no little beauty. G. H. G. Brucken Fock's Suite, 'From the South,' and a duet for violin and viola by van Anrooy, are of a much lighter character, but are extremely pleasant to the ear.

The Utrecht Orchestra, under Cornelis Evert, introduced to Holland Honegger's 'The Tempest' Prelude (a work of a more intimate and concentrated character than most we have heard from this composer), Roussel's 'Le Festin de l'Araignée' music, and the first of the 'Evocations.' In opera there is little out of the routine, the Co-Opera-tie and the Italian Opera Company both relying on standard works. To the latter, however, we are indebted for an introduction to the charming Japanese singer, Yolanthe Fuentes, whose Butterfly was one of the legitimate sensations of the season. Aside from opera, much interest has centred in the choice and performance of works by the Greek soprano, Vera Janacopulos. She appeared at the last of the Concertgebouw concerts conducted by Monteux, with Mozart's 'Exsultate, jubilate,' a work seldom heard, which suited her exactly (although occasionally she revealed a tendency to force her voice), and two songs of Moussorgsky. She repeated these numbers at her own recital, and also sang with rare artistic feeling a number of modern French songs. At a second recital she also showed a corresponding sympathy with the classics, from Lully to Schumann. Alexander Moszkowsky deserves mention for his excellent grip of violin tone (which allows him at times to indulge in what would be quite a dull manner were it not employed for a specific purpose), and for his introduction of works by Prokofiev, Turiña, and Castelnuovo-Tedesco. Joseph Jongen has paid a visit to The Hague, and won considerable success with his chamber music. British music has also not been entirely neglected, for not only has an English singer, Linette Grayson, sung Purcell's 'Nymphs and Shepherds' in a way that charmed both public and critics, but Geertruida van Vladeracken, with her husband (the well-known painter, Jan Poortenaar), in a folk-song recital had more success with British songs than with any others. It is also pleasant to record that in place of a new musical comedy, Louis Bouwmeester (a son of the famous Shakespearean actor, and himself a leading light in comedy), has presented with his company, the Haghezangers, Adolphe Adam's 'Le Postillon de Longjumeau,' and won enthusiastic laughter and applause. The proposal to build a new opera-house at Amsterdam is now so far advanced as to allow of the choice of an architect to advise on the whole scheme in detail.

Herbert Antcliffe.

PARIS

'L'ENFANT ET LES SORTILÈGES'

Performed for the first time at the Monte-Carlo Opera on March 21, 1925, Ravel's new ballet on a libretto by Madame Colette was anticipated with considerable curiosity. Madame Colette is known to be a delicate and witty writer, specially capable in depicting child-life and psychology. Ravel, the composer of 'Ma Mère l'Oye' and 'L'Heure Espagnole,' is renowned as a musician endowed with refined intelligence and abundant technical means, reflecting a descriptive rather than an expressive mind. The collaboration of these eminently French artists produced a work that aroused actually much enthusiasm and no less resentment among the public of the Opéra-Comique. M. Albert Wolff, the able conductor, had to display all his conciliatory powers to restrain auditors and performers alike.

The subject of 'L'Enfant et les Sortilèges' deals with the tribulations of a naughty child in a milieu of personified animals and objects. He behaves rather roughly with them, upsetting the tea equipage, pulling the tail of the cat, wounding the caged squirrel with a pen, tearing up pictures, devastating the furniture, and otherwise committing a lot of mischief. All this wronged world, animate and inanimate, conspire to punish the erring child. They begin wailing and performing fantastic dances around him. In fright he flees to the garden, near a pool, thereby affording a view-halloo for the assailant posse. The outraged domesticants and plenishings beset the terror-stricken child in monstrous shapes, and overwhelm him. He falls, crying 'Mamma.' This appeal to their tutelary authority calls a truce; in remorseful mood les animaux raise the child tenderly, and bear him to the nursery.

No doubt much of the naive poetry in this ballet is beyond appreciation of a great many people, for the simple reason that they are either bewildered or impatient with the superficial and imitative elements both in the music and in the score—elements that are often aggressive and, perhaps, extra-musical. But it should at once be admitted that they are adequate and forceful, depicting as they do the emotions of a fairy-world which, after all, may be as real as our own.

It is a fortunate thing that Ravel resumed writing music for stage purposes. The French Opéra and Opéra-Comique are in sore need of short ballets of a superior and up-to-date poetical and musical content. The classical specimens of the Leo Délibes type are outworn, and while we see as yet no good omen of the regeneration, in the near future, of grand opera music, it is comforting to note that the stage has again won over one of the best musicians of our day.

Petro J. Petridis.

VIENNA

OPERATIC EVENTS

The belated première of Umberto Giordano's 'Andrea Chénier,' at the Staatsoper (January 28), furnished welcome evidence of how much could be done to make an old and rather obsolete opera attractive by means of new and fertile stage designing and direction. The opera in itself, ranging both chronologically and musically between Mascagni and Puccini, was of secondary interest. It was staged for the benefit of Alfred Piccaver, who was, however, replaced by Trajan Grosavescu (a vocally gifted but crude Rumanian tenor) and by Tino Pattiera, who excels more by histrionic gifts and a poetical stage presence than by vocal endowment. The individual success of the evening fell to Lotte Lehmann's portrayal of the heroine; to Clemens Holzmeister, stage designer; and to Dr. Lothar Wallerstein, from Frankfort, who achieved beautiful groupings and a remarkably vivid action. Holzmeister's designs were simple, yet suggestive and atmospheric to a degree. His device of dividing the stage into two platforms by means of stairs made for plasticity and clarity of action in the mass scenes of the second Act, and gave a beautiful picture in the last scene, when the loving couple left the dark prison and, ascending the broad, long staircase into an ocean of light above, boarded the tumbril which was to bring them to the scaffold. Giordano, who attended the première, may have heard his opera sung in more Italian style before, but he has certainly not seen it more beautifully staged.

Busoni's 'Arlecchino,' and especially Stravinsky's 'Tale of the Soldier,' lent themselves more easily to the application of ultra-modern ideas on staging, at the Volksoper (February 11). In this case such ideas were applied rather too profusely and indiscriminately by B. Marholm, the stage director. Busoni's modern conception of a commedia dell' arte—spiritually and intellectually witty rather than broadly humorous—fared better than Stravinsky's problematic 'Gesamtkunstwerk' of music, poetry, pantomime, and dance. Marholm has studied in Russia (under Alexander Tairov); and one would have expected him to emphasise more strongly the improvisatory character of the work. Ignoring Stravinsky's clear prescription, which calls for an orchestra clad in Russian blouses (hence for utmost realism), Marholm dressed the seven players and the conductor in the fanciful attire of insects. The atmosphere of the work thus shifted from the spirit of a Russian country inn to the unreal realm of a fairy-tale, and the music was robbed of its meaning. To the unprepared hearer, what remained were cacophonies devoid of sense and significance, and the impatience of the astonished audience, which manifested itself in hisses and ill-applied laughter in the middle of the performance, was not surprising. The musical side of the production, under Leo Kraus, was very good, and a welcome proof that the Volksoper, for many years in a state of apathy and disorganization, is once more fit for productive and even for taxing work.

TWO NEW CHORAL WORKS

Julius Bittner, long beloved by his compatriots for his popularly-tinged operas and regarded with misgiving by the musical and critical fraternity of the non-German countries, seems to have cherished an ambition to vindicate his worth and importance far beyond the previous scope of his products, in his new Great Mass and Te Deum. If proof of Bittner's capacity for bigger things were necessary, he has surely furnished it now. Those who have criticized Bittner's lack of form and architecture should be silenced by the no less than five big fugues (two of them double fugues) of his Mass. Yet to the close observer, Bittner's work reveals virtually the same traits which made his operas both appealing and open to criticism. He exercises in his Mass, to be sure, an amount of artistic restraint not formerly revealed, but there is the same naïveté which we have come to expect from him; and though the big task is approached with visible reverence, he is still at his best where he indulges in simple, somewhat rustic, and occasionally obvious melodies. The Te Deum, which relieves the oppressive mood of the Agnus Dei, sounds less like sacred music than like the merry roundelay of Austrian peasants in the fields, and reminiscences of Austrian 'Ländlers' crop up now and then in the Mass. In this respect, and in the bigness of his vision, Bittner recalls Mahler, and Verdi's 'Requiem' in the decidedly un-ecclesiastical fundamental note of his Mass. It is in part music of the soil, and otherwise strongly operatic, especially in the Agnus Dei, which paints the picture of a mediæval procession—a big canvas in glowing yet oppressive colours.

Wilhelm Furtwängler, who became eminent at Vienna, has now little time to spare for the cradle of his fame. He limits his Viennese activities to flying visits, and to productions of often-heard works requiring but little rehearsal. Between two express trains, as it were, he gave a performance of the 'German Requiem' which served to eradicate a few arbitrary retouchings introduced in Brahms's score by the famous conductor two years ago, and a symphony concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra in the 'New World' Symphony and Strauss's 'Sinfonia Domestica.' The performance of 'Le Laudi di San Francesco d'Assisi,' for soli, chorus, and orchestra, by Hermann Suter, Furtwängler's Swiss compatriot, was probably more or less a patriotic deed, for notwithstanding the merits of the composition, there seems no other reason to select this work for the sole novelty of Furtwängler's programmes. 'Le Laudi' is Brahmsian in style and diction, but not in its melodies, which are often dry, and, at any rate, not inspired enough to suit the lofty subject. 'Le Laudi' is the ambitious effort of a solid, serious musician, but not a really important work, nor one to mark an epoch in the music of our time.

NEW ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

'Academic' music, too, is a new symphonic poem entitled 'Fahrt zur roten Wand,' by Max Oberleithner. This composer showed a good sense for dramatic effect with his opera 'Aphrodite' a dozen years ago. The scope of his talent has not broadened since, and the rapid musical development of the last decade has passed unnoticed by him. His symphonic poem, which Clemens Krauss performed on January 14, deals with a Chinese poem by Su-Dung-Po. With praiseworthy restraint Oberleithner refrains from dwelling too much on the coloristic possibilities of the subject, and concentrates instead on 'atmospheric description'—without, however, achieving anything unusually valuable. Clemens Krauss's other novelty was the first performance of Four Orchestral Songs by Ernst Kanitz (February 4). The composer is a pupil of Franz Schreker, but in these songs a descendant of Mahler. The four songs are modelled on the 'song symphony' type of Mahler's 'Song of the Earth,' but the thematic connection between the items is not apparent. In melodies and mood, too (if not quite in quality), the songs fitted well into the complete Mahler cycle in which they were interspersed by conductor Krauss. PAUL BECHERT.

[The Canadian and German notes had not arrived when we went to press.]

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

ARTHUR HENRY BROWN, composer of 'The day is past and over,' 'O Love divine, how sweet Thou art,' and many other popular hymn-tunes, at the age of ninety-five. Mr. Brown lived a life of quite exceptional activity. He wrote eight or nine hundred hymn-tunes and carols, more than a thousand variants of harmony in his 'Organ Harmonies for the Psalm Tones,' a number of services, anthems, and masses, and several books for the daily use of organists. As a committee member of the London Gregorian Association, he gave his special knowledge of Gregorian music to some valuable work in the editing of the Service Book for the annual Festival at St. Paul's. He was physically as well as mentally active. A life-long cyclist, he used to tour the kingdom in order to visit churches, and he made a hobby of taking rubbings of monumental brasses. He left a collection of over a thousand of these rubbings, all carefully tabulated. For forty years Mr. Brown was organist of Brentwood Parish Church. Down to the time of his death he was officiating as organist at Brentwood School Chapel. A portrait of Mr. Brown and an account of his life were given in the Musical Times for December, 1906.

THOMAS S. LOVETTE, at Washington, on December 16, in his forty-ninth year. He was born at Maesteg, South Wales, and gained a pianoforte scholarship at the Royal College of Music when eighteen years of age. From London he went to the Leipsic Conservatoire, where he held a scholarship for five years. He remained at Leipsic for some years, teaching, and then went to Baylor College, Texas, where he quickly developed the musical side of the institution into one of the largest teaching centres in the State. He recently settled at Washington, and with his wife, a well-known singer and teacher, established a successful school of music.

CAPTAIN ALBERT EDWARD WILLIAMS, late Bandmaster, Grenadier Guards, at Southsea, on February 11, aged sixty-one. Born at Newport, Mon., on March 6, 1864, he joined the drum and fife band of the 61st Regiment when a boy of thirteen. He held the post of bandmaster of the 10th Hussars (1888), Royal Marine Artillery (1892), and Grenadier Guards (1907), and retired from the Army in 1921. He graduated Mus. Doc. Oxon. in 1906, and was made M.V.O. in 1908.

SOPHIE LOEWE, in her seventy-eighth year. A pupil of Stockhausen, she first appeared in London in 1871, and sang much at the St. James's Hall, Crystal Palace, and other concerts, achieving great success both in oratorio and in classical songs.

WILLIAM STONHILL, on February 12. He had been a member of the staff of Messrs. Curwen for fifty-two years, and his close acquaintance with the music-publishing trade and his remarkable memory made him invaluable.

Miscellaneous

A performance of the operetta 'Rip van Winkle' (Sydney Harrowing and T. Maskell Hardy), given by the children of Bolingbroke Road L.C.C. School, Old Battersea, on February 10, resulted in a surplus of £120 for the benefit of the Bolingbroke Hospital.

At Queen's Hall, on March 11, the Philharmonic Choir, under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, will give 'St. Patrick's Breastplate,' by Arnold Bax, Delius's 'Song of the high hills,' and Mozart's 'Requiem.'

Mr. Richard Capell has in preparation a book on Gustav Holst.

Answers to Correspondents

E. B. P.—(1.) We cannot compare the A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. paper-work with that of the first and second Mus.Bac. examinations, because the latter vary with the University and the examiner. Moreover, what is hard to one candidate is easy to another. Decide what diploma is best suited to your needs, and go for it, regardless of the degree of difficulty. Regardless, too, of such considerations as academic dress! Your question on this subject we pass by. The thing that matters is the ability to do your job, not such outward signs as caps and gowns. (2.) The large number of failures in the F.R.C.O. organ-playing test has puzzled many who, like yourself, think that the A.R.C.O. having been obtained, the candidate ought to be able to take the next hurdle fairly easily. But the A.R.C.O. does no more than guarantee a certain standard at a given moment. Too many organists, instead of going straight ahead, wait so long between the examinations that they get rusty. Also, too many do not realise the much more exacting nature of the tests. (3.) We do not know of any book dealing specially with phrasing and bowing marks. Listen to good string-playing, study good string works, and apply the principles to your organ-playing. No reading of books on this subject will help you, if you have not an instinctive feeling for phrasing, either natural or acquired.

NARKY.—(1.) For study as a help in string-writing, take a few classics by Haydn and Mozart as examples of economy and clarity; two or three by Beethoven—one of each of the so-called three periods; and a few by modern composers to show you the possibilities of the medium. Frank Bridge is an especially good guide in this respect, as his writing invariably 'comes off.' (2.) For extemporisation for F.R.C.O., you cannot do better than work at the examples given in Sawyer's 'Extemporization' (Novello). As for the 'style required,' the examiners are satisfied (and even pleasantly surprised) when a candidate gives them something shapely, coherent, and musical. We can never understand why this test should be the bugbear it is to so many. Look at it in this way: Any man of ordinary literary culture ought to be able to deliver himself, at a moment's notice, of a few simple, well-constructed sentences on an ordinary everyday topic. It is surely not too much to demand of a musician (that is, one who can think in terms of melody and harmony as he can in the parts of speech) the ability to deliver himself impromptu of a few phrases on a simple basis. No originality is demanded in either case, though of course it is always welcome. The requirement is merely two or three minutes of orderly thought expressed in an orderly manner. Make the word 'orderly' the chief aim in preparation, and check at once any disposition to meander. Cultivate the habit of thinking in short phrases of regular construction, beginning with simple four-phrase hymn-like melodies. On the harmonic side avoid both stagnation and chunks. Practise extemporising in two- and three-part harmony, gradually developing a contrapuntal style. (3.) If the ear-test in the Fellowship examination is beyond you, we can only advise you to take up the subject at the A.R.C.O. stage (in which you were successful) and develop your aptitude from that point.

S. J. E.—There seems to be no reason to doubt the generally accepted origin of the customary standing during the Hallelujah Chorus. In the latest Handel biography, that of Mr. Newman Flower, the incident is narrated thus: 'The King attended one performance, and was so moved by the fervour of the Hallelujah Chorus that he rose to his feet and remained standing till the last chords had dropped to silence.' Mr. Flower adds in a footnote: 'It is said that the custom of the audience rising to its feet at the singing of the Hallelujah Chorus began with the King's action on this occasion—the audience being unable to remain sitting while the King was standing. This may be so, but it is hard to imagine a seated audience during the rendering of such a pæan of praise to the Maker of all things. The honour rendered to King George as the originator of the custom I prefer to attribute to the decency of a thinking nation.' The account in 'Grove' seems to imply that the standing of audience and King was the result of a common impulse—a reasonable theory, seeing the frequency with which a crowd may be stirred to sudden and unanimous demonstration. If an orator can, with a resounding phrase, bring an audience to its feet, shouting, why not a Handel with one of the finest hammerstrokes in all music? Superior folk, it is true, sniff at this standing as a mere convention, but for our part we do not envy those who can be present at such a demonstration and feel no sense of its entire fitness.

QUETTA.—(1.) We do not know how far the custom prevails of pronouncing Abraham (in the Magnificat) with the broad a as in 'father.' Our own preference is for the word to be sung as ordinarily spoken, i.e., with the long a, but consistency would be impossible, because Ah-men is practically universal. (2.) As you say, the duration of the pause when there is no conductor is a frequent cause of stumbling. A good plan is to let it be understood that a given number of beats (say two) should be added for a pause, exceptions to this rule being marked in blue pencil. Best of all is to turn on a reliable clerical helper, and have all pauses marked (like the goods in the best shop windows) in plain figures. If the latter rule is adopted, the rhythmic scheme of the context should of course be considered in deciding the duration.

CELESTE.—We are glad you found our advice of last year helpful, and that your work as deputy-organist is giving pleasure to yourself and satisfaction to your hearers. You ask for our candid criticism of the chants, &c., you send, underlining the 'candid.' On your own head be it, then! We can find nothing good to say of them; nor do we think you will make any progress without at least a few lessons to help you over the elementary stages. (Most pupils find this the most difficult part of harmony.) Failing such help, you would be wasting your time on such efforts as those you send us. Far better spend the labour on working at playing, singing, in reading about music, and in increasing your knowledge of works of various kinds. We hope this will not discourage you. After all, the world does not need any more 'half-baked' composers of chants, hymn-tunes, or, indeed, anything else; there are too many already. But there will always be plenty of room for people able to act as deputy organists, &c., in a thoroughly musical and tasteful way.

L. G.—We do not think that a novice 'can teach himself to sing from a book,' however good that book may be. The best recent work on the subject known to us is William Shakespeare's 'Plain Words on Singing' (Putnams, 5*s.*). There is also a capital little compendium by James Edmondson, 'Good Singing' (to be had from the Author, Barrow Point Avenue, Pinner, 3*s.* 6*d.*). Out of a long list we choose these as most likely to be useful for self-teaching purposes. At the same time we remind you of the old saw: 'The self-taught man has a fool for his master.' There are exceptions, of course, but we don't think the self-taught singer is one of them.

F. S.—(1.) We cannot give the publishers of the long list of songs you send, chiefly on account of space. They may all be obtained through Novello. (2.) We know of no biographical matter concerning Gervase Elwes, apart from that you mention. (3.) Here, again, you have us stumped. We have never heard of the singer you inquire about. Write to the concert-giver under whose auspices he appeared.

EARLS.—(1.) The Oxford University Press has recently issued a number of songs by van Dieren. We do not know whether his instrumental works are yet available. Inquire of the Oxford University Press. (2.) We know of no book by Walford Davies on modern harmony. A work on the subject that would probably meet your needs is that of Lenormand (Joseph Williams, 5*s.*).

J. A. G.—It is, we believe, customary for a choir singing a cantata to be robed, either in cassock, or cassock and surplice, even when the performance has no connection with a service. The wearing of such uniform adds seemliness to the view, and induces some, at least, of the impersonal atmosphere that differentiates the proceedings from a mere concert.

CANADIAN.—We understand that the only official sub-organists at Westminster Abbey during Sir Frederick Bridge's term of office were Dr. W. G. Alcock and Mr. Stanley Roper. There were, of course, many pupil-assistants and other helpers. Sir Frederick once gave a dinner to these unofficial helpers, and it is said that no fewer than thirty sat down.

C. H. S.—It is difficult to suggest music for your string quartet without knowing more of your capabilities and opportunities for practice. As you live in London, your best plan would be to pay a visit to Novello's, and choose some easy string music to take away on approval.

T. H.—We understand there are examinations in class-teaching of singing at the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music. Write to them for particulars.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To insure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than MONDAY, MARCH 22 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
A Note on John Dowland. By Philip Heseltine ...	209
A Musical Impressionist. By Rutland Boughton ...	212
Moussorgsky as Seen by One of his Friends. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	214
Personalities among Musical Critics.—II. M.-D. Calvocoressi. By Basil Maine	216
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	217
New Light on late Tudor Composers—XV. John Farmer. By W. H. Grattan Flood	219
A Visit to Béla Bartók. By Frank Whitaker. (With portrait)	220
Old Ways for New in Violin Training. By Gerald R. Hayes	223
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	224
Occasional Notes	225
New Music	227
The Musician's Bookshelf	229
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	233
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	235
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	236
Points from Lectures	238
Sir Robert Prescott Stewart	239
Church and Organ Music	245
Royal College of Organists	245
Registration Gone Mad...	248
London Concerts	251
Letters to the Editor	256
The Amateurs' Exchange	260
Sharps and Flats	260
Sixty Years Ago	261
Royal Academy of Music	261
Royal College of Music...	261
Trinity College of Music	261
O.U.D.S.	262
Competition Festival Record	262
Music in the Provinces	263
Music in Scotland	266
Music in Wales	267
Musical Notes from Abroad	268
Obituary	269
Miscellaneous	270
Answers to Correspondents	270

MUSIC.

'The Spring of the Year.' Four-part Song. By ETHEL BOYCE 241

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:

'He wants not friends.' Anthem for General Use. By Geoffrey Shaw.

THE CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE
WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed and Gloria in Excelsis arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

Suitable for Mission, Village, and Parish Choirs, or for a Congregation without the aid of a Choir.

ARRANGED BY THE

REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MANUSCRIPT MUSIC PADS.

1 Pad, 3*s.* 0*d.* 2 Pads, 5*s.* 6*d.*

3 Pads, 7*s.* 0*d.* 4 Pads, 8*s.* 6*d.*

Size, 9 in. by 7¼ in. 250 Sheets in each Pad.

FREDERICK BROWN, MANUFACTURER,
BOSTON, LINCS.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., Limited.

BOYCE, ETHEL.—"The Spring of the Year." Four-part Song. (No. 997, The Musical Times.) 2d.

BUTLER, L.—"Sun of my Soul." Hymn. 2d.

C. A.—"If ye then be risen with Christ." Anthem for Four Voices, for Easter and General use. 2d.

—— "Except the Lord build the house." Anthem for Four Voices, for General use. 2d.

DOWLAND, J.—"Come again! sweet love." Arranged for Female Voices (S.S.A.A.), by John E. West. (No. 507, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 3d.

GOUNOD, CH.—"There is a green hill far away." Arranged as a Two-part Song. (No. 221, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

HARRIS, Rev. Dr. C.—The Office of Holy Communion in C. (No. 67, Novello's Short Settings.) 1s. 6d.

NOVELLO'S HYMNS AND TUNES for Sunday School Anniversary Services. Set 7. Complete words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or separately, 1½d. each number, as under:

No. 53.	"Life's glad morning"	G. C. Martin.
No. 54.	"Jesus, Blessed Saviour"	A. H. Brewer.
No. 55.	"Come, Christian youths and maidens"	Harvey Grace.
No. 56.	"Thy word is like a lantern, Lord"	Eric H. Thiman.
	"When the Lord of Love was here"	Eric H. Thiman.
No. 57.	"God of our fathers"	E. J. Hopkins.
No. 58.	"Children of God"	F. G. Russell.
	"God of mercy, throned on high"	Harvey Grace.
No. 59.	"The Children's Prayer"	R. McLeod.
No. 60.	"The Lord be with us"	C. J. May.

RICHARDSON, A. D.—Preces and Responses. 2d.

ROBSON, R. WALKER.—"O Lamb of God." For Tenor and Bass Soli. 2d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 405, contains the following music in both notations.—"Golden Slumbers," by Roy Thompson. Chorale, "Jesu, Jesu, Thou art mine," J. S. Bach. Fugue in C (48 Preludes and Fugues, No. 1), J. S. Bach. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS.—Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
Book 275.	National Songs, with descants. Set 2	8d.	—
,, 276.	National Songs, with descants. Set 3	8d.	—
No. 1416.	"Come lasses and lads." (Arr. with descant by Geoffrey Shaw)	3d.	—
1417.	"Wi' a hundred pipers." (Arr. with descant by Geoffrey Shaw)	3d.	—
1418.	"David of the White Rock." (Arr. with descant by Geoffrey Shaw)	2d.	—
1419.	"The young May moon." (Arr. with descant by Geoffrey Shaw)	2d.	—
1420.	"The Golden Vanity." (Arr. with descant by Geoffrey Shaw)	3d.	—
1421.	"The Flight of the Earls." (Arr. with descant by Geoffrey Shaw)	2d.	—

SHORE, S. ROYLE.—Diocesan Music for Congregational singing. No. 1. Merbecke's Holy Communion Service. (3rd Organ Accompaniment, with optional descants, and other vocal accompanying Harmonies for Treble and Alto, or Men's Voices.) 1s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

THOMAS, Rev. J. I.—"Happy Child." Memorial Hymn. Words only. 1d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2502.	"Our bonny-boots could toot it." (S.A.T.T.B.) T. Morley	3d.
No. 2503.	"My true love hath my heart." (S.S.A.) G. Rathbone	3d.
No. 2504.	"Ye dainty nymphs." (S.S.A.) Ethel Boyce	3d.
No. 2505.	"Say, shepherds, say." (S.A.T.B.) Michael Cavendish	2d.
No. 2507.	"The Herald." (T.T.B.B.) Edward Elgar	3d.
No. 2509.	Benedictus, in B flat. C. V. Stanford	4d.
No. 2510.	"There was a maid." (S.A.T.B.) Old English. Harmonized by C. Lee Williams.	2d.

PUBLISHED FOR THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

AMERICAN ORGAN QUARTERLY. — January. Vol. 7. No. 16.

ANDREWS, MARK.—"Moods." Song for High Voice. 50 cents (2s. 6d.).

BANKS, CHARLES O.—"God that madest earth and heaven." 50 cents (2s. 6d.).

CLARKE, H. A.—"The Hidden Dark." Pianoforte. 50 cents (2s. 6d.).

DICKINSON, C.—"O Jesu Sweet." (S.A.T.B.) 10 cents (6d.).

KNIGHT, G. H. — "Gates and Doors." (For Christmas.) (S.A.T.B.) 10 cents (6d.).

LUTKIN, P. C.—"Benedictus Es, Domine." Baritone Solo and Choir. 10 cents (6d.).

MARKS, J. C.—"I heard a Voice from Heaven." Soprano Solo and S.A.T.B. 10 cents (6d.).

MATTHEWS, J. S.—"O Master, let me walk with Thee." Anthem. (S.A.T.B.) 12 cents (6d.).

SAMMOND, H. S.—"Longing." (A Meditation.) Violin and Organ or Pianoforte. $1.00 (4s.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"The Christ." Cantata for Soli and Chorus. $1.00 (4s.).

JAMES LYON, Mus. Bac.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY

3s. 6d.

Answers to Questions and Exercises on the Elements of Harmony.

2s. 6d.

BANKS & SON, Music Publishers, YORK.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.
17, Forest View Road, Highams Park, E.17.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple, London, E.C.).

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Organ Examinations.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Messrs. Reid Bros., 2s. 8d. post free.

298, Balham High Road, London, S.W.17.
Telephone: Battersea 916.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1s. 4d. an hour, or 6s. a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. Single practices (pupils only), 9d. an hour. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6. Tel.: Putney 4208.

TUITION

WELL-KNOWN LONDON MUSICIAN (having a Car) visits Woking, Epsom, and neighbourhood each week, and can arrange for two or three more pupils en route. Pianoforte and Organ playing, Harmony, &c. Full particulars from 19, Clarendon Gardens, W.9.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Cannon Street Baptist Church, Accrington. Salary, £60 per annum. Apply by letter, on or before 15th March, 1926, stating age, qualifications, and references, to Bridge B. Clayton, 111, Whalley Road, Accrington.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for St. Jude's Church, Englefield Green, Surrey. Commence April 11th. Salary, £60 per annum. Organ (two-manual Bevington) just completely renovated. Beautiful and healthy district. 20 miles from London. Apply, Vicar, Egham, Surrey.

PARISH CHURCH, Highgate.—Advertiser requires ASSISTANT-ORGANIST. Able and willing to sing Tenor in choir regularly. In return: coaching for Diploma, or free lessons and organ practice (fine organ, electrically blown). Apply, Mr. G. J. Pinches, F.R.C.O., 4, Hornsey Lane Gardens, N.6.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—SOLO BOY WANTED at once. Age, 10-11. Free board and tuition provided at the Cathedral Grammar School. Apply, stating age and experience, to Rev. Canon Davis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, Church of England, requires appointment after Easter, South of England or Scotland preferred. Experienced accompanist, choir-trainer, and conductor. Address, "S. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SOPRANO AND TENOR WANTED for Presbyterian Church in N.W. London. £25 each. Give full particulars. "A. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A LADY wishes to dispose of her HARP—"Erard." In good condition. "C. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VIOLINIST, or PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIST, seeks Engagements, At-Homes, Musical Societies, &c., or as Teacher of Violin and Pianoforte. Highly recommended. "W. C. F.," 65, Beechwood Road, Caterham Valley, Surrey.

MUSIC COPIED.—Transpositions, Band Parts, &c. Smith, 40, Coniston Road, Muswell Hill, N.10.

TWO SECOND-HAND HARPS FOR SALE. Price, £12 each. Modwena House, Ashbourne.

FOR SALE.—PEDALS FOR PIANOFORTE, by Norman & Beard. Radiating and Concave. Suit organ pupil. With seat, £5. Pattison, High View, Wallsend-on-Tyne.

WANTED.—Small Pipe ORGAN, for a School. Preferably two Manuals. Moderate price. "K. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

KEBLE COLLEGE, OXFORD.—Musical Scholarship. £60 per annum. June, 1926. Preference for Yorkshire. For details, apply Bursar.

F

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors...	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ...	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"... ...	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozar
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaikowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN

BY

ROBERT BROWNING.

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

GEORGE RATHBONE.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.

(Registered No. 692810).

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2s. 6d., POST FREE.

1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

WANTED.—Male ALTO, good reader. Apply, Musical Directory, Brompton Oratory.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK

(OP. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Vocal parts, 1s. each.
An Edition with Latin words (Stabat Mater) may also be had.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, With Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.
THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.
ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR
TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION
FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE
(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY
E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY
GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
(An Edition with Latin words may also be had, price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,
FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS
TOGETHER WITH
HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION
ON THE
SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY
JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s 6d per 100.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY
FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."
Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."
Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect.'
Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing.'"
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."
Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."
Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."
Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.
Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

G. J. BENNETT

EASTER HYMN

(ON THE MORN OF EASTER DAY)

(S.T. SOLI).

Full Score and Wind Parts. MS.
String Parts, 6s. 9d. Vocal Score, 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ALAN GRAY

A SONG OF REDEMPTION

(THE FOE BEHIND, THE DEEP BEFORE)

(S. SOLO).

WORDS BY J. M. NEALE.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts, MS.
Vocal Score, 2s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

E. H. LEMARE

'TIS THE SPRING OF SOULS TO-DAY

(OP. 30).

CANTATA FOR EASTER. (T.T.BAR.B. SOLI.) WORDS FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES AND HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

Full Score, and Orchestral Parts, MS.
Vocal Score, 1s. 6d.

London NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

RECENT

Y.B.P. PART-SONGS, MOTETS, SERVICES, & ANTHEMS.

PALM SUNDAY.

Glory and Honour (Motet, S.A.T.B.) ... C. Wood 6d.
Written for Palm Sunday. First sung at the Gloucester Festival.

EASTER DAY.

Easter Carol (Motet, S.A.T.B.) ... ... C. Wood 3d.
Ave Verum (Motet, S.A.T.B.) ... J. M. Tatton 3d.
Haec Dies (Motet, S.S.A.T.B.B.) ... C. Wood 6d.
The Voice of Joy and Health (Motet, S.A.T.B.) ... 4d.
By Giuseppe Jannaconi, 1741-1816.
(From Hullah's Part Music.)
O come, Thou Spirit divinest (Motet, S.S.T.) ... 2d.
By John Amner.
The last two interesting numbers are edited by NOEL PONSONBY, B.Mus., and are just ready.

GENERAL USE.

Faire is the Heaven (Motet, S.A.T.B.) W. H. Harris 6d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Tones IV. and I., S.A.T.B.) ... ... C. Wood 6d.
Abide with me (S.A.T.B.) Michael Wise (1646-87), with Descant and added Harmonies.
By W. H. Harris 4d.

Specimen Copies or Approval Parcels Post Free, from
H. F. W. DEANE & SONS,
The Year-Book Press, Ltd.,
31, MUSEUM STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST

BOOK 44. MUSIC FOR LENT.

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

1. Prelude in C minor ... ... Chopin
2. If with all your hearts ... ... Mendelssohn
3. Variations on the Tune "Heinlein" ... ... H. M. Higgs
4. Behold the Lamb of God ("Messiah") ... ... Handel
5. He was despised ("Messiah") ... ... Handel
6. Processional to Calvary ("The Crucifixion") ... John Stainer

BOOK 45. MUSIC FOR EASTER.

1. Prelude in F major ... ...G. Merkel
2. Fantasia upon the Easter Office Hymn "Ad Cœnam Agni" Healey Willan
3. Meditation (Easter Morn) ... ... John E. West
4. "All glory to the Lamb that died" ("Last Judgment") L. Spohr
5. Triumphal March ... ... B. Luard-Selby
6. Easter Chorale ("Christ lag in Todesbanden") Har. by J. S. Bach

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each Book.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EASTER ANTHEMS.

*Above all praise and all majesty	Mendelssohn	2d.
*Alleluia! now is Christ risen	T. Adams	4d.
*Alleluia! the Lord liveth	C. Harris	4d.
*All hail, dear Conqueror	T. Adams	2d.
As Christ was raised	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
*As Christ was raised	H. W. Wareing	4d.
*As it began to dawn ...	G. C. Martin, 4d.; M. B. Foster	2d.
As it began to dawn	G. Vincent	4d.
*As Moses lifted up the serpent	F. Gostelow	4d.
As we have borne	J. Barnby	2d.
*At the Lamb's high feast	E. V. Hall	4d.
At the Sepulchre	H. W. Wareing	6d.
*Awake, awake, with holy rapture sing ...	John E. West	4d.
Awake, glad soul, awake	M. B. Foster	4d.
Awake, thou that sleepest Redhead, 4d.; Maker, 4d.; *J. Stainer		8d.
Awake up, my glory ...	*J. Barnby and B. Haynes, ea.	2d.
Awake up, my glory	F. Iliffe	3d.
Awake up, my glory ...	*F. C. Maker and M. Wise, each	4d.
*Be glad, O ye righteous...	H. Smart	6d.
*Be glad then, ye children	A. Hollins	4d.
Behold, God is my Salvation	W. Smallwood	4d.
*Behold, the Angel of the Lord	B. Tours	2d.
*Blessed be the God and Father	S. S. Wesley	3d.
*Blessed be Thou	Kent	6d.
Blessing and glory	Boyce	2d.
*Blessing, glory	B. Tours	6d.
*Break forth into joy	J. Barnby	2d.
*Break forth into joy	T. R. Prentice	8d.
*Break forth into joy	B. Steane	4d.
But Mary stood	G. H. Parker	4d.
*Christ being raised from the dead	G. J. Elvey	2d.
Christ being raised from the dead	S. Webbe	2d.
Christ both died and rose	E. W. Naylor	4d.
Christ is risen ...	J. M. Crament and G. B. J. Aitken, ea.	4d.
*Christ is risen	E. H. Thorne and G. J. Elvey, ea.	2d.
Christ is risen	J. C. Bridge, 4d.; W. Jordan	6d.
*Christ is risen ...	J. V. Roberts and E. A. Sydenham, ea.	4d.
*Christ our Passover	J. Goss and O. King, ea	2d.
*Christ our Passover	E. V. Hall	4d.
Christ our Passover	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
Christ our Passover A. Carnall, 4d.; *Ed. Bunnett, 4d.; *B. Tours		2d.
*Christ the Lord is risen again	E. V. Hall	6d.
Christ the Lord is risen to-day J. F. Barnett and *E. V. Hall, ea.		4d.
*Christ was delivered for our offences	C. H. Lloyd	2d.
*Come, let us join our cheerful songs	E. V. Hall	4d.
*Come with high and holy gladness	H. Blair	4d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem	E. V. Hall	4d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the strain	E. V. Hall	4d.
*Come, ye Saints (S.A.T.B.)	H. E. Button	2d.
*Come, ye Saints (Unison)	H. E. Button	4d.
Day draws on with golden light, The	G. Shaw	4d.
*Day of Resurrection, The	E Vine Hall	4d.
*Death is swallowed up in victory	A. Hollins	4d.
*End of the Sabbath, The	A. Carnall	2d.
*Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing	E. V. Hall	4d.
*First day of the week, The	B. Steane	4d.
For it became Him	O. King	2d.
For us the Christ...	Ch. Gounod	3d.
*From Thy love as a Father	Ch. Gounod	2d.
Give thanks unto God	Spohr	6d.
*God hath appointed a day	B. Tours	2d.
*God, Who is rich in mercy	G. M. Garrett	2d.
Good Shepherd has arisen, The	Ed. Bunnett	4d.
*Great is the Lord	Hayes	6d.
*Hallelujah!	Handel	3d.
Hallelujah! Christ is risen *R. O Morgan and B. Steane, ea.		4d.
Hearken unto Me	M. B. Foster	2d.
*He is risen...	H. Gadsby	2d.
*He shall swallow up death in Victory ...	F. F. Greenish	4d.
He that spared not His own Son	F. E. Gladstone	4d.
*He that spared not His Son	W. G. Alcock	2d.
He will swallow up death in Victory	Wesley	2d.
I am He that liveth	O. King 4d.; T. Adams	6d.
*I am the Resurrection	R. Rogers	6d.
I declare to you the Gospel	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.
*I have set God always before me	W. Smallwood	4d.
*I heard a great voice	G. F. Cobb	4d.
*I will alway give thanks	J. B. Calkin	2d.
*I will alway give thanks	J. Clarke-Whitfeld	4d.
I will extol Thee	C. M. Hudson	6d.
*I will go unto the Altar of God	C. Harris	4d.
I will greatly rejoice	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.
I will love Thee, O Lord	M. Kingston	6d.
I will magnify Thee ...	*J. B. Calkin and W. H. Bell, ea.	6d.
I will magnify Thee ...	*Ed. Bunnett and E. M. Lee, ea.	4d.
I will magnify Thee	B. Luard-Selby	2d.
*I will mention	A. Sullivan	8d.
I will sing of Thy power	M. Greene	6d.
*I will sing of Thy power	A. Sullivan	2d.
If Christ be not raised	C. Macpherson	6d.
*If we believe that Jesus died B. Luard-Selby and J. Goss, ea.		2d.
If we believe that Jesus died	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
If we believe that Jesus died *Ed. Bunnett, 6d.; M. Vinden		4d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ F. O. Carr, 4d.; Ivor Atkins		6d.
If ye then be risen with Christ (Two-part) ...	M. B. Foster	4d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	H. M. Higgs	2d.
If ye then be risen with Christ	J. Naylor	4d.
If ye then be risen (Two-part)	F. W. Wadely	2d.
*Jesus Christ is risen to-day ...	A. R. Gaul and O. King, ea.	6d.
Jesus Christ is risen to-day	C. V. Stanford	4d.
*Jesus lives	M. B. Foster	4d.
*Know ye not	E. C. Bairstow	2d.
Let God arise	M. Greene	8d.
Let them give thanks	W. J. Westbrook	4d.
Light's glittering morn	John E. West	6d.
Lo! the winter is past ...	*B. Farebrother and H. Gadsby, ea.	4d.
*Lo! the winter is past	B. Luard-Selby	2d.
Lord Christ! when Thou hadst overcome... ...	Haydn	2d.
*Lord hath brought us, The	E. H. Thorne	2d.
*Lord hath done great things, The	H. Smart	6d.
*Lord is King, The ...	T. T. Trimnell, 6d.; J. Pittman	2d.
*Lord is my strength, The	W. H. Monk and V. Novello, ea.	2d.
*Lord is my strength, The	H. Smart, 2d.; S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
*Lord is risen, The ...	B. L.-Selby, 4d.; G. M. Garrett	6d.
*Lord liveth, The	A. W. Marchant	4d.
*Lord omnipotent reigneth, The	T. Adams	4d.
Magnify His Name	G. C. Martin	6d.
Morn's roseate hues	G. W. Chadwick	4d.
*Most glorious Lord of Life	John E. West	2d.
*My beloved is mine	R. W. Robson	4d.
My beloved spake	H. Purcell	8d.
My heart is fixed, O God	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.
My heart was glad	A. Carnall	6d.
Not unto us, O Lord	*S. Smith, 4d.; H. Gadsby	8d.
Not unto us, O Lord ...	John E. West, 6d.; *Walmisley	2d.
*Now dawning glows the day of days	D. S. Smith	2d.
*Now Christ is risen ...	G. B. Allen and John E. West, ea.	2d.
Now if Christ be preached	W. Wolstenholme	2d.
*Now is Christ risen	H. E. Nichol	4d.
*Now is come Salvation	P. E. Fletcher	4d.
*Now late on the Sabbath Day... ...	S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
*Now on the first day of the week	H. Lahee	2d.
O clap your hands	*J. Stainer, 8d.; M. Greene	6d.
O clap your hands (S.S.A.)	E. H. Thorne	8d.
O clap your hands	T. T. Trimnell	4d.
*O come, let us sing	M. B. Foster	4d.
*O death, where is thy sting? ...	A. Hollins, 6d.; A. H. Brewer	2d.
O give thanks	S. S. Wesley, 6d.; *J. Goss	4d.
O give thanks to the Lord	H. J. King	4d.
O give thanks unto the Lord ...	Watson, 4d.; *Wolstenholme	2d.
O Lord, from Whom all good things do come	John E. West	3d.
*O sing unto the Lord	J. V. Roberts	4d.
*O Sons and Daughters, let us sing	H. A. Chambers	2d.
*O voice of the Beloved	H. J. King	4d.
*On the first day of the week	E. M. Lott	2d.
*Open me the gates of righteousness ...	M. B. Foster	2d.
*Open to me the gates	F. Adlam	6d.
*Praise His awful Name	...Spohr	3d.
Praise Jehovah	Mendelssohn	6d.
Praise the Lord, ye servants	B. Steane	4d.
Promise which was made, The	E. C. Bairstow	6d.
*Rejoice in the Lord ...	*J. B. Calkin and G. J. Elvey, ea.	2d.
Rejoice in the Lord ...	E. M. Barber, 4d.; G. C. Martin	8d.
Since by man	H. E. Nichol	4d.
*Sing praises unto the Lord	W. A. C. Cruickshank	2d.
*Sing praises unto the Lord	A. W. Marchant, 4d.; Gounod	8d.
Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	1s.
*Sing ye to the Lord ...	E. C. Bairstow and C. H. Lloyd, ea.	4d.
*Strife is o'er, The ...	B. Steane and B. L.-Selby, ea.	2d.
Strife is o'er, The	A. W. Marchant and G. Rathbone, ea.	4d.
*Ten thousand times ten thousand	E. Vine Hall	4d.
Ten thousand times ten thousand	F. Tozer	6d.
Thanks be to God ...	Smallwood, Gritton, and King, ea.	4d.
*They have taken away my Lord	J. Stainer	2d.
*This is the day	S. C. Cooke, B. Harwood, and J. H. Maunder, ea.	4d.
*This is the day	E. H. Lemare and E. V. Hall, ea.	6d.
This is the day	G. A. Macfarren and *J. Sewell, ea.	3d.
This is the day	A. R. Gaul, 2d.; A. W. Marchant	4d.
This is the day	*G. M. Garrett, 6d.; J. Turle	4d.
*Unto the Paschal Victim bring	John E. West	2d.
*Upon the first day of the week	M. B. Foster	2d.
When Christ, Who is our life, shall appear	J. V. Roberts	3d.
When my soul fainted within me	...J. F. Bridge	2d.
*When the Sabbath was past	M. B. Foster	2d.
Who is like unto Thee? ...	F. Tozer, 4d.; *A. Sullivan	8d.
*Who shall roll us away the stone?	G. W. Torrance	2d.
*Why rage fiercely the heathen?	Mendelssohn	8d.
Why seek ye the living?	*A. Hollins and A. Alexander, ea.	4d.
Why seek ye the living? (Two-part)... ...	M. B. Foster	4d.
*Why seek ye the living?	E. J. Hopkins	2d.
Why seek ye the living?	F. Peel	6d.
Witnessing Thy Resurrection...	Button	4d.
Worthy the Lamb—Hallelujah!	Crotch	4d.
*Worthy is the Lamb	Handel, 3d.; J. F. Barnett	2d.
Worthy is the Lamb ...	W. Crotch and E. H. Thorne, ea.	4d.
*Ye humble souls that seek the Lord... ...	H. A. Chambers	2d.

*Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d., 2d., and 3d. each.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS.

HYMNS AND TUNES

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

Price Three-Halfpence each.

		Words by	Music by
1.	COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD	F. Bevan	G. C. Martin
2.*	FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING	W. St. Hill Bourne	Lady Euan-Smith
3.	I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY	Emily H. Miller	F. Clay
4.	COME, O COME, IN PIOUS LAYS	G. Wither	J. Stainer
5.	THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE	Mary F. Maude	W. C. Harvey
	NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY	F. R. Havergal	J. Adcock
6	JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE	J. F. Wheeler	H. E. Button
7.*	SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR	F. A. Challinor	F. A. Challinor
8.	WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE	H. R. Palmer	C. J. May
9.	ON OUR WAY REJOICING	J. S. B. Monsell	W. B. Gilbert
10.	AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS	J. Ellerton	J. Stainer
11.	THE ANGEL'S SONG	F. R. Havergal	A. Randegger
12.	FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN	Helen W. Selby	A. Moffat
13.	THE GOLDEN SHORE	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
14.	SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR	G. Thring	John E. West
15.	ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING	W. St. Hill Bourne	F. H. Cowen
16.	MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE	W. H. Draper	J. V. Roberts
17.	STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY	J. Bogue	J. Stainer
18.	THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER	J. M. Neale	J. Barnby
19.	WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY	G. Moultrie	J. Barnby
20.	HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN LOUDLY PEALS	G. Thring	G. J. Bennett
21.	O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO	G. W. Hinsdale	H. E. Button
22.	THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN	C. F. Alexander	A. Sullivan
23.	LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE AND KEEP	W. W. How	A. S. Cooper
24.	THE BEAUTIFUL LAND	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
	JESU, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME	M. L. Duncan	H. Parker
25.	THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND	J. Compston	J. Stainer
26.	THE CITY OF LIGHT	F. Alder	E. J. Troup
27.	GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR	A. Gilbert	H. E. Button
	GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD	C. Wesley	J. Stainer
28.*	HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES	W. St. Hill Bourne	Lady Euan-Smith
29.	THE CROWN IS WAITING	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
30.	RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS	G. Spiller	E. J. Troup
31.*	FLOWERS	F. R. Havergal	A. Randegger
32.	THE GOOD SHEPHERD	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
33.	ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY	M. Bourdillon	H. E. Crimp
34.	WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR	L. Whitehead	E. J. Troup
35.	COME, SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS	J. J. Daniell	G. W. Torrance
36.	WE WILL PRAISE THEE	E. Oxenford	J. Stainer
37.*	WHAT CAN I GIVE JESUS	A. C. Benson	A. M. Goodhart
38.	COME, PRAISE OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR	W. W. How	H. A. Chambers
39.	NOW THE DAY IS OVER	S. Baring-Gould	F. W. Blunt
40.*	WE THANK THEE, LORD, FOR THIS FAIR EARTH	G. E. L. Cotton	W. C. Harvey
41.	THE LESSON OF LOVE		J. Barnby
42.	COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING		E. J. Troup
43.	CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD	Mary Bradford Whiting	J. H. Maunder
44.*	O GOD, WE COME BEFORE THEE	J. Gibson	Tune—"Ellacombe"
45.	WHAT IS THE GIFT THAT I CAN BRING	Mary Bradford Whiting	H. A. Chambers
	HOSANNA WE SING	G. S. Hodges	H. A. Chambers
46.	HEAVENLY FATHER, SEND THY BLESSING	Christopher Wordsworth	W. C. Harvey
47.	THE DAYS OF OLD	Ethel Boyce	Ethel Boyce
48.*	BLESSED JESU, WE CAN SEE THEE	Doris Rowley	Alec Rowley
	THE EARTH IS FAIR AND SWEET	Doris Rowley	Alec Rowley
49.*	WHILE OUR LORD WAS PASSING BY	Ethel Boyce	Ethel Boyce
50.	PILGRIMS OF THE NIGHT	F. W. Faber	Oliver King
51.*	THE HOLY LIGHT	W. M. W. Call	C. H. Lloyd
52.*	NOW SINKS THE SUN THAT LIT OUR FESTAL MORN	Mary Bradford Whiting	C. J. May
53.	LIFE'S GLAD MORNING	Kate Hopkins	G. C. Martin
54.	JESUS, BLESSED SAVIOUR	F. R. Havergal	A. Herbert Brewer
55.	COME, CHRISTIAN YOUTHS AND MAIDENS	T. A. Stowell	Harvey Grace
56.*	THY WORD IS LIKE A GARDEN, LORD	E. Hodder	Eric H. Thiman
	WHEN THE LORD OF LOVE WAS HERE	Stopford A. Brooke	Eric H. Thiman
57.	GOD OF OUR FATHERS	Mary Rowles Jarvis	E. J. Hopkins
58.	CHILDREN OF GOD	F. G. Russell	F. G. Russell
	GOD OF MERCY, THRONED ON HIGH	H. Neele	Harvey Grace
59.	THE CHILDREN'S PRAYER	Robert McLeod	Robert McLeod
60.	THE LORD BE WITH US	J. Ellerton	C. J. May

* These Hymns are suitable for Flower Services.

The above are also published in Seven Sets, containing Ten Hymns and Tunes, price 6d. per Set.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL FESTIVALS.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

SET VII.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Price 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

May also be had in separate numbers, Price 1½d. each.

CONTENTS.

1.	Life's glad morning	GEORGE C. MARTIN
2.	Jesus, blessèd Saviour	A. HERBERT BREWER
3.	Come, Christian youths and maidens	HARVEY GRACE
4.	Thy Word is like a garden	E. H. THIMAN
5.	God of mercy, throned on high	HARVEY GRACE
6.	God of our fathers	E. J. HOPKINS
7.	When the Lord of love	E. H. THIMAN
8.	Children of God	F. G. RUSSELL
9.	The Children's Prayer	R. MCLEOD
10.	The Lord be with us	C. J. MAY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, ETC.

Sacred Unison Songs for Soprano Voices (or Solos).

Children's Angel, The (both Notations)	CH. GOUNOD	2d.
Come, let us all this day (both Notations)	J. S. BACH	2d.
Lord, at all times I will bless Thee (both Notations)	MENDELSSOHN	3d.
Lord of our being (both Notations)	G. F. HANDEL	1½d.
O for the wings of a dove (both Notations)	MENDELSSOHN	2d.

Sacred Two-part Songs and Anthems for Soprano Voices.

Except the Lord build the House (both Notations)	M. J. MONK	3d.
Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard (both Notations)	MYLES B. FOSTER	4d.
Faint not, fear not, God is near thee (both Notations)	HENRY SMART	4d.
God sends the night (both Notations)	G. RATHBONE	4d.
Like as the hart (both Notations)	V. NOVELLO, arr. by H. ELLIOT BUTTON	2d.
Lord is my Shepherd, The (s. & c., both Notations)	HENRY SMART	3d.
O for the wings of a dove (Staff Notation only)	MENDELSSOHN, arr. by J. E. WEST	4d.
O how amiable are Thy dwellings (Staff Notation only)	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.
Songs of Praise the Angels sang (Staff Notation only)	ATTWOOD	2d.
Within the fold (both Notations)	ROLAND ROGERS	4d.

Hymn-Anthems for Children and Choir.

		O.N.	Tonic Sol-Fa.
Happy Day! Festal Day!	H. A. CHAMBERS	4d.	3d.
Hosanna be the children's song	E. M. BARBER	3d.	1½d.
Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST	4d.	2d.
I love to hear the Story	MYLES B. FOSTER	4d.	2d.
Lord, Thy children	J. H. MAUNDER	4d.	2d.
Sweet is the work	R. WALKER ROBSON	2d.	1½d.
Sweet is Thy mercy	J. BARNBY	2d.	1½d.
Thine for ever	H. ELLIOT BUTTON	4d.	2d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... ... Sixpence net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

1810—1876.

ANTHEMS.

	s.	d.
All go unto one place	0	4
Almighty God, give us grace	0	4
Ascribe unto the Lord	0	6
Behold how good and joyful. A.T.B.	0	2
Blessed are they that alway keep judgment	0	2
Blessed be the God and Father Sol-fa, 1½d.	0	3
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel	0	2
Blessed is the man. A.T.T.B.	0	2
Blessed Lord, Who hast caused	0	3
Cast me not away from Thy presence	0	4
Collects, Three, for the first three Sundays in Advent. Two for Treble Voice and one for Bass... Folio Almighty God, O give us grace. Most Blessed Lord. Lord Jesus Christ, Thou Who at Thy first coming.	2	6
Face of the Lord, The Folio	3	6
For this mortal must put on immortality	0	4
Give the King Thy judgments Folio	6	0
Glory be to God on high Sol-fa, 1½d.	0	3
God be merciful unto us	0	4
He will swallow up death in victory	0	2
I am Thine, O save me	0	2
Lead me, Lord (from Praise the Lord, O my soul) Sol-fa, 1½d.	0	2
Let us lift up our heart Folio	6	0
Lord hath been mindful of us, The (from Ascribe unto the Lord) Sol-fa, 2d. Welsh Words, 4c. Sol-fa, 2c.	0	4
Man that is born of a woman	0	3
O give thanks unto the Lord	0	6
O God, Whose nature and property Sol-fa, 1½d.	0	2
O Lord Jesu Christ	0	3
O Lord, my God (Solomon's Prayer) Sol-fa, 1½d. Welsh Words, 3c. Sol-fa, 1½c.	0	2
O Lord, Thou art my God	1	6
O worship the Lord. S.S.A.A. (From Ascribe unto the Lord)	0	4
Praise the Lord, my soul	0	8
Thou Judge of quick and dead (from Let us lift up our heart) Sol-fa, 2d.	0	4
Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace Sol-fa, 2d.	0	4
To my request and earnest cry Sol-fa, 2d.	0	2
Wash me throughly Sol-fa, 2d.	0	4
Wilderness, The Sol-fa, 3d.	0	8

HYMNS AND CAROL.

Brightest and best. Carol	0	1½
Church's one foundation, The (Aurelia). Hymn	0	1½
Lift your heads, ye gates of God (Processional). Hymn Words only, 2s. per 100.	0	1½
Onward, Christian soldiers (Excelsior). Hymn	0	1½

SERVICES, ETC.

MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE in E. Edited, with a Preface, by G. M. GARRETT Or, separately: Te Deum, 8d.; Jubilate, 8d.; Communion Service, 1s. 6d.; Nicene Creed, 4d.; Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, 1s.; Benedictus, 6d.	4	0
MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE in F (Chant Form) (Short Score) Or, separately: Te Deum, 2d. (Sol-fa, 2d.); Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, 3d.; ditto (Unison), 3d.	0	6
Ditto. Te Deum and Jubilate Folio Magnificat and Nunc dimittis Folio	3 1	0 6
MORNING AND EVENING SERVICE in F Or, separately: Te Deum, 6d. (Sol-fa, 2d.); Jubilate, 3d.; Kyrie, Sanctus, and Creed, 6d.; Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, 6d.	1	6

SERVICES, ETC.—continued.

	s.	d.
BENEDICITE, OMNIA OPERA	0	2
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS in F (Chant Service, Letter B)	0	2
TE DEUM, JUBILATE, MAGNIFICAT, AND NUNC DIMITTIS in G (Chant Service)	1	0
RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS in C sharp minor, E, and F each	0	3
FOUR-FOLD AMEN	0	1½
HUNDREDTH PSALM, THE, arranged with various Harmony for Choirs	1	6
LEAD ME, LORD (Vestry Prayer)	0	1½

PART-SONGS.

At that dread hour (Faith). A.T.T.B.	0	4
I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre. A.T.T.B.B.	0	6
Shall I tell you whom I love?	0	4
When fierce, conflicting passions. A.T.T.B.B.	0	8

SONGS.

Butterfly, The	2	0
By the rivers of Babylon	1	6
Orphan hours, the year is dead	1	0
Wert thou like me	2	0

ORGAN MUSIC.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS. Edited by G. M. GARRETT:—

1.	Andante in G (3-4 Time)	1	6
2.	Larghetto with Variations (F sharp minor)	1	6
3.	Andante in E flat (2-4 Time)	1	6
4.	Andante in E flat (C Time)	2	3
5.	Andante in F	2	3
6.	Choral Song and Fugue in C	2	3
7.	Voluntary (Grave and Andante)	1	6
8.	Andante Cantabile in G (C Time)	1	6
9.	Introduction and Fugue (C sharp minor)	3	0
9A.	Introduction and Fugue (First Edition)	2	3
10.	National Anthem with Variations in G	3	0

Selection of Psalm Tunes, arranged as Studies for the Organ with Pedal obbligato:—

11.	Psalm Tunes (St. Stephen, St. Matthew, 104th Psalm)	2	3
12.	Psalm Tunes (St. David, St. Bride, St. Ann, 100th Psalm)	2	3
13.	Psalm Tunes (Westminster, Angel's Hymn, Irish, St. Mary)	2	3
14.	Psalm Tunes (Windsor, Liverpool, Bedford, Manchester)	1	6
15.	Voluntary in C. Edited by JOHN E. WEST	1	6
	An Air composed for Holsworthy Church Bells, varied	3	0
	Andante in A	3	0
	Andante in E minor	2	0
	Choral Song, A ("Village Organist." Book 47)	1	6
	Larghetto in F minor	1	0
	Studio for the Organ (a Series of Exercises in the strict and free styles)	2	3
	Voluntary (Grave and Andante)	1	6
	Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace. Anthem (arr. WESTBROOK), "Young Organist," No. 11	1	6

HARMONIUM MUSIC.

(ARRANGED.)

All go unto one place (Elliott, Harmonium Treasury, 21)	1	6
Solomon's Prayer ,, ,, ,, 23)	1	6
Andante and Chorale ,, ,, ,, 24)	1	6
Lead me, Lord O worship the Lord ,, Voluntaries, Book 1)	1	6
Blessed are they Moderato ,, ,, ,, 3)	1	6
Gloria in excelsis ,, ,, ,, 5)	1	6

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

March and Rondo	4	6
March, singly	1	6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SOLOS FROM THE CHURCH CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

Air — WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
Air — OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
Air — MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
Air — O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
Air — SIGHING, WEEPING ("My spirit was in heaviness").

TENOR.

Air — LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
Recit. — WHY HAST THOU THEN ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
Air — FAST MY BITTER TEARS ,, ,, ,,
Air — REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
Air — HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD ,, ,, ,,
Air — AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL ("When will God recall").

ALTO.

Air — THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
Recit. — THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
Air — MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIES ("God goeth up").
Air — INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
Air — REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

BASS.

Recit. — HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
Air — 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
Recit. — IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
Air — ON MY BEHALF ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
Air — WHOM JESUS DEIGNS ,, ,,
Air — YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

Air — OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
Air — I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

TENOR.

Recit. — THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
Air — WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
Air — TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
Air — THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

ALTO.

Air — GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
Recit. — INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

BASS.

Air — THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
Air — DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
Air — WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
Recit. — AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").
Air — BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY ,, ,,

THIRD SET.

SOPRANO.

Recit. — O LORD, HEAR ME WHEN I CALL ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — HOW LONG, O LORD ,, ,,
Air — O PRAISE THE LORD ("O Praise the Lord").
Recit. — O JESU, OUR REDEEMER ("There is nought of soundness").
Air — HEARKEN WHEN WITH TREMBLING ACCENTS ,, ,,
Air — THOUGH REVILING TONGUES ASSAIL ME ("Watch ye, pray ye").

TENOR.

Recit. — LORD, WHY SO FAR AWAY ("Jesus sleeps").
Air — IN BILLOWS THE RIVERS OF BELIAL ("Jesus sleeps").
Recit. — O HAPPY TOWN, O FAVOURED LAND ("Praise thou the Lord").
Air — O BLEST ARE ALL THAT FEAR HIM ,, ,, ,,
Recit. — REJECT IT NOT ("Sages of Sheba").
Air — SAVIOUR, TAKE ME FOR THINE OWN ("Sages of Sheba").
Air — UPLIFT YOUR HEADS ON HIGH ("Watch ye, pray ye").

ALTO.

Air — BE WELCOME, THOU GREAT ANGEL ("O teach me, Lord").
Air — AH, TARRY YET ("Praise our God").
Air — GOD IS EVER SUN AND SHIELD ("The Lord is a sun and shield").
Recit. — BE STEADFAST IN AFFLICTION ("Wailing, crying").
Air — PAIN AND SORROW WORK SALVATION ,, ,,

BASS.

Air — GOD, WHOSE POWER ("Let songs of rejoicing").
Recit. — ALTHOUGH AN HOST ENCAMP ("Lord, rebuke me not").
Air — O LORD, THY MERCY ,, ,,
Air — FARE YE WELL ("O teach me, Lord").
Recit. — THESE THINGS THAT ISAIAH OF OLD ("The Sages of Sheba").
Air — GOLD OF OPHIR IS BUT VAIN ,, ,,
Air — AH, WHERE SHALL I SUCCOUR ("There is nought of soundness").

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PAXTON'S PRACTICAL EDITION

OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS

EDITED BY

F. CORDER, F.R.A.M.

NO classical pianoforte music has been the subject of greater controversy than the immortal Sonatas of Beethoven. Since the composer's time, the Sonatas have passed through the hands of various editors, all famous authorities on the art of pianoforte playing, and most of them have raised interesting and valuable points bearing on the correct interpretation of the master's works.

This edition, edited by Mr. Frederick Corder, who will always be remembered as one of our most eminent pianoforte professors, has a great advantage over the earlier editions in that it comprises the most useful features of them all, combined with the fruits of the ripe experience and practical wisdom of a man who served a life-time in the highest teaching capacity in the Royal Academy of Music. This edition, in fact, claims to represent the composer's intentions more adequately than any other; to that end the text has been formulated with the greatest care from the following standard authorities:—The Original Edition, published under Beethoven's own eye by Arataria; the Second Edition, revised by Liszt; the Cotta Edition, edited by Lebert and Von Bülow; the Peters Edition, edited by Kohler and Schmidt; the Steingraber Edition, edited by "Gustav Damm" (Ed. Steingraber); the Original Text Edition; the Buonamici Edition; the D'Albert Edition; the Riemann "Phrasing" Edition; the Moscheles Edition, which was the basis of nearly all the English editions. Where any deviations from, or additions to, the original text have been found necessary, the fact is clearly indicated. The notation is modernised and rendered as clear as possible to the eye of the student. To this end graces or shakes are frequently written in full. Comprehensive analytical and descriptive notes, suggestions, &c., precede each Sonata, and the engraving has been kept specially open and clear, this being a great improvement on the cramped pages that are met with in other editions of these Sonatas. To avoid bewildering the eye with a multiplicity of signs, such as render many of the above editions unsuitable for teaching purposes, the simple rule has been adhered to—that all passages are legato unless marked otherwise.

In all debatable points of fingering, pedal marks and rendering, the following leading authorities in the teaching world have kindly given the Editor the benefit of their advice: Messrs. Carlo Albanesi, Oscar Beringer, Victor Booth, Tobias Matthay, and Cuthbert Whitemore.

PUBLISHED SEPARATELY.

No.			s.	d.
50,701	Op.	2, No. 1, F minor	2	0
50,702	Op.	2, No. 2, A major	2	0
50,703	Op.	2, No. 3, C major	2	6
50,704	Op.	7, E♭ major	2	6
50,705	Op.	10, No. 1, C minor	2	0
50,706	Op.	10, No. 2, F major	2	0
50,707	Op.	10, No. 3, D major	2	0
50,708	Op.	13, C minor (Pathétique) ...	2	6
50,709	Op.	14, No. 1, E major	2	0
50,710	Op.	14, No. 2, G major	2	0
50,711	Op.	22, B♭ major	2	6
50,712	Op.	26, A♭ major	2	0
50,713	Op.	27, No. 1, E♭ major ... ... (Quasi Fantasia)	2	0
50,714	Op.	27, No. 2, C♯ minor (Moonlight)	2	0
50,715	Op.	28, D major (Pastorale) ...	2	6
50,716	Op.	31, No. 1, G major	2	6
50,717	Op.	31, No. 2, D minor	2	6
50,718	Op.	31, No. 3, E♭ major	2	6
50,719	Op.	49, No. 1, G minor	1	6
50,720	Op.	49, No. 2, G major	1	6
50,721	Op.	53, C major (Waldstein) ...	2	6
50,722	Op.	54, F major	2	0
50,723	Op.	57, F minor (Appassionata) ...	2	6
50,724	Op.	78, F♯ major	2	0
50,725	Op.	79, G major (Sonatina) ...	1	6
50,726	Op.	81, E♭ major ... ... (Les Adieux, l'Absence et le Retour)	2	0
50,727	Op.	90, E minor	2	0
50,728	Op.	101, A major	2	0
50,729	Op.	106, B♭ major (Hammerklavier)	4	0
50,730	Op.	109, E major	2	0
50,731	Op.	110, A♭ major	2	0
50,732	Op.	111, C minor	2	6

BOUND EDITIONS.

Paper with Linen Back.		Cloth Edition de Luxe.
Vol. I., Containing Nos. 1—16	8 0	Vol. I., Containing Nos. 1—16	12 0
Vol. II., Containing Nos. 17—32	8 0	Vol. II., Containing Nos. 17—32	12 0

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS, OR—

W. PAXTON & CO., Ltd.

22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for complete Graded Pianoforte Catalogue, C. 301, gratis.

Specimen Copies of the separate edition will gladly be sent on approval at half-price, plus 1d. postage per number, to bona-fide Teachers, &c., sending card and mentioning the Musical Times.

JUST PUBLISHED.

OVERTURE IN D MINOR

COMPOSED BY

HANDEL.

ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN

BY

H. F. ELLINGFORD.

FROM THE ORCHESTRAL TRANSCRIPTION

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

ORGAN WORKS

OF

RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE

Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,
Paper Boards 7s.
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4s.
Music only, 3s.

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Rewritten and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JANUARY'S BULLETIN OF OXFORD MUSIC

THE COTTA EDITION OF MUSICAL CLASSICS.

The Oxford University Press has secured the sole agency for the British Isles and the British Empire (except Australia and New Zealand) of this celebrated edition. It is undoubtedly the finest and most popular edition of the musical classics available. It contains the important works, for teaching and concert use, of Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Haydn, Schubert, Schumann, Liszt, and many others, with full notes by eminent musicians. Write for full list.

Solo Songs

	s.	d.
"The Song of the Water Maiden" ... By NORMAN PETERKIN	2	0
Schubert's Litany (Litanei)	2	0
"The New Mistress" ... ... By HUBERT J. FOSS	2	0
"Pierrette in Memory" ... ... By NORMAN PETERKIN	2	0
"The Chestnut Blossom" ... ... By NORMAN PETERKIN	2	0
"The Curse on a Closed Gate" ... ... (for Voice and Viola) By NORMAN PETERKIN	2	0
"The Journeyman Weaver" ... ... (for Voice and Viola) By NORMAN PETERKIN	2	0

Modern Anthems

No. A2.	King of Glory, King of Peace ... (for Treble Voices) By W. H. HARRIS	0	5

Books

Roger North's Musicall Gramarian ... ... Transcribed by HILDA ANDREWS	3	6

Musical Pilgrim Series

BACH: The Passions, Book I.
The Passions, Book II.
By C. SANFORD TERRY

BACH: The Cantatas and Oratorios, Books I. and II. ... ... each 1 6
By C. SANFORD TERRY

Chamber works

THE LARK ASCENDING
For Violin Solo
By R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS
For Violin and Piano. Price 4s.
Full Orchestral Score (with cues available for Small Orchestra), 15s.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMEN HOUSE, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.4, AND 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH DESCANTS

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 271.
SET I.

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)
EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

JUST PUBLISHED.
NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 275.
SET II.

COME LASSES AND LADS (English)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)
THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
THE FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

JUST PUBLISHED.
NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. BOOK 276.
SET III.

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)
THERE 'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)
LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

PRICE EIGHTPENCE EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

Just Published.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY
F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY
A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence

STRING PARTS, Price 8*s*.

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published.

Price 3*s*. 6*d*.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

Just Published.

LOVE INCARNATE

A SETTING OF LINES
By ROBERT BROWNING.
With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"
BY
ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.
Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.
Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ
BY BASIL HARWOOD.
(Op. 37.)

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST
AND
THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY
S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BY
JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

Just Published.

The Lording's Daughter

BALLAD.

WORDS
ELIZABETHAN.

MUSIC BY EDWARD GERMAN.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: Novello and Company, Limited

Just Published.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY AUSTIN DOBSON

MUSIC BY
HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

Just Published.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
Book 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

EMPIRE SONG BOOK

A COLLECTION OF SUITABLE MUSIC FOR CHILDREN'S FESTIVALS WHICH IS SO ARRANGED THAT IT MAY BE PERFORMED WITH OR WITHOUT ACTIONS.

"SHE STANDS A THOUSAND-WINTERED TREE"

"AN EMPIRE SONG"

AND THE

MEDLEYS

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Vocal Parts (Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations combined), Sixpence.

Orchestral Parts may be obtained.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 274.

FOLK-SONGS

FOR SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

SET IX.

No.
1407	BLACKBIRDS AND THRUSHES
1408	DABBLING IN THE DEW
1409	THE BONNY LIGHTER-BOY
1410	THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON
1411	THE TREE IN THE WOOD
1412	THE BOLD FISHERMAN
1413	MY BOY WILLIE
1414	SCARBOROUGH FAIR
1415	SEARCHING FOR LAMBS

Price Twopence each number.

Price One Shilling.

Voice Parts only, 4*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH
VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

			s.	d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major	JAMES LATES	3	0
,, 2.	SONATA in D minor	HENRY ECCLES	3	0
,, 3.	SONATA in B flat major ...	WILLIAM BABELL	3	0
,, 4.	SONATA in G minor	JOHN STANLEY	3	0
,, 5.	SONATA in A major	JOHN COLLETT	3	0
,, 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4	6
,, 7.	SONATA in D major	RICHARD JONES	3	0
,, 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor ...	WILLIAM BOYCE	4	6
,, 9.	THREE PIECES	WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
,, 10.	SONATA in E major ...	CHARLES MACKLEAN	3	0
,, 11.	SONATA in G minor	WILLIAM CROFT	3	0
,, 12.	SONATA in D minor	JOSEPH GIBBS	3	0
,, 13.	SONATA in D minor	JOHN HUMPHRIES	3	0
,, 14.	SONATA in A minor	THOMAS VINCENT	3	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - - PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement-feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonetics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs: balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC SUITABLE FOR EASTERTIDE

	s.	d.
GRANVILLE BANTOCK.
EASTER HYMN. For Medium Voice and Pianoforte	2	0	net.
Also arranged for S.A.T.B., with Organ Accompaniment	0	4	net.
Or Unaccompanied	0	2	net.
D. E. INGHELBRECHT.
THE CANTICLE OF CREATION (St. François d'Assise). For S.A.T.B. and Orchestra. Vocal Score	3	0	net.
FERDINAND HUMMEL.
HALLELUJA! Song for High, Medium, or Low Voice. Latin words adapted from Psalms LXIII. and XXIII. English Version by Frederick H. Martens	2	0	net.
A. ARENSKY.
EASTER DAY (from "Six Children's Songs"). Unison	0	2	net.
OUR LORD IS RISEN (Anthem). S.S.A.	0	3	net.
C. H. CRONK.
BLOW UP THE TRUMPET (Festival Anthem). Tenor Solo, and S.A.T.B. ...	0	4	net.
A. LOWE.
THE LORD IS MY STRENGTH (Anthem). S.A.T.B.	0	3	net.
P. TCHAIKOWSKY.
LEGEND, "CHRIST IN HIS GARDEN." For Medium Voice and Pianoforte ...	2	0	net.
Also arranged for S.A.T.B., Unaccompanied	0	2	net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Monday, March 1, 1926.

No. 998

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

APRIL 1, 1926

THE WORLD FAMOUS

Bösendorfer

PIANOS

(Established 1828.)

BUSONI "The Piano was ideal & helped me to give expression to my highest conceptions".....

HAROLD BAUER "These instruments are sympathetic to me in the highest degree."

PADEREWSKY "The Piano was quite wonderful".....

MORITZ ROSENTHAL "The Piano sounded ravishing"..

SOLE AGENTS

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

ROGERS

PIANOS

are the outstanding Pianos of the present day for their superb musical qualities, and ahead of all in value.

Call or write for Catalogue

GEORGE ROGERS & SONS

60 Berners Street

London W.1.

FIVE INSPIRING
Organ Records

PLAYED ON THE GRAND ORGAN AT THE KINGSWAY HALL, LONDON

TO capture the grandeur and majesty of the organ, "King of Instruments," so that its music can be re-created with amazing fidelity at will, has been the latest achievement of "His Master's Voice" recording.
These organ records are dramatic in their realism. All the deep turbulence of sound from the mounting grandeur of crescendos to the low gentle flowing of pianissimos are reproduced in a manner that can only be described as inspiring. Never before have gramophone records created such a thrilling and real atmosphere.

12-inch Double-sided Plum Label. 4/6 each.

C 1238 — Suite Gothique — Boëllman
Part 1 (Introduction)
Part 2 (Prière à Notre Dame)
Played by Herbert Dawson

C 1237 — Largo - - Handel
Played by C. Whitaker-Wilson
The Lost Chord - Sullivan
Played by Gatty Sellars

10-inch Double-sided Plum Label. 3/- each.

B 2263 — Idylle - Elgar
Evensong - Easthope Martin
Played by Herbert Dawson

B 2274 — (a) "Alleluia"—The Strife is o'er (Palestrina);
(b) "Alleluia" (Easter Hymn)
(c) All people that on earth do dwell (Old Hundredth)
(a) Christ the Lord is risen to-day (G. J. Elvey);
(b) Jesus lives! No longer now (H. J. Gaunt et);
(c) Jesus Christ is risen
Played by Herbert Dawson

10-inch Double-sided Black Label. 4/6.

E 416 — Toccata - - - Widor
Fugue a la Gigue - - Bach.
Played by Reginald Goss-Custard, F.R.C.O.

Any "His Master's Voice" dealer will play these records for you—but to hear them to perfection ask for them to be played on the new "His Master's Voice" Gramophone.

"His Master's Voice"

THE GRAMOPHONE CO., LTD., Oxford St., London, W.1

"Greatest Artists-Finest Recording!"

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 998—Vol. 67.
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

APRIL 1 1926

Price 6d.; Postage, 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN B MINOR - - - - BACH

MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. ARCHIBALD WINTER.
MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

Conductor: DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.
THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA
At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

SPECIAL COURSES for the Training of Conductors, and also for the Training of Teachers, the latter to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, have been arranged.

THE STERNDALE BENNETT SCHOLARSHIP, for Male Candidates in any branch of music, will be competed for on or about Friday, April 30. Last day of entry, Monday, April 12.

SPECIAL INSTRUCTION is provided in the JUNIOR SCHOOL for Students under the age of 16.

MIDSUMMER TERM will begin on Monday, May 3. Entrance Examination on or about Thursday, April 29.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING
{ HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, ESQ., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, ESQ., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

MISS LILIAN TROTT, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an ORGAN RECITAL at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on Tuesday, April 13th, at 1 p.m.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

Candidates for Fellowship are requested to note that in the first few copies of the current Regulations, the requirement for question 3 (C.) of the morning paper was left blank; it is Septet in E flat, Op. 20, Beethoven, Miniature Score. (Goodwin & Tabb.)

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude (without Fugue) in E flat, "St. Ann," J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 6, page 28; Augener, p. 133; Peters, Vol. 3, No. 1.)

Choral Prelude on Newtoun, Charles Wood. (No. 6 of 16 Preludes, Vol. 1, Stainer & Bell.)

Fantasia in F minor, Mozart. (Best's arrangements, No. 76, p. 1000; Novello.) This arrangement only.

The selected pieces set for the July, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1926.

Candidates selecting Group 5 of the Associateship pieces are requested to note that the Choral Prelude, "All men must die" ('Alle Menschen müssen sterben') is on page 119, Book 15, of Novello's old edition, and on page 121, of the new edition.

The Choir-Training Diploma and Certificate Examinations will both be held between Monday, May 10th, and Saturday, May 15th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Wednesday, April 14th. Application for election or re-election to Membership must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before April 14th.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College re-opens at 10 o'clock on Monday, April 12th.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON CLASS by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. The Prince of Wales, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (Syllabus A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (Syllabus B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 12th (Irish Entries, May 5th), 1926.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... Granville Bantock, M.A., D. Mus. (Ed.).

Session 1925-1926.

The Season consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20); WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11); SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1926-27.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
Athenæum Buildings, Glasgow.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. Claud Biggs.

New Professor of Singing, Miss Marguerite Swale.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COMPETITIVE CHOIRS.

President:
JOHN E. TURNER, Esq., Halifax Madrigal Society.

The objects are for the binding together for mutual help of all the Competitive Choirs in the Country, to deal with all matters affecting the interests of the choirs, and to be the channel of communication between the choirs and the various Musical Festival committees in the Country.

Further particulars from the Hon. Secretary,
H STEVENSON, 6, Laneside Street, Todmorden.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Prince Consort Road, South Kensington, London, S.W.7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
{ HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: Sir Hugh P. Allen, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. Doc

COMPETITION FOR SIXTEEN OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

COMPOSITION
PIANOFORTE
ORGAN	1
SINGING	3
VIOLIN	2
VIOLONCELLO	2

Not less than 4 between Harp, Hautboy, Bassoon, Trumpet, and Horn.

The SCHOLARSHIPS ARE OPEN to all classes of His Majesty's subjects within the prescribed limits of age. All particulars and official Entry Forms may be obtained from the College.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS will be held on WEDNESDAY, MAY 26th, 1926, in various Local Centres throughout the United Kingdom, and the Final Competition will take place at the College about June 10th, 1926.

The last day for receiving Entry Forms, which must be accompanied by an official stamped Registrar's Certificate of Birth, is APRIL 26th, 1926.

A.R.C.M.

An Examination in all subjects for "Associate of the Royal College of Music" is held three times a year—in September, December, and April.

Syllabus may be obtained from the College.

MIDSUMMER TERM

will commence on Monday, May 3rd, 1926. Entrance Examination on or about April 28th.

CLAUDE AVELING, M.A., Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.

Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): Albert J. Cross, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

President for 1926: HARVEY GRACE, F.R.C.O.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, Blomfield Crescent, Paddington, W.2.
Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., Arthur G. Bates

MODERN — CORR. COLLEGE —

Recent Successes

MATRIC. - -	35
1st M.B. - - -	13
F.R.C.O. - - -	9
A.R.C.O. - - -	26
L.R.A.M. - - -	19
A.R.C.M. - - -	11
A.MUS.T.C.L. -	13
A.T.C.L. - - -	6
L.MUS.T.C.L. -	4

Please state Exam., or Subject.

Remarkable Results

F.R.C.O.

A Student FAILS six times (under other tuition). Joins the M.C.C. and PASSES. January, 1926.

A.T.C.L. (Art of Teaching) 87%

L.R.A.M. (Elocution) - 100% of PASSES.

A.R.C.M. (Mus. Appreciation) 3 all at 1st attempt.

L.R.A.M. (Singing)
A Student of the M.C.C. was complimented by one of the Examiners.

MUS. BAC.

FOR ONE FEE—which can be paid by monthly instalments—Tuition is given until you GAIN the DEGREE.

TUITION IN SINGLE SUBJECTS—
HARMONY, FORM, ART OF TEACHING, ELOCUTION, TOUCH, &c.

MODERN
20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

Piano Playing Kept Up Without Keyboard Practising

NOT the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising. Even when circumstances render keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard. This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency take my Postal Course. Musical News describes my system as "the most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians." Many eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used and highly recommended my System—THE ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM.

From Brain to Keyboard

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing

20,000 Successful Pupils of all ages

My illustrated book,

"LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING,"

will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.1.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Papers.
2. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Papers.
3. Short comprehensive Course for L.R.A.M. "Form and Teaching" Paper.
4. Touch and Technique (Matthay Method) for L.R.A.M., vivâ voce.
5. Fingering and Pedalling.
6. Rudiments, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, as separate subjects.
7. Courses on Mr. Stewart Macpherson's "Melody and Harmony."

Over 90% Postal Successes at Diploma Examinations.

MR. GILBERT THOMAS,
M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A. Mus. T.C.L.
Private Pupil of Stewart Macpherson, Backhaus, Oscar Beringer.
Formerly Student at Matthay Pianoforte School, London.
Terms, Appreciations, on application:
Ashcroft, 42 Burton Road, S.W.9.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.
OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.
"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."
RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.
2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.
"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,
Specialist in the Teaching of MODERN TECHNIQUE
AND
THE PRODUCTION OF BEAUTIFUL TONE.
Personal Lessons and Consultations Daily,
OR
CORRESPONDENCE TUITION,
being instruction by post on exactly the same lines as the personal teaching, designed for those living at a distance and including FREE Postal Consultations on all individual difficulties.
Invaluable to every pianist—whether Amateur or Professional student, Teacher, or Performer.
Write or call—
11, South Molton Street, London, W.1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
Lyrics Set to Music, Melodies Harmonized, Music Transposed and Copied, Band Parts Written, MSS. Prepared for Publication by a Master Hand, Accompaniments of Distinction Written to Songs.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.
ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).
The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.
Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.
Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.
Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH'S COURSES.

"Full Preparation" Courses are now beginning for the following:

(1) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. for July.

(2) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. for September.

(3) London & Durham Mus.Bac., September and December.

These Postal Courses enable you to study at home, in your own time, and at your own convenience. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for diplomas and degrees.

CONSULTATION LESSONS ALSO IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

ALBERT GARCIA'S

VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.

PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"

revised from the original edition by

ALBERT GARCIA.

Publishers: Messrs. Leonard & Co., 47, Poland St., W.1. Price 6s.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

Complete Course of Six Postal Lessons, Three Guineas.

Personal Lessons if desired.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., Etc.,

41, Avondale Road, S. Croydon: and 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

Have You a Repertoire?

Life is too short to keep on practising all one's old pieces; in any case, they would become hopelessly "stale." Yet every musician—amateur or professional—has a natural ambition to acquire a repertoire—a list of pieces stored in the memory.

Unless you know how to memorise your music in such a way that it remains permanently in your mind, you cannot build up a repertoire, for the simple reason that, as you add each new piece at the end of your list, those at the beginning of it gradually become unsafe and fade away.

MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC BY THE

Master-Method

OF

Memory-Playing

and you begin to build up a real repertoire. Every piece you add to your list remains permanently in your mind, ready to be reproduced whenever you wish.

Memorising is not a "gift," but is the established fact of all who have taken my Memorising Courses.

If you cannot play from memory without the nerve-racking torture of constant repetition, write to-day for my Free Book (sent post free), and learn how YOU can play from memory with ease, certainty, and confidence, and how to overcome the dreaded weakness of nervousness when playing before others. Full details are given of my Memorising Courses for the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, Organ, together with many testimonials and My Personal Guarantee of Success.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

Send P.C. to-day, stating which instrument you play, and whether a beginner, intermediate, or advanced player.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT,
F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.6.

Is your Voice the greatest obstacle to your highest success, or lack of Physical Power?

Songjoy, the unique new Health-Singing and True Voice Culture, overcomes these obstacles, adding 100 per cent. to your personality and success, by acquiring and preserving a clear, perfectly modulated, and developed voice, combined with renewed physical vitality.

Invaluable Knowledge for all Professionals and Amateurs.

Sent, with free gift of newly published Song, on receipt of 10*s.* 6*d.*

Write, RHOMA RODWAY, L.R.A.M.,
Voice Specialist,
41, Grenville Place, Brighton, Sussex.

THE CHELTENHAM SPA
OPEN COMPETITIVE
MUSICAL FESTIVAL
TOWN HALL, CHELTENHAM SPA,
MAY 18 and 19, 1926.

Entries close April 21, 1926.

SYLLABUS and Entry Forms from
THE HON. SECRETARY,
Town Hall Bureau, Cheltenham Spa.

THE TECHNIQUER
Invented and Patented by R. J. Pitcher, Mus. Bac.
FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING,
STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.
Send for testimony of Lamond, Pouishnoff, Fryer, Reddie, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7, 1925.
Treatise on "Hand Development," with Photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*
Full particulars from the Secretary—
Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

EMINENT FIRM OF ORGAN BUILDERS can place prospective buyers of used Organs in touch with UNDOUBTED BARGAINS.
Write, "B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM.
SOPRANO.
"A clear, well-produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

GWENDOLEN
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR
SOPRANO.
Available for "Hiawatha," "A Tale of Old Japan," "Meg Blane," also Concerts, Recitals, &c., and her Lecture-Recitals on Coleridge-Taylor.
New Address: The Cottage, Woodmansterne, Surrey.
Tel.: Burgh Heath 661.

EVELYNE KING
(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Recitals, At Homes, &c.
Oratorio. BACH a speciality.
All Modern and Standard Works.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
WEST-END STUDIOS.
For Lessons or Vacant Dates, apply,
117, Hampstead Way, Golders Green, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

HORACE CURTIS
TENOR
ORATORIO, WORKS, REQUIEMS, Etc.
99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12. 'Phone: Streatham 5246.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, Etc.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5

CLAUDE PILGRIM
TENOR.
The Cathedral Male-Voice Quartet.
26, Seymour Gardens, Ilford. Tel.: Ilford 1826.

MILLARD THOMPSON
(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.
17, Forest View Road, Highams Park, E.17.

MR. LANGDALE BROWN
BASS-BARITONE.
29, Sedgeford Road, W.12. Tel.: Riverside 4353.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Available for Oratorio, Choral Societies, &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. 'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

R. ARNOLD GREIR
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 201.

EDWARD W. GROOCOCK
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., A.G.S.M.
Organist, Rugby Parish Church.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
6, Regent Place, Rugby, Warwickshire.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma).
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

HARRY LYTTLER
SOLO FLUTE (AND PICCOLO), L.R.A.M.
London, 2LO, and Provincial Concerts.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, &c., also Tuition.
20, Hampstead Road, London, N.W.1. 'Phone: Museum 9365.

ALFRED MORRIS, L.Mus. T.C.L.
POSTAL TUITION.
Graded Lessons especially prepared to suit individual needs—every student assured of personal care and attention.
Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, &c.
Preparation for Diplomas and other examinations.
Moderate terms.
9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

WILLIAM NIELD ACCOMPANIST.
293, Preston New Road, Blackburn. Tel.: 5669.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and
2, Connaught Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).
CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
CONSULTATION LESSONS.
PIANOFORTE LECTURE-RECITALS.
Address: 46, Clarendon Road, Redland, Bristol.
'Phone: Bristol 3033.

(See also Page 293).

MISS MARY WILSON F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

ELIZABETH LEVY, L.R.A.M., Gold Medallist.
Tobias Matthay's Piano Method taught by her at pupils' houses or her studio. SPECIAL COACHING for scholarships, Medals, and all Examinations. Write, 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
Correspondence Courses in
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MADAME ALBA, Dramatic Soprano (Italian bel canto), receives pupils. Singing, Speaking, Voice-Culture, Breath Control. Cramer's Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B. Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MR. RONALD BRIDGER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. (Registered Teacher), prepares pupils for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. examinations in singing, either personally or by correspondence. Lessons also given in Voice Production and Singing. Highest references. Full particulars from 54, Pembridge Villas, W.11.

J. C. BRYDSON, Mus. B. (Dunelm.). Correspondence Coach. Fee, 1 guinea for 10 lessons. Students enrolling this month receive first term at half fees. Kegworth, Derby.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-26 ...286 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-26 ... 76 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. BIBBY also gives PERSONAL Lessons in Manchester. Complete Preparation (Practical and Paper Work) for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L., &c. Address as above.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O. Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

MR. E. G. DUGGAN, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., Regd. Teacher, gives instruction in Theoretical Subjects. 87, Broomfield Avenue, Palmers Green, N.13.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 410 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. For Lectures, address E. L. Robinson Direction, 199, Piccadilly, London, W.1; for personal and correspondence lessons, address Dr. Eaglefield Hull, 19, Berners Street, W.1. For Organ Recitals, address Secretary, 48, New North Rd., Huddersfield.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus. Bac. pass. Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. Diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High St., W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; Mus.Doc., Trinity University, Toronto: F.R.C.O.: F.A.G.O., &c., Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

SIGHT-READING SPECIALIST, Pianoforte, Singing. Miss Penrose, Diplômée, Leipzig Conservatorium. Special course of 25 lessons for Adults with no previous knowledge of Music. Definite results in stated number of Lessons guaranteed. Infallible method of simplifying time and rhythm difficulties. Studio, 157, Kensington High Street, W.8. (Telephone, 778 Western.)

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes, 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

MRS. J. SHARP, A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte), Coaching for Examinations and Festivals. Visits Streatham, Wallington, and Westminster. Address: Wigmore Hall Studios, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

J. W. WILSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., T.C.L. Exams, &c. Solutions and Model Essays. Moderate Terms. 47, Hinckley Road, Leicester.

PIANIST.—Keen, excellent sight-reader, requires engagements. Would like work with Singer or Ladies' Trio. Address: Miss Violet Morris, 21, Gladwell Road, Crouch End, N.8.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
279 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
174 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O , July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1926.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

KING'S COLLEGE CHOIR SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE.

A TRIAL OF VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir will be held on Tuesday, April 27.
Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between 8 and 11 years of age.
For particulars, apply to The Deans, King's College, Cambridge.
Names to be sent in not later than April 19.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

THE DEAN AND CHAPTER will shortly proceed to the Election of TWO CHORAL SCHOLARS, an ALTO and a TENOR.
The Choral Scholarships, which are of the value of £80 a year, are tenable by men who intend to take a University degree.
Successful candidates must either pass the Matriculation Examination of the University, or gain exemption from the necessity of passing it, before coming into residence in October.
Applications, accompanied by certificates of birth and not more than four testimonials, should be sent to The Precentor, from whom further information may be obtained. His address is The College, Durham.
Notice of the day of trial will be sent to selected candidates only, and their travelling and other necessary expenses will be borne by The Dean and Chapter.

ALTO and TENOR WANTED. £12. St Andrew's, Holborn. Fridays, 6.30; Sundays, 11 and 6.30 Apply, Organist.

TENOR WANTED for St. Mark's, Surbiton. £20 to £25. Duties light. Apply, R. Frederic Tyler, F.R.C.O., 8, Lingfield Avenue, Kingston-on-Thames.

TENOR WANTED.—St. Stephen's, College Road, South Dulwich (next door to Sydenham Hill Station, S.R.). Two Services Sunday, Friday night rehearsal. £16. Apply, "Organist," 80, West Hill, S.E.26.

TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, CHOIR.

TRIAL OF VOICES for BASS and TENOR Choral Studentships (£50 per annum) at 2.15 p.m. on Thursday, April 22. Successful candidates are expected to read for a degree. Apply, with musical and other references, before April 15, to Dean of Chapel.

BASS (A-A) wishes to join or form Super M.-V. Quar., Quin., or Sextet, London. Apply, Barry Butler, Ambassadors' Club, 66, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.2.

BASS WANTED AT ONCE.—West Acton. £18 per annum. Write, A. Henry, 36, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.1.

BASS WANTED.—Capable Soloist and reader. £15. Also Tenor, £12 per annum. For St. Stephen's, East Putney. Apply, "F.R.C.O.," 14, Geraldine Road, S.W.18.

£250 SINGING, Pianoforte and Elocution Free Scholarships, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition for the trained and untrained, April 24th, May 1st and 8th. Results at Lecture-Recital, "Practical Singing," King George's Hall, May 14th. Adjudicators: Madame Alice Esty, the famous prima donna; Mr. Harold Howell, Conductor, Beecham and Carl Rosa Opera Companies; Mr. Douglas Pack, A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M. (Eloc.), and Mr. Clifton Cooke. Prospectus, Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE. Organ Scholarship vacant in October; examination will be held in April. Full particulars on application to The Dean, Pembroke College, Cambridge.

ORGANIST WANTED for Sawbridgeworth Parish Church. Apply, Rev. E. O. Beverley, The Vicarage, Sawbridgeworth, Herts.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED at the New Gravel Pit Church (Unitarian), Chatham Place, Hackney. Able to train Choir. Two Services on Sunday. Weekly choir practices. Three-manual Organ. Salary, £20. Apply by letter, to Mr. W. H. Parker, 84, London Road, Clapton, E.5.

ST. MARK'S, Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells. The POST of ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER will be vacant after Easter. Salary, £100. For further particulars, apply, The Vicar, St. Mark's House, Tunbridge Wells.

TRURO CATHEDRAL, Organist's VACANCY. Candidates should be Graduates in Arts, with training (preferably) at R.A.M. or R.C.M.; a knowledge of Plainsong; not over 30 years of age; and Communicants. Apply, before April 19th, to The Precentor, at the Cathedral.

WANTED.—For small Church in the neighbourhood of Holborn, ORGANIST, to take one Service each Sunday. For terms, apply to "T. S. L.," 56, St. Germans Road, S.E.23.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Newbury Congregational Church. Modern 3-manual instrument. Apply, with full particulars, to F. C. Hopson, Newbury.

PURLEY BAPTIST CHURCH. — Vacancy, Organist and Choirmaster. £40. Apply, Secretary, 19, The Grove, Coulsdon.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER seeks reappointment. Experienced, Congregational or Baptist. North London. "E. J. C., 13, Belmont Avenue, N.13.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, L.Mus.T.C.L., seeks immediate Appointment. Country or London, reside parish, some private means. Recitalist, highest testimonials. "Musico," 27, Abinger Road, Bedford Park, W.4.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, Church of England, requires appointment after Easter, South of England or Scotland preferred. Experienced accompanist, choir-trainer, and conductor. Address, "S. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. Deputises in London and Suburbs. Plainsong, Eucharist, &c. H. Eaton Cooter, 17, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

WILL any gentleman undertake Choir, poor Parish in N. London. No salary, but use of organ if required. Apply, Rev. W. R. Urquhart, 22, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.1.

CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Male-Voice Choir. Must be man of ability and possessing exceptional tact. Duties, two evening practices a week and some concert work. No Sunday duties. In reply state qualifications. Apply, Secretary, Blind Association, 258, Tottenham Court Road. W.1.

ST. ANNE'S CHURCH, Soho. Three PIANOFORTE RECITALS will be given by Mr. ALBERT ORTON, on Wednesday, April 28th, at 8 p.m., Thursday, May 6th, at 3.30, and Wednesday, May 19th, at 8.
Tickets (Free) and Programmes (1s.) from Secretary, 19, Clarendon Gardens, W.9, or the Church.

VOCALISTS, Instrumentalists, desiring rehearsal with accompanist, write, Smith, L.R.A.M., 40, Coniston Road, Muswell Hill, N.10.

MASSAGE and MEDICAL ELECTRICITY by St. Dunstan's Blinded Soldiers, fully certificated; established all parts of London and Provinces. Apply, Superintendent, Massage Department, St. John's Lodge, Regent's Park, N.W.1. (Telephone, Langham 2780.)

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS GIVEN. Postal Tuition, quick system. Little cost. Cawson, Tuner, Bankfield House, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

PARTNER REQUIRED for School of Music. Post of Organist given to applicant, if suitable. Apply, "M. K. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour, or 6*s.* a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. Single practices (pupils only), 9*d.* an hour. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6. Tel.: Putney 4208.

ORGAN.—Mason & Hamlin. Two Manuals and Pedals. 12 Stops. Two full sets of Reeds each manual and pedals. Pipe top. £35 net cash. 7, Laburnum Grove, New Malden, Surrey.

EXCELLENT Two-Manual ORGAN, by Brindley, Sheffield. Powerful tone, suitable for Church or Cinema. For SALE, owing to owner's change of residence. 7 Stops on Swell, 3 on Great, 1 on Pedal, 7 Couplers, 5 combination Pedals. Price, £750. Specification and photo from HANKINSONS, Auctioneers, Bournemouth.

CHRIST CHURCH, New Seaham, Co. Durham. Two-Manual Organ with pedals, containing 14 speaking stops, for sale. Apply, the Vicar.

ORGAN for SALE. Good tune. Great Organ (Grand), 8 Stops. Swell Organ (Recit.), 6 Stops. Pedal, 1 Stop. Approx. dimensions: 8-ft. 6-in. wide, 9-ft. deep, 22-ft. high. Hand blowing lever. Keyboards prepared for third manual (Positif). Apply, Secretary to Trustees of French Prot. Epis. Church of Savoy, 2 & 3, The Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.1.

FOR SALE.—Two 1-Manual Organs, thoroughly overhauled. £30, £45. Also 1-manual Chamber Organ, handsome mahogany case. £85. Two hydraulic blowers, and ¾-h.p. electric blower. Summers & Barnes, Organ Builders, Peaseholme Green, York.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL AMERICAN ORGANS, 1-, 2-, and 3-Manuals, by Karn, Mason & Hamlin, Doherty, &c. From 30 guineas upwards. Stagg's Organ Saloons, 56, Red Lion Street, Holborn.

PRE-WAR PRICE, as new, HOLT ORGAN. Two-Manuals, R.C.O. Console and Pedals. Seen London. "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

APOLLO ORGAN, condition as new; and quantity of Organ and Pianoforte Music. 2, Richmond Terrace, Darwen.

HARMONIUM.—Alexandre, Rosewood, two Manuals, 22 Stops, Couplers, 6 sets Reeds, extra hand Blower, Excellent condition. Bargain, 35 guineas. Tumell, 35, Rose Valley, Brentwood.

FOR SALE.—PIANO PEDALS and STOOL. Excellent condition. Bargain. 55*s.*, carr. fwd. "Organist," 8, Lichfield Terrace, Turf Hill, Rochdale.

FOR SALE.—PIANO PEDALS, Radiating and Concave. £8. "A. W.," 346, Brigstock Rd., Thornton Heath.

PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR SALE. Norman & Beard. Pneumatic action, radiating, concave, including stool; in splendid condition. Bargain. Apply, 85, Albion Road, Stoke Newington.

FOR SALE.—Virgil Clavier, 7½-octaves, rosewood. Splendid condition. £7,- or near offer. 31, Springfield Terrace, Lancaster.

PIANOFORTE TUNING AND REPAIRS. C. Petit, 21, Waterlow Road, N.19.

MUSIC COPYING, Transpositions, Arrangements, Band Parts. Smith, 40, Coniston Road, Muswell Hill, N.10.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.

FOR SALE. Large quantity of Works for Ladies' Choirs, also some for Mixed Choirs. All in good condition. List on application to Secretary, Blackheath Conservatoire of Music, S.E.3.

TO COMPOSERS, SCORERS, AND CONDUCTORS.—H. C. ERRATA SHEETS. How to make "clean" MS. alterations. Write the alteration on the Errata Sheet, stick over the part affected, and so make a clean and easily readable amendment. 12-stave, size, 12-in. by 9-in. upright. No clefs. Price, per sheet, 2*d.* 20-stave, size, 14½-in. by 11-in. upright. No clefs. Price, per sheet, 3*d.* Sample copy at half price, to all professionals enclosing card. W. Paxton & Co., Ltd., 22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1.

A.R.C.O., ESSAY, JULY, 1926. Special Series of Six Model Essays on the book, "William Byrd." Valuable Hints on Writing the Essay-work. Very successful at recent exams. Send P.O. 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FINELY BOUND, Schönberg Full Scores. Piano Scores: Pizzetti, Stravinsky, Tcherepnin, Berners. £8 the lot. Less than a third cost. K. Sorabji, 175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W.1.

ORGAN MUSIC FOR SALE, also Pianoforte Music. Cheap. Stamp for list. 168, Ivydale Road, Peckham.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRICISTS.—Songs, Lyrics, and Musical Compositions wanted for Publication. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (words or music) to The Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

NINE-FOLD KYRIE.—An adequate Setting for dignified Choral Eucharist. Not difficult, but requiring good singing. Sample copy gratis, from George C. Phelps, "The Peabody," Boston-24-Mass., U.S.A.; or, Banks & Son, York.

PIANO TEACHING EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., ETC.
(a) Outline of Course of Instruction (lists of Technical Exercises, books of Studies, Pieces), 5*s.*
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5*s.*
(c) Four Special Test-Papers for A.R.C.M., 5*s.* each.
"J. H.," Mus.Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. 1*s.* 9*d.* Illustrated Method!
Post 2*d.* 700 Copies sold.
Invaluable to Leaders and Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir.
M. T. Cooper, M.D., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus.Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

THE "SIMPLEXA" FINGER TRAINER.

(Registered No. 692810).

FOR ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

A SIMPLE AND VERY EFFECTIVE APPLIANCE FOR GIVING STRENGTH AND FLEXIBILITY TO THE FINGERS.

Extract from "Musical Times."—"We have given a trial to the 'Simplexa Pocket Finger Trainer,' and have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers as a means of stretching the fingers and keeping them generally in good playing condition. Instrumentalists who are travelling, or unable to obtain regular practice, will find the appliance a boon. It is well-named, being simplicity itself, and so portable that it can be carried in the waistcoat pocket."

IMPROVED MODEL, 2*s.* 6*d.*, POST FREE.
1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT (with list of 75 Solos).
ESSAY.

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.

At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the

A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.

Price 5*s.*

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," 44, BLANTYRE RD., LIVERPOOL.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONGS OF FRANCE

BOOK II. (1925).

TWELVE SONGS AND DANCES

OF

FLANDERS, ARTOIS, PICARDY, NORMANDY, CHAMPAGNE, LORRAINE, and ALSACE

COLLECTED AND EDITED BY

AUSTIN DE CROZE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENTS

BY

LEOPOLD ASHTON, GUSTAVE FERRARI, AND OTHERS.

With Illustrations, English translations, and descriptions and diagrams of the dances.

PREFACE BY DR. W. H. D. ROUSE, Perse School, Cambridge.

FOREWORD BY HARVEY GRACE and LASTWORD BY EDWIN EVANS.

CONTENTS.

FLANDERS-ARTOIS -	Ah! le joli Bois, Mesdames; Sur les Clanquarts.
PICARDY - - - -	Les trois Canards; Semons la Salade.
NORMANDY - - -	Les trois Pommes blanches; Compère et Commère.
CHAMPAGNE - - -	Le petit Bonnet rond; Eh! qui marierons-nous?
LORRAINE - - - -	Vous n'êtes par mon Berger; Je vais entrer dans la Danse.
ALSACE - - - - -	La Chanson des Beignets; Le Maître et Jacquot.

Messrs. NOVELLO & Co. beg leave to announce that they have acquired the Sole Agency for all British Territory and the United States of America for the sale of the Work above described, and that copies are now on sale.

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS EACH.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EXPERIENCE AND REPUTATION

BY APPOINTMENT.

Over thirty years' experience in the manufacture of Organ Blowing Machinery are behind the fine reputation held by the "DISCUS" Organ Blower. During this period, installations have been made with complete success to a very large number of Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings both at home and abroad. We can supply blowers to suit any size or type of organ, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. Our wide and varied experience is at your disposal. Write now for a free copy of our illustrated booklet, "Organ Blowing," and let us supply free estimate and suggestions from your particulars.

Some of the many DISCUS installations:

Westminster Abbey
York Minster
Southwark Cathedral
Bath Abbey
Westminster Chapel
City Temple
St. Martin-in-the-Fields
Malvern College
Wellington College
Eton
Harrow
Royal Albert Hall
Queen's Hall
Royal Academy of Music.

Also in Australia, India, South Africa, New Zealand, China.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

REGD. TRADE MARK.

WATKINS & WATSON.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1.
'Phone: Mayfair 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN, BORD, SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
'Phone: Museum 439.

OXFORD FESTIVAL OF MUSIC.

MAY, 1926.

IN COMMEMORATION OF THE TERCENTENARY OF THE FOUNDATION OF THE HEATHER CHAIR OF MUSIC.

Under the General Direction of Sir HUGH ALLEN, Heather Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Patrons: THEIR MAJESTIES THE KING AND QUEEN.

Two Choral and two Orchestral Concerts, Performances of Operas and Ballet and of English Folk-Dancing will be given in the week May 2-11. The Heather Commemoration will take place on May 6.

There will be special music in the Cathedral by the united choirs of New College, Magdalen, and Christ Church, on Sunday Evening, May 2.

TICKETS FOR THE WEEK (admitting to the four Concerts, Heather Commemoration, Folk-Dancing, and one performance of the Operas and Ballet):

Reserved and numbered, £2 10*s.* (including tax).
Reserved but unnumbered, £1 13*s.* 6*d.* (including tax).
NOW ON SALE.

SINGLE TICKETS: Reserved and numbered, 8*s.* 6*d.*
Unreserved, 5*s.* 9*d.*

Booking for Single tickets begins on April 26.

Tickets and full information from CHARLES TAPHOUSE & SON, Magdalen Street, Oxford.
'Phone 674.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES

LIFE OF SIR HUBERT PARRY

BY

CHARLES L. GRAVES

WITH PORTRAITS AND OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

Two Vols., 30*s.* net

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., London, W.C.2.

Just Published.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."
Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

By W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND
Publishers:
London · Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.
Harrogate: R. Ackrill, Ltd.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net.

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... ... Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence Each. Cloth, Seven Shillings and Sixpence Each.

No. 1.

No.		No.
1.	Interlude ... ... Th. Dubois	7.	Grand Chœur No. 2 ... ... Alfred Hollins
2.	Chanson de Matin ... ... Edward Elgar	8.	Andantino in D flat ... ...Edwin H. Lemare
3.	Fantasia on the old melody " Urbs Beata "... ... W. Faulkes	9.	Chanson Triste ... ... P. Tschaïkowsky
4.	There is a green hill far away ... ...Ch. Gounod	10.	Prelude to " Lohengrin," Act I. ... ... R. Wagner
5.	Marche Triomphale ... ... Alexandre Guilmant	11.	Romanza ... ...W. Wolstenholme
6.	Ave Maria ... ... A. Henselt	12.	Allegretto in E flat... ... ...W. Wolstenholme

No. 2.

1.	Chanson de Nuit ... ... Edward Elgar	7.	The Curfew ... ... Edward J. Horsman
2.	Alla Marcia ... ... Myles B. Foster	8.	Pastorale in E ... ... Edwin H. Lemare
3.	Minuetto ... ... Alexandre Guilmant	9.	Ave Maria d'Arcadelt ... ... Franz Liszt
4.	Lied ... ... H. Hofmann	10.	Cantique d'Amour ... ... Theo. Wendt
5.	Barcarolle ... ... H. Hofmann	11.	The Seraph's Strain ... ... W. Wolstenholme
6.	Spring Song ... ... Alfred Hollins	12.	Le Carillon ... ... W. Wolstenholme

No. 3.

1.	Scherzo in A flat ... ... Edward C. Bairstow	7.	Aubade ... ... A. Strelezki
2.	Melody ... ... S. Coleridge-Taylor	8.	Nocturne in C sharp minor ... ... P. Tschaïkowsky
3.	Serenade ... ... H. Hofmann	9.	Procession to the Minster (" Lohengrin ") ... ... R. Wagner
4.	Bridal March ... ... Alfred Hollins	10.	Passacaglia ... ... John E. West
5.	Berceuse ... ... Edwin H. Lemare	11.	Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody " Ad cœnam Agni "... ... ... Healey Willan
6.	Melodie in E... ... ... S. Rachmaninoff	12.	Allegretto in A flat... ... ...W. Wolstenholme

No. 4.

1.	Arietta... ... ... S. Coleridge-Taylor	7.	Allegro alla Marcia ... ... A. L. Peace
2.	Souvenir de Printemps ... ...Joseph Holbrooke	8.	Visione ... ... J. Rheinberger
3.	Andante in D ... ... Alfred Hollins	9.	Chant sans Paroles ... ... P. Tschaïkowsky
4.	Pavane in A ... ... Bernard Johnson	10.	Prelude to Act III. (" Die Meistersinger ") ... ... R. Wagner
5.	Harmonies du Soir ... ... Sigfrid Karg-Elert	11.	Allegro Pomposo ... ... John E. West
6.	An Eton Memorial March ... ...C. H. Lloyd	12.	Canzona ... ... W. Wolstenholme

No. 5.

1.	Jour de Noces ... ... J. Stuart Archer	7.	Alla Marcia ... ... John N. Ireland
2.	Festival Prelude on " Ein' feste Burg " ... ... W. Faulkes	8.	Adagio Cantabile ... ...Edwin H. Lemare
3.	Legend ... ... Harvey Grace	9.	Fanfare ... ... J. Lemmens
4.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ... H. M. Higgs	10.	Intermezzo ... ... B. Luard-Selby
5.	Benediction Nuptiale ... ... Alfred Hollins	11.	Easter Morn... ... ... John E. West
6.	Sursum Corda ... ... John N. Ireland	12.	Finale in B flat ... ...W. Wolstenholme

No. 6.

1.	Nocturne ... ... Thomas F. Dunhill	7.	Allegro in B flat ... ... F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
2.	Postludium... ... ... William Faulkes	8.	Choral Prelude on " Rockingham " ... C. Hubert H. Parry
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ... H. M. Higgs	9.	Præludium Pastorale ... ... J. Stainer
4.	In Springtime ... ... Alfred Hollins	10.	Romance in F minor ... ... Tschaïkowsky
5.	Madrigal ... ... Edwin H. Lemare	11.	Romance in A flat ... ... H. Sandiford Turner
6.	Triumphal March ... ... J. Lemmens	12.	Festal Commemoration ... ... John E. West

No. 7 (Funeral Music).

1.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26)... ... Beethoven	7.	Funeral March (" Lieder ohne Worte ") ... Mendelssohn
2.	Blest are they that mourn (Requiem)... ... ... Brahms	8.	O rest in the Lord (" Elijah ") ... ... Mendelssohn
3.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) ... ... Chopin	9.	Marche Solonnelle... ... ... Schubert
4.	Funeral March ... ... William Faulkes	10.	Marche Funèbre ... ... Tschaïkowsky
5.	Funeral March (" Saul ") ... ... Handel	11.	Finale from " Symphonie Pathétique " ... Tschaïkowsky
6.	I know that my Redeemer liveth (" Messiah ") ... Handel	12.	Lament ... ... John E. West

No. 8 (Christmas Music).

1.	Chorale Prelude, " In dulci jubilo " ... ... J. S Bach	7.	For unto us a Child is born (" Messiah ") ... ... Handel
2.	Pastoral Symphony (" Christmas Oratorio ") ... J. S. Bach	8.	Pastorale ... ... Theodore Kullak
3	Quem Vidistis, Pastores ... ... W. T. Best	9.	Chorus of Shepherds ... ... J. Lemmens
4.	Venite in Bethlehem ... ... W. T. Best	10.	Christmas Pastorale ... ... Gustav Merkel
5.	December—Christmas Morn ... ... Frederic H. Cowen	11.	A Christmas Pastoral ... ... B. Luard-Selby
6.	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols ... ... William Faulkes	12.	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ... ... John E. West (" The First Nowell " and " Good King Wenceslas.")

No. 9 (Wedding Music).

1.	Wedding March ... ... William Faulkes	8.	Wedding March ... ... Mendelssohn
2.	Happy Pair (" Alexander's Feast ") ... ... Handel	9.	Bridal March and Finale (" The Birds " of Aristophanes) C. Hubert H. Parry
3.	Love Song—Liebeslied ... ... Henselt
4.	Benediction Nuptiale ... ... Alfred Hollins	10.	Finale (" Blest Pair of Sirens ") ... C. Hubert H. Parry
5.	Bridal March ... ... Alfred Hollins	11.	Serenade (" Schwanengesang ") ... ... Schubert
6.	Minuet Nuptiale ... ... Edwin H. Lemare	12.	Bridal Chorus (" Lohengrin "... ... ... Wagner
7.	Spring Song (" Lieder ohne Worte ") ... Mendelssohn

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Will be published on April 7th, and performed by The Harold Brooke Choir on Thursday, April 22nd, at Bishopsgate Institute (Two minutes from Liverpool Street Station).

AN ABRIDGED CONCERT EDITION OF

SEMELE

A SECULAR ORATORIO

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

G. F. HANDEL

Price, Three Shillings.

The time of performance of this edition is about two hours, and the orchestral parts have been so cued that it may be performed with accompaniment of: (1) Strings only; (2) Strings and Pianoforte; (3) Strings, or Strings and Pianoforte, with the addition of any Wind up to the complete score of 2 Oboes, 2 Bassoons, 2 Horns, 2 Trumpets, Drums.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH DESCANTS

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. Book 271.

SET I.

THE BAY OF BISCAY (English)
A HUNTING WE WILL GO (English)
JOHN PEEL (English)
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT (Welsh)
SCOTS, WHA HAE (Scottish)
THE OAK AND THE ASH (Scottish)
EARLY ONE MORNING (English)
OH, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE? (English)
THE BRITISH GRENADIERS (English)
THE ASH GROVE (Welsh)
GOOD KING WENCESLAS (Traditional)
THE FIRST NOWELL (Traditional)

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. Book 275.

SET II.

COME LASSES AND LADS (English)
WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS (Scottish)
DAVID OF THE WHITE ROCK (Welsh)
THE YOUNG MAY MOON (Irish)
THE GOLDEN VANITY (English)
THE FLIGHT OF THE EARLS (Irish)

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS. Book 276.

SET III.

MEETING OF THE WATERS (Irish)
THERE 'S NAE LUCK (Scottish)
DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES (English)
LET ERIN REMEMBER (Irish)
THE BAILIFF'S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON (English)
THE BELLS OF ABERDOVEY (Welsh)

Price Eightpence each Set.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

April 26th. The Summer Term begins.

April 28th, at 3 p.m. Inaugural Ceremony, when an address on "Literature—and its reward" will be given by the Rev. Canon Ellershaw, Master of University College, and Professor of English Language and Literature in the University of Durham.

Students of the College, successful at the Higher Examinations held recently, will receive their Diplomas, the Grosvenor Gooch prizes will be distributed, and newly appointed Scholars presented to the Board.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The Orchestral, Choral, the Operatic, and Chamber Music Classes are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

ELKIN & CO.'S

CHORAL SERIES

(General Editor: Dr. John Borland).

LATEST ISSUES

INCLUDE NEW

PART-SONGS and UNISON SONGS

BY

ELGAR, QUILTER, BRENT-SMITH,
PERCY JUDD, CHARLES WATERS
LESLIE WOODGATE, Etc., Etc.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval.

ELKIN & CO., Ltd.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., Ltd

MODERN

AMERICAN ORGAN ALBUMS

(PAUL HASSENSTEIN)

CONTENTS.

VOLUME I.

1. VICTOR - - - BERCEUSE.
2. SQUIRE - - - SLUMBER SONG.
3. TELLIER - - - PLAINTE D'AMOUR.
4. ZUREICH - - - CHANT SANS PAROLES.
5. JENSEN - - - BRIDAL SONG.
6. BARNARD - - - PLAINS OF PEACE.
7. HUBAY - - - REVERIE.
8. BORODINE - - ANGELUS.
9. TSCHAIKOWSKY - CHANSON TRISTE.
10. FORSTER - - ANDANTE RELIGIOSO.
11. CORNELIUS - - THE EXALTED SONG.
12. TSCHAIKOWSKY - FEUILLET D'ALBUM.
13. ZUREICH - - - A FOLK-SONG.
14. LEONCAVALLO - ROMANESCA.
15. REE - - - - CHORALE.

VOLUME II.

1. MARCHETTI - - REVERIE.
2. TSCHAIKOWSKY - CHANT SANS PAROLES.
3. MEYER-HELMUND HYMN.
4. REE - - - - NOCTURNE.
5. ZILCHER - - - THE SHEPHERD.
6. CORNELIUS - - MELODIE.
7. BULL - - - NORWEGIAN FOLK-SONG.
8. PAUL - - - LONGING.
9. RIPPL - - - EVENING HYMN.
10. BYFORD - - - VISION.
11. DUBOIS - - - PENSEE.
12. HAUSER - - - CRADLE SONG.
13. FLEMISH FOLK-SONG.
14. TELLIER - - - MORNING GREETING.
15. JENSEN - - - MURMURING BREEZES.
16. HASSENSTEIN - THE WITCHES' SONG.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

BOSWORTH & CO., Ltd.,
8, Heddon Street, Regent Street, London, W.1.

THE

Descant Hymn-Tune Book

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

Price Two Shillings.

Voice Parts only, 8d.

For full list of Tunes, see page 373.

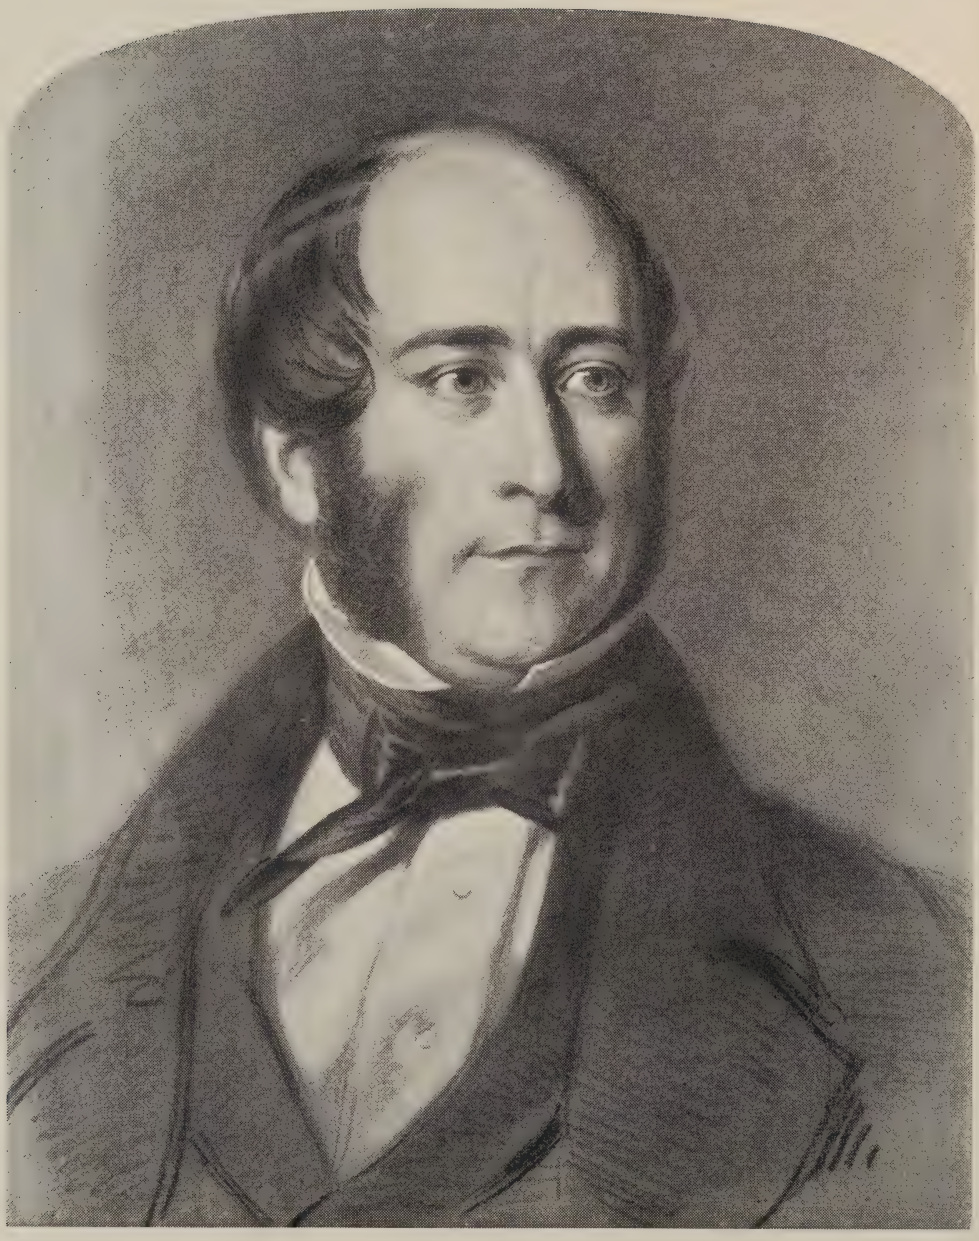
London: Novello and Company, Limited.



The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

APRIL 1 1926

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 368.)

PERFORMING RIGHTS

A report having been circulated to the effect that Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., are among the publishing firms that have recently joined the Performing Right Society, Messrs. Novello desire to state that they have not joined the Society. The conditions that govern the performance of the works published and owned by Messrs. Novello remain unaltered.

SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY

d. APRIL 19, 1876

That early Victorian musicians are under a cloud just now is inevitable, for a two-fold reason. First, it is a commonplace of musical history that the composers of a remote period usually receive more attention than those of the immediately preceding generation. Thus at the present moment there is far more active interest of the exploratory and propagandist kind shown in 17th- and 18th-century music than in that of the 19th century. There is, however, an additional reason for this attitude. The Victorian period, great as it was in some respects, was musically a poor one. Indeed, this comparative poverty was largely due to its greatness in other matters. On its merits, therefore, it could hardly escape a measure of neglect at the present time, and this somewhat contemptuous attitude has inevitably been accentuated by the discovery of the wealth of Tudor and Elizabethan music.

Yet among the early Victorians there were a few musicians who, despite the adverse circumstances of the time, contrived to deliver themselves of an individual message. Their sphere was narrow, as was bound to be the case; practically the only available media were the smaller choral forms. That they were usually Church musicians was also inevitable, seeing that this branch of the art is the only one in which England has a continuous tradition. The line may have been frayed and thin at times, but it was never broken, and it is significant of the real strength of the succession that the most vital of the early Victorian composers were primarily Church musicians. Such men as the Wesleys, Walmisley, Pearsall, George Macfarren, and Ouseley, in an otherwise barren period, maintained—we might even say restored—the fine English standard of choral writing. Indeed, the best of their essays in madrigal form are worth a place in the most august company. Walmisley's 'Slow, slow, fresh fount,' Pearsall's 'O ye roses,' 'Lay a garland,' and others might easily be quoted as examples of early Victorian madrigals that—dare one say it? Yes!—are far better than many Elizabethan specimens that owe their present-day performance less to their merits than to revivalist zeal. However, the whirligig of time will put things right; readers who are still on the bright side of middle age may live long enough to see a Victorian revival.

Among the composers of this admittedly poor but nevertheless under-rated period is one who needs no revival—Samuel Sebastian Wesley, the fiftieth anniversary of whose death falls during the present month. That he holds his own to-day is due largely to the qualities that caused him to be under-rated as a composer by the critics of his own time—for, despite his occasional lapses into mere Spohrishness, his bold use of diatonic dissonance and his strong, sinewy counterpoint (two qualities that he derived from Bach, partly at first-hand, but in the main through his father) give much of his music a character that suggests the present day far more than a half-century ago. Open his best anthems almost at random, and you will not go far without lighting on a passage like the following in the organ introduction to 'O Lord, Thou art my God':

Ex. 1. Andante e marcato.

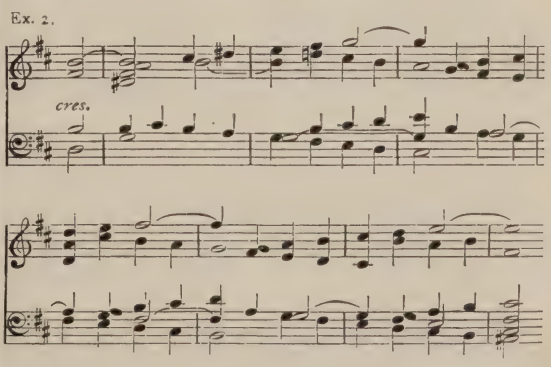
or an example of spacious, diatonic vocal writing such as the following five-part passage in the 'Magnificat' set to the words, 'He hath put down the mighty':

Ex. 2.



It would be easy to fill this journal with examples that are the exact opposite of all that is condemned by the scornful term 'Victorian.' No wonder Wesley's music was generally too strong meat for most of his contemporaries, as is proved by the criticisms of Chorley, Davison, and others.

It may not be far-fetched to suggest that one reason for the hold Samuel Sebastian Wesley still has for us to-day is a purely personal one. He was what is generally known as a 'character'—a type that appeals, it would seem, more to the English race than to any other, if we may judge from the part it plays in our literature and drama. Go to any part of the country where Wesley held office—a long journey, for he served five parish churches and four Cathedrals!—and you will find his odd personality remembered by old folk who know little or nothing of his music. His roving habit was due to various causes—eccentricity, quarrels with Deans and Chapters, and even his fondness for fishing. It is fair to add that much of his trouble with Cathedral authorities was due to his outspoken demands for reform. It is difficult to realise to-day the abysmal depths to which Church music had sunk at that time. In fact, the sterling qualities of such composers as Wesley can be fully appreciated only when we remind ourselves of the wretchedly poor choral establishments for which they wrote. It is a fairly familiar fact, but one worth repeating in this connection, that 'Blessed be the God and Father' was written 'by request, for the service on Easter-day at Hereford Cathedral, on which occasion only trebles and a single bass voice were available.' So runs Wesley's own foot-note to the earlier editions. And tradition says that the solitary bass on duty that Easter-day was the Dean's butler! It is easy to understand Wesley's writing to a friend, in 1874:

> I have moved from Cathedral to Cathedral because I found musical troubles at each. Until Parliament interferes to put Cathedrals on a totally different footing as to music, I affirm that any man of eminence finds obstacles to doing himself and music justice which render his life a prolonged martyrdom.

And only a month or two before his death he was discussing drastic plans for reform, among them being the making of the Cathedral organist 'absolute director of the music, with a salary proportionate to his standing in the profession'—an ideal that is still far from being realised. One cannot but speculate as to what passed in Wesley's mind when, on his appointment to Winchester, he was sworn in, and the Statutes concerning his duties were read to him, Order No. 3 being:

> That he should carry on these duties in a spirit of respectful and courteous attention to the wishes of the Dean and Canons, and with due regard to the authority of the Precentor, and with kind and conciliatory demeanour towards the subordinate members of the Choir.

It was suggested above that fishing prospects may occasionally have influenced Wesley in his choice of post. Ground for this idea is found in the fact that in 1846 he seriously contemplated leaving Leeds Parish Church and accepting the organistship at Tavistock. The invitation, it appears, was made with a shrewd knowledge of the attractiveness of the River Tavy. How nearly Wesley swallowed the bait is proved by a Devonshire paper having announced that he had accepted the post; and, in the course of a lawsuit at York Assizes a few years later, wherein Wesley sued a Leeds musician for breach of contract, the evidence showed that 'in 1846, plaintiff [Wesley] contemplated leaving Leeds.' However, all that happened was that Wesley opened a new organ at Tavistock in the summer of that year, no doubt making the most of the Tavy during his visit. Tradition says, too, that he took the post of organist at Hampton, Middlesex, earlier in his career, because of the fishing advantages of the Thames-side village. Not that residence in London barred him from his favourite sport: the Wesley relics include a ticket admitting 'Mr. S. S. Wesley' to fish in Commercial Docks from June 9 to December 31, 1830. Among the pictures of musicians that we should like to see painted would be one of Samuel Sebastian enjoying himself at Commercial Docks on a December day.

We resist the temptation to draw on the rich store of Wesley anecdotes, many of which are familiar. Instead, we give an account of the beginning of his association with the house of Novello.

Much as he disliked Cathedral dignitaries, Wesley had still some bile to spare for music publishers, and for a long while he issued his compositions on his own account. In due course experience brought him to see that even music publishers have their uses, and in 1868 he approached Messrs. Novello with a view to their taking over the copyrights of his anthems and organ and pianoforte pieces. The older members of the firm still tell the story of Wesley sitting grimly in the Chairman's room, loth to commit himself to a specific demand, lest he should name too small a figure; while the Chairman (Henry Littleton) remained absorbed in his letter-writing, though with an ear cocked ready for a move by the composer. Little was said (one of the few utterances recalled being Wesley's sotto voce, 'I wish I knew how much I could get out of you!'), and the almost silent duel lasted for several days, composer and publisher taking a friendly leave at the close of each session. Ultimately an agreement was reached, and as he put into his pocket-book a cheque for £750, Wesley remarked, 'When I get home they'll think I've been robbing somebody!'—a handsome admission from one whose main concern throughout the negotiations was lest he himself should be robbed.

The best of Wesley's work makes one speculate as to what he would have done had he been born fifty years later. We have seen how miserably inadequate were the choirs of his day. He was little better off, if at all, in regard to the organ. Most of the instruments of the time were clumsy in mechanism and limited in variety, and many were tuned on the old 'unequal' system. Dr. F. E. Gladstone, one of Wesley's pupils, in a letter written to this journal in 1900, said:

> There is one thing which I have never been able to understand, and that is how Wesley could endure the sound of his 'Wilderness' or of the Service in E when the organ was tuned to unequal temperament.

Yet, curiously enough, Wesley, when designing the Willis organ in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in 1854, strove hard to have it tuned on the 'unequal' system, and even wanted the pedals to be of the G compass.

Concerning his playing, and above all his extempore performances, there is only one opinion: it was masterly. From the Musical World of September 8, 1849, we quote an account of one of his improvisations at the Birmingham Festival of that year:

> Dr. Wesley, the most justly celebrated performer of the present day, played a solo on the great organ of the hall. Dr. Wesley began with a very long Fantasia, the plan of which we cannot pretend to define after a single hearing. In the course of the Fantasia almost every effect of which the resources of this enormous instrument are capable was developed by the learned musician with masterly skill. But by far the most interesting part of his performance was the extemporaneous fugue with which it terminated. A more ingenious and extraordinary improvisation we never listened to. Dr. Wesley chose an unusually short theme, as though resolved to show how easily he could set contrapuntal difficulties at defiance. After working this with remarkable clearness, he introduced a second subject, which he soon brought in conjunction with the first, and subsequently a third; ultimately combining the three, in the stretto of the fugue, with the facility of a profound and accomplished master. Dr. Wesley's performance was greeted with uproarious applause, and while he was playing it was interesting to observe the members of the orchestra and chorus crowding round the organ, anxious to obtain a view of his fingers or his feet, with which he manages the ponderous pedals with such wonderful dexterity.

There is no need for a detailed discussion of Wesley's compositions, even if space permitted. Elsewhere in this issue will be found short papers on his Church and organ music.

The object of the present article is to try to express something of the admiration that countless English Church musicians and many others feel for this great Englishman. In that word lies, perhaps, the secret of much of his appeal: he was, above all, English. In his downrightness, his humours (using the word in the old sense), his blend of kindliness and wrongheadedness, and his love of outdoor life, no less than in his music, he bore the stamp of the country that produced him.

Wesley played his last service on Christmas Day, 1875, at Gloucester Cathedral, and his last voluntary was the 'Hallelujah Chorus'—a departure from custom, for he usually played a fugue, either one of Bach's from memory, or an extemporaneous one. A few months later he died, his last words being, 'Let me see the sky.' He lies in the old cemetery at Exeter, in the grave where his infant daughter was buried thirty-six years before. There are various tablets to his memory in Cathedrals and churches where he served, but we may say (with more point than usually marks such a platitude) that few Church musicians depend less on sculpture for their memorial than Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

PERSONALITIES AMONG MUSICAL CRITICS

III.—EDWARD DENT

By Basil Maine

There was more than a superficial significance in the founding of the British Music Society in 1918. The motive was not only to propagate British musicians and their work; it was also to stimulate them so that they should be worthy of the propagation—for, even so late as the beginning of this year, there was still an air of superior toleration in the attitude of Continental critics to our own contemporary composers. Their criticism was always scornful—'Can anything good come out of England?' was the constant summary of their judgment. Weissmann wrote, in 1922:

> It must be remembered that music, even to-day, plays a very small part in the life of the average Englishman, whose demands are satisfied by the music-hall song.

There are both understanding and misunderstanding in this statement, but, on the whole, we must confess that the eminent German critic has touched us. Many of us have confessed, indeed, and there has been of late a corresponding attempt to defeat this unpleasant accusation—an attempt which reached its first vantage-point when Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony was played (for the first time on the Continent) at the International Society's Festival at Prague, in 1925.

In spite of the sidelong regard which British music receives on the Continent, it is an eloquent fact that the International Society for Contemporary Music has for President an Englishman. To Mr. Edward Dent this tribute has been paid; moreover, it has been paid with unanimity, and it is due chiefly to his quickly effective diplomacy and to the implicit trust which the Society places in him, that English contemporary music has at last been seriously appraised by foreign critics. The criticisms of the 'Pastoral' Symphony were adverse in many cases, but we may take heart that no better reason could be advanced than that the work is not otherwise than it is. In other words, Vaughan Williams has forced the foreign critics to reconsider their preconceptions, even if the considerations were made after the criticisms were written.

Edward Dent's position in the musical world is unique. It has been thrust upon him, rather than attained. It is unofficial and intangible. At the same time he commands more power to will and to do than can be conferred by any seal of office. In a sense the immediate future of English music is in his hands, for he inspires confidence among foreign musicians where other English critics and composers inspire ridicule only. There are clear reasons why this confidence not only continues, but increases. It is impossible, for instance, to converse with Dent for more than five minutes without realising the extent and the nature of his learning—the height, breadth, and depth of it. He has all the fine points of German scholarship, with none of its impediment; that is to say, his knowledge is not an enumeration of ill-assorted facts—which so often among German writers passes for a sacred grade of philosophy—but an assimilation of remembered experiences. His judgments are not formulated, but formed and re-formed, and held in suspension. His scholarship secures us good credit even among those who are most unwilling to yield it. His good and natural gifts as a linguist enable him to be conversant and intimate not only with the varying idioms of Continental criticism, but, what is far more important, with the idiom and trend of the reasoning behind it. The great gulf which has hitherto been fixed between English and Continental music is as natural as the geographical gulf between the mainlands. In point of fact, modern materialism is bridging the gulf more effectively every day, but the bridge remains material for all that. It is foolish to expect the average English music-lover to appreciate the dark subterranean forces which have brought about the phenomenon which we know as Schönberg; yet, unless he allows for those forces, he cannot begin to understand the attitude of foreign musicians towards the creative art. In a sense, creation and criticism have become one and the same function with them. Each new work of any note is a criticism of all that has gone before—a criticism and a definite challenge. That has always been true of Schönberg's music, and his is the influence more deeply and insidiously felt than that of any other living European composer. Yet in England he is at a discount. It is clear, then, that we need not so much a guide, philosopher, and friend, as a mediator. We need such a one as Edward Dent to beat down the clouded prejudice of foreign criticism against the best of our own music, and to interpret for us in translucent English the conflict of tonal experiments which for want of a better term we call modern music.

There is another quality in Edward Dent which gives him 'the trick of singularity' and makes him pre-eminently the man for our needs. It is his talent for diplomacy. The most effective diplomat is he in whom culture takes the place of conviction, for it is nearly true to say that you cannot be really convinced about anything and still remain a gentleman. A friend of mine, who is a College Dean, is in the habit of opening a discussion in this wise: 'You know, I am firmly convinced that ——' Then, shaking his head, he adds quietly, and with an air of distress—'And yet I don't know.' Not yet have I ever heard any of those potential convictions declared. The mind is too alert, restless, and responsive; in a word, it is too enlightened. Now Edward Dent has but few of the qualifications necessary for a College Dean, yet his mental attitude is very like that of my friend, save that he would never be so impulsive as to leap up and begin, 'I am firmly convinced ——.' It is more likely that you will hear him courteously remark: 'I am nearly certain ——' and that, of course, is the formula of every true diplomat.

It is this versatile understanding which makes his Presidency of the International Society so commanding a position. At the Prague Festival it was evident that more power was vested in him than he himself realised. From the auditorium, so to speak, the Festival was a smoothly running concern, but behind the scenes were factions and contestings threatening to nullify all the careful plans of organization. Instinctively, everybody looked to Dent as stage-manager; instinctively they took to him their little grievances ('Why was this composer included and that excluded?' 'Why was this work so hurriedly rehearsed and that so carefully prepared,' &c.)—because they knew that he would give patient ear and good advice. Without resorting to dictatorial methods, he has attained a position from which he can actually direct the policy of the most important musical movement of this present time, and if he is not obviously a born leader, yet there is in him an efficient fusion of the qualities which make for concerted progress—a fusion, that is, of wide learning, lively intelligence, quick appreciation, deep understanding, and kindliness. It is just possible that during the next fifty years English music will be restored to its former distinction. If that restoration comes to pass, it will be due to the influence and labour of no single composer or critic above all others; but it is certain that we shall remember Edward Dent as prominent among those who have given us the impulse to recover our long-obscured inheritance.

THE ANTHEMS OF SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY

By Edward C. Bairstow

I suppose the musical training given to a budding organist in my young days differed but slightly from that given to Samuel Sebastian Wesley. The organ was to him as to us 'the king of instruments.' It was in his time, even more than in ours, a clumsy, unrhythmic machine, evolving beautiful colour effects but totally unsympathetic to phrases which called for imaginative nuances, or to passage-work of great rapidity.

Every day we rehearsed with the boys of the choir and played and sang, or heard played and sung, two services and anthems in the Cathedral—most of them rather dull and uninspired, but eminently dignified and respectable. Now and then works of real genius would come along, such as the works of the Elizabethans and Purcell, with here and there an odd thing from Croft, Greene, or Boyce, which thrilled the more musical amongst us to the marrow. The rest of our time was occupied in doing harmony and counterpoint exercises, and in practising the organ. Deadly figured basses and lifeless melodies were given us to harmonize; academic counterpoint on rigid lines dulled our inspiration and cramped our invention. This might have been all very well to begin with, but we never got any further, except that the voice-parts in the exercises were multiplied. We never had any instruction or practice in thematic development. Thus our essays in composition started quite well, but the difficulty was to keep them going, or to prevent them from becoming a string of harmonized melodies with 'points of imitation' as episodes.

Probably Wesley suffered all this, and certainly he too had the advantage of an intimate acquaintance with Bach's organ works—the best side of an organ-loft training. He would also acquire an intimate knowledge of the powers and limitations of the singer.

Like Bach, Wesley had a very real faith. Perhaps he inherited it from his grandfather, and it was kept alive by daily contact with the Bible and the Prayer Book.

Supposing that his training was as I have described it, his weaknesses are easily understood and excusable. We can see why anthems like 'Praise the Lord, my soul!' and the Service in E contained so many short, detached movements, none of them bearing any relationship to the others. It was because this was the fashion in Wesley's time, and most likely because the writing of short melodies, figured basses, and the like was not conducive to eloquence on a big scale. Nor did these exercises help him to conceive of organ accompaniments which would heighten the expression of the words without being fussy or obtrusive, for they were purely vocal and their rhythms were stodgy and monotonous. If Wesley had been as familiar with an orchestra as with an organ, if he had written chamber music and symphonies as well as anthems, how much freer and more suggestive would have been his organ-parts! He had the weaknesses of the violinist-composer and the pianist-composer.

Yet in spite of all this, he has given us music that stands by itself even in these days; and at the time when it was written it was as a mountain in the middle of a plain.

By reason of his impelling inspiration and child-like sincerity Wesley had the instinct of a Beethoven for great moments. Much modern music impresses us with the cleverness of its texture, but leaves us disappointed because of the lack of those wonderful flashes of inspiration found in the works of all great men—moments when, with the simplest technical material, they could suddenly lift us into the very heavens, or make us hold our breath. To quote a few well-known instances: the Choral at the death of Christ in the 'St. Matthew' Passion, the fifteen bars towards the end of the Scherzo in the C minor Symphony of Beethoven, the horn passage in the slow movement of Schubert's Symphony in C, and the entry of the full chorus and brass at the words 'But the Lord's Word endureth for ever' in Brahms's 'Requiem.'

To my mind it was in this way that Wesley transcended his contemporaries and many who have followed him. The few bars between the choral recitation and the fugal chorus, and the sudden dive into C major at the end of the latter in 'The Wilderness'; the dominant seventh for full organ before the final chorus in 'Blessed be the God and Father'; the faltering pianissimo of the trebles just before the tenors return to the first theme in 'Wash me throughly,' and the lonely chords in the accompaniment to that theme; the final cadences of 'Cast me not away' and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace'; the common cadential $\frac{6}{4}$ in F major for organ alone in the quintet from 'O Lord, Thou art my God,' all come under this head. He was reared on vocal music, and having only one motive—to express the feeling and meaning of the words—he acquired an almost uncanny instinct for the turn of a phrase, which not only fitted the words like a glove but got to the heart of them. 'We all do fade as a leaf' and 'Thou Judge of quick and dead,' from the splendid 'Let us lift up our hearts'; 'I laid me down and slept and rose up again, for the Lord sustained me,' from 'Praise thou the Lord'; 'Let the whole world stand in awe of Him,' from 'Ascribe unto the Lord,' are all cases in point. It is these things we really value in music, not the clevernesses that are easily acquired by a mind that readily assimilates. We love Wesley because he was sincere when many musicians were shallow and smug, because he was bold when his fellows were timid and conventional, and because he was English at a time when it was considered the right thing tamely to copy Mendelssohn and other foreigners.

Wesley's music will live in spite of its stodgy organ-parts and lack of continuity, and it will still be alive and kicking when the music of people whose only idea is to show us how modern and clever they are is dead and forgotten. As Sir Hubert Parry said:

> A man may stumble and bungle in his speech, write bad grammar, spell like a toad, and sing like a mule; if in the end his fellow men get the impression that he is speaking the best truth he is capable of, they will welcome him.

THE ORGAN MUSIC OF SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY

By Harvey Grace

Wesley's output for the organ is small in bulk and unequal in quality, and both facts are easily explainable. The development of the organ in this country was curiously slow (for example, we were about three centuries behind the Continent in the adoption of the pedal-board), and both playing and composition inevitably suffered. The staple fare of most organists a century ago consisted of arrangements, the favourite type being snippets from the Masses of Haydn and Mozart; and the public knowledge of, and interest in, real organ music was so slight that neither composers nor publishers found it worth consideration. Hence the few outstanding players depended on transcriptions and the handful of Bach's works available at the time, making up the balance with improvisations —an art that flourished chiefly because no player of eminence could well do without it. Wesley, then, like his fellows, played much but wrote little, and that little suffered from the absence of models. His work as Cathedral organist brought him in daily contact with admirable choral writing, but of real organ music—real, that is, in the sense of being laid out for an instrument with pedals—he had nothing beyond a few works of Bach. Even so, the English knowledge of Bach began largely with the '48.'

In an interesting article in the Musical Times of July, 1894, Dr. George Garrett, a pupil of Samuel Sebastian, gave a good idea of the disadvantages under which organists of the period laboured. He says:

> It must be remembered that the days of 'short octaves,' 'sticker couplers,' and 'pull down' pedals had by no means passed away. Even in comparatively new organs of the time, not less diversity of touch than of compass was to be found. In my own days of pupilage I had to play on three organs respectively of G, F, and C manuals, and each having different pedal compass pro rata! Even where a pedal stop was to be found it was commonly a single one, and probably a great booming double diapason, slow of speech. Both manual and pedal action were woefully heavy and irregular; pedal playing was in its infancy.

Practically all Wesley's organ pieces were written for a G or F organ. With all his progressiveness in some aspects of composition, he had a curious streak of conservatism where the organ was concerned, and in later years, when C organs became general, he refused to adapt the pedal part. The most he could be persuaded to do was to add a note to later editions:

> N.B.—In organs of the German compass, use a 16-ft. stop, and play an octave higher.

As Garrett points out, this was insufficient, because the transposition of the pedal part an octave higher frequently disturbed the relative positions of the left-hand and pedal parts, and must sometimes have made the tenor become the bass. There are other signs that Wesley was a very careless editor. He was perhaps justified in his sparing use of registration and other marks, but there could be no excuse for the inconvenient way in which he laid out the manual parts; and the second edition of his organ arrangements of Psalm-Tunes contained an example with three minims in a bar and a ¢ time-signature, and even the metres of some of the tunes were wrongly described! As readers know, Garrett edited the whole of the organ works, and the difficulties of the task must be taken as an excuse for a good many passages being still left in an inconvenient form.

Undoubtedly the best of all Wesley's organ works is the Introduction and Fugue in C sharp minor. It was one of his earliest works, and appeared under the title:

> A Studio for the Organ, exemplified in a series of Exercises in the Strict and Free Styles, intended as Voluntaries for the use of Organists. Composed and Inscribed to Vincent Novello, Esq., by Samuel Sebastian Wesley. No. 1.

The publisher was W. Dean, of New Bond Street, and it is an odd fact that both Wesley and Dean afterwards went to Winchester, the former as organist at the Cathedral, the latter (a curious change of job) as station-master on the L. & S.W.R. The 'Studio' never went beyond this fine No. 1. Its very considerable difficulties probably caused it to be little played in England, but it had the honour of being included in a volume of organ works published in Germany, edited by one Becker, who added to it the note: 'Nach einer gestochenen Ausgabe, London, 1800' —ten years before Wesley was born! Perhaps Becker was confusing Samuel Sebastian with his father. It is amusing to learn that Becker 'improved' the work by disregarding the composer's treatment of the pedal part: after the opening thirteen bars he kept the pedals busy throughout, with only two short breaks.

The review of the work in the Musical World of May 13, 1836, is worth quoting:

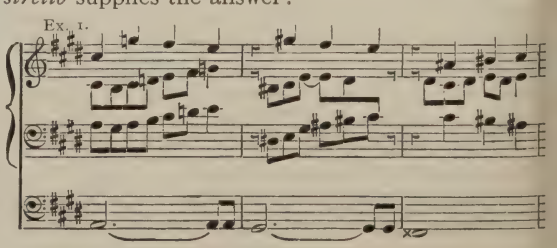
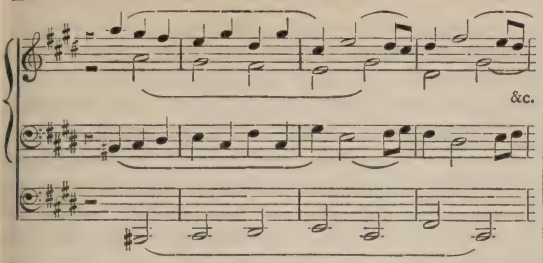
> Here is a tough, weather-beaten fugue, constructed upon the most rigid, orthodox principles. They who desire to tackle it (and the Lord be with them that do!) will meet in the course of their progress the following characteristics of legitimacy and real fugue-blood breeding. The subject good and well treated. The augmentations of it (direct and inverted) excellently introduced and accompanied—the original subject proceeding in the pedal. The subject again subsequently augmented (direct and inverted); the tenor proceeding with the subject, with a counterpoint above; and lastly it is again cleverly introduced, with direct and inverted augmentation.
>
> N.B.—Before attacking it, a course of gymnastics is recommended.

This review draws attention to its difficulty and its science, but says nothing of its real nobility and beauty. Its counterpoint is throughout unconventional and spontaneous, and the harmony, both diatonic and chromatic, is surprisingly modern in flavour. The work does not lend itself well to quotation, but I give the masterly stretto, in which the subject appears in all four parts: the subject and its inversion in the treble and tenor; and the subject augmented in the alto, with the augmentation inverted in the bass. The curiously struggling bars that lead into the stretto are also given, as they seem to ask a question to which the stretto supplies the answer:

Ex. 1.





Organists who wish to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Wesley's death can do so in no better way than by playing this somewhat neglected masterpiece.

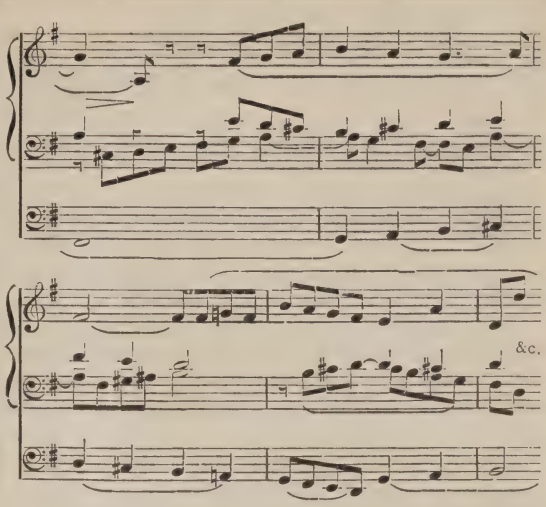
In later years Wesley rewrote the work, lengthening the Introduction from twenty-six bars to forty-four, and recasting much of the Fugue. The original version has a long middle section in C sharp major and G sharp major. In the later edition this middle section is scrapped in favour of an episode mainly in E. Opinions will differ as to the merits of the two versions. Certainly one is sorry to lose the C sharp major passage, which in quality curiously suggests César Franck. The lengthening of the Introduction is no gain, because in both forms it is of little moment: the Fugue is best played alone. It should be noted that both versions of the work are obtainable.

Wesley's other successful pieces are so familiar as to need few words. The 'Holsworthy' Variations are perhaps more popular than they deserve to be. The 'Choral Song' is too square to be first-rate, but its companion, the Fugue in C, is, despite its looseness of structure, a highly effective and exciting work. Garrett tells us that the 'Choral Song' was practically a pianoforte piece, the left hand consisting mainly of the bass in octaves. The present form is as re-written by Garrett.

The charming little Larghetto in F sharp minor was so named by Garrett; in the original edition it had neither title nor metronome mark.

The various Andantes are strangely unequal. That in F, and the two in E flat, suffer from want of unity. The idiom in the F piece is at times suggestive of the pianoforte, and the piece is too spun out. The longer of the two E flat Andantes is badly balanced, the second subject being overworked. Of the two pieces in G, the Andante Cantabile is by far the better. It has its awkward moments, and there is a drop in style at times—e.g., in the occasional groups of repeated chords; but the blemishes are more than atoned for by its tunefulness and by the grave beauty of such passages as this:

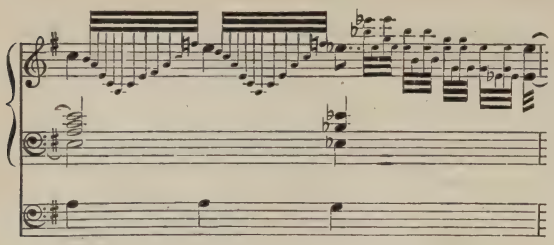
Ex. 2.



A little-known early work is the 'Selection of Psalm-Tunes adapted expressly to the English Organ with Pedals, No. 1.' (The collection ended with this first set.) These are well-known tunes arranged with varied harmonies, with interludes between the verses in the old style. The harmonizations and laying-out generally are fine, and the pieces would make valuable studies in legato-playing, much of the writing being in five, and even six parts. The Interludes vary in quality, but the best give us glimpses of what Wesley might have done had he taken up the chorale prelude form.

A real curiosity is the set of variations on the National Anthem. They are, as a whole, very pianistic and superficial, despite a few bold and characteristic touches of harmony. The work was written for the re-opening of the organ in St. Mary Redcliffe Church. Wesley père (announced as 'The celebrated extempore Fuguist and Editor of the works of the Immortal Sebastian Bach') was the principal performer, but young Sebastian, then nineteen years old, joined him in a duet, and also played the National Anthem Variations. Here is a sample of the showiest variation—the treatment of the opening bars of the tune's second half:

Ex. 3.



The closing fughetta has spirit, and some daring strokes, e.g., a sudden plunge from A minor to C sharp major; but the work as a whole shows the composer writing in the style of far inferior men. The most interesting point about it is the evidence it provides as to Wesley's technical attainments. He must have had a prodigious hand in order to play (for example) Variation 5, with its frequent ninths, in semiquavers at a brisk pace. On this point, Garrett considers the Andante in F to be > . . . a complete illustration of Wesley's extraordinary technical power as a player. It demands clear, crisp part playing; the power of changing the position of the hand instantaneously and with certainty; and a touch of the closest and smoothest character. These were among Wesley's most notable qualities as a performer.

With his gifts as a player and his real originality as a composer what might Wesley not have done had his lot been cast in times when the organ and its repertory were in a flourishing state? That he never quite reproduced the form shown in his early C sharp minor Fugue is no doubt due to his unsettled life, his facility as an extempore player (often an obstacle to finished composition), and the lack of encouragement given to such serious and difficult efforts. Nevertheless, the handful of his best work is invaluable, and now that public taste in organ music is so vastly improved, its place in the repertory is probably safer than ever.

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

An article in the Daily Telegraph on February 27, by Robert Lorenz, expressed what a good many of us feel in regard to certain classics. The article was entitled 'Is it our fault?' and the question had to do with the writer's discovery that some of his former idols were beginning to wear badly. Hearing Schumann's 'Manfred' Overture, he was 'awestruck with what seemed to be its complete insignificance.' Schumann, whose songs and pianoforte music he could enjoy, 'appeared in this Overture to have sunk to the very lowest rung of Kapellmeistership.' Mr. Lorenz dodged the item that followed in order to think things out, 'and in preparation for the next ordeal—Beethoven's B flat Pianoforte Concerto.' He had not heard the work for so long that it was virtually new:

> Would that I had remained in oblivion [he says], for the opening phrase, plus a few dozen bars, drove me from the hall in despair.

He went on thinking things out, and eventually arrived at several conclusions, only one of which need concern us here. He decided that the great classical symphonists were deficient in subtlety, and his experiences of such modern composers as Elgar, Franck, Wagner, and Debussy, made him 'impatient of the brusque, straightforward methods' of the older writers. He was inclined to except Bach, in most of whose music he found a 'Shakespearean range in which subtlety was never far absent.'

Mr. Lorenz goes on to say that dozens of his friends are going through this phase, and as they are all men in the mid-thirties he seems to think the complaint has something to do with that age. Presumably the idea is that they are old enough to be immune from ultra-modernism, and too young to be die-hard classicists. Let me assure him that there is no age-limit in these matters. I know plenty of musicians (not amateurs like Mr. Lorenz and his friends, but professionals) who like myself are well past the mid-thirties, and who feel pretty much the same in regard to a large proportion of classical music. 'Is it our fault?' we ask with Mr. Lorenz. The answer is that failure to respond to a Beethoven work is not necessarily the fault of the hearer; sometimes it may merely be his misfortune. In the case of certain works it is undoubtedly Beethoven's fault, for no great composer lets us down so completely as he does in his worst works. Very often it is nobody's fault, but simply the inevitable result of the passage of years. One might fill a volume with harmonies, rhythms, modulations, &c., that were thrilling when they were first used, but which are now threadbare. The more the works in which they were first used depended on them for success, so much the less do they appeal to us now, because the element of surprise, or at least freshness, was vital. Beethoven suffers badly in this way. It is amusing to remember, for example, that the tonic seventh at the opening of his first Symphony caused something like a commotion. 'It was audacious,' says Grove, 'and amply sufficient to justify the unfavourable reception which it met with from established critics of the day.' 'Audacious!' Nobody raises an eyebrow at it now—indeed, for most of us the whole Symphony is on the shelf. Think, too, of that discord at the beginning of the Presto in the ninth Symphony. Grove calls it 'a horrible clamour,' yet so accustomed are we now to violent dissonances and shattering fortissimos that we scarcely notice it. On more than one occasion I have actually missed it, probably because I had not quite recovered from the slumber induced by the slow movement.

This—the slow movement—is another department of music in which the classical composers often fail to hold us. Those leisurely discourses, with repeats and figurations galore, no doubt meant much to them and their contemporaries. To-day we find them lacking in emotional significance, and often devoid even of musical interest. Both matter and manner have faded. Their day may come round again—the history of music is made up of such roundabouts of fashion—but I am not ashamed to say that to me many of the slow movements of Beethoven are among the most boring things in music. (I hasten to add that I except those in the String Quartets; one has to make this exception always when daring to comment unfavourably on Beethoven.)

But is Mr. Lorenz on the right track when he says that an absence of subtlety in these classical works is the cause of the lack of interest so many of us feel? I doubt it. Like him, I have often tried to account for the diminished appeal of certain composers, especially Beethoven and Mozart. (Now the murder's out! I can see the Mozart devotees beginning to boil!) Isn't it a twofold kind of poverty—triteness of melody and uninteresting harmony? I am well aware of the great reputation of both composers as tune writers, but for every inspired melody they gave us there are half-a-dozen that are mere platitudinous strings of notes. And how sick one gets of the constant half-closes and full closes, and the long stretches of harmony almost entirely tonic and dominant, with an occasional diminished seventh. (As in the case of Beethoven, Mozart's chamber music is excepted as a whole.) Mr. Lorenz hits on the reason for the lack of appeal when, saying that subtlety was rarely absent from Bach, he adds, 'Bach belonged to an earlier era in music, and it was only when polyphony was discarded in favour of homophony that the trouble began.' True; but the 'trouble' was not a loss of subtlety, I think, but rather a sudden reduction in harmonic interest. A good contrapuntal texture, even when based on tonic and dominant harmony, sets up all sorts of harmonic reactions—all tiny, but in their total effect producing constant variety and interest. In fact, there is hardly a progression, even of the type that we call 'modern,' that has not been produced momentarily in this adventitious way. Bach's works are full of such anticipations, just touched in passing. When polyphony went out of fashion, and composers began to concern themselves almost entirely with melody, form, and orchestration, a lot was lost, and I believe that when Mr. Lorenz fled from Beethoven's B flat Concerto (had I been present, I should have fled with him) he was driven out not by the work's lack of subtlety but by its poor thematic and harmonic material. Similarly, when he finds Bach more subtle than Beethoven, he probably gets that impression from Bach's greater continuity of movement, less obvious cast of melody, and, above all, the harmonic interest that results largely from the polyphonic process—though of course even in his homophonic moments Bach was rarely other than enterprising in harmony.

I had written thus far when I came across an article in the Christian Science Monitor (a journal which gives an honourable place to the discussion of musical matters) by Alfredo Casella, on 'The Influence of Bach.' In it he shows clearly the reasons for the present tendency among young composers to pass by the 19th century in favour of the 17th and 18th:

> If one reads all this new music, whether it be Italian, German, French, or even Russian, one meets everywhere the influence of Bach. Harmony has finished its cycle and seems at present to interest composers only slightly. On the other hand, musical construction and counterpoint constitute once again their chief concern. As in the time of Bach, harmony of form and material has once more become the essential of music. And romantic subjectivity has completely made way for a new dynamic and objective attitude which is certainly closer to Bach than to the last century.

And he goes on to draw a good analogy:

> The same thing occurs with the centuries as with certain mineral strata, which seem one day to be exhausted, and are consequently abandoned, but are later re-exploited because new methods become available. It is beyond doubt that the Bach stratum is still capable of nourishing musical art for many a long century, and that to-day our renewed technique again allows of our drawing from that immense legacy riches that the romanticists could not even suspect.

Nor is this attitude peculiar to young composers. We see in the general musical public something of this same hint of revolt against what Casella calls the 'uniquely egotistical art' of the last century, 'in which the personal expression of the composer takes precedence of the laws of musical construction.' Even Beethoven gave something like a lead in this direction in his last works, wherein he tends more and more towards the suite and fugue forms, and becomes less and less personal in his expression. I quote the end of Casella's article:

> It is often said that the young composers are copying Bach, and appearances seem to justify this opinion. For my part, I prefer to describe this reconciliation of the new masters of our period to Bach as a sort of pilgrimage, on the eve of a decisive action, to the home of an ancestor whose genius and experience are still—a hundred and seventy-five years after his passing—the safest guide for our development. Let the young generations draw freely from the work of the Cantor the necessary elements to build the musical art of this century—the art that we are already able to glimpse, but which is hardly in formation, and of which only our grandchildren will possess the finished product.

It is possible, I think, that Mr. Lorenz and his friends feel as they do partly because of the excessive adulation paid to the classics. 'Once a masterpiece, always a masterpiece' is an artistic principle that sounds well enough. But it is conceivable that the masterpiece of one generation may have lost most of its point for the next. 'If she be not fair to me, what care I how fair she be,' and, similarly, if a work has little to say to us to-day, or if the life has gone out of it because all its effects have since become stale, it doesn't matter a button to us that it stirred Vienna to its very soul a century and a half ago. It was a masterpiece, perhaps. Is it now? Are there no good old 'has beens' in symphonies as in human beings? Surely there are, and it is well to recognise the fact, and give 'has beens' of all kinds a rest. As for that excessive adulation spoken of above, most of it seems to be lavished on Mozart. I may be wrong, but I have long felt that the time will come when Haydn will be judged the better man—not so heaven-inspired a genius, perhaps, but a composer who left a greater proportion of vital work, and who was, on the whole, more original. But let that pass: those of us who live the longest will see the most. We shall not, however, see the fulfilment of the following prophecy (the italics are not mine):

> Some day, when the New Zealander of the future will stand among the ruins of London, excavated from the dust of ages, and will ruminate on what sort of music, if any, obtained in the remote days of his progenitors, the name of one musician, one only, will be found to have been indelibly preserved on the scroll of fame, as the sole survivor of that race whom we now call our mighty Masters of Music. That name will be Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. . . . Time, the inexorable leveller, will have obliterated all trace of the sublimity of Palestrina, the majesty of Handel, the science of Bach, the joyfulness of Haydn, the culture of Mendelssohn, the eloquence of Chopin, the glamour of Wagner—but an echo of all these combined will have survived in the strains of Mozart.

This is from Mr. Francesco Berger's Preface to a recent biography of Mozart, and if space permitted I could quote from other enthusiasts' claims almost as wild. Mr. Berger goes on to speak of Mozart's > . . . absolute loveliness of material, perfect adjustment of this material to some preconceived purpose, and elimination of all extraneous matter. Throughout all his numerous works of every kind, nothing essential is absent, nothing unnecessary is included. Every jewel in his diadem is a gem fit for a diadem. . . . Nature must have been prodigally disposed when she sent on his earthly pilgrimage one singer to enchant the entire human race for all time.

And then one thinks of the many feeble pages in the Pianoforte Sonatas and Concertos, the long stretches of superficialities in the alleged sacred music, &c. And if we could hear his thirty-three Symphonies, how many should we find worthy to be kept in the repertory with the 'Jupiter' and the G minor? Such fulsome beslavering of a genius as that quoted above does nothing but harm. The genius can very well do without it, and those of us who have a pronounced dent where there ought to be a bump of reverence, are merely stirred up to nose around for weak spots.

Of course weak spots are easily found in every composer, from Bach downwards, but I think it will prove to be true that the more facile the composer the more plentiful such spots. Thus Bach's science usually keeps him from descending below a certain level. Even when inspiration flags there is almost invariably the nterest that attaches to consummate skill. He never beats the air with padding that consists (as it so often does in the composers of a later generation) of mere tiresome repetition of tonic or dominant chords. Arrived at the end of a movement, he is content to tie the strands of his counterpoint in a knot with the tonic chord, and say no more. It was left for Beethoven to madden us with frantic bangings of the tonic chord at the end of a work. (The C minor Symphony, for example, ends with twenty-nine bars of it!) You may tell me that those repercussions expressed a soul-state of the composer, but soul-states that lead to such noisy futilities don't matter to us. All we are concerned with is that the composer has said his say, but (like the preacher in the story) doesn't know it.

Mr. Lorenz and his young friends may be encouraged to go on thinking things out. They will of course be accused of presumption. How dare they or anybody else find Beethoven tedious? The answer is that every generation has its own relation to the classics, and it can ascertain that relation only by exercising its critical faculties. That is obvious, but when you come to think it over you will see that in no art has there been so much blind taking things on trust, and swallowing classics whole, as in music. Life is not long enough to enjoy all the beautiful things that have been written (a large proportion of them by composers below the first rank), and we shall continue to be defrauded of them until concert programmes, teaching lists, and examination syllabuses are purged of works written by the bigwigs on their off-days.

Strictly speaking, I have strayed somewhat from the point raised by the Daily Telegraph article. There is, however, a connection between the waning appeal of certain classics and the lack of discrimination shown in the choice of music for concerts, teaching, &c. As an example (one of dozens that could be given), I mention a pianoforte recitalist who recently played Beethoven's Fantasia, Op. 77—that rambling work beginning in G minor and ending in B major, with scarce a half-dozen consecutively interesting bars in the whole of it. I doubt if a single member of the audience would have raised a hand in its favour, and I know one or two who received it with silent derision. Now had the Fantasia been signed by any one of the numerous second- or third-raters who lived in Beethoven's time it would have been left in richly deserved obscurity. Similarly, I have known feeble little pianoforte pieces by Mozart and Beethoven included in competition festival syllabuses, and played from fifty to a hundred times before an audience that was supposed to be developing its taste by means of such festivals. Can we wonder if they decided that if such music represented two of the greatest classical composers they would give classical music a miss as often as possible?

If a combination of wireless and psychical research ever puts us in communication with the Elysian Fields, one of the first messages to reach us might well be a round robin from a group of the classical composers. It will say, 'Save us from our over-enthusiastic friends—the die-hard, last-ditch, whole-hogger hero-worshippers! We wrote our share of "duds," and you mortals can show your reverence for us in no better way than by scrapping our worst works, and improving your performances of our best.'

Yet, after all, the deciding factor (so far as there is anything decisive at all in the whole matter) appears to be personal liking. The correspondence roused by Mr. Lorenz's article pointed that way, and much of it was so significant that I wish space allowed of its being quoted and discussed here.

However, here is an instance that occurred a few weeks ago. It is a striking example of the way in which professional musicians and critics differ as to the value of a classic. Two of our leading London newspapers, discussing the Philharmonic Choir concert, spoke of Mozart's 'Requiem' in terms that made me rub my eyes. In one the work was described as 'a monumental creation which leaves nothing more to be said':

> The last word has been uttered: for the time, at least, if not for all time. . . . The listener may be pardoned a certain pride in belonging to the same species as the being who could conceive and execute such perfection.

It has never made me feel a bit that way, and I was uncomfortable (asking Lorenzishly, 'Is it my fault?') until I read the following, signed 'W. M.,' in the Morning Post:

> Parts of Mozart's 'Requiem' are excellent. The romantic legend attached to its composition has magnified the parts into the whole, and but for this it is to be doubted whether a work with so much lame music in it would have survived a hundred and thirty-five years.

Exactly; and just as the 'romantic legend' is a prop to the 'Requiem,' so the precocious genius and early death of Mozart have thrown a glamour over much of his music that was little, if any, better than the best of such lesser men as Dittersdorf.

As for the 'Requiem,' I can never hear it without chafing at its almost complete failure to rise to the height of its tremendous text. Think of that complacent trombone solo in the 'Tuba mirum,' for example, in association with such lines as these:

> Tuba mirum spargens sonum,
> Per sepulchra regionum,
> Coget omnes ante thronum.
>
> Mors stupebit, et natura,
> Cum resurget creatura,
> Judicanti responsura.

We don't want Mozart to give us a representation of the Trump of Doom: realism of that kind may be left to a Berlioz. But a composer who, in a setting of this passage, makes a brass solo a prominent feature is taking a risk. Mozart took it, and (I venture to say) came down heavily.

Forget Mozart's early death; dismiss from the mind that mysterious stranger who commissioned the 'Requiem'; look at the work, not as a mere piece of choral music, but as a setting of the words of the Mass for the Dead, and judge it accordingly. As 'W. M.' says, it contains some excellent music, and some that is lame (not only in the Süssmayer portion, that is). Being good only in parts, it is not good enough. For a Requiem we want a standard higher than that of the curate's egg.

DR. BURNEY

(b. April 12, 1726; d. 1814)

By Anthony Clyne

The author of the famous 'History of Music' came of parents accomplished, if somewhat unstable. James Macburney, the son of a Shropshire squire, having been birched into the classics at Westminster School by Busby, took to art and studied under that 'eminent face painter,' Michael Dahl. At nineteen he ran away with a pretty actress still younger. The wrathful squire disinherited him, married his own cook, and begat another son. James, with considerable musical and artistic gifts, was always attractive, and when he was left a widower with a numerous family, he wooed and won a Shropshire beauty with some money, who duly presented him with twins on April 12, 1726, Susannah, who died young, and Charles.

Thus came into the world, exactly two hundred years ago, in Raven Street, Shrewsbury, the writer upon music and the father of the famous Fanny who became Madame d'Arblay. Soon afterwards, his father settled at Chester as a portrait painter, dropping the first three letters of his name. Charles was well cared for by a foster-mother in a small village near Shrewsbury, until he was old enough to attend Chester Grammar School. Then his musical studies began, under the Cathedral organist, for whom the precocious child was in need able to act as deputy. Returning to Shrewsbury when he left school, he became the pupil of his half-brother, the organist of St. Margaret's.

But he was at Chester on a visit to his father in August, 1744, when Dr. Arne passed through on his return from his Irish sojourn. On the advice of that musician, to whom he exhibited his powers, he was sent to London as his pupil, remaining with him three years, but learning little except to drudge at copying music, and playing in the Drury Lane orchestra under Arne.

Austin Dobson, in his biography of Madame d'Arblay, has sketched the eighteen-year-old Charles Burney, 'pleasant-mannered, intelligent, very musical, very versatile, and, as he continued to be through life, an indefatigable worker.'

> His abilities and personal charm brought him many friends. He was frequently at the house in Scotland Yard of Arne's sister, Mrs. Cibber, the foremost tragic actress of her day; and here he made acquaintance with many notabilities. Handel was often among the visitors, playing intricate fugues and overtures with his pudgy fingers upon the harpsichord; and Garrick with the wonderful eyes; and Garrick's surly old rival, James Quin; and Mason; and Thomson, the poet of 'The Seasons.'

In 1746 he met Fulke Greville, descendant of the Elizabethan of that name, Sidney's friend. Music, among all the other arts, shared the patronage of Greville. After the fashion of his day, it is reported, he had doubted whether any musician could possibly be a gentleman, but changing his mind after some intercourse with Burney, he paid three hundred pounds to cancel Burney's engagement to Arne and attached him to his own establishment as musical companion. Burney was considerably advantaged by the arrangement, and brought into contact with hosts of people worth meeting. Burney was to have accompanied Greville and his wife to Italy, but at that juncture fell in love with the charming and cultured Esther Sleepe.

He married in 1748, and obtained the post of organist at St. Dionis Back-church, at the salary of thirty pounds a year, and the appointment to play the harpsichord at the 'New concerts' established at the King's Arms, Cornhill, to succeed those formerly held at the Swan, which venue had been burnt down the preceding year. Besides, he had many pupils, and also composed for Drury Lane. He supplied the music of 'Queen Mab' for example, a pantomime which ran sixty nights the first season and was revived almost every winter for nearly thirty years after.

Over-work and insufficient exercise seriously affected his health, and he was advised to live in the country. So Burney settled at Lynn, as organist, at a hundred pounds a year. The instrument, we are told, was execrable, his audience unresponsive. But they were friendly, and his health improved. He gave lessons in many of the great Norfolk mansions. Above all, he conceived a noble purpose to which to dedicate his energies—a history of music. He was happy in industrious reading and collecting materials, planning and corresponding with the Greville circle about his project. He got through a great deal of reading as he padded along the sandy roads on his sure-footed mare, Peggy. At Lynn was born the famous Frances, or Fanny, the novelist. Other children were distinguished in very different walks of life—James, a sailor, sailed twice round the world with Captain Cook, was present at the navigator's death, and eventually was an admiral; Charles became an eminent classical scholar, chaplain to George III.

As the years passed Burney, with health restored, began to hanker after London and its opportunities. His friends added their persuasions. In 1760 he and his family returned, and installed themselves in Poland Street. Soon he became the music master most in request with the fashionable world, his success helped by the remarkable performances of his eldest daughter, a child of eight, on the harpsichord. 'He had not an hour of the day unoccupied,' says Austin Dobson, 'beginning his rounds as early as seven in the morning, and finishing them, sometimes, only at eleven at night. Often he dined in a hackney coach on the contents of a sandwich box and a flask of sherry and water.' Still he found time to compose his 'Sonatas for the Harpsichord,' and that setting for the burlesque, 'adapted to the Antient British Musick; viz.: the Salt Box, the Jew's Harp, the Marrow-Bones and Cleavers, the Hum-Strum or Hurdy-Gurdy,' and so on, performed at Ranelagh in masks with great effect and to the especial amusement of Dr. Johnson.

In 1761 his wife died of consumption, leaving six children, the eldest only twelve. Grief drove Burney to work harder than ever, and the years went by in indefatigable teaching and studying, preparation conscious or unconscious for the valuable books he was to produce. He amused himself with translating Rousseau's 'Le Devin du Village' and adapting the music. When, however, his version was brought out as 'The Cunning Man,' at Drury Lane, in 1766, when Rousseau came to England, it was accorded a chilly reception. In 1767 he married a widow with three children of her own, an intimate friend of his first wife. She is described as handsome, intelligent, well-read, and something of a blue-stocking to boot, and it was a union of genuine affection. In 1769 Burney was honoured with the degree of doctor in music from Oxford, his 'exercise' being a long anthem performed very successfully in the Music School, and afterwards frequently revived at Oxford choral meetings.

Happy in his domestic circumstances, honoured in his art, Burney began again to prepare for his history of music, arranging and transcribing his materials with Fanny as his amanuensis. It was soon apparent that travel would be necessary to gather further materials. So in June, 1770, with his portfolio packed with letters of introduction, he set out for Paris. There Rousseau and Diderot, among others, helped him in his researches. He toured the cities of Italy. Burney had a genius for getting to know people and things worth knowing, and he returned in January, 1771, with splendid materials. A few months later appeared 'The Present State of Music in France and Italy; or the Journal of a Tour through those Countries, undertaken to collect Materials for a General History of Music.' It was a great success. Johnson said he had 'that clever dog Burney' in his eye when, two years later, he wrote his own 'Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland.'

The gratified Burney set about learning German, and in 1772 toured in Germany and the Netherlands. The volumes which dealt with this second tour were even more successful. Burney was admitted Fellow of the Royal Society, and acknowledged one of the most eminent musical authorities. I suppose the two 'Tours' are now very little read. They are extremely interesting if one comes to them with a fair knowledge of 18th-century music in the various countries.

How well he describes, for example, conditions in Italy—the music in the churches and the theatres, the Conservatoires and their methods! In the other lands he toured Burney portrays musical conditions vividly and accurately. There are many striking portraits of musicians. Take his visit to Philipp Emmanuel Bach, who invited Burney to dine with him. Burney was taken into a music-room,

> . . . large and elegantly adorned with pictures, drawings, and engraved portraits of more than a hundred and fifty famous musicians, of whom several were English, and some portraits in oil of his father and grandfather. Philipp Emmanuel sat down to his Silbermann harpsichord. He played three or four very difficult pieces with all the delicacy, accuracy, and passion for which he was so justly esteemed among his compatriots. In the pathetic and tender movements he seemed to draw from his instrument cries of grief and lamentation, such as he alone could produce. The dinner was good, elegant, and cheerful. There were present three or four friends, well-bred people, and his family. After dinner Philipp Emmanuel played again, almost uninterruptedly, until eleven o'clock at night. He became animated to the point of appearing to be inspired. His eyes were fixed, the lower lip drooping, and his whole body was soaked in perspiration. He said that if he often had occasion to force himself to work thus he would grow young again. He is fifty-nine years of age. He is rather short of stature; his hair and eyes are black and his complexion brown; he is full of fire, and is of a very gay and vivacious temper.

This long quotation is given in the hope of tempting readers to disinter the 'Tours' from the top shelves of libraries. In 1776 appeared the first volume, delayed by his rheumatism and hosts of pupils, of his 'General History of Music,' and the second in 1779. The conclusion was interrupted by the time he devoted in the meantime to other works, 'Plan of a Public Music School,' 'Life and Commemoration of Handel.' The 'History' was not completed until 1789. It was, like the 'Tours,' quickly translated into French and other languages. A great work, the fruit of persevering industry, subject of course to the prejudices of the time, but less so than one would expect, it will long be famous. There are errors and glaring omissions, but we must remember the scope of the work and its largely pioneer nature. Horace Walpole incited Sir John Hawkins to produce a rival 'History of Music,' and by contemporaries his performance was credited with greater accuracy, though Burney carried the palm for style and arrangement. To-day Sir John's work is completely forgotten. The last two volumes of Burney's 'History' show a considerable decline from the standard of the others. Neither Handel nor Bach, for example, is treated with anything like adequate understanding.

The later years of Burney's life passed in happy work, graced by much honour and many fine friendships—with Burke, Johnson, Goldsmith, Reynolds, Sheridan, Barry the painter, Bruce the explorer, Nollekens the sculptor, and many more. Garrick was an especially intimate friend. Burney contributed most of the articles on musical matters to Rees's 'Cyclopædia' (receiving, it is said, £1,000), and produced 'The Memoirs and Letters of Metastasio.' He died at the age of eighty-eight, nursed tenderly in his last illness by Fanny. He was buried at Chelsea, and a tablet was erected in Westminster Abbey. 'I love Burney,' said Dr. Johnson, 'my heart goes out to meet him, a man for all the world to love.'

Music in the Foreign Press

RAVEL'S SENSITIVENESS

In the February Revue Pleyel, Roland Manuel writes :

> It is known that there exists in Ravel a certain reserve which always prompted him to impart more soul to clocks than to the clockmaker's wife ; more sensitiveness to trees than to human beings. This tendency asserts itself even more clearly in 'L'Enfant et les Sortilèges' than in 'L'Heure Espagnole.' His new score is the first to fulfil without a weakness the desires tremulously cherished by the new-born school of simplicity. The music is inhuman, yet sensitive ; it becomes tender in proportion as it recedes farther from the homes of men ; laconic and unadorned in proportion as it nears its tender conclusion.

SCHUMANN'S HEREDITY

In the Zeitschrift für Induktive Abstammungs- und Vererbungslehre (quoted in the February Zeitschrift für Musik), Profs. V. Haecker and T. Ziehers investigate the origin of Schumann's musical genius :

> Schumann was a heterozyot—i.e., a being whose idiosyncrasies were derived from parents who differed as to the component parts of their individuality. Schumann possibly owed his musical gifts, so far as his ear and sense of motion (or play) were concerned, to his mother, his poetic instinct and his instinct for composition to his father and to his grandmother on the paternal side. But it cannot be said that his genius was the sum total of the talents and disposition inherited from both his parents ; on the contrary, only the tendencies inherited from his mother played a decisive part. None of Schumann's brothers or sisters were musical. His children, on the contrary, were.

SCHUMANN'S SPHINX RIDDLE SOLVED

In the February Musikbote, Giovanni Minotti tackles the problem set by Schumann's A S C H in the 'Carnaval.' The solution he offers is interesting and quite acceptable, but not one that lends itself to being summarised.

FRENCH v. ENGLISH ORGANS

In L'Orgue et les Organistes (January 15) an anonymous writer declares that to a French organist the small importance of the Choir in an English organ (and in many American organs) as compared with the corresponding 'Positif' in French organs is astonishing, and indeed almost unaccountable.

KALLIWODA

The January-February issue of Hudebni Vychova contains an article by Jan Busek, on this composer, on the occasion of the hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of his birth.

OCKEGHEM'S TRUE NAME

In the February Revue de Musicologie, Maurice Cauchie establishes that the only true forms of Ockeghem's name are 'Johannes Ockeghem' or 'Oekeghem,' and not, as assumed by Michel Brenet, 'de Ockeghem.'

OLD ALSATIAN ORGANISTS

In the same issue, André Pirro devotes a short essay to the organists of the Haguenau Churches between 1491 and 1525.

M.-D. Calvocoressi.

PURCELL'S 'DIDO' IN GERMANY

Münster, Westphalia, March 15

Under the ægis of Mr. Edward J. Dent, Ambassador Extraordinary from the British Muses to the Continent, Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' was performed at the Opera House here last night for the first time on any German stage.

Apart from their learned men, the Germans do not know Purcell. Before we express shock, let us ask ourselves whether Purcell is well and truly known at home. The performance last night was a first introduction of that charming genius to an audience that was peculiarly receptive.

'Back to Handel!' has been the cry in Germany for some little while. Now the Germans are quite ready to go back farther, even at the cost of reaching a period in which their own luminaries were not yet overwhelmingly brilliant.

The whole enterprise, and the way in which it was received, spoke well for the intellectual interests of present-day musical Germany. The English visitor could not but be impressed. Münster is not a great city. The resources of its opera-house are modest. But there are wits and enthusiasm at play here ; and, moreover, a sympathetic, supporting citizenry. It was curious to see the good people hurrying from the church services yesterday morning straight to the opera-house to attend a lecture by Mr. Dent in preparation for the evening's performance.

One has to hear Purcell abroad to perceive to the full how peculiarly English he is. The Cantor of St. Thomas's, Leipsic—Dr. Carl Straube—who is here, is one of several eminent Germans who have marvelled that we English do not glory more in our great man. The native tunefulness of Purcell, and his light, sure, unlaboured strokes, are here a delightful find.

The success of 'Dido' was great—and even astonishingly great, considering some of the circumstances. For instance, the intervals which were necessary for the changing of scenery were regrettably long for so small a piece. It is certain that 'Dido' should in the interests of musical effect be played, if possible, unbroken. Then it was preceded here last night by a dramatised serenade, 'Venus and Adonis,' of the elder Scarlatti. This piece contained some delightful music, but as a stage show it was utterly uneventful and depressingly long. None but a German audience, one fancied, would have allowed it such a patient hearing. Finally the singing in 'Dido' was not more than fair to moderate, the heroine, in particular, being insufficient.

And still it was the best performance of 'Dido' that I, for one, have seen. In the absence of the finest vocalists and the most expensive settings, operas at Münster are made to engage the audience by being well 'produced.' All sorts of clever little things were done on the stage last night to bring it home to us that drama was meant. The plot was alive, and there were no listless, ineffectual supernumeraries. One's hat is raised to the manager, Dr. Niedecken-Gebhard, and to the ballet-master, Kurt-Joos, who are men of ideas and a pretty fancy. Perhaps the scene of the witches' kitchen aimed at rather more than was achieved; but the scene of the sailors and the witches in Act 4 was brilliantly animated. The audience clamoured for the hornpipe over again.

The conductor was Rudolph Schulz-Dornburg, and he lent a good hand to the effect. The world should hear something of this conductor one day. He had got the hang of Purcell's dancing tunes, and set them spinning capitally. And he rose to the wondrous Lament. It was as though he had said to his 'cellos, 'Play as you never played before!' The great ostinato was torn from the quivering strings.

The Dido was a singer with an unequal scale, in no part of which did she, lacking the technical principles, make the best of her voice. The Æneas was a young baritone who looked gallant in a quasi-Oriental dress (for Æneas had come from Asia Minor), but who pinched his higher notes. The Belinda was a promising and spritely young singer. At the end the audience shouted for Mr. Dent, who had to appear on the stage. He had re-edited the work for the occasion. The German version was by Dr. Anton Mayer.

The visitor here has also had an opportunity of seeing a staged version of Handel's 'Theodora,' and uncommonly interesting it was. Scenery and action were on broadly simplified lines. A good deal of surgery had been inflicted on the score. But to set against that is the fact that to-day Münster does know 'Theodora.' Where in England is it known? There is mighty fine music in the work. 'Saul' and 'Hercules' have been treated on similar lines in past years. A Handel revival is due in England. Some one might try the Niedecken-Gebhard method. C.

The Oaklands Musical Club is a new organization that should be of great benefit to musicians in the Shepherd's Bush district. Prof. Percy Buck spoke at the inaugural meeting, his subject being 'What is Musical Taste?' A chamber music evening was announced for March 20; and on April 17 a programme of works by Schubert and Grieg will be given by Miss Helen Mott and members. The secretary is Mr. F. D. Langdale Brown, 29, Sedgeford Road, W.12.

Points from Lectures

Vocal methods never fail to interest singers, and for that reason a crowded audience was attracted to the monthly meeting of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, when Mr. F. C. Field Hyde dealt with this subject very usefully. He advised the student of singing to leave text-books alone for a year or two. Many examples of extravagant and contradictory things said in books on the voice were read by the lecturer, who said that the confusion that ensued could only be set right by a competent teacher, whose experience enabled him to set conflicting views in their proper relationship. One of the chief faults of authors was that they wrote as if their principles could be applied to all voices. It would be futile to apply a method to every case. The teacher must have method, but it must be elastic; he must have knowledge of text-books, and skill to adapt methods to the fresh problems presented by every pupil. Mr. Field Hyde proved his own capacity in this respect by the artistic singing of his pupils, who illustrated the lecture.

Brahms has been discussed many times in lectures. That the interest endures is evident from the vividness with which we may recall the treatment of him on many of these occasions. As time goes on the tone becomes more sincere; the composer's position in musical history more secure. Mr. B. J. Dale is such an admirer that he has spent much time in going through Brahms's works and placing them in periods. These will doubtless be put on fuller and clearer record than was apparent at the lecture recently given at the Music Teachers' Association. Mr. Dale dealt sympathetically with the early compositions of Brahms, who had had to earn his living at first by hack-work. The true Brahms came later. The Ballades showed his austere romanticism. A gradual softening of the hardness and austerity which had characterised him was traced, but this never wholly left him. Between Opp. 70 and 100, written within ten years, Brahms reached the zenith of his career. Some characteristics pointed out were his fondness for the device of melodic inversion, consistently and beautifully used; suggestion without actual use of folk-song; distinction added to the triads within the fixed limits of the key; honourable use of the diminished seventh, not for the purpose of making cheap modulation, and before it had been shamelessly exploited by later composers; avoidance of rhythmic squareness, while fulfilling the requirements of form. Orchestral colour owed much to him, though unfortunately the sombre colours were apt to run into each other. Brahms's thought was essentially polyphonic. His compositions were among the vital forces of music.

'Some Aspects of Modern Poetry' were referred to by Mr. Alfred Noyes during a lecture at the Midland Institute, Birmingham. He deplored the tendency, especially among writers who had no ear for music, to depreciate the musical side of poetry. If they succeeded in ridding poetry of its music, they would also succeed in ridding literature of its poetry. The new school seemed to wish to emphasise unduly the meaning expressed by the words. But there was something more in poetry than the logic of meaning. It must have music—the music of rhythm. That was why the greatest poetry, having more music than logic, could never be translated successfully into a foreign language.

Mr. Carl Fuchs, in a lecture at Huddersfield, said there were about four hundred Strad fiddles in existence. Collectors who had long purses claimed that they were preserving the violins for future generations, but as a matter of fact they were keeping them from rising young violinists who could not afford high prices for them. He thought that Strad violins should be held only by people who could satisfy a board of examiners as to their efficiency as players.

In an address on oratorio composers, at Sheffield Central Secondary Girls' School, Sir Henry Hadow turned aside from his theme and spoke of the popular fear of high-brows. Good music did not mean music that people could not understand. He remarked that he often came across people who said that they liked music, but didn't like it good: and added that no one would ever think of saying that they liked apples, but preferred them rotten, or that they liked fish, but preferred it a bit high. Do not, said Sir Henry, be browbeaten about talk of 'high-brow,' and do not get it into your heads that good music means something recondite or abstruse. 'The Messiah' is good music, the best of its kind. If people tried to get round you by talk of 'high-brow,' it was not argument, but a snigger.

Dr. W. G. Alcock, lecturing at Salisbury on 'How Music is made,' ranged over the history and art of music with certainty of grip and clearness. He turned to the tendencies of modern music. A very prominent musician asserted in public some time ago that there was no such thing as a wrong note in modern music, and went on to say that nothing a musician wrote down sincerely could be called ugly. That attitude might be due to the results of the war. If it was true, a murder was no sin if the murderer meant it sincerely. The intolerance of anything approaching precept or rule was growing so rapidly that in their reverence for all that had brought music to its highest development, musicians could not help wondering what the future had in store.

The Irish Free State does not seem to mind its officials commenting publicly on matters which are under consideration of ministerial committees. But Dr. John F. Larchet, chairman of the Examinations Board for Music under the Ministry of Education, has high aims and hopes. The aim was to make a race of intelligent listeners instead of a race of inferior performers. Music would take its place as a full subject in the curriculum. In the primary schools, teachers were being prepared to supply the improved teaching that would have to come. In the secondary schools, music would be taught only by certified teachers. Music was being taken by many girls in place of mathematics. There were girls' schools in which every pupil was now attending classes in aural culture, sight-singing, and musical appreciation. Many schools had recently established junior and senior orchestras and choirs. Gramophone, pianola, and wireless educational programmes were advocated. In an oral examination for the intermediate certificate a melody was to be sung at sight, a phrase as heard written down in Staff notation (Tonic Sol-fa is ignored), studied melodies were to be written down and analysed, and rhythms, chords, cadences, and changes of key had to be recognised. A harmony and musical history paper followed, and the practical examination included the playing of the pianoforte, violin, 'cello, or harp. For the leaving certificate more advanced work on the same lines was required. In the secondary school course pupils were to be brought into contact with the works of the great composers. The things of music should come before the names and symbols. Pupils should be present at the choir-singing as listeners, if not as performers. The répertoire should be fairly extensive before much theoretical work was attempted. Dr. Larchet compared the spirit of these plans (the practice may fall short) with recent experiences where music as a subject was lucky if the time allowed for it was not filched from recreation.

Welsh Folk-Music was ably discoursed upon by the Rev. Iona Williams at North Shields. The lecturer said that the Welsh character was emotional and impulsive; the people were devoted to patriotism and religion. They had few drinking songs, or hunting or sea songs. Their music was rich in lullabies, and in their store of love-songs melancholy prevailed, and so indefinite and impersonal were their songs that the lover always called upon the wind or the cuckoo, or some other medium, to carry his message to his lady-love. The folk-songs of Wales were often addressed to nature—they sang of the sky, animals, leaves, flowers. In regard to patriotism, Wales possessed one of the greatest marching songs in the world in 'Men of Harlech.'

'Church Music and Choral Singing' was Mr. Edgar L. Bainton's subject at Greenock, attracting a crowd to the Town Hall for a praise service. Far enough back he went, for he quoted from Job that 'when the foundations of the earth were laid the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.' But Job characterised the ungodly as 'those who played upon the timbrel and harp and who rejoiced at the sound of the organ.' Music owed much to the monasteries and monks. Each monastery had its precentor. Song schools existed in Scotland from the 13th century. At the Chapels Royal the Master of Music was the most coveted post in the musical world. In the Roman Mass the priest acted as intermediary between God and man; the music had dignity and loftiness of style, impersonal and unemotional. Protestantism, which affirmed the right of every man to approach God in his own fashion, required a more personal note in its music, with a more intimate and emotional quality. England and Scotland in the Tudor period were singing nations. Perhaps once again the United Kingdom might become 'a nest of singing birds.'

Defending the B.B.C., Mr. Joseph Lewis, musical director at the Birmingham Broadcasting Station, told the Cheltenham Rotary Club that he put in on an average a hundred hours a week, his rate of pay being not much more than that of a labourer, and that every penny spent at every station had to be strictly accounted for. Everybody who paid ten shillings a year wanted his pound of flesh out of the Company. Whenever a song was sung certain interests had to be compensated. It was impossible to please everybody, and Mr. Lewis described some of the difficulties of doing so. Members of choirs gave their services, and would do so for four or five nights a week, because they felt there was a great mission in broadcasting.

The Rev. Canon R. E. Roberts has been telling the Hon. Society of Cymmrodorion what he had discovered about Welsh music in the Tudor period. Welsh composers who attained eminence in England under the friendly patronage of the Tudors included Richard Edwards ('In going to my lonely bed') and Sion Gwynedd. Robert Jones had international fame. The lecture dealt largely with 'half-Anglicised Welshmen.'

At Glasgow University, the closing 'Cramb Music Lecture' was very largely attended. What grieved Mr. Gustav Holst since the war was the number of first-rate artists in the Scottish Orchestra, old friends, who had gone to America, where they gained considerably, for the best American orchestras were wonderful. In this country they had been in danger, if not in certainty, of having to play in the cinema. This first-rate material could not be rebuilt at once, any more easily than a cathedral could be so built. In the discussions about the future of the British National Opera Company, Mr. Holst had seen no reference to what to him had always been the glory of the Company—it carried an orchestra of fifty players. Elaborate Tudor Motets and Masses were unfitted for congregational singing. They should be unaccompanied. Organ accompaniment, during the centuries, had ruined this type of music. Pure Tudor music was to-day being revived. Now that the season was ending, Mr. Holst advised students to pursue their studies of orchestration with the aid of miniature scores and gramophone records.

Shakespeare was the subject taken by Mr. T. Henderson for an address to the Darlington Rotary Club. Shakespeare, he said, spoke about music without making any mistakes, and his knowledge was thorough, not because he was a musician, but because music was an integral part of everybody's life in those days. He did not introduce music into his plays to brighten them, but because it was part of the play, and gave the requisite colour.

Dr. W. G. Whittaker met a number of choir conductors at Greenock, to discuss their work. Much introductory talk was saved by a reference to his article, 'Hints to Choir Conductors,' in the Federation of Festivals Year-Book. Dr. Whittaker said that conductors from whom little was expected sometimes secured extraordinary results. He knew a greengrocer who, after selling cabbages, conducted choirs in drawing-rooms, where the members sang magnificently because he was endowed with remarkable ability in leading people to sing. Yorkshire singers had the best choral voices without doubt, but there were other things needed as well as choral tone, and to obtain these was the work of the conductor. Answering questions, Dr. Whittaker did not approve of choirs standing in semi-circles ; he preferred block formation. In madrigal singing we had to re-create tradition. First read aloud the words, line by line. The pace must be decided according to reasonable conditions ; there was not one set pace. Lip action and other movements, and singing by a conductor were all very well so long as the audience did not see what was done, but in children's choirs singing by the conductor should not be allowed.

Mr. Arthur Hirst is a lecturer with the great gift of securing keenness and absorption on the part of his audience. The Brighton Herald says that 'during one pause in his playing the audience was so still that the ticking of a clock on the wall alone broke the silence.' Yet at the close the applause was thunderous. So impressive was his lecture on 'How to appreciate great music,' that after the two hours' recital the chairman summed it up by saying, 'It seems to me that I have been here for only a quarter of an hour.'

J. G.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas.' By M. P. Conway.

[Musical Opinion Office, 2*s*.]

So much has lately been written about this composer's organ music that failure on the part of players to appreciate it, or to give it a fair presentation, will hardly be due to lack of counsel. As a fact, however, Rheinberger's position in this country has long been secure so far as this department of his work is concerned. The great majority of good players have always recognised the high quality of his Sonatas, and if their appeal to the hearer has been small, the reason is to be found in their over-solid and monotonous treatment at the hands of organists who followed too slavishly the composer's indications of pace and registration. It has been too often forgotten that there are good reasons for Rheinberger's sparing use of dynamic marks. His own organ possessed few facilities for expression—there was not even a Swell box ! It was natural, therefore, that his music should be conceived in a style as far as possible independent of varied power and tone-colour ; and that he should content himself with a bare indication as to the general style of a movement—loud or soft—leaving further variety to the discretion of the performer. Unfortunately, players (at all events up till a very recent date) apparently lacked the blend of imagination and discretion necessary to do for the Sonatas what the composer was unable to do himself, and an impression grew up that Rheinberger's organ music was consistently loud, heavy, and uninteresting. Guidance was, and still is, badly needed, and there is room for such a book as this of Dr. Conway. His suggestions are mainly in regard to registration, but he gives also hints as to phrasing and treatment generally. The plan of the book is simple and practical. The section dealing with each Sonata opens with a brief note on its general characteristics ; the movements are then discussed from the registration point of view, with a detailed treatment that can be followed with profit only when (as the author advises) the student first takes his copy and numbers off the bars in fives or tens. Opinions will vary as to whether the registration suggested is over-elaborate. Personally, I think it is. But that is no drawback, for the player need adopt it only so far as it falls in with his view or suits his organ. Seeing how much the Sonatas have suffered from too little registration, it is well that players should have their attention drawn to the limits of possibilities in the opposite direction. Moreover, the Preface is emphatic as to the importance of the registration not being allowed to interfere with the flow of the music. Dr. Conway has worked throughout with a realisation that the composer (as he says) 'thought far more of counterpoint than of colour,' and he has therefore avoided too 'orchestral' a treatment. He adds a warning that > . . . no amount of care in registration can compensate for deficient technique or any lack of appreciation of the breadth and dignity of these Sonatas. They should be learnt on two or three soft stops, and all details of technique, phrasing, &c., settled before the registration is taken in hand and practised.

Dr. Conway draws attention to the importance of differentiating between the f and ff of the middle sections of the slow movements and those of the opening and closing movements. As he says, Rheinberger no doubt had in mind a quieter ensemble for such passages, not only because of the character of the music, but also for the purpose of obtaining contrast with the rest of the Sonata.

The registration suggested by Dr. Conway is such as may be obtained from an average three-manual organ, and most of it is possible on a two-manual, provided the Great contains a few soft stops to serve as a Choir, and (even more important) that the Swell and Great be often used uncoupled. As Dr. Conway points out, players on two-manual organs are prone to keep the manuals coupled throughout, thus missing many chances of variety and relief. This eminently practical little work should be of great service to all who wish to do justice to these fine works, which, as Dr. Conway truly says, are 'in the very front rank of organ compositions.' A study of its principles should also be of help to the student in regard to registration generally. Too often this important part of a player's equipment receives only casual attention, with disastrous effects on his taste and interpretative powers.

H. G.

'Modern French Music.' By Edward Burlingame Hill.

[George Allen & Unwin, 15*s*.]

In this sober, readable, well-documented book, with its thirteen chapters and nine illustrations, an American musician surveys the movements in French music since the time of the Franco-Prussian War. His book grew out of lectures delivered at Harvard, where he is an assistant-professor, and out of other discourses given in the Universities of Strasburg and Lyons in 1921. Its aim is > . . . to provide as far as possible the features necessary for a student's handbook with the untechnical standpoint of the general reader.

The method is thorough. First Mr. Hill sketches the genesis of French music, from the operatic preoccupations of the first half of last century, through the time of increased interest in instrumental music (with Saint-Saëns, Lalo, and Franck as pioneers in this style), on to the Wagner spell, the reaction from it, the enthusiasm for the gay new things from Russia, and the post-Franckian influence of d'Indy, Chausson, Duparc, and others, glancing at the interaction meantime of the arts that 'has produced some of the most characteristic French music.' Then we see Bruneau and Charpentier aiming at 'naturalism' in opera, getting away from the romantic and legendary, into modern life with its moving and often disturbing psychological reactions. Charpentier, it will be remembered, called 'Louise' 'a musical novel,' and wrote the text (in prose) himself, as Bruneau had done for his works.

There was a strong operatic bias at the Conservatoire, it seems, until Fauré's time (1905-20). We are reminded of the value of the Schola Cantorum, that 'memorial to the personality and artistic creed of César Franck,' in laying stress on the historical evolution of music, and broadening the minds of its students. We are even told that its pupils are taught counterpoint 'not as a matter of archæology or as a dry science, but in the spirit of the 16th century.' That idea is moving here, but we have not yet set our teaching fully in order, I am afraid.

The earlier chapters of the book describe the course of opera, and the rise of instrumental music, under the guidance of Pasdeloup, Colonne (the apostle of Berlioz), Lamoureux, who laboured for nearly thirty years, and Chevillard. Mr. Hill says a few shrewd things about Saint-Saëns, who > . . . came perilously near to making up for [his] capital defects by the amazing extent of his intuitive faculty, his Gallic wit, his vivacity, grace, and the dexterous control of all the elements of his craft.

'Perilously' is a good word. So is the adjective which describes him, after indulging in the coloured delights of his Oriental adventures in music, or his sentimental languishings, returning 'the more grimly to his classic obligations,' which he took enormously seriously.

Another good phrase is that which describes Franck's outlook upon art as 'gospel—instead of a métier.'

Some of Mr. Hill's references whet our appetite, which is one thing that every book ought to do, in some way or other. He mentions the great success of the later version of Berlioz's 'Trojans' at the Paris Opéra in 1920. When are we of the present generation to hear that fine work in London?

Here possibly is matter for debate, in some aspects. Speaking of the final abating of 'the Wagnerian fever' in France, Mr. Hill says:

> It was the vainest of illusions to fancy that Wagnerian principles of music-drama could find a permanent fusion with the Gallic nature.

Is this true? If it is, so much the worse for France, say I. Surely it is one sign of the incorrigible Chauvinism of the French.

How many English musicians appreciate Fauré—really enjoy him with gusto? I have met none. Yet he played a large part in bringing in what Mr. Hill calls 'the new era' of French music. He also calls this 'the progressive type' of art, which I think is not a very good word. I prefer some such term as 'alterative.' There is a danger in these days—only too great—of confusing change with progress:

> Fauré's music [says the author] is not combative. It insinuates itself into the listener's heart, annuls argument, and, perforce, leads the mind into regions of persuasive poetry.

Even if it doesn't always, the attempt to do so is better than the other argument-annulling method—a very different one—of the young lions, 'Les Six,' and the rest of them. They avoid argument by leaving you speechless with boredom. Mr. Hill takes them too seriously, I feel sure; but perhaps in an historian no other attitude is quite correct. The book, remember, is not entirely a critical estimate; it is an exposition, and though it is not nearly so adulatory as practically all the other books we have about French music, it is distinctly kind to the aggressive moderns, for whom spanking seems to some of us the best remedy—though it is a little too late, unfortunately, for that. It ought to have been done about twenty years ago. We might then have been spared much annoyance.

Before he comes to the 'iconoclasts,' as he calls them (though they rather set up idols—a multiplicity of them—than break them: therein lies their feebleness), Mr. Hill has plenty of good matter about d'Indy, Debussy, Ravel, and the lesser lights of their time. Debussy he regards as the greatest genius in French music since Berlioz. 'A test of Debussy's significance as a composer, he says, 'is to be found in the world-wide reaction of his innovations.' That may prove the greatness of the originator, though little men—fundamentally small men, like Stravinsky and Schönberg—have been idolised too; but it may just as well prove the feebleness of the imitators. Has any country produced so many weak imitators as France in the last twenty years? Think, for instance, of the French 'novelties' that we have heard, at the 'Proms.' and elsewhere, since the war. How many of them have been worth listening to? Not one in ten. There are some Frenchmen of whose work we would willingly hear more—d'Indy, for example. His best work is too rarely performed here; but the great majority of French novelties (and of German ones too, for that matter) are simply, to our ears, so much paper wasted.

Mr. Hill thinks that 'a period of assimilation [of foreign influence] is followed by one of reaction to nationalism,' and that when Frenchmen of to-day have 'profitably absorbed' what can be got from the foreigner, they will return to a more exclusive dependence upon the living traditions of their illustrious past.' As to whether that will really be better for French music I leave you to debate. Myself, I do not expect too great marvels from a people who can see nothing in Elgar, and who listen seriously to the nursery-prattle of a Milhaud and a Cocteau. French music is suffering even more severely than our own from the mental indigestion of the age. It is not easy to see how it will work out its salvation. Diet and dosing are indicated; but who is to play the thankless part of physician?

W. R. A.

'How to Build a Chamber Organ.' By H. F. Milne. [Musical Opinion Office, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

Charles Reade hoisted himself into Grove's 'Dictionary' on the back of a knowledge of violin construction; at least one distinguished organist is known as a skilled model-engineer; and there is apparently a chance for all of us to shine as organ-builders. It seems hardly to be expected that the fine mechanism of such an instrument should be within the reach of any but highly-skilled craftsmen, but Mr. Milne assures us that 'there is nothing to prevent any amateur with a knowledge of the use of wood-working tools from turning out a splendid little instrument from start to finish.' And in this volume the author provides a clear and concise account of the materials, methods, and general constructional details that are required for the purpose. The descriptions are admirably full and simple, and many excellent diagrams are included to elucidate points which might otherwise be difficult. No specialised ability is pre-supposed, but a good knowledge of carpentering is essential; and it soon becomes clear that many of the operations described require very great skill and patience.

The specification suggested is well-balanced, and includes a Swell octave coupler, which is a noticeably useful feature. The author throughout the book is clearly looking at his subject from the point of view of the player as well as that of the builder; and he has wise words to say on the subject of the abuse of couplers. While describing the mechanism and make of the Tremulant, he seems not whole-heartedly to advocate its use in an instrument of this size, and most organists, without denying the importance of the stop in larger schemes, would probably agree with him on this point.

Quite apart from the building of the organ, which few, probably, will feel equal to undertaking, the volume has wide interest and usefulness. Not many organists at all fully understand the insides of their instruments, still fewer are able to undertake even in emergency small 'running repairs' for which they would be ashamed to garage their cars; and this work certainly makes the fundamentals much clearer than many more elaborate treatises. The chapters on 'Regulation of Action, Defects, Remedies' and 'Tuning' should be of the greatest help to those in charge of small organs, situated perhaps in places where expert attention cannot easily be obtained; and to these, and all lovers of the organ, just as much as to those who wish to build themselves a workmanlike little instrument, this book may be warmly recommended.

T. A.

'The Rhythm of Song.' By C. F. Abdy Williams. [Methuen, 7*s.* 6*d.*]

Rhythm is without doubt one of the great and elemental forces not only in music and other arts, but also, as Mrs. Meynell insisted, in life itself and the organization of the universe. But like many other big things, it is so much a matter of the heart as well as of the head, of feeling as well as of thinking, that discussion of it is apt to become vague and loose. The word itself is easily confused with the terms 'accent' and 'time,' and is, moreover, as the author notices on p. 30, somewhat changing in its meaning. Whereas Beethoven speaks of a 'Ritmo di tre battute,' and we speak of a waltz- or a jazz-rhythm, applying the word to a short rhythmical figure, there is a sense in which the word has a larger meaning. 'His rhythm is good' means for most of us that there is a vividness in his feeling of the short rhythmical figure, and also a growth and consistent plan in his handling of these figures in the mass, in the 'rhythm' of the work as a whole.

The prevalence of loose thinking about rhythm seems to have prompted Mr. Abdy Williams to write this book. His treatment of the subject is noticeably different from Mr. Plunket Greene's, which concentrates rather on the general, broad aspect, from the performer's standpoint. Mr. Williams wishes to place rhythm side by side with harmony and counterpoint as a branch of the science of composition; this is manifestly difficult, but he brings to this task both musicianship and literary scholarship.

Mr. Williams insists that metre is to poetry what rhythm is to music, and in a sense this is true. But rhythm in poetry, which obviously does exist, seems to be something more than metre, obtained by means of metre (though not entirely by means of it), as rhythm in music is obtained by means of accent. For instance, the metrical system of

> The quality of mercy is not strained, would be generally admitted to be one of iambic pentameters. But it has been recently suggested that the rhythmical flow in this and other similar verse is obtained by a system of four stresses:

> The *qual*ity of *mer*cy is not strain'd,
> It *drop*peth as the *gen*tle rain from *hea*ven
> Upon the place be*neath*: it is twice blest, &c.

This is of course highly controversial, but it serves to show how difficult and complicated are the relations between metre and rhythm. Even more interesting and suggestive is the question of the rhythm of good prose—for many of the finest passages in the language undeniably depend for their effect on rhythm; and this is necessarily achieved without the use of metre at all, but by careful accentuation, and the rise and fall of finely balanced phrases. Mr. Williams admits that 'in ancient days men applied the term "rhythm" to poetry, and to the movements of the dance, as well as to musical melody,' as if such an application were no longer usual or allowable. But rhythm is one thing, and the same whether expressed by a meaningless jingle of words, a tapping with one's foot on the floor, or the playing of an orchestra.

It seems as if the analogies between music and literature had struck the author so forcibly as to lead him into rather fanciful statements. He suggests, though he does not definitely state, on p. 31, for instance, that there is some connection between the four punctuation signs and the four closes in music. This idea may work so far as the full stop is concerned, but goes no further without considerable strain; and the comparison of the pause with the note of exclamation (p. 31) similarly will not bear pressure. The most serious discussions, however, will centre round the author's application to music of the literary 'quantities.' There is undoubted parallelism here, but the desire to register and tabulate leads to highly debatable ground, because of the indefinite nature of the words 'long' and 'short,' 'strong' and 'weak,' in this connection. Take, for instance, the Iambus, quite definitely a procession of short and long. As soon as we try to apply this to music we have to define 'short' and 'long' in a way unnecessary in literature. There seems no ground for assuming that a long is to a short as two is to one, as Mr. Abdy Williams does, in citing as in 'Grove' (1921), vol. 2, p. 459? Or:

Why not

as in 'Grove' (1921), vol. 4, p. 605, both given as cases of Iambic measures? 'Revenge, revenge,' according to Mr. Williams's scheme, would be Proceleusmatic, second species (see p. 25, par. 13). The fact is that these literary quantities cannot be pressed on to music, though they may be advantageously compared with it. The analysis is interesting from general points of view, but the rules of quantity are a purely non-musical convention, and a modern composer setting a poem would certainly be on the wrong tack if he began theorising about its metrical scheme in this way. He must pay far more attention to the question of musical accentuation, which is somewhat inadequately dealt with in this volume.

Enough has been said, however, to show that here is an interesting discussion of an important subject. The book is provided with many examples, ranging from Mozart to Ireland and Vaughan Williams, and including extracts from 'The Diver' and 'The Village Blacksmith,' which should not perhaps have found their way into a work of this sort. It must also be admitted that the somewhat antiquated character of the author's own examples of the composer at work (Exx. A-M) is likely to detract from their value for present-day students; and we are surprised to find Mr. Abdy Williams writing in Ex. I what he has censured as 'something of a platitude' on p. 5.

The whole technique of accentuation, which is inextricably mixed up with that of rhythm in song, has been greatly developed during the last few years, and credit is due to the author for realising this, and for dealing to some extent with the influence of folk-song on what some publishers and Mr. Williams call the 'Art song'—a hateful term. But we feel that this side of the question should have received more attention; and any volume dealing with the setting of words ought to take notice of Debussy's influence, and the tendencies of the later Vaughan Williams. It is also to be regretted that the book must have gone to press before the appearance of Holst's 'Choral' Symphony. Whatever may be the value of this work as a whole, it is indisputably a landmark, from all points of view, in the musical treatment of poetry, and it must be taken into consideration in any present-day discussion of this subject. T. A.

'The School Orchestra: Organization, Training, and Répertoire.' By Adam Carse.

[Joseph Williams, 4*s*.]

If there is one thing more than another that we want to encourage in schools high and low, it is ensemble instrumental work. The school singing is, thank goodness, now upon a generally good level; the orchestra still lags behind, though all who are in touch with school folk report that things are moving, and that another generation will make a big difference. Every one knows that some schools have excellent orchestras, but we want such bodies to be multiplied exceedingly. In America they go in for great things in this way—even to the length of military bands. I can't believe that all these bands play really well (how on earth are boys to get time to play horns really well?), but there is a far more widespread keenness for the school band there than we have yet displayed.

Mr. Carse would stop at nothing to get one—except at bringing in outsiders too often. For a special burst they are useful; but the aim, he urges, ought to be to get a complete string orchestra. Viola players are not often found in schools, but they can generally be made, he says, in two or three weeks.

Here speaks from long experience one who knows what he is talking about. His every page is keenly practical. He plunges in at once, on p. 7, to show how the pianoforte is effective when contrasted with the strings, how a wind solo is best managed (not on the pianoforte), and how it is worth while to re-arrange wind parts for the percussive instrument. Music-masters can tell tales of sitting up till four in the morning, doing this. But the joy when the arrangement 'comes off' well at the performance makes it well worth while.

His 'Training' hints are spare and taut. Discipline is at the root of the matter, but it can be thoroughly enjoyable discipline. Anyone who has seen Sir Henry Wood at the R.A.M., putting the students through their paces, has a splendid example of how to economise time and get the best out of one's players. (It is not difficult to get permission from the Secretary to attend a Friday afternoon rehearsal, by the way.)

The common slips are listed; and any young conductor will profit greatly by taking these fifty-five pages of succinct information and seeing what other things they suggest to him, for Mr. Carse does not pretend to be exhaustive. He tells what his experience has taught him—how to rehearse a new piece, how to practise sight-reading, what to do about silent bars, turning over, and many other things, some of them small, but none that are not important. Then his graded lists of music for strings, with and without pianoforte and wind, are good.

The school orchestra is going to make a wonderful difference to the standard and quantity of entries in the festival string classes, which are almost always much below the level of the pianoforte and vocal classes. More orchestras mean more little parties of quartettists, more trios, more sonata players, and possibly, a return to the Tudor conditions, when not to be able to make some sort of a shot at a viol part argued that you had not been at all nicely brought up. Speed the day! A.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'How Music Grew.' By Marion Bauer and Ethel Peyser. Pp. 602. Putnams, 18*s.*

'Singers' Difficulties: How to Overcome Them.' By Kate Emil-Behnke. Pp. 187. Cassell, 6*s.*

'Verdi.' By Franz Werfel. Translated by Helen Jessiman. Pp. 384. Jarrolds, 16*s.*

'Bach: The Cantatas and Oratorios.' Books 1 and 2. By Charles Sanford Terry. 'The Musical Pilgrim' series. Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.* each.

'Über die art muzik zu hören.' By Siegfried Ochs. Pp. 54. Im Verk-verlag zu Berlin.

'Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institute, 1924.' Pp. 535. Washington: The Government Printing Office.

'Carillon Music and the Singing Towers of the Old World and the New.' A new and revised edition of 'Carillons in Belgium and Holland.' By William Gorham Rice. Pp. 397. The Bodley Head, 16*s.*

'Miniature Essays': Francesco Santoliquido; Gabriel Grovlez; Arthur Honegger; Poldowski. J. & W. Chester, 6*d.* each.

'How to Compose a Song.' By Ernest Newton. Pp. 126. Kegan Paul, 4*s.* 6*d.*

'Journal of the Folk-Song Society,' No. 29. Taunton: Barnicott & Pearce.

'Piano and Gown.' Recollections. By Fred E. Weatherly. Pp. 311. Putnams, 10*s.* 6*d.*

'Fifty Favourite Operas.' By Paul England. Pp. 606. George G. Harrap, 12*s.* 6*d.*

Player-Piano Notes

By William Delasaire

ÆOLIAN

Duo-Art.—Two very interesting pieces of Spanish music are recorded this month—one by a composer whose name is rare in roll catalogues, Manuel de Falla. Maria Carreras plays his 'Andaluza,' No. 4 of 'Four Spanish Pieces' (6781). To many the composer's name doubtless carries recollections of terrifying modernity, but such folk need not be deterred from buying this roll—the harmony is plentifully splashed with diminished seconds, à la Albeniz, but is no more than piquantly modern in style. One recognises that in a piece of this sort the rhythms—which are most ingenious—are of principal importance, but the music strikes me as being rather disconnected, and so not very satisfying. However, it is certainly a roll of outstanding importance.

The other Spanish piece is a remarkably fine recording, by José Iturbi, of Albeniz's 'Seguidillas,' Op. 232, No. 5 (0237). The music is well-known, of course, and to me the prime interest of the roll is the playing of this famous but, in this country, I believe, little-known pianist. His playing is wonderfully crisp and clean; most of the notes appear on the roll as single punch perforations—a nice test, incidentally, for the 'works' of the instrument. The whole effect is exhilarating, and provides a splendid answer to those misguided people who think that dance music comes only from the brains of American Jews.

Another roll, as interesting as it is beautiful, is a Brahms Intermezzo, Op. 117, No. 1, in E flat minor, recorded by Mitja Nikisch (0238). I cannot refrain from again begging my readers, if I may presume to administer a little homily, to dismiss any prejudices about the 'austerity' of Brahms. Here, at any rate, he is wonderfully human, and this without denying his genius. The music is simplicity itself, but marvellously wrought, so that new beauties constantly reveal themselves.

With all respect, I venture to suggest, despite the makers' Bulletin, that Harold Bauer has identified himself with something meretricious in Durand's Valse, Op. 83, in E flat (6932). It may do well enough for the senior girl-student at the end of the term, or as an accompaniment to a Harold Lloyd film; but for Mr. Harold Bauer. . . .!

The remaining rolls comprise salon music of varying merit. Without wishing to appear 'superior,' I am afraid I don't like any of them. The largest is Ascher's 'Alice,' played by Gilbert Spross. I had hoped she was dead, but the pianist certainly re-incarnates her as pleasantly as possible. Rudolph Ganz gives us an excellent reading of the first pianoforte part of Chaminade's 'Valse Carnavalesque,' Op. 73 (6936), of which it is enough to say that it is representative of her style. Nevin's 'In Arcady,' Nos. 1 and 2, is given its maximum effect at the hands of Keith McLeod (6937), though he hardly succeeds in disguising its commonplace nature. Although from the musical point of view having the least worth, Miss Geneviève Pitot's playing lends distinction to Lawrence Gilbert's 'Shadowland' (6952).

The highbrow may be moved to sad reflections on the popularity of these best-sellers, but perhaps he may take comfort from the fact that their sales contribute something towards the cost of producing more noteworthy but less saleable rolls.

Hand-played.—The best of these is Grieg's ever-popular 'Norwegian Bridal Procession,' cleverly played by Rudolph Ganz (A873). Grieg talks about himself rather a lot, as usual, but carefully played it is a pleasing fragment. The left-hand accompaniment must be well subdued, and nicely placed accent is essential, of course.

With so much good light music available, I cannot regard Braga's 'Angels' Serenade' as anything but waste of time. It is, however, quite well played by Henri Bergman (A869).

Felix Arndt plays two Waltzes in a richly-pianistic style with which it is excellent fun to co-operate.

They are 'Ile d'Amour,' by L. Edwards (A867), and Gillet's 'La Lettre de Manon' (A875). They present the hand-played roll in the most favourable light.

Ordinary.—Inspired perhaps by the popularity of Mr. Claud Biggs's wireless performances of the 'Forty-Eight,' the makers have resumed the issue of some of the many numbers which have hitherto not been available for full-scale instruments. They have made an admirable start with No. 13 of Book 1, in F sharp (T24669). It is a joy to play, and gives the player-pianist a chance to show his mettle. The non-sympathetic musician is always apt to doubt whether the voices of a fugue can be distinctly brought out. They can be, of course, but some little skill is needed, and with such music as this the task is certainly not a drudgery. Let us have some more like this one, please.

A Nocturne, by S. H. Braithwaite (T24675), reminds me rather of the style of Alfred Hollins's lighter organ pieces. The melody is obvious enough, but is very square, and except for a pleasant little touch at the close, the harmony is on the sugary side. Still, it is effective and inoffensive.

Coleridge-Taylor's 'Three Dream Dances'—No. 1, at least—must have been written on one of his off days; the composer of 'Hiawatha' seems so very far away.

HUPFELD

Animatic (Hand-played).—The large number of alternative readings of important works by different pianists which the 'Animatic' catalogue provides is well illustrated this month. I remarked recently that I disapproved of the too hurried interpretation of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in D, by Louis Closson. I have now a record of the same work played by Gottfried Galston which is exactly to my taste (52377). I have nothing but praise both for the music and the playing, and strongly recommend all Bach lovers to get this roll—to me it expresses the spirit of heavenly joy.

Liszt's 'Fantasia and Fugue on the Name B A C H' (51880) is a fine work spoilt, in my opinion, by the composer's lack of restraint. It starts off most nobly, and then breaks out into his rhapsodic style, which is really most ill-fitting; it is the kind of homage of which I feel sure Bach would strongly disapprove. Nevertheless, it is an important work, containing much fine music.

There are also some interesting records of Gieseking's playing, of which I think the best is Nos. 1 and 2 of Debussy's 'Suite Bergamasque' (58873). It appeals to me as the composer at his best, and the playing disarms criticism; every detail receives due attention, and at the same time the whole is always envisaged—a remarkably fine example of artistic work in every respect. He has also recorded Walter Niemann's 'Alt-China' Suite (58771-5), in which genuine Oriental colour is infused while escaping the clichés of Amy Woodforde-Finden and others. Much of it is original, and the writing for the pianoforte is always skilful, of which the player again takes full advantage.

A noteworthy roll is Harold Bauer's playing of the Liszt transcription of the 'Liebestod' from 'Tristan and Isolda' (50266). I suppose it is without doubt the most superb love music ever written, and here the arrangement and playing are so beautiful as to give it a definite artistic value—in my opinion one far beyond that of most transcriptions. The roll is additionally interesting by contrast with the straight-cut version. This latter is most difficult to play even tolerably, and many of the beautiful touches which a pianist would wish to introduce are quite impossible of achievement. I have no liking for transcriptions for the pianoforte as a rule, but I most cordially recommend this one.

And lastly Emil Sauer has made a magnificent record of Schubert's monumental 'Wanderer Fantasie' (51212 A & B; 51213).

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

Berlioz's 'Fantastic' Symphony is enjoying something of a vogue, as is evident from its second appearance in the gramophone lists during a very short period. The Columbia recording is of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Weingartner (L1708-1713). Weingartner is, I believe, a Berlioz enthusiast—an odd leaning for a conductor with so much of the typical kappelmeister in his make-up. I don't find these records very exciting (or even interesting) until the 'March to the Scaffold' and the 'Witches' Sabbath,' but this is probably not the fault of the performance or the recording, seeing that the work has invariably struck me as being dull, even in the concert-hall. It always leaves me wondering how the long-drawn and thematically poor opening movements can rouse such enthusiasm as that manifested, for example, at the recent performance by the Hallé Orchestra. However, many men, many minds: clearly there is a Berlioz public, and to such these records will be welcome.

Mackenzie's 'Britannia' Overture, conducted by the composer, makes cheerful hearing (L1715), and it is good to renew acquaintance with a jolly old friend in Rossini's 'Semiramide' Overture—capitally played by the B.B.C. Wireless Symphony Orchestra, under Percy Pitt (9076).

A step forward in operatic reproduction is marked by the record of the King's Prayer and the Finale from Act 1 of 'Lohengrin,' with a strong group of soloists and a powerful chorus, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty. There is tremendous sonority—too much, perhaps, for most gramophonists—and the result is vivid and exciting (L1714).

Powerful, too, are the records of the Wembley Military Tattoo by the Grenadiers Band and Drummers, the Scots Guards Pipers, and the Stadium Choir, directed by Lieut. George Miller. There is a good deal of realism in the diminuendo suggesting the bands marching off, and the reproduction is a not unworthy memento of an historic spectacle (9073-4).

William Murdoch follows up last month's pianoforte record with one perhaps even better, playing a couple of Debussy pieces—'Les Collines d'Ancapri' and 'Bruyères' (D1535).

The J. H. Squire Celeste Octet is heard to great advantage in the Gavotte from 'Mignon' and Gabriel Marie's 'La Cinquantaine.' Records of light music so often fail either in material or performance that an exception such as this should be noted (3877).

Mayer Gordon plays Bazzini's showy 'Ronde des Lutins' and Vieuxtemps's Polonaise with due fluency, though without convincing us that the works are worth the trouble (3877).

The list tells us that the 'cellist, Antoni Sala, is a new-comer to the recording room. Judging from his first records he should be a great success. He plays an arrangement of Kreisler's 'Liebesfreud' and a Dance Espagnol of Granados with excellent life and variety (3875).

The Sheffield Choir, conducted by Dr. Coward, sings its old war-horse, 'The Bells of St. Michael,' Edwards's 'In going to my lonely bed,' and Macfarren's 'You stole my love.' The madrigal is quite out of focus—a heavy oratorio-like performance. The other pieces are sung with plenty of neatness and spirit, though the bell effects in the first seem to have shed some of their realism (and intonation) on the way (9075).

Easily the best of the vocal solo records, to my mind, is that of William Heseltine singing 'On with the motley' and 'No, Pagliacci, no more.' He gets as much passion into it as any Italian tenor (not forgetting the sob), and is always musical. Moreover his words come through (3873). Muriel Brunskill's choice of song is not good. Delius, with his overloaded harmonic method, is not the composer for Herrick, and 'To Daffodils' merely sounds anachronistic; the Serenade from Bantock's 'Jester Songs' shows the composer a good way from his best (3876). Riccardo Stracciari is recorded in a couple of airs from 'La Favorita' (X334).

H.M.V.

The record of Dvorák's 'Carnival' Overture is rather streaky. There are of course some vivid moments, but on the whole the more delicate passages come off best. Apparently the undue resonance of the lower parts makes some loud bits sound out of tune. Still, it is a good record, though not in the first flight. The players are the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald (D1062).

Violinists should note the records of the Kreutzer Sonata. The players are Isolde Menges and Arthur de Greef, who give a performance that above all is virile. Indeed, the pianist is at times far too strenuous, and throws the ensemble out of gear, besides producing some bad tone. But the Sonata (despite the notoriety attaching to it since Tolstoy's novel) easily becomes uninteresting, and the best testimony to this performance is that it makes the work thoroughly alive from start to finish (L1066-9).

Another very live record is that of Marcelle Meyer's playing of Stavinsky's 'Ragtime' and Albeniz's 'Navarra' (D1063). The Stravinsky piece is all broken bottles and tin-tacks, so to speak, but it has an interest of its own, and it is well that such things should be recorded, seeing that even a good average player can make little of them. Miss Meyer is about the best exponent of Stravinsky, and much as one may dislike 'Ragtime,' there is pleasure in hearing its formidable difficulties so lightheartedly set about and overcome. One thinks of this brilliant player as the Suzanne of the keyboard.

There are two outstanding operatic records. Chaliapin and Florence Austral, with chorus and orchestra conducted by Albert Coates, give very effectively a good slice of Gounod's 'Faust'—the Church Scene. It is a pity, however, that the organ part is played by the orchestra. The result is a loss both in atmosphere and contrast. Now that the recording of the organ is so much improved, one would have expected the Company to make the most of such a chance as that presented by this scene (DB899).

The other operatic record is of Rosa Ponselle in 'Suicido,' from 'La Gioconda' and 'O patria mia,' from 'Aïda.' Here is a singer who leaves the ordinary prima donna out of the hunt. Rarely do we hear a voice so good all through a compass of over two octaves. The top C is first-rate, and many contraltos have cause to envy the singer the resonance of the half-dozen notes at the other end. It is real dramatic singing too, full of colour, yet musical from first to last. A special word of praise should go to the recording of the orchestral part in the Verdi. If all operatic extracts were of this quality the gramophone reviewer's lot would be far happier than it is (DB854).

After this vivid bit of work the spurious orientalism of the 'Indian Love Lyrics' lets one down somewhat. However, Peter Dawson sings them far better than they deserve (B2255-6).

VOCALION

Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture, 'La Grande Pâque Russe,' is very long, and the interest is sometimes rather thinly spread, but it contains much attractive orchestration. It has been recorded and played by the Æolian Orchestra, under Rhené-Bâton. As the reproduction of the various tone-colours is unusually good, the work is given the best of chances. Altogether it is one of the best bits of recording the Company has done (A0255-6).

String soloists rarely give us works of first-rate importance, so praise is due to Howard Bliss for his choice of Bach's Violoncello Sonata in D, a tuneful, genial work, especially attractive in its slow movement and Finale. The performance only needs more contrast in power to make it first-rate; it strikes me as being too consistently on a mezzo-forte level. Stanley Chapple is admirable at the pianoforte, save at one or two points where he over-uses the pedal (K05218-9).

Albert Sammons is recorded in Kreisler's 'Liebesfreud,' and his own 'Canzonetta,' both too small fry for such a player (X9729).

A capital pianoforte record is that of Sapellnikov in Liszt's thirteenth Hungarian Rhapsody and Tausig's version of Weber's 'Invitation to the Waltz.' The playing is unusually brilliant, and the tone generally excellent throughout (A0257).

The vocal records are hardly so good as usual. Frank Titterton is not happy in 'Thou shalt break them' and 'Total eclipse.' There is a pronounced wobble that quite obliterates the vocal line in many passages, and his treatment of the words in the 'Messiah' extract is bad—'Thou shalta breaka,' &c. I have heard Titterton sing so well in operatic extracts that this falling away is curious and disappointing (K05217). Nor does Luella Paikin shine in Gretchaninov's 'Berceuse' and 'Oh, yes! just so,' from Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan.' The 'Berceuse' is not amiss, but Miss Paikin makes a lifeless thing of the Bach song, and even in regard to execution her singing is not what we expect from one who has been acclaimed as a coloratura singer (A0250).

NATIONAL GRAMOPHONIC SOCIETY

A very modest parcel comes to hand after a long silence—a 10-in. of Orlando Gibbons's Fantasies Nos. 6 and 8, and Eugène Goossens's 'Jack o' Lantern,' and a 12-in.—two more Gibbons Fantasies (Nos. 3 and 9), and Ernest Tomlinson's 'Lament.' The Music Society String Quartet plays the first three, the Spencer Dyke Quartet being responsible for the Tomlinson piece. The Gibbons Fantasies are unexpectedly vital and interesting, and show that the composers of the period wrote far better for strings than for keyboard. There is more enterprise and independence, and we are allowed to forget the vocal idiom. The playing and recording of these old pieces strike me as being better than that of the modern examples. The 'Jack o' Lantern' especially seems to need more tone. The 'Lament' is expressive music, with more than a hint of Tchaikovsky here and there.

POLYDOR

The interest of this month's review parcel is limited in scope. Tartini's 'Devil's Trill' Sonata is well recorded, played by Josef Wolfsthal (66,191-2). The performance is excellent until the long and desolating passage from which the piece takes its name. Here Mr. Wolfsthal makes rather heavy weather of it. This must surely be the worst of all fiddle cadenzas—a heavy tax on instrument, player, and, above all, on the hearer. Mere exercises and no diablerie! It suggests that the Prince of Darkness is not only a gentleman but also an earnest student over-concerned with technique.

Another violin record is of Mendelssohn's 'Auf flügeln des Gesanges' and Sarasate's 'Jofa-Navana,' played by Vasa Prihoda (66062). The Mendelssohn is broadly delivered, and makes a good sonorous piece; the Sarasate is a kind of compendium of fiddler's tricks. They are managed here with neatness and despatch, the harmonics being particularly good.

The three remaining records are operatic: Fritz Soot in a couple of 'Parsifal' extracts (65812); Frida Leider in 'Ewig war ich,' from 'Siegfried,' and 'Ich sah das Kind,' from 'Parsifal' (72977); and Lotte Lehmann in excerpts from Puccini's 'Suor Angelica' (72908). The orchestral part in these is generally good, the singing on a good average level. The records would be useful to singers and others who wish for records in German.

Occasional Notes

A column article by Mr. Francis Toye, in the Morning Post of March 15, entitled 'Too much fault-finding: Critics of Children's Concerts,' was apparently aimed at one or two journals (including the Musical Times) that have ventured to comment unfavourably on some of the methods employed at such concerts. If no better answer is forthcoming, the criticisms that have appeared in Musical News, the Musical Bulletin, and in this journal are fully justified. Mr. Toye's main contention is that the concerts should be exempt from criticism because they are financed by an enthusiast. This is a proposition that must be resisted. The concerts are public events, and as they receive a good deal of laudatory press notice (as they deserve), unfavourable criticism of some of the details of their management must be allowed as well. Mr. Toye defends the use of nonsense words in familiarising the children with the themes of the works performed, and suggests that critics who object to such methods would prefer the following:

> Now, my dear children, this is the first subject which you will kindly hum after I have played it on the piano, and this is the second subject, which you will treat in a similar manner. Note the contrasting nature of the two themes, aptly illustrating the male and female principles of the universe. Your attention should now be drawn to the fugal treatment after letter X in the score; there is also an interesting example of an effective pedal point on the last page but three, while the ingenious use of the Neapolitan sixth at the beginning will not escape your notice.

This controversial method is too primitive to be taken seriously. Nothing is easier than to stick up an Aunt Sally to misrepresent your opponent, and proceed to heave rocks at it. Unfortunately for Mr. Toye, the educational method he caricatures happens to be one that has been frequently condemned in this journal for some years past, and (if we remember rightly) in Musical News also. Our February 'Occasional Notes,' as well as last month's article by 'Feste,' expressed the view that in all but a very few cases good music is able to speak for itself, and that comment from the platform should be reduced to the minimum.

Mr. Toye says:

> If a critic considers the principle on which a musical enterprise is conducted to be fundamentally unsound, he is right to say so. If, however, as in this case, the principle is admitted to be sound, it is not his business to try and spoil the whole venture by captious fault-finding.

Of course it is not the critic's business to 'try to spoil' any beneficent musical enterprise; but it is his business to point out details in which the enterprise strikes him as being on mistaken lines.

Mr. Toye goes on to say that 'it would be as well for us musical journalists to remember that our opinions are of precious little importance to anybody except ourselves.' This is too modest a view. Is musical journalism so highly regarded that its exponents can afford to belittle their office? Moreover, a writer has no concern with the 'importance of his views.' His job is to say, readably and honestly, what he thinks concerning the topics that come within his scope; and, on the whole, if he has any real convictions, he may (without being unduly puffed up) reckon that his influence will not be negligible.

This by the way. Reverting to the children's concerts, we wish for no better support than that given us in the letter from Dr. Walter Carroll that appears on p. 352. Dr. Carroll shows that children's concerts have been a regular feature at Manchester for the past ten years; they are self-supporting; there is very little 'talk' from the platform; and 'fee-fi-fo-fum' ideas are found to be unnecessary—indeed, Dr. Carroll thinks that the children would resent such methods. Now that our criticisms are upheld by one of the country's leading musical educationists, we hope they will be taken in the right spirit, and not regarded as mere 'captious fault-finding.'

The Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians will in future be known as 'The Musicians' Benevolent Fund.' Such a change of title was bound to come sooner or later, and it has been to some extent forced on the Executive owing to the difficulty of enlarging the scope of the Fund while retaining the personal basis of its foundation and the original name. We are glad to note, however, that the new title is to be accompanied by a reference to the fact that the Fund was started in memory of Gervase Elwes. In order to meet the many and growing cases of need the Fund will widen its sphere, and it is hoped that a Pensions Fund will soon be operative. The list of Vice-Presidents has lately had some distinguished additions, among them several members of the Royal Family, Earl Balfour, Lord and Lady Howard de Walden, Lord Balnesburgh, &c. In the long run, however, an affair of this sort stands or falls by the interest and support of the rank and file of the profession for whose benefit it exists. Not only on grounds of benevolence should musicians lend a hand: common prudence is another motive. Who can be sure of not being down on his luck a few years hence? Mr. Frank Thistleton is the organizing secretary, and the offices of the Fund are at 5, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

Hitherto the organist has been the most secluded of public performers. Even in concert-halls he has usually done his job behind curtains. Now all is to be changed, if the ingenious arrangement at the new Plaza Theatre becomes common. We read that > . . . a super-American organ [by which is meant, presumably, an American super-organ] has been installed. By the pressure of a button in the wings this rises with the organist on its platform, so that the whole immense audience can watch his performance on the three manuals and innumerable red and white stops.

We must drop in at the Plaza and see our confrère coming up like a pantomime sprite. The possibilities on the showmanship side will no doubt be fully exploited—no bad thing, seeing that most of the public know little of the manifold and exacting nature of an organist's task. For example, a host of people are still unaware of the astonishing feats of dexterity that a good player does on the pedal-board. The 'one-man-band' of our childhood was a trifle compared even to an ordinary parish church organist; in fact, to-day the organist is the one-man-band in excelsis—literally in excelsis at the Plaza. We hope that when the button is pressed the Plaza hero does not emerge sitting tamely at his keyboard. Let him soar into view playing, with one hand darting about among those 'innumerable red and white stops,' while the other is busy on two manuals—the fingers on one, the thumb on another; and let a carefully-directed 'spot-light' show that in addition to his manual legerdemain, he is also pedalling furiously. If at the same time he can manage to turn over a page with his teeth, and butt in a stray stop with his brow, so much the better.

A revival of great interest is promised for April 22 at Bishopsgate Institute when the Harold Brooke Choir will present 'Semele,' in an edition specially prepared for the occasion. The recent production of this work in operatic form at Cambridge drew attention to its many beauties, but for obvious reasons stage performances are only rarely practicable. For purely choral purposes its great length has caused it to be neglected. In the new version to be used by the Harold Brooke Choir it has been brought into reasonable length by the omission of a good deal of solo work that had little bearing on the development of the story. All the choruses have been retained. The soloists on April 22 will be Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Cathcart Lynn, Mr. Edward Leer, and Mr. Clifford Lathlean. Mr. Gerald Cooper will play the harpsichord part

Many of our readers are well aware that massage and electro-therapy often prove of great value to musical performers, both instrumental and vocal. We hear of at least two famous players—one a violinist, the other a pianist—who rely upon skilled massage to keep the muscles of fingers, hands, and arms up to concert pitch; and singers also have found the treatment of great value, especially in regard to the respiratory organs. We refer to the matter partly because from time to time readers write to us concerning muscular disabilities that interfere with their technique; and also because we wish to draw attention to the highly-successful work in massage and medical therapeutics now being done by a number of officers and men who lost their sight in the war. We understand that St. Dunstan's Hostel for Blinded Soldiers has so far trained and established in practice throughout the country about seventy men, while others are working successfully in Overseas Dominions. Leading medical and orthopædic authorities testify that the loss of sight has proved to be no handicap in this profession—on the contrary, in manipulative skill and psychological insight blind practitioners often prove superior to sighted masseurs. This branch of St. Dunstan's work has received high praise from such eminent physicians as Sir Bruce Bruce-Porter, Sir Robert Jones, Sir Lisle Webb (Director of Medical Services to the Ministry of Pensions), Colonel E. Gowlland, &c. Readers in need of massage or electric treatment should write to the Superintendent of the Massage Department, St. Dunstan's Headquarters, Inner Circle, Regent's Park, who will gladly inform them as to the most nearly available masseur.

> Soft, slow, distance-scented high chords on strings and celesta now lead downwards to a passage of almost sultry, brooding repose, in which dreamy shepherd-pipe-like phrases on the oboes and English horn lean out from a background of opalescent shimmering violins, while kettledrums intermittently rumble softly below with the gentle ominousness of scarce-heard distant thunder.

At first sight the above suggests the local reporter making the most of one of his rare chances of 'covering' a concert. It is somewhat of a shock to find it (and much more in the same strain) in a Queen's Hall programme, signed by Percy Grainger. However, it is merely one more reminder that the ability to handle both notes and words is rarely found in the same person. Among the great ones of the past, Berlioz and Schumann stand almost alone, and even to-day, when musicians have more all-round culture than formerly, the composers blest with respectable literary ability may be ticked off on the fingers. The fact is, of course, music is by far the most difficult of all the arts to discuss on paper. It is fairly easy to treat orally with a keyboard at hand for illustration, but print is an unhandy medium, and a writer does not easily find the right mean between prosaic analysis and mere gush. Even copious music-type illustrations are of very limited use, for the music that most of all needs such aid is necessarily difficult to hear through the eye, and almost as difficult for the average player to realise on the pianoforte—that common denominator to which practically all music has to be reduced for purposes of illustration. Hence musical criticism bristles with problems of which the anti-critics are unaware. The cool, detached criticism that the 'anti's' describe as blasé and unsympathetic is, as a rule, nothing of the sort. The critic enjoys the best as keenly as any amateur — far more keenly, in fact, for his trained mind sees at least two sources of enjoyment to the amateur's one. But he has an instinctive dislike of 'gush,' partly because he knows the harm it has done to the cause of music, and even more because it is bad writing. When a writer gushes he does so not because he appreciates music more than the critic, but for the practical reason that he has not sufficient literary skill to express his appreciation in simple language. Hence the professional critic's dislike of purple patches and fine writing. He leaves to Mr. Grainger and other literary neophytes such sentences as > . . . the opening strikes a moaning, plaintive note, soon followed by a melody of winsome charm . . . . pure choral colour, lustrous and radiant as the eternal snows . . . . the plaintive moaning cadences and the engratiating [sic] melody . . . . the music slowly fades away into a Coda of the frailest distance-music ; scarce-stirring, far-spread chords in the strings breathing around listless memories of the lazy shepherd-pipe-like phrases in English horn and horn.

We are asked to draw the attention of readers to the fact that the 'Toc H' Entertainments Committee proposes to form an orchestra in order to assist the Drama League and Concert Party in their work on behalf of charities, and also for the purpose of helping any branch of social service in which an orchestra can be suitably employed. The 'Toc H' Entertainments have already raised over £1,000 for various charities, and the performers have also given their services at hospitals, the Leper Colony, the Borstal Institution, &c. The addition of an orchestra would very greatly increase their usefulness. Unfortunately there appear to be too few orchestral players among 'Toc H' members in the London area, and the committee therefore appeals to amateurs in general. There are, we know, many amateur orchestral players among our readers, and we commend this appeal to them. Those interested should write to Mr. Leslie W. Chorley, hon. orchestral director, 24, Wellmeadow Road, Lewisham, S.E.13.

Sheffield has paid a well-deserved honour to Dr. Henry Coward by presenting him with the freedom of the City. This is the fiftieth year of the Sheffield Musical Union, and Dr. Coward has been its sole conductor from the first—a wonderful record that, judging from the Doctor's vigour, is still happily a long way from being completed.

We have just turned up Dr. Coward's autobiography, in order to see how this famous body started. The facts are worth recalling as an example of modest beginnings. There was no 'town's meeting,' or flourish of trumpets. Young Coward, at that time a Board School teacher, was walking along Bramall Lane one night when he 'recognised an ardent sol-faist under a gas-lamp.' The pair discussed the advisability of reviving local interest in Tonic Sol-fa, and decided to call a meeting. As a result a Tonic Sol-fa Association was formed, with Coward as honorary conductor. The body later changed its name to that by which it has since become world-famous. Now, had those two young fellows been walking elsewhere that evening in 1876, or had they passed each other in a part of Bramall Lane other than the few square yards feebly lit up by that gas-lamp, there may have been no Musical Union, and the last half century of Yorkshire's choral history would have been different, and almost certainly less glorious.

The programme of the Three Choirs Festival at Worcester (September) has been settled. It contains a judicious blend of old and new. Among the choral works, in addition to the customary 'Messiah' and 'Elijah' are Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis,' 'The Kingdom,' 'For the Fallen,' Berlioz's 'Te Deum,' Charles Wood's 'Dirge for Two Veterans,' a Bach Cantata, and shorter pieces by Weelkes, Holst, Ethel Smyth, &c. The orchestral works include Brahms's C minor Symphony and the 'Enigma' Variations. The new works are by Bainton, Brent-Smith, Walford Davies, and W. H. Reed. Sir Ivor Atkins pointed out the difficulty of doing justice to modern composers, because of the experimental nature of much of their work, and also because music of such an exacting type could be presented only at the expense of the rest of the programme.

Putting the classics in their places is a popular pastime of the hour, but the thing is not often done so neatly and completely as in this extract from a recent programme of the Hallé Orchestra :

> The following celebrated Artists will appear at the remaining concerts of the series :
>
> March 4.—CESARE FORMICHI, and Third Symphony—Brahms.

The Music Bulletin, now edited by Basil Maine, has tapped something of a new vein in articles by poets and other non-musical artists. The point of view of such folk is usually of interest, and often of profit. The first of the series, in the March issue, is by Laurence Binyon. He writes modestly as a non-musician, and says some things with which musicians will agree. Inevitably he looks with the jealous eye of the poet on the setting of verses to music. It hurts him (and others of us as well, by the way) to hear words

> . . . hustled and teased, and made to sacrifice their natural value and natural relation, as they often seem to be in modern songs.

And many musicians are with him in the following :

> There is another thing. In music the executant is so prominent that he interposes a distraction. To one totally ignorant and inexperienced like myself, the miraculous and quite superhuman accomplishment of performers on pianoforte or violin is so fearfully fascinating that it is an effort to get past it to what they are performing.

The Handel Festival, after being killed regularly on paper by all sorts of well-sounding critical objections, is to be held again in June (5, 8, 10, 12). Sir Henry Wood succeeds Sir Frederic Cowen as conductor, and may be counted on to carry still farther the fine standard of big-scale choralism achieved by his predecessor. The programme takes note of the recent revival of interest in Handel's operas by drawing largely on that neglected part of his work. This fact alone should make this year's Festival more than usually interesting.

We hope that Dr. Harding's observations at the R.C.O. recently concerning the Choir-Training Examinations organized by that institution were noted by clergy, churchwardens, Parochial Church

Councils, and others who have to do with the appointment of organists. The examinations were instituted in response to suggestions put forward in the Archbishops' Report on Church Music. The cost to the College in labour and money has been considerable, but it was met in an ungrudging spirit that was the best of answers to critics who were over-ready to accuse the Council of indifference to the claims of choir-training. Yet the candidates presenting themselves for examination in this vital subject are so few that (as Dr. Harding said),

> . . . it is now a question of giving up, or of persevering a little longer in the hope that clergy and Church musicians will realise the importance of this movement.

As we have already pointed out in a previous discussion of this question, the responsibility in the long run falls on the clergy and others in whose hands lies the filling of appointments. They have but to demand that candidates shall produce credentials as to choir-training and church musicianship as distinct from mere solo-playing, and the examinations will at once receive the attention from organists that they deserve. There are two examinations, one of a simple character designed for those who do not hold the College Diplomas; the other, more advanced and comprehensive in scope, for Associates and Fellows. The College Council has just issued a pamphlet on the subject, which, with a copy of the syllabus and other particulars, may be had from the Registrar, Royal College of Organists, Kensington Gore, S.W.7. We strongly urge our clerical readers to obtain full information, whether they are in the throes of making an appointment or not.

In connection with the organ tests in the A.R.C.O. examinations, the attention of candidates is drawn to a notice by the hon. secretary, Dr. H. A. Harding, which appears on page 334 concerning Bach's Prelude on 'Alle Menschen müssen sterben.'

New Music

CHORAL MUSIC: UNISON SONGS

It is good to find a composer getting away from stock tunes now and again. Percy Judd, in one of the Oxford University Press 'Choral Songs,' mixes (though he does not quite blend) two-four and three-four time. No great difficulty is created thereby. This song, 'When Mary through the garden went,' is a pleasant addition to the too small store of songs suitable for Sunday School choirs. Mr. Judd's 'The Enchanted Princess' also has a few bars of three-four interpolated in its four-four rhythm. It is, however, rather less effective. H. G. Ley uses a similar device (alternation of six-eight and nine-eight) happily in 'The Glow-Worm,' and Norman Demuth contributes a modest setting of 'I know a bank.' Warlock's 'I have a garden' is more difficult; the singers need some independence. This composer, like many able preachers, does not easily come down from the heights. The children's sermon is notoriously difficult to do well. E. J. Moeran's 'Commendation of Music' has words above the child-level. It is a little dull, but would do for a class of older folk who want a fairly easy piece of melody that needs nice phrasing. Percy Turnbull sets Blake's 'Piping down the valleys wild' with agreeable freedom. It lies rather low, on the whole. Not many writers for children take sufficient advantage of their capacity for soaring happily and sweetly, and keeping 'in the air.' There is no need to write anything that must be strained for, of course; but too much growling on low notes—often C's and B's—is wasteful of the best parts of young voices. Dr. Whittaker has arranged the Purcell 'Evening Hymn' for unison singing. This is a fine test in long phrasing and rhythmic neatness and flow. All these are 'Oxford' songs.

In the Joseph Williams series is Felix White's 'A Rhyme of Time' (less interesting than his best work, but neat), and Alan Biggs's simple and rather reminiscent 'She is a winsome wee thing' (Burns). Felix White is in Curwen's list also, with a lilting ditty about 'Little Mister By-and-By.'

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

A good two-part song in the 'Oxford Choral Songs' series is Norman Demuth's 'Wind in the Trees' (with one tiny awkward corner of intonation, and an accompaniment that needs free fourth and fifth fingers in the right hand). Allegretto scherzando is the pace and style of E. T. Davies's three-part arrangement (s.s.c.) of an Anglesey folk-song, 'Y Gelynen' ('The Holly'). This is straighforward. A neat canon is Alan Biggs's 'What does little birdie say?' (Joseph Williams). The canon is a good device, that might be used more often. Too few people who try to write for children can get away from a dull harmonization, mostly in thirds and sixths, of an unoriginal tune. Why not use more imitation, canonic or otherwise, cross the parts freely, get away from stodgy four-square rhythms, and write a pianoforte part that really contributes something to the life of the piece—does more than merely fill in the harmonies the voices cannot supply? A few composers can 'fill the bill' thus, but they are far too few.

'The Spring Rose' (s.s.c.c.), by Edgar Bainton (Joseph Williams), is unaccompanied, and contains plenty of work, in its modest way, for singers who can grade and shade their tone.

Winthrop Rogers issues A. P. Alderson's easy two-parter, 'The Fairies'—a happy little effort; and the still slighter 'Round Robin'—a very easy canon.

For women's choirs (s.s.c.) with some good altos who can touch the low G—and do something with it—Felix White's 'The Elf Queen's Delight' will be good sport. It is just a shade 'mannered' (Boosey).

Peter Warlock presents problems worth working at in his 'Call for the Robin Redbreast and the Wren,' a dirge for unaccompanied female choir. This is a trifle crabbed writing, but it could be made to sound a good deal better than it looks.

Novello's 'School Songs,' Book 276, is a good eightpenny worth. There are six British national songs, with Geoffrey Shaw's new descants. This is Set 3. Each song can also be had separately. Here are just the musicianly, easy-flowing parts, in adding which this writer makes the job seem so easy. So it is—to a real musician who knows his job and his constituency.

Also from Novello's come two-part arrangements of Horn's 'Cherry Ripe' (s.c.—down to B, with one optional A), German's 'The Camel's Hump,' a jolly affair (down to C), 'The Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond' (by John E. West, second voice down to C), and 'Now once again' (best known as the 'Easter Hymn') to the tune 'Lasst uns erfreuen'

(one low C only). Elgar has arranged his easy four-part song 'How calmly the evening' for S.S.C. This is a good item for Church use.

MALE-VOICE

John Bennet's 'Come, shepherds, follow me' (words, 1599) is newly-set by Gerrard Williams for T.T.B.B., unaccompanied, in modal fashion. There are some gentle, sweet moments in it, though the pace is quick. A bold setting of Scott's 'Pibroch of Donald the Black' is that by W. E. Smith. It is not strikingly fresh. A fair amount of it is unison work, and fff is demanded at the end, in five parts. Fairly simple-minded is Gerrard Williams's 'Old Farmer Buck' (Curwen). This is the traditional tune to which most people sing 'There was a little man, And he had a little gun.' Quick-change singing, p to f, at full speed, is needed here (no pianoforte). 'The Silver Penny,' for the same combination, is an original tune of Gibbs's, with some not too appropriate chromatics. This composer does not seem to have struck a very rich vein of interest in his recent part-songs. Is he, like almost all our young men, writing too much? Most of them do that, because many publishers are too kind—or less than judicious.

Herbert Pierce has arranged for BAR. solo and T.T.B.B., Vaughan Williams's 'Ca' the yowes' (Curwen).

Elgar's 'The Herald' (Novello) is a grim ballad demanding fff as well as pppp treatment. Male choirs will enjoy its dramatic style. It is quite straightforward, save for a few bars.

Another of Warlock's dirges is 'The Shrouding of the Duchess of Malfi' (Rogers, T.T.B.B.). It is difficult stuff for persevering singers, and is calculated to give the hearers a shudder at the end.

Kenneth Finlay has made a very easy arrangement for T.T.B.B. of 'The Jolly Miller' (Ashdown).

MIXED-VOICE

Of the Oxford Press batch the best numbers (S.A.T.B.) are Warlock's 'The Spring of the Year' (short, slow, sustained, soft, and difficult), and the very effective arrangement by Harvey Grace of the Purcell 'Evening Hymn' (with the runs apportioned out so that the parts get fat and lean in turn—but it is all lovely). Dr. Vaughan Thomas's music to Collins's 'How sleep the brave,' for S.M.S.A.T. BAR. B., is dignified, well-wrought, appropriate, and effective, without being very difficult.

Arthur Benjamin has taken a difficult subject in 'The Mystery'; he partially illuminates it. The style is wisely simple (S.A.T.B., unaccompanied).

Winthrop Rogers issues Besly's 'Crossing the Bar'—a pleasant, easy arrangement; and 'The Silence of Maternal Hills,' which contains ah and oo vocalising, and one or two bits of divided part-work that are not quite fully effective. But he writes agreeably almost all the time, and has a fresh thing or two to say—or, rather, an old thing in a rather new way. These are both for S.A.T.B.

Curwen's list includes Gerrard Williams's arrangement of an old tune, 'The Farmer's Daughter,' that is associated with the tragedy of a 'drownèd maiden.' The writing is simple.

Holst's 'Sing me the men' is a motet, unaccompanied, with four sopranos, part of the time, weaving with the altos above the tenor tune. Good, strong, diatonic stuff this, with scarce a chromatic note, but with many a decent, rugged discord. To those who like the Holstian downright, upright, and forthright methods, this will appeal.

A third Curwen item is Martin Shaw's choral song for Christmas, 'The Crib,' for S.T.B. soli and S.A.T.B. chorus, again without accompaniment. Here is something seemly for the sweet commendation of the old message of Christmas love. The parts divide a little near the end, but it is quite plain sailing.

Cyril Jenkins's settings of Shirley's 'The glories of our blood and state' and of Collins's 'How sleep the brave' (Paxton) are curiously old-fashioned. The latter is chromatic, and not strongly so; the former is a line-by-line setting of words that are attributed to Shelley on the copy!

Arnold sends a slight, pretty setting (S.A.T.B.), by Alec Rowley, of an old rhyme, 'Down in yonder meadow.'

Hawkes issue some more Russian part-songs—Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Hindu Song,' from 'Sadko' (S.A.T.B.B.—the tune rather laboriously oo-d and ah-d upon by every one who can get a cut at it); Cui's 'Two Roses' (S.A.T.B.—drawing-roomy); and Tanéïèv's 'From land to land' (double chorus; square-cut, without much interest). Chester also sends a Rimsky-Korsakov extract, the 'Cradle Song,' from the opera 'The Maid of Pskov,' arranged by the experienced hand of H. A. Fricker (S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B.). An easy sample this, with humming accompaniment.

Novellos have two Dale part-songs, 'Rosa Mystica' and 'Cradle Song.' The first, for tenor solo and four-part chorus, is a setting in free rhythm of some words from 'The Mediæval Anthology' of Mary Segar. Properly sung (it is not too difficult for keen singers) it should sound a delicate and fragrant bit of music. The 'Cradle Song' needs a soprano soloist and eight-part choir. Here again is sweetness and light. But the balance will need very careful thinking out, in order to get the parts flowing rightly. It is well worth a good choir's attention. To wind up, we have, also from Novello, Rowley's 'A-maying, a-playing,' with 'hey' and 'ho,' and all the rest of the happy spring-time patter, nattily touched off for S.A.T.B.

A.

PIANOFORTE

Misfortunes never come singly, and pianoforte sonatas, which happen rarely, when they do happen, happen in threes. Here are two from Murdoch's, by H. V. Jervis-Read and Algernon Ashton respectively, and a third from Augener's, by Frank Bridge. This last is that Sonata 'To the memory of Ernest Bristowe Farrar,' which was introduced by Myra Hess some months ago. It is a big work, uncompromising in its demands both on the performer and on the listener. It has all the sincerity, skill, and fine seriousness which we associate with this composer, and contains no cheap or facile effects, and no signs of uncertainty of handling. The opening theme, which is in the nature of a Motto, is impressive; and fine use of it is made at the climax of the first movement, and again at the end of the last, when it forms a sort of Coda to the whole work. The Andante ben moderato—there is no Scherzo—contains moments of quiet beauty which are a welcome contrast with the strenuous and stressful character of the other numbers; and, incidentally, the latest developments of Bridge's harmonic style are more easily understood in the simpler versions of this movement than in the more crowded pages of the others. Those who wish to get inside the work, therefore, will do well to approach it in this way. Some of the handfuls of notes that result from the use of the ninth with appoggiatura effects and chromatic alterations are grim at first sight. The composer seems to rely too much on an effect which is highly-coloured and apt to become tiring.

Jervis-Read's Sonata is on a smaller scale, but here too a high level of technical ability is required. Again there are three sections: the second is an Intermezzo of dance character, there being no formal slow movement. The first number is built out of a simple diatonic theme, which is very fully developed, and recurs again and again in different forms. The Finale has a quiet and solemn beginning and contains at its climax a good swinging tune, which leads to a quiet close. At the last bar are written the words 'Sic Vita,' which suggest that the work has a philosophical basis of some sort. It is not easy to gather this from the Sonata itself. Unfortunately the music, despite obvious sincerity, does not remain at the level of its best moments.

Algernon Ashton's Sonata in A minor, Op. 170, has four long movements, and asks the listener's attention for a longer time than it can command. The composer's facility is at once obvious; the music flows easily along, and there is no apparent reason why it should ever stop. But the themes have not the strength to bear a structure of such weight, and the facility becomes wearisome. Mr. Ashton's lyrical talent is seen at its best in the Intermezzo, a number which is reminiscent of the weaker Brahms, but has a charm of its own. Even here, however, the composer allows himself to write 'bridge' passages that are little more than mere temporising and have no impetus behind them.

There is none of this facility about Ireland's music. Even when he is working in a lighter style, as in the two new pieces which Augener's issue, his thought has concentration, and is finely-disciplined. 'April' is a charming thing, which develops its material into a firmly-designed whole: it has more surface charm and a readier appeal than some of this composer's music, but does not lack the sterner qualities that we associate with him. 'Bergomask' is a festival piece, with the spirit of an occasion in it, and some exhilarating rhythmic and harmonic effects. The 'development section' of the piece is a good example of the composer's methods, and the whole thing is individual and interesting. Both are difficult, the first calling for quick and delicate fingers, the second for good wrists and fine rhythmic sense.

Eduard Poldini's 'Episodes à la Cour,' from the same publishers, are frankly music of the lightest sort. But good workmanship gives a certain quality to their very skin-deep charm, which is seen at its best in 'Serait-elle amoureuse?' and 'Couplet Malicieux.' Somewhat heavier in style are Adam Carse's Three Preludes. The first of these, in G minor, is a sincere and effective piece of writing, requiring considerable technique. The second, in D major, a study in the phrasing of inner melody, is probably the best of the three, and would sound charming if well-played. The last, a Waltz-Prelude in B minor, is somewhat heavy in general quality, and has less distinction than the two earlier pieces. Henschel's 'Les Poules' is a caprice in the Couperin manner, requiring great finger dexterity: a useful study, amusing if carried through with sufficient 'snap' (Augener). Felix White's 'The Call of the East' (Schirmer) is music of a very different stamp. It is something of an experiment in colour, but the composer's sure sense of style and form keeps it in firm hand, and gives a unity which such experiments often lack. The lay-out is thoroughly pianistic, and careful playing discovers a great deal of beauty and poetry in music which is at first difficult to grasp.

Particularly interesting is Borwick's arrangement of Bach's Chorale Prelude on 'O Lamm Gottes unschuldig.' To begin with, the format is attractive, the cover design good, and the print a model of clearness and good spacing. The Prelude itself was singularly well adapted for transcription, because of the first two of the three verses being set for manuals only. More subtlety of phrasing and general treatment is possible here on the pianoforte than on the organ. In the last verse, with the Chorale in the pedal part, the pianoforte loses. But the arrangement is done with exceptional skill, so that only on rare occasions is any arpeggio-ing of the bass necessary. Doubling is here and there perhaps open to criticism: to double a chord on the pianoforte is a very different thing from adding a mp 16-ft. stop to an already f or ff 8-ft. and 4-ft. ensemble; but even so, the thickness, if tactfully managed, need never offend. Weakness, despite all Borwick's skill, is felt in the last eight bars: the A-pedal cannot possibly, on the pianoforte, secure its full effect. This is a small point, however, and pianists must be grateful for a fine addition to their répertoire. Good technique is required, but there is no scope for display, as such, which gives this arrangement an atmosphere very different from that of some similar efforts by other pianists. Also from the Oxford University Press come three additions to the Oxford Pianoforte Series. Norman Demuth's Canzonet is a tuneful and attractive number, of no great difficulty or distinction. Harry Farjeon's Invention and Pavan is an interesting attempt to say something up-to-date in the form of the two-part Invention (the Pavan is, however, not entirely in two parts). It is doubtful whether this form is capable of much development now. At any rate, if anything is to be said in such a bare and simple way, it must be something really new, and itself strikingly simple. Béla Bartók might do it, but few others could. Mr. Farjeon's skill stands him in good stead; but it is strange to find in a work of this sort that the chief subject never appears in its inverted form. Perhaps the composer would have called this academic: it would, anyway, have added interest. Michael Mullinar's lighter numbers in 'Grimm's Fairy Tales' are rhythmical and bright, and come off better than the slower-moving ones. There is a suspicion of affectation here. The composer writes in the modes when it suits him, but not always as if they were his natural idiom, and the use in 'Snowdrop' of a 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' cadence is certainly open to this criticism. The pieces are not very easy.

Maurice Besly's 'Studies in Tone-Colour' (Winthrop Rogers) is a set of ten pieces of moderate difficulty, designed to introduce to the learner some of the subtleties of phrasing and interpretation. The pieces have descriptive titles, and each of them is provided with an introductory note giving hints about form, technique, and appreciation. The volume is attractively set out, and the pieces should be of value to the really musical pupil. They show the qualities we associate with this composer—effectiveness, enterprise, no lack of musicianship, and no pretensions. Some of these qualities appear also in Sir Herbert Brewer's very light 'The Coquette,' a tuneful piece in gavotte style, published by Joseph Williams.

It has been rather 'the thing' to treat Arthur Bliss as if he were a composer only half in earnest: but, earnest or not, his work has always shown a terseness and concentration which are often lacking in more consciously 'serious' music. Two Interludes for pianoforte, just published by Chester, have these qualities in a marked degree. The first of them, moreover, has real emotional power and beauty, and is without a moment's uncertainty or hesitation. The second of the pieces, lighter in style, is less impressive in result: the themes have less distinction, and the constant clash of major and minor concords is apt to be irritating. Pianists, however, ought certainly to get this publication, if only for the sake of the first number, which is a fine piece of music.

Admirers of Chaminade will welcome a new 'Berceuse Arabe,' Op. 166, and a volume of five pieces (not new) published by Enoch. Arthur H. Stockwell publishes Adeline Prince's 'Morning and Evening Pictures,' Op. 11, and Una Bourne's 'Marche Grotesque' is published by Enoch.

T. A.

ORGAN MUSIC

The hymn-tune as a basis for organ music is familiar; the plainsong tone is also drawn on considerably, especially by French composers; but the Anglican chant is so far almost untouched. Crotch wrote an Introduction and Fugue on a single chant of Hayes, but apart from this, I have met with no other work of the kind save Basil Harwood's 'Three Preludes on Anglican Chants,' just issued by Novello. The chants are a single in F, by Benjamin Cooke, the well-known double in E minor, by Matthew Camidge, and Lord Mornington's cheerful example in E flat. There is an obvious difficulty in the use of such material. If the chant is to be clearly exposed throughout the piece its lack of rhythmic interest is likely to be a drawback. On the other hand the hearer naturally wants to be able to see the connection between the piece and the chant. Dr. Harwood has taken the free line, and has evolved from the slender thematic basis three well-knit and interesting pieces that would serve admirably as voluntaries. Unless the chant be played first, however, one is liable to miss the references to the theme. On the score of clearness, the piece on the Mornington chant is the most satisfactory, the theme being played slowly twice, first in thirds in the left hand, second in the treble. The Preludes are moderately difficult.

Elgar's orchestral transcription of Handel's Overture in D minor has been arranged for organ solo by H. F. Ellingford. It lends itself well to organ treatment, but one has an impression that Mr. Ellingford might have produced a version much less difficult without any appreciable sacrifice of effect. For example, there are some shakes that are easy and effective in the orchestral version; on the keyboard they yield very little result for a lot of trouble. The rather liberal use of octaves is also a questionable point. Mr. Ellingford has followed Elgar in differentiating between and in the slow part of the Overture. Nevertheless, there is good ground for playing the latter as according to the convention of the period. It is easier, and clearer in effect. This arrangement will make a fine organ solo; but perhaps an even finer one might have been produced by transcribing direct from Handel. More may be lost than gained by transcribing a transcription (Novello).

Messrs. Stainer & Bell send a batch of new works by Alan Gray—a Fantasia in A, Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Choral Preludes on 'Rock of Ages,' 'St. Matthew,' and 'St. Oswald' (issued separately), and short Preludes on 'University,' 'St. Flavian,' and 'St. Peter' (under one cover). Dr. Gray is a courageous man to take as a basis a tune by the despised Dykes, but the result—an attractive march-like piece—justifies him. This Prelude, like its two companions, is by way of being programme music, a portion of the hymn-text being printed between the staves. The Passacaglia is a dour piece with some striking harmony; the Fantasia has a tuneful and expressive opening and close, with a vigorous middle section: an attractive work.

J. H. Reginald Dixon's 'Introduction, Variations, and Fugue on Councillor Brook's hymn-tune, "Sedbergh,"' is mainly on old-fashioned lines, but is fluently written, and the fugue runs along well. The final presentment of the tune would perhaps have been better with a consistent treatment, instead of a different method for each line. The work yields a lot of effect for a moderate amount of trouble (Laudy).

In J. Stuart Archer's Six Choral Preludes the tunes used are 'Corde natus,' 'St. Bernard,' 'Irish,' 'Redhead' ('Bright the vision'), 'St. Peter,' and Capetown' ('Three in One, and One in Three'). In all the six there is capital variety of treatment and a welcome freshness in style. The supply of organ music on our better-known English tunes is now so ample that there is room only for such as show originality and taste, as these do. The pieces are of moderate length and difficulty (Paxton).

Hugh Blair's 'Marche Funèbre et Hymne Angelique' is less pretentious than its title leads us to expect. It is a straightforward little funeral march with Gibbons's 'Angels' Hymn' as a contrasting subject in the middle section. The harmonization of the old tune is a bit strained—like the title. Both the March and Choral Preludes contain an undue number of misprints (Paxton).

A long and ambitious work is Leo Sowerby's 'Choral Prelude on a Calvinist Hymn-tune.' There are many reminders of Franck in its mood and chromaticism. The composer shows, as in his earlier works, a fine command of harmonic and rhythmic resource, and he knows how to move to and from a big climax. Much of the writing is in five parts. The piece calls for a good organ and player (Boston Music Co.).

In a large parcel from Augener's by far the most significant work is an Introduction and Fugue in F minor by Alan Gray — played, I believe, at the Gloucester Festival last year. It has great vigour, with more than a touch a roughness, and it does what all fugues should do (but don't)—it grows. Particularly good is the final section, with a major version of the subject over a dominant pedal, and harmonies that recall some of the pedal-points of Widor. This work would make a fine recital number, given a big organ and a good player.

Schumann's Four Sketches for Pedal Pianoforte have been newly transcribed for organ by W. A. Wightman and edited by Henry G. Ley. This is a good playable version. Dr. Ley has also edited No. 5 of the set of Six Studies—the well-known Canon in B minor.

For cinema organists in need of fairly long set pieces, nothing could be better than Coleridge-Taylor's Valse Suite, 'Three-Fours.' All the six have been transcribed by Oliver King and Reginald Goss Custard.

Two little sets of pieces by C. Corbett Sumsion—two Andantes and four Preludes—show serious intention, but a lack of experience in writing. The counterpoint is apt to become fidgety, and the composer pays too little regard to the convenience of the player. Hence, on page 5 of the four Preludes, frequent stretches of a tenth, and even a twelfth, for the left hand. The Prelude on 'Watchet Auf' has vigour, and would 'come off' mainly because of the fine effect of the tune on the full Pedal, but the lay-out of the accompanying parts is not always good.

Leonard Butler's 'Alla Minuetto' is pretty, but quite devoid of originality. Every bar of it might be found in some one or other of the countless minuets written since Haydn.

W. A. Jefferson's 'Berceuse and Serenade,' 'Fanfare-Fantasy,' and 'Grand Chœur Symphonique' are unoriginal, and (what is more) clumsily written and pretentious. All these works are from Augener's.

Some elaborate programme music comes from Delvigne, Brussels: 'Trois Poèmes Bibliques,' by Raymond Moulaert. The subjects are: Lazarus and the Rich Man, the Parable of the Lost Sheep, and the Parable of the Wise and Foolish Virgins. The style is very free and modern, and recalls that of Maleingreau. The composer wisely avoids too detailed a treatment of the programme, and so is able to maintain continuity; and as his themes are significant and well-developed, the result is not only highly picturesque, but also satisfying musically. There is real charm in the pastoral theme and the little 'call' for shepherd's pipe in the Lost Sheep piece. The rejoicing at the end is expressed in a typical French toccata outburst. Perhaps the third piece is the best, with its three well-contrasted themes—the call to awake, the theme of the Virgins (varied according to whether the wise or foolish ones are being discussed), and the march-like subject for the arrival of the Bridegroom. Very striking is the way the Foolish Virgin theme gradually subsides into slumber, which is broken into by the call and the gradual approach of the march. Good players on the look-out for striking programme-music should see these pieces. A large and easily-handled organ is necessary, and the text on which the music is based should of course be printed or announced.

Some Bach arrangements have to be noticed. O. Thomas has compiled a Bach Album in two parts, consisting of fifty-one short pieces, mainly extracts from works of all kinds. One questions the policy of taking portions of (say) one of the '48'—the last section of the five-voice C sharp minor Fugue is a case in point; and a snippet of nine bars from the Passacaglia is of little use or effect. But there are many pieces that are complete in themselves, unhackneyed, and of a type suitable for study, so the collection should be of value to students, and for use as voluntaries (Gadow & Sohn, Hildburghausen: Novello).

Schotts have just issued 'Ten Bach Transcriptions' by Harvey Grace, in two books of five. For obvious reasons this reviewer can do no more than name the pieces: Bourrée in D, from the fourth Suite for orchestra; Passepied in E, from the English Suite in E minor; the Adagio from the sixth 'Brandenburg' Concerto; Air from the Suite in D (here provided with an alternative bass for facility and in order to enable the Swell pedal to be used freely); Adagio from the 'Goldberg' Variations; Minuet and Polacca from the first Brandenburg Concerto; Lento Espressivo (made up of two airs from the Schemelli Song Book); Sarabande from the D major Suite for violoncello; the lovely Adagio from the first 'Brandenburg' Concerto; and a delicate little Bourrée from the Orchestral Suite in C. The arrangements are all of moderate difficulty.

H. G.

STRINGS

It is good to see Miss Dorothy Howell, who first became known through a symphonic poem, now turning her attention to the smaller forms of composition. It is the small form that has the best chance of frequent hearing. If this were more widely felt, public and composer would gain thereby. And the small form does not necessarily mean the 'pot-boiler.' In her short (and easy) piece for violin and pianoforte, entitled, 'The Moorings' (Augener), Miss Howell, for instance, has given us something that is both charming and individual. It belongs to the class of work for which there must be a demand. Well-written music of this kind is not only satisfactory to the player, but also interesting practice. Less characteristic and more difficult are two 'Canzonas,' with dances by N. Medtner (Zimmerman). Although the material is good and solid, the 'Canzona' in B minor seems to me to fall between two stools, for it is neither easy enough to tempt the amateur nor brilliant enough to repay the virtuoso. Two Sonatinas by Richard H. Walthew (Augener), for violin and pianoforte, deserve to be recommended for their simplicity and their intrinsic interest, which is not a bit less musical for being also straightforward. They offer little difficulty to players of modest abilities, and only once is the violinist required to reach to the sixth position. The passage can, of course, be transposed an octave lower, in which case those who have mastered the third position will be qualified to play both Sonatas. In any case, the sudden jump to the sixth position in a Vivace seems to me an error of judgment in a work of this nature.

B. V.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The Choir-Training Examinations will be held as follows:

CHM. Diploma Examination on Tuesday, May 11; and the Certificate Examination on Wednesday, May 12. Last day of entry, April 14.

Associate candidates are particularly requested to note that the Chorale Prelude, 'Alle Menschen müssen sterben' ('All men must die'), referred to in Group 5—Examination Regulations—is to be found on page 121 of Novello's new edition of Book 15, and on page 119 of the old edition.

H. A. Harding,
Hon. Secretary.

NEW HYMNALS AND PSALTERS

'Songs of Praise.' Edited by Percy Dearmer, R. Vaughan Williams, and Martin Shaw.
[Oxford University Press.]

'School Worship.' Edited by G. Thalben Ball.
[Congregational Union of England and Wales, Memorial Hall, E.C.4.]

'Golden Bells: Hymns for Young People.' New and enlarged edition. Edited by E. J. Bellerby.
[Children's Special Service Mission, 3, 5, & 7, Wigmore Street, W.1.]

'The Psalter Newly Pointed.'
[S.P.C.K.]

'The Welwyn Psalter.' Edited by the Rev. W. E. Hardcastle.
[Curwen.]

'The Psalms, Books 4 and 5, Rendered into English in a Rhythm consonant with that of the Original Hebrew.' By E. H. Askwith.
[Martin Hopkinson.]

'A Liturgical Psalter, arranged for use in the services of the Church.' By Walter Howard Frère, Bishop of Truro.
[Mowbray.]

Every modern hymnal is necessarily a compromise. Reform pulls one way, 'favourite tunes' the other. Editors may call the weak favourite 'Second Tune,' or they may relegate it to the Appendix; but they dare not leave it out—not entirely, at all events. These three new collections show varying degrees of courage. In all the move is in the right direction, and in all we may be sure the musical editors would have moved a good deal farther had they dared. 'Songs of Praise' is avowedly modelled largely on the 'English Hymnal,' and the names of the Editors are so clear an indication of its aims and style that review is almost unnecessary. We are glad to see that faux-bourdon and descant are freely used, though some of the examples seem too elaborate. Nor are they all in keeping. For instance, Dr. Vaughan Williams adds to Monk's 'Eventide' a winding, complex descant and a harmonization that strike us as being out of place as companion to so complacent a tune. The perpetuation of a couple of weak features of the 'English Hymnal' is to be regretted. We are not among those who object to the use of folk-songs as hymn-tunes, but we hold that such as are pressed into service must justify themselves by their musical worth. The 'English Hymnal' contained a largish proportion of folk-melodies that would have been rejected as weak had they been signed by a Victorian composer, and it is a pity some of them are reproduced in 'Songs of Praise.' The other unfortunate feature is the harmonization of the French tunes. These are bad in every way. They have far too many chords—usually one to every note of the melody—and so the effect is stiff; they are clumsily laid out; and they are poor as harmony. Nobody said a good word for them when they appeared in the 'English Hymnal' (on the contrary), and one can only express regret that Dr. Vaughan Williams and Mr. Martin Shaw should have adopted them. As an offset, however, it must be said that the harmonization of the pure plainsong is excellent; particularly good are some of the alternative accompaniments in small notes, consisting of a few sustained chords. There are many fine new tunes, and the collection as a whole, both in regard to text and music, is so good that we are surprised it is not a little better. The chief need now is for a new and drastically revised edition of the 'English Hymnal,' based on the experiences of those who have used it from the first. The result would be as near the ideal as reasonably could be hoped for. 'Songs of Praise' might have made a near approach to that ideal, had it not adopted from the 'E. H.' some features that have all along been generally admitted to be weak.

'School Worship' has been compiled for use in schools, week-day and Sunday, Young People's Fellowships, Guilds, &c. Mr. Thalben Ball has got together an excellent lot of tunes, some of the best of the new ones being from his own pen. Again we have to regret the inclusion of some weak folk-tunes and poor arrangements of French melodies from the 'English Hymnal.' There are, too, some adaptations of a type that ought by now to be extinct, e.g., a poor tune made out of Beethoven's Romance in G, a couple from Mendelssohn's 'Songs without Words,' &c. Perhaps an even worse case (because it is perpetrated to-day when folk ought to know better) is the maltreatment of a fine Rouen melody by changing it from 777.777 into 775.775 metre. (No. 69. The adapter hides his identity, from modesty or shame under the initials 'R. E.') Apropos of adaptations, Boyd's 'Pentecost' ('Fight the good fight') is stated to he 'Harmonized by H. Walford Davies,' which is true, but not all the truth, as Sir Walford has also completely changed the rhythm—for the better, too. If the melody could also be rewritten, a good tune might be the result. The book gives, at the end, nearly a hundred pages of 'Orders of Worship for Various Occasions, with Prayers, Litanies, and Responsive Devotions.' Both notations are used, the Sol-fa placed in conjunction with the staff in such a way that the users of the book may with little trouble become dual notationists. A capital feature is the clear spacing of the music; too often the addition of Tonic Sol-fa leads to a congested and ugly page. 'School Worship' strikes us as being a notable advance on any other hymnal designed for the use of the young.

In 'Golden Bells' the 'favourite tune' pulls so hard that reform has but a poor chance. In the Committee's Preface we read:

> It is only fair to Dr. Bellerby to state that he was not responsible for the selection of the tunes, some of which the Committee desired to insert rather for their recognised popularity than for their artistic merit.

This is frank dealing, and the Committee must not complain if it is told not less frankly that the deliberate placing of popularity before merit is a principle that is no more justified in the compilation of a hymnal than in the ordinary conduct of life. The first edition of this book appeared thirty-five years ago, and the new version does not ignore the improvement in musical taste that has come about in the meantime. It is a pity that the Committee, being aware of this improvement, did not show more courage, and discard (or at all events push into an Appendix) many of the feeble and commonplace verses and tunes of Sankey, P. P. Bliss, McGranahan, and other 'composers' of the facile, revivalist type. However, 'Golden Bells' contains many good tunes, whose popularity in the widest sense of the term should have encouraged the Committee to value 'artistic quality' far more highly than it does. We are glad to see among the older tunes several examples of the so-called 'fuguing' type, such as 'Diadem.' On paper they make no great appearance; but hear them sung by a crowd! A word of praise is due to the clear printing and lay-out of this book. The bindings range from paper to full leather.

Anglican Psalters, like hymnals, can hardly be uncompromising, partly because Anglican chanting itself is a compromise, and also because choirs and congregations are loth to change a method in use, no matter how bad it may be proved to be. The minimum of compromise had a place in the 'English Psalter,' which took the bold line of upsetting use and wont. The new S.P.C.K. book, 'The Psalter Newly Pointed,' takes a more placable line. It recognises the need for reform, but we think its somewhat timid view will leave things pretty much where they are. All psalters begin by telling choirs in the Preface that good chanting should be like good reading. We need go no farther than the opening number, the Venite, in order to see how this ideal is approached in the three latest methods of pointing. Here are a few specimen verses; we choose those that show the greatest difference of method. (In order to avoid typographical complications, we give no marks save the bar that shows the end of the recitation.)

'English Psalter':

O come let us | sing unto the Lord:
Let us heartily re- | joice in the strength of our salvation.

Let us come before his | presence with thanksgiving:
And shew ourselves | glad in him with psalms.

In his hand are all the | corners of the earth:
And the | strength of the hills is his also.

O come let us | worship and fall down:
And | kneel before the Lord our Maker.

For he is the | Lord our God:
And we are the people of his | pasture and the sheep of his hand.

'Psalter Newly Pointed' (the 'Welwyn Psalter' is the same, save in one or two small features):

O come let us | sing unto the Lord:
Let us heartily rejoice in the | strength of our salvation.

Let us come before his presence with | thanksgiving:
And shew ourselves | glad in him with psalms.

In his hand are all the | corners of the earth:
And the strength of the | hills is his also.

O come let us worship and | fall down:
And kneel be- | fore the Lord our Maker,

For he is the | Lord our God:
And we are the people of his pasture and the | sheep of his hand.

We think there can be no question as to the first of these methods giving the nearest approach to good reading—always provided that the experiment is made from the reading point of view, and not from that of conventional chanting. We make the above comparison because the Venite, perhaps, shows in a condensed form how widely authorities who agree as to the ideal may differ as to the means of attaining it. It is only fair to add that the S.P.C.K. Psalter endeavours to avoid the stereotyped rhythm of chanting by the use of various signs—spaced letters for important words, a dot under a syllable to denote lightness, a half-bar-line instead of a whole one to indicate a light treatment of the two syllables that follow, &c. These signs, however, are open to the objection that they add to the complications of the printed page, and so run counter to the present-day feeling that such marks should be as few as possible. Great pains have been taken in the laying-out; the Preface is full and explanatory, and contains some wise words that all choirmasters will gain by reading. The whole question is so beset with difficulties that the Editors' modest final words must be taken to apply more or less to all attempts at reform at the present juncture. They 'would have their work regarded as a beginning of a great quest, not its end.' It may well be that the issue of three new Psalters almost simultaneously will advance the quest indirectly by drawing attention to the need for reform. In any case, every choirmaster should examine the books carefully, and test the chanting of his own singers in the light of the principles there laid down.

In 'The Welwyn Psalter' marks are reduced to a minimum. The singer has to assume that in the normal mediation and ending each word is sung to a separate note; there is thus only one bar-line—that which closes the recitation. In the exceptions, the disposition of notes and words is shown by dashes, double dots, and ties. This simplicity has, we think, been attained at the cost of some freedom in the pointing. Obviously such treatments as those quoted above from the 'English Psalter' Venite would involve an increase of secondary marks, because the three notes of the mediation and the five of the ending would have to accommodate a good many more words than has been customary in Anglican chanting. For example, compare the 'English Psalter' pointing of this (second half of chant):

Their | talking . is a- | gainst the . most | High

(which is surely as near ordinary good reading as can be); and the 'Welwyn Psalter' version:

Their talking is a- | gainst the möst High,

with its conventional and undue lengthening of 'most.'

And the principle of economy in marks cannot be held to excuse the retention of such a bad pointing as:

For he hath re- | gärdĕd.

The S.P.C.K. Psalter is bolder with:

For | he hath . re- | garded.

There are some good new departures in the 'Welwyn Psalter,' such as the dagger indicating where the second half of a double-chant should come; and the elision of the reciting note in the case of very short verses, the chord of the recitation being played on the organ, and the voices resting. It would be even better to give such verses in unison, the organist reharmonizing the chant in such a way as to make a satisfactory progression from the last chord of the mediation to the first chord of the ending, and so bringing about a complete elision. The device is common (and very effective) in plainsong, and its entire adoption in Anglican chanting would remove many absurd pointings.

We understand that this Psalter has been tried with small village choirs and congregations and found to be easily grasped. This is all to the good, but we wish the actual pointing had shown a more courageous departure from some of the conventions that have made Anglican chanting one of the least satisfactory parts of public worship. The way of reform lies, we believe, in an almost ruthless assault on use-and-wont; in fact, it may well prove that the quickest way of attaining the ideal would be to read the Psalms for a year or two, and then take up the problems of chanting afresh,

(Continued on page 342.)

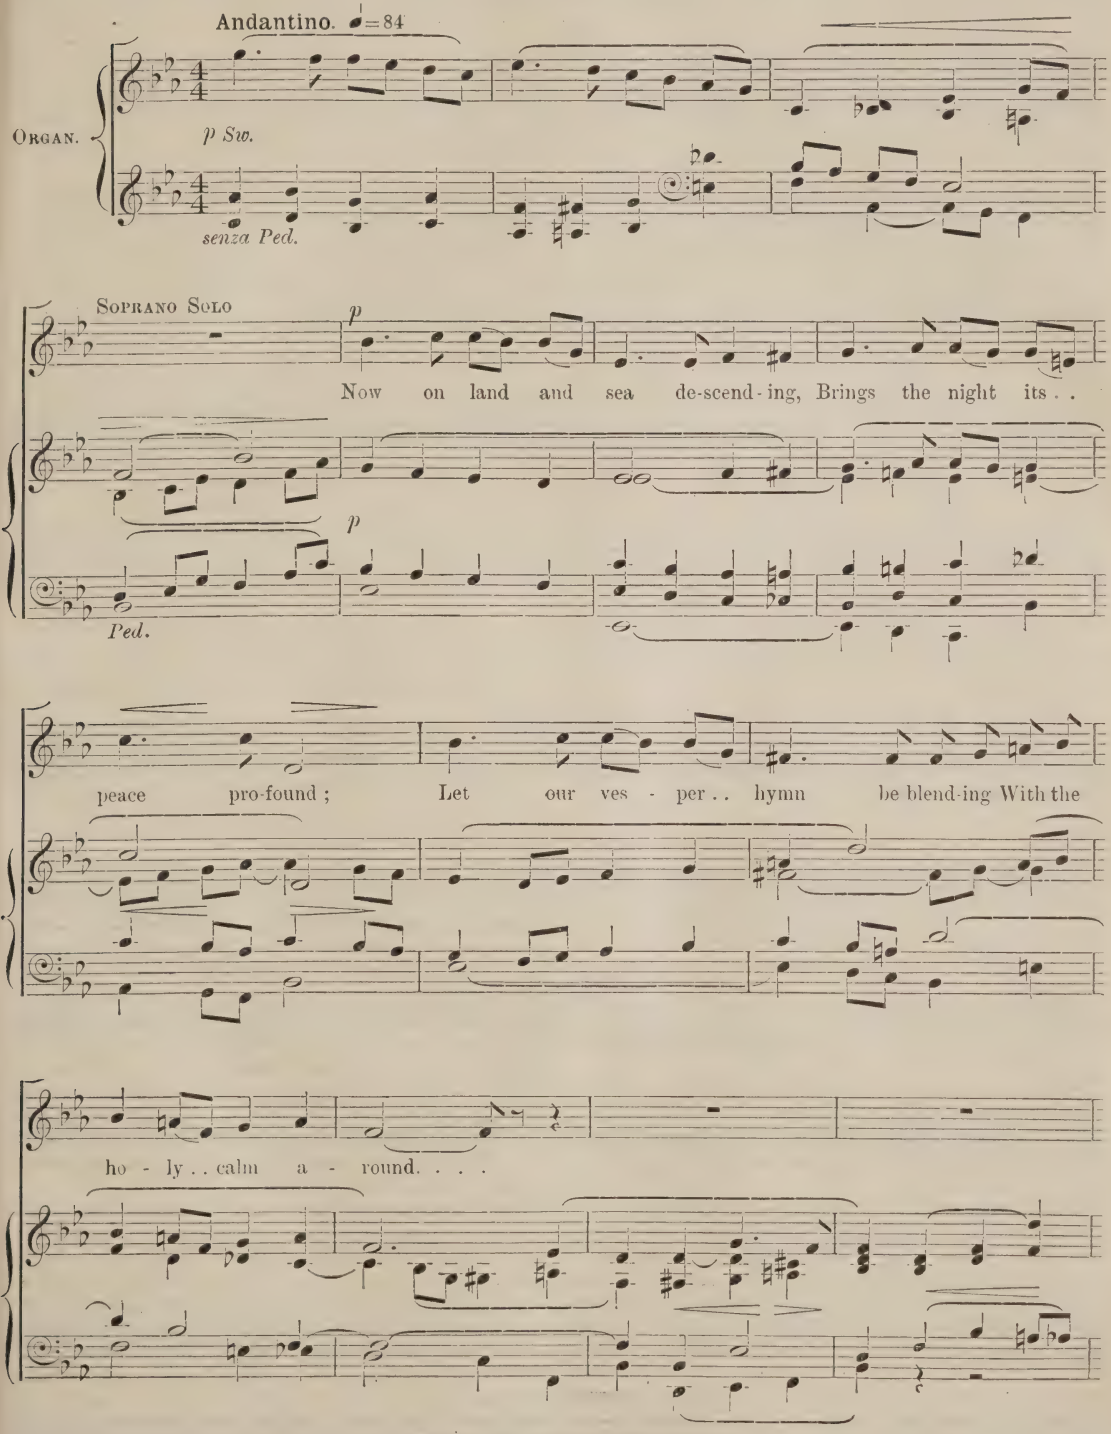
Now on land and sea descending

EVENING ANTHEM

Words by S. Longfellow Music by Ernest Halsey

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Andantino. ♩=84
Organ.
p Sw.
senza Ped.
Soprano Solo
p
Now on land and sea de-scend-ing, Brings the night its . .
p
Ped.
peace pro-found; Let our ves - per . . hymn be blend-ing With the ho - ly . . calm a - round. . . .

Copyright, 1926, by Novello and Company, Limited

mf
Soon as dies the sun - set glo - ry, Stars of hea-ven shine out a - bove, . .
mf
Ped.
Tell - ing still the an - cient sto - ry,— Their Cre - a - tor's change - less love. . .
f
dim.
Full
p
mf
Now our wants and bur - dens leav - ing To His care, Who p
mf
Now our wants and bur - dens leav - ing To His care, Who p
mf
Now our bur - dens leav - ing To His care, Who p
mf
Now our wants and bur - dens leav - ing To His care, Who p mf

f
p cares for all, Cease we fear - ing, cease we griev - ing; At His cares for.. all, . . Cease we fear - ing, cease we.. griev - ing;
cares for.. all, . . Cease we fear - ing, cease we.. griev - ing; . .
cares for.. all, Cease we fear - ing, cease we f Gt. Sw. coupled
p
mf touch our.. bur - dens fall, at His touch our bur - dens
p
mf
At . . . His touch . . . our bur - - dens . .
mf
. . At His touch our.. bur - dens fall, our bur - dens
p
mf
griev - ing; At His touch, at His touch our.. bur - dens
mf
Ped.

pp fall. . . As the dark - ness deep - ens o'er us, Lo! e - ter - nal
pp fall. . . As the dark - ness deep - ens o'er us, Lo! e - ter - nal p poco sonoro fall. . . As the dark - ness deep - ens, Lo! the
pp fall. . . As the dark - ness deep - ens o'er us, Lo! e - ter - nal Sw.
pp
Sw.
add soft 32 ft.
f stars a - rise; Hope and Faith and Love rise glo - rious,
f stars a - rise; . . Hope and Faith and Love rise glo - rious,
f sonoro stars a - rise; Hope and Faith and Love rise glo - rious,
f
stars a - rise; Hope and Faith and Love rise glo - rious, Gt. Sw. coupled
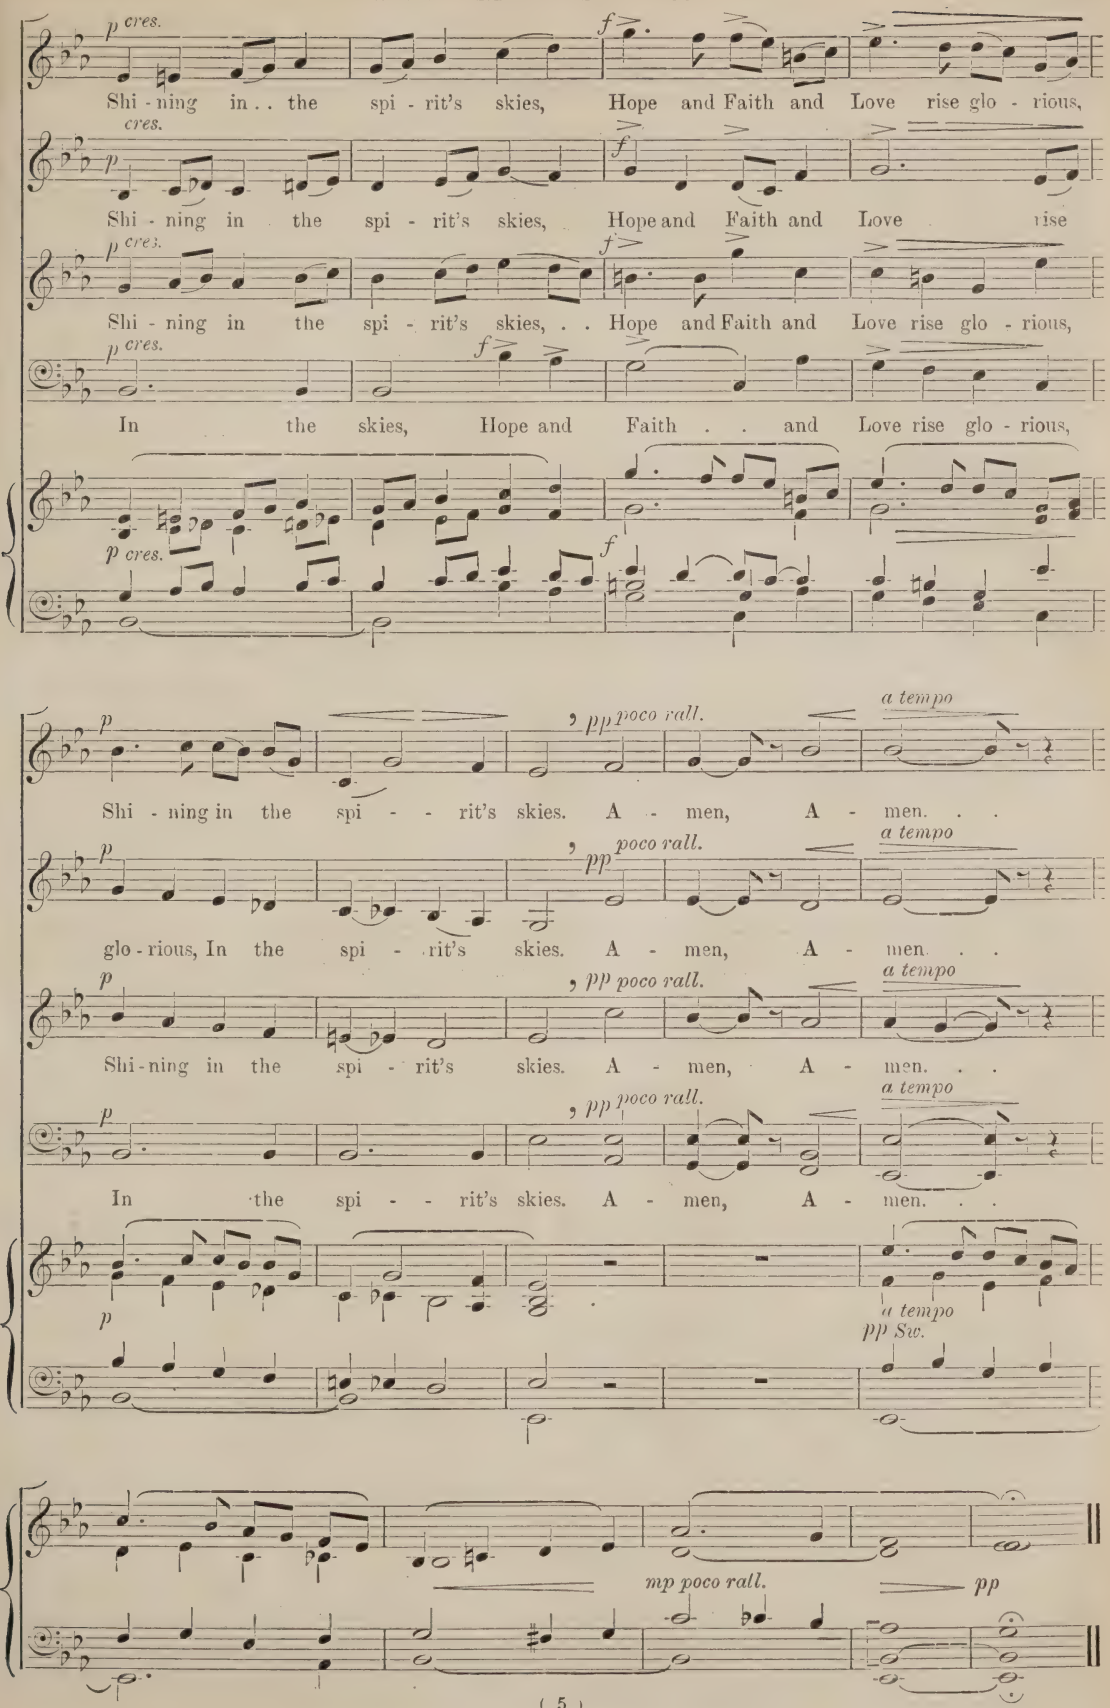
f
32 ft. off



p cres.
f
Shi - ning in . . the spi - rit's skies, Hope and Faith and Love rise glo - rious, p cres.
f
Shi - ning in the spi - rit's skies, Hope and Faith and Love rise
p cres.
f
Shi - ning in the spi - rit's skies, . . Hope and Faith and Love rise glo - rious, p cres.
f
In the skies, Hope and Faith . . and Love rise glo - rious,
p cres.
f
p pp poco rall.
a tempo
Shi - ning in the spi - - rit's skies. A - men, A - men. . .
p
pp poco rall.
a tempo
glo - rious, In the spi - rit's skies. A - men, A - men. . .
p
pp poco rall.
a tempo
Shi - ning in the spi - rit's skies. A - men, A - men. . .
p
pp poco rall.
a tempo
In the spi - - rit's skies. A - men, A - men. . .
p
a tempo
pp Sw.
mp poco rall.
pp

(Continued from page 336.)

approaching them entirely from the angle of reading instead of singing, and with no backward glance at tradition.

Dr. Askwith's version of the latter portion of the Psalter is of great interest and even beauty. His object is to provide a translation which not only reproduces the recurring rhythms that are a feature of Hebrew poetry, but is also more accurate and less obscure than the Prayer Book version. The latter, of course, can never be superseded because of its familiarity and beauty; but such translations as this of Dr. Askwith's are valuable because of the light they throw on certain cloudy passages. We give a short example in both versions:

> Let the righteous rather smite me friendly; and reprove me.
> But let not their precious balms break my head:
> yea, I will pray yet against their wickedness.

> Let the righteous smite me, it is kindness,
> Let him reprove me, it is as oil on the head,
> My head will not refuse it,
> Yet still will I pray against men's wickedness.

The remainder of the Psalter is promised in a later volume. We hope the publishers will be encouraged to make the whole available in one book.

There is an almost general agreement that the present arrangement of the Psalter leaves much to be desired from the point of view of ordinary Sunday congregations. The Psalms vary widely in their degree of suitability for public use, and as the bulk of church-goers hear the Sunday Psalms only, they miss many of the most appropriate. Dr. Frere's 'Liturgical Psalter' is an attempt to produce a selection that will 'put in the mouths of, say, a Sunday evening congregation such passages only as it could find edifying and real.' The work carries the principle of selection farther than was done in the scheme for Sundays in the Revised Prayer Book—a scheme which is open to criticism on the ground that, as Dr. Frere says, it attempts 'to work in most of the Psalms into the table more or less equally.' In the 'Liturgical Psalter' the less desirable portions of Psalms are omitted; some slight re-translations are made; the text is disposed of in such a way as to emphasise its poetical character; the use of refrains hitherto attached to every verse in certain Psalms is modified considerably; and other departures from custom occur. The text is not pointed for chanting, but the Preface contains (with much else of value) some pertinent remarks on the subject.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL

Fine progress by the Salisbury Musical Society was shown on March 17, in its performances of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' and Bach's 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure.' Between these works the orchestra played the Prelude to 'Gerontius.' The soloists were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Robert Radford. Dr. W. G. Alcock conducted. The Cathedral was crowded long before the concert began.

The organ at Bethesda United Methodist Church, Hanley, has been entirely rebuilt by Messrs. Conacher, of Huddersfield, and is now a fine up-to-date instrument of three manuals, and thirty-two speaking stops, fourteen couplers, twelve manual pistons, and nine pedal pistons. The opening took place on March 4, when Sir Ivor Atkins gave two recitals, playing Mendelssohn's sixth Sonata, Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor and 'St. Anne' Fugue, Saint-Saëns's Fantaisie in E flat, Guilmant's Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Vierne's Allegretto in B minor, &c.

We are sorry to learn that the admirable musical services at Southwark Cathedral are not receiving sufficient support to guarantee their continuance. The attendances are as large as ever—perhaps larger—but the average collections have dropped from well over £100 to about £70. This sum is of course insufficient to cover the cost of a service at which the London Symphony Orchestra takes part. Canon Haldane, the Precentor, in an interview, recently stated that the sum required to place the services on a secure footing would work out at about 1*s.* 6*d.* from each person. In view of the fine quality of the music and the performances at these services, it cannot be said that 1*s.* 6*d.* is a large sum to pay. At the service on April 24, at 3, the programme will consist of Saint-Saëns's Prelude to 'The Deluge,' Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor, W. H. Reed's Elegy for strings, Holst's Two Psalms, and Motets by Byrd. A few reserved tickets are available, and may be had on application to the Precentor, The Rectory, Sumner Street, S.E.1 (stamped addressed envelope).

'The Dream of Gerontius' was sung by the City Temple Choral Society (two hundred voices) on March 13, accompanied by organ and drums. The soloists were Miss Beatrice Ashton, Mr. Ben Morgan, and Mr. Kenneth Ellis. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ, and Mr. Allan Brown conducted. The church was crowded with an audience of over two thousand. During the past six years the City Temple Choral Society has raised £2,300 towards the cost of the new organ, in connection with the Saturday afternoon monthly musical services and other efforts—a fine record. There still remains, however, a debt of nearly £2,000, towards which contributions will be gratefully received by the hon. treasurer, Mr. George Tidy, at the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Excellent recitals of organ, pianoforte, and vocal music have recently been given at St. Mary's Parish Church, Wotton-under-Edge, by Mr. H. Stubington (organ), Mr. C. Kenneth Taylor (pianoforte), Miss Elsie Suddaby, and Mr. Ernest Dighton. The organ at St. Mary's was built in 1726 by Schrider, at the expense of George I., who presented it to St. Martin-in-the-Fields, where it stood until 1800. It was then sold to the parish of Wotton. One of the recitals took the form of a lecture on the Wotton organ, with a programme of old English organ music from Croft to S. S. Wesley.

Mr. J. R. Griffiths has retired from the post of organist and choirmaster of Cliff Town Church, Southend-on-Sea, after fifty years' service as a church musician. He was a pupil of H. S. Irons and E. H. Turpin, and before going to Cliff Town was at Highgate Congregational Church, and Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road. He has written much on musical matters, and is well-known as a hymnologist.

'Samson' was announced for performance by an augmented choir of a hundred and twenty voices at Trinity Congregational Church, St. Alban's, on March 17, the soloists being Miss Alice Moxon, Miss Hope Jackson, Mr. Barrington Hooper, Mr. Roy Henderson, and Mr. John Solomon (trumpet), with Mr. Rowland G. Thompson conducting, and Mr. William Parkyn at the organ.

At Nuneaton Congregational Church, on March 4, 'Judas Maccabæus' was sung by an augmented choir, accompanied by a string orchestra. The soloists were Miss Lucy Goodwin, Miss Mabel Linwood, Mr. Joseph Green, and Mr. Herbert Parker. Mr. J. W. Stapleton conducted, and Mr. W. A. S. Stapleton played the organ. There was a crowded congregation.

'The Creation' was sung by the Bury St. Edmund's Musical Society, on February 18, at St. Mary's Church. The choir and orchestra numbered a hundred and twenty. The soloists were Miss Ida Cooper, Mr. Osmond Davis, and Mr. Edward Dykes. Mr. E. Percy Hallam conducted. Mr. Clifton C. Day assisted at the organ, and also opened with a short recital.

The Annual Festival of the Southwark Diocesan Plainsong Association will take place on May 6, at 8. Choirmasters wishing to take part should apply at once to Mr. Godfrey Sceats, 18, Ballina Street, S.E.23, from whom copies of the service book are to be had, price 1s. Admission free, without ticket.

The organ at St. John the Evangelist, Upper St. Leonards, has been reconstructed by Messrs. Foster & Andrewes. The opening took place on February 23, when Dr. W. G. Alcock gave a recital, playing the G minor Fantasia and Fugue of Bach, Mendelssohn's first Sonata, Liszt's 'Sposalizio,' Widor's fifth Symphony, &c.

At the Annual Choir Festival at Clapton Wesleyan Church on March 7 and 8 the choir, augmented, sang Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Messiah.' Mr. Wallace J. Madge conducted, and the accompanists were Mrs. Madge (pianoforte) and Mr. Ernest Mason (organ).

At Picton Hall, Liverpool, on February 22, a selection of plainsong was sung by a choir of children drawn from the Roman Catholic Elementary Schools of Liverpool and Manchester, directed by Mr. H. P. Allan. The programme consisted of an entire Plainsong Mass, various plainsong hymns and sequences, &c.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung by the choir of the Doddridge Memorial Church, Northampton, on February 14, the occasion being the annual Choir Festival. Mr. A. Ll. Price conducted, with Mr. Frank Tomalin at the organ. The church was crowded, many people being unable to obtain admission.

Bach's 'My spirit was in heaviness' was sung at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh, on March 12, by the Cathedral choir, slightly augmented. Dr. C. M. Chaundy conducted an admirable performance; the large congregation included His Grace the Lord Primate.

'Judas Maccabæus' was sung by a large choir at Oxford Place Chapel, Leeds, in February. The soloists were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mr. Frank Webster, Miss Queenie Slade, and Mr. A. Fisher. Mr. Robert Pickard conducted, and Mr. Wilfrid Dunwell was at the organ.

'The Hymn of Praise' was performed in February by the Bexhill Choral Society at the Church Army Social Centre, conducted by Mr. George Christian, with Miss G. Watson as accompanist. There was also a miscellaneous programme.

The organ in the new Memorial Hall at Penrhos College, Colwyn Bay, has been built by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper. It is a three-manual of twenty-one stops and twenty pistons.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have recently built a new organ for St. Paul's School, West Kensington—a two-manual of eight stops and ten pistons.

RECITALS

Mr. F. W. Belchamber, St. Gabriel's, Cricklewood—Prelude on 'Dundee,' Parry; Fantasia, Saint-Saëns; Revêrie, Lemare; Scherzo, W. Sandiford-Turner; Fugue in D, Bach.

Mr. H. Bentley, Christ Church, Lowestoft—Sursum Corda, Ireland; Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Prelude on 'St. Cross,' Parry; Prelude on a Theme by Tallis, Harold Darke.

Mr. Allan Brown, Purley Congregational Church—Prelude in E flat, Bach; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Pastorale, Franck; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. W. J. Comley, All Saints', Hertford—Introduction and Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Overture in C, Hollins; Pastorale, Franck; Postlude, Alcock.

